University College of Law
SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

191 P.—193 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

191 P. 1

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1920, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 191, Nos. 1-6; Vol. 192, Nos. 1-8; Vol. 193, Nos. 1-3.

COPYRIGHT, 1921, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 193, Nos. 4-7.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 191-193 P.
2-1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 191–193 P.

	P. Vol.	Page
Aaroe v. Crosby, App.	192	97
Abbey's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	893
Abbott; Roberts v., App.	192	345
Adkins v. Brett, Sup.	193	251
Adkins; People v., App.	193	800
Aitken v. Roche, App.	192	464
Albertsen v. Albertsen, App.	192	1040
Albertson; Chastek v., App.	191	371
Alderson; Jordan v., App.	192	170
Alexander; Anderson v., Sup.	193	241
Alexander v. Panama Macaroni Co., App.	191	955
All Persons Claiming, etc.; Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco v., Sup.	191	691
American Film Co.; Blackwell v., App.	192	189
American Well & Prospecting Co. v. Blakemore, Sup.	193	779
American Well & Prospecting Co. v. Rex Midway Oil Co., Sup.	193	779
Anderson v. Alexander, Sup.	193	241
Anderson v. Willson, App.	191	1016
Anthony v. Janssen, Sup.	191	538
Arcega; People v., App.	193	264
Arcega; People v., App.	193	268
Archibald v. Archibald, App.	192	322
Argrusa; People v., App.	193	819
Armstrong; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v., App.	191	954
Armstrong Holdings Co.; De La Cuesta v., App.	192	135
Arp; Blake v., App.	192	452
Asher; Morgan v., App.	193	288
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v., Sup.	191	536
Azevedo v. Davidson, App.	193	594
Azhocar, Ex parte, App.	193	505
Baca; People v., App.	193	868
Bach; Smith v., Sup.	191	14
Bacon; Streeter & Riddell v., App.	193	285
Bailey v. City of Hermosa Beach, Sup.	192	712
Bailey v. John W. Sward, Inc., Sup.	193	952
Bailiff v. Hildebrandt, App.	191	42
Baird; Keeler v., App.	191	563
Baker v. Slocum, App.	192	551
Baker v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	193	765
Baker v. Western Auto Stage Co., App.	192	73
Bank of Napa v. Ferguson Burns Estate, App.	192	66
Bank of Newman v. Monterey County Gas & Electric Co., App.	191	970
Bar Ass'n of San Francisco v. Cantrell, App.	193	598
Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Armstrong, App.	191	954
Barnes; Borton v., App.	192	307
Barton; Cotcher v., App.	193	169
Bay Side Land Co.; People v., App.	191	994

	P. Vol.	Page
Bearce; Boyd v., App.	191	560
Beck v. Edmison, App.	193	158
Beeson v. Schloss, Sup.	192	292
Bell; Millar v., App.	192	172
Bell; Simmonds v., App.	193	606
Bennett v. Bennett, App.	192	180
Bennett; Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v., App.	192	328
Bente v. Reese, App.	191	945
Bentel; Michelin Tire Co. v., Sup.	193	770
Benvenuto's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	678
Bickmore v. Griffin, Sup.	191	909
Bidegaray v. Ormaca, App.	192	176
Biggart v. Lewis, Sup.	192	437
Bituminized Brick & Tile Co. v. Simons Brick Co., Sup.	192	528
Black; California Nat. Supply Co. v., App.	191	715
Blackwell v. American Film Co., App.	192	189
Blake v. Arp, App.	192	452
Blakemore; American Well & Prospecting Co. v., Sup.	193	779
Blaney v. Cline, App.	192	549
Bloomer; Heine Piano Co. v., Sup.	191	900
Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California; Keene v., App.	192	872
Board of Sup'rs of Madera County; Mordecai v., Sup.	192	40
Board of Sup'rs of Sacramento County; March v., Sup.	192	708
Boehm v. Spreckels, Sup.	191	5
Borton v. Barnes, App.	192	307
Bowden v. Herberger, App.	191	32
Bowen v. Hickey, App.	191	971
Boyd v. Bearce, App.	191	560
Boyer v. City of Long Beach, App.	191	35
Boyle; Crowe v., Sup.	193	111
Bradford v. Trapp, App.	193	584
Braun v. Crew, Sup.	192	531
Brawley Star; Butters v., App.	191	987
Brett; Adkins v., Sup.	193	251
Bridgford v. McAdoo, App.	191	1113
Brimberry v. Dudfield Lumber Co., Sup.	191	894
Brown v. Brown, App.	191	702
Brown v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	192	716
Bruno; People v., App.	193	511
Burns Estate; Bank of Napa v., App.	192	66
Butte Creek Consol. Dredging Co.; Keiser v., App.	191	552
Butters v. Brawley Star, App.	191	987
Buxton v. International Indemnity Co., App.	191	84
Cabrera v. Thannhauser & Co., Sup.	192	45
California Conserving Co.; Murray v., App.	193	959
California Nat. Supply Co. v. Black, App.	191	715
California Nat. Supply Co. v. Whitmore, Sup.	193	785
California Pressed Brick Co.; Oakland Bank of Savings v., Sup.	191	524
California Truck Co.; Garcia v., Sup.	192	708
Campbell & Co. v. Holehan, App.	192	121
Campin; Clark v., App.	193	864
Candeias v. Superior Court in and for Merced County, App.	193	957
Cantrell; Bar Ass'n of San Francisco v., App.	193	598
Carnes; People v., App.	192	1088
Carpenter; Koehl v., App.	191	43
Carson; People v., App.	192	318

P.

	Vol.	Page
Casarotti v. Lyons, Sup.	192	1085
Casarotti's Estate, In re, Sup.	192	1085
Chanquet's Estate, In re, Sup.	193	762
Charles Ehrlich & Co. v. J. Ellis Slater Co., Sup.	192	526
Chastek v. Albertson, App.	191	371
Christian; People v., App.	192	182
Christ's Church; Giffen v., App.	191	718
Church; Hardiman v., Sup.	191	1106
Churchill; Krogh Mfg. Co. v., App.	191	74
Citizens' Inv. Co.; Lucid v., App.	193	161
City and County of San Francisco; Hurd v., App.	193	507
City and County of San Francisco v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	191	26
City Inv. Co. v. Pringle, App.	193	504
City of Alameda; Cohen v., Sup.	191	1110
City of Bakersfield; Danielson v., Sup.	193	242
City of Calexico; Imperial Development Co. v., App.	191	50
City of Hermosa Beach; Bailey v., Sup.	192	712
City of Long Beach; Boyer v., App.	191	35
City of Los Angeles; Brown v., Sup.	192	716
City of Los Angeles; Eichholz v., App.	193	862
City of Los Angeles; Keym v., App.	193	862
City of Los Angeles v. Koyer, App.	192	301
City of Los Angeles; Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. v., App.	193	137
City of Los Angeles; Wolff v., App.	193	862
City of Pasadena v. Railroad Commission of California, Sup.	192	25
City of Pasadena; San Gabriel Valley Country Club v., Sup.	193	97
City of San Bernardino; Good v., App.	193	790
City of San Diego v. Kerckhoff, App.	193	801
City of San Diego; Mulville v., Sup.	192	702
City of San Diego; Whitman v., Sup.	193	98
City of San Leandro v. Railroad Commission, Sup.	191	1
Clark v. Campin, App.	193	864
Clark v. Johnston, App.	193	864
Clark; People v., Sup.	192	521
Clark v. Taylor, App.	193	864
Clayes v. Nutter, App.	192	870
Cline; Blaney v., App.	192	549
Cline; Fly v., App.	193	615
Cline v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	193	929
Coffman v. Singh, App.	193	259
Cohen v. City of Alameda, Sup.	191	1110
Cohn v. Rudneck, App.	192	461
Cole v. Wolfskill, App.	192	549
Collette v. Sarrasin, Sup.	193	571
Collins; Van Nostrand v., Sup.	192	707
Commercial Acetylene Supply Co. v. Fox, App.	191	33
Commonwealth Home Builders; Jimeno v., App.	191	64
Concordia Fire Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis.; Lauman v., App.	192	128
Consolidated Const. Co. v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	193	238
Contra Costa Const. Co. v. Daly City, App.	192	178
Cooper v. Selig, App.	191	983
Cosgrove; People v., App.	192	165
Cotcher v. Barton, App.	193	169
Coughlin v. Great Western Power Co., Sup.	191	920
Couldthirst v. Southern Pac. R. Co., App.	193	796

P.

	Vol.	Page
Council of City of Santa Barbara; Rickard v., App.	192	726
Crawford; Gould v., App.	192	88
Creamery Package Mfg. Co. v. Bennett, App.	192	328
Crenshaw; Lewis v., App.	191	72
Crew; Braun v., Sup.	192	531
Crosby; Aaroe v., App.	192	97
Crouch v. Wilson, Sup.	191	916
Crowe v. Boyle, Sup.	193	111
Cruickshank v. Vogh, App.	192	86
Crummey, Inc., v. Howe, App.	192	112
Cummings; Fraser v., App.	192	100
Cummings; Fraser v., App.	192	102
Curran; McGehee v., App.	193	277
Dahne v. Dahne, App.	193	785
Daly City; Contra Costa Const. Co. v., App.	192	178
Daman v. Hunt, App.	191	376
Danford v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	193	272
Daniels, Ex parte, Sup.	192	442
Danielson v. City of Bakersfield, Sup.	193	242
Davenport v. Superior Court of California in and for Imperial County, Sup.	191	911
Davidson; Azevedo v., App.	193	594
Davis; Maloof v., App.	191	59
Davis Standard Bread Co.; Lampton v., two cases, App.	191	710
De La Cuesta v. Armstrong Holdings Co., App.	192	135
Delfs; Security Mortg. Co. v., App.	191	53
Della Maria; Jones v., App.	191	943
Demateis v. Vezu, App.	193	793
Denehy Mercantile Co.; Henderson v., App.	191	558
Denny; Richmond v., App.	191	554
De Soto v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	193	270
Dewar; People v., App.	193	156
Donley v. Van Horn, App.	193	514
Donley v. West, App.	193	519
Donovan; Huntington v., Sup.	192	543
Dowdall, Application of, Sup.	191	685
Doyle; MacFarlane v., App.	192	462
Dragich, Ex parte, App.	192	160
Drew; Farmers' Exch. Nat. Bank v., App.	192	105
Drum; Victor Oil Co. v., Sup.	193	243
D. S. Denehy Mercantile Co.; Henderson v., App.	191	558
Dudfield Lumber Co.; Brimberry v., Sup.	191	894
Duffet; Ohio Electric Car Co. v., App.	192	298
Eaton; Wright-Callender-Andrews Co. v., App.	191	68
Eaton v. Yount, App.	191	1009
E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	193	105
Edmison; Beck v., App.	193	158
Edwards v. Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank, App.	192	324
Edwards v. Jordan, Sup.	192	856
Ehrlich & Co. v. J. Ellis Slater Co., Sup.	192	526
Eichholz v. City of Los Angeles, App.	193	862
Elliott v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	191	899
Empire Securities Co. v. Levy, App.	192	153
Engels Copper Mining Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	192	845

	Vol.	P. Page
Farmers' Exch. Nat. Bank v. Drew, App.	192	105
Farwell v. San Jacinto & Pleasant Valley Irr. Dist., App.	192	1034
Federal Const. Co. v. Ryan, App.	191	69
Ferguson Burns Estate; Bank of Napa v., App.	192	66
Ferraris v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	191	45
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	192	166
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland; Security Trust & Savings Bank v., Sup.	193	102
Fink v. Loynes, App.	192	84
First Nat. Bank v. Ranger, App.	193	788
First Nat. Bank; Ranger v., App.	193	790
First Nat. Bank v. Spangler, App.	192	874
Fisher; Spence v., Sup.	193	255
Fly v. Cline, App.	193	615
Forgeus; Hart v., Sup.	193	764
Foster; People v., App.	192	142
Fowler v. Thornberry, App.	191	940
Fox; Commercial Acetylene Supply Co. v., App.	191	33
Frame; Griswold v., App.	191	962
Franklin; Moore v., App.	192	1047
Frascona v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, App.	191	968
Fraser v. Cummings, App.	192	100
Fraser v. Cummings, two cases, App.	192	102
Frederick v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys., App.	191	1020
Freeman; Moran v., App.	192	155
Fritz v. Mills, App.	192	92
Fuller v. Towne, Sup.	193	88
Fuller & Co. v. McClure, App.	191	1027
Fuski; People v., App.	192	552
Garcia v. California Truck Co., Sup.	192	708
Gaschlin v. Sierra, App.	191	550
Gavin; People v., App.	193	174
Genta v. Illingworth & Dunnell, App.	192	1041
Gerber; Keller v., App.	193	809
Gianelli v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., App.	191	720
Gibson; Tillman v., App.	192	1033
Giffen v. Christ's Church, App.	191	718
Given; Inyo County v., Sup.	191	688
Glassell; Hunt v., App.	191	373
Globe Grain & Milling Co.; Gianelli v., App.	191	720
Glockner v. Palace Amusement Co., App.	191	46
Glos v. McBride, App.	191	67
Goddard; People v., App.	191	1012
Good v. City of San Bernardino, App.	193	790
Good Fellows Grotto, Grill & Oyster House; Grizzel v., App.	191	701
Gordon v. Hillman, App.	191	62
Gordon; Linell v., App.	191	37
Gouanillou v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	193	937
Gould v. Crawford, App.	192	88
Gould v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	191	56
Gould; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v., App.	191	556
Graham; People v., App.	192	123
Graney; People v., App.	192	460
Graves; Kibbe v., App.	191	81

	P. Vol.	Page
Graves v. McMahan, App.	191	81
Great Western Power Co.; Coughlin v., Sup.	191	920
Griffin; Bickmore v., Sup.	191	909
Griswold v. Frame, App.	191	962
Grizzel v. Good Fellows Grotto, Grill & Oyster House, App.	191	701
Grossman; Silvers v., Sup.	192	534
Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank; Edwards v., App.	192	324
Hall v. Puente Oil Co., App.	191	39
Hamilton; People v., App.	192	467
Hamilton v. San Francisco, N. & C. Ry., App.	192	323
Hannah v. Southern Pac. R. Co., App.	192	304
Hannon; McNutt v., Sup.	191	1108
Hanson; Pleasants v., App.	192	183
Harbison, Appeal of, Sup.	191	934
Hardiman v. Church, Sup.	191	1106
Harford; King v., App.	191	998
Harper v. Murray, Sup.	193	576
Harris; Peake v., App.	192	310
Hart v. Forgeus, Sup.	193	764
Hartigan v. Jordan, Sup.	192	1084
Hartwick; Haskett v., App.	191	553
Haskett v. Hartwick, App.	191	553
Hawkins, In re, Sup.	192	30
Hawkins; Merritt v., Sup.	192	30
H. Crummey, Inc., v. Howe, App.	192	112
Heine Piano Co. v. Bloomer, Sup.	191	900
Helmer v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, App.	191	1001
Henderson v. D. S. Denehy Mercantile Co., App.	191	558
Henning v. Wuest, App.	191	713
Henry; Mitchell v., Sup.	193	502
Herberger; Bowden v., App.	191	32
Herman, Application of, Sup.	191	934
Herman; People v., App.	193	868
Hess v. Young, Sup.	192	35
Hess' Estate, In re, Sup.	192	35
Hesse; Revert v., Sup.	193	943
Hickey; Bowen v., App.	191	971
Hildebrand; Martin v., Sup.	191	676
Hildebrandt; Bailiff v., App.	191	42
Hillman; Gordon v., App.	191	62
Hines v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	192	859
Hines; Vietti v., App.	192	80
Hinkelman, Ex parte, Sup.	191	682
Hinrichsen v. Imperial Water Co. No. 1, App.	193	608
Hogue-Kellogg Co. v. Petit, App.	192	113
Holbrook; Lynch v., App.	193	505
Holder, Ex parte, App.	192	90
Holehan; Thos. D. Campbell & Co. v., App.	192	121
Holmgren v. Madalena, App.	192	867
Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	193	105
Hosin; Simpson v., App.	193	867
Howe; H. Crummey, Inc., v., App.	192	112
Huffman Land & Live Stock Co. v. Witcher, App.	191	725
Hughes v. Hughes, App.	193	144
Hughes v. Hughes, App.	193	148
Humboldt County v. Van Duzer, App.	192	192

	P. Vol.	Page
Humphrey v. United States Macaroni Co., App.	193	609
Hunt; Daman v., App.	191	376
Hunt v. Glassell, App.	191	373
Hunter, In re, App.	193	155
Hunt, Hatch & Co.; Miller v., App.	191	75
Huntington v. Donovan, Sup.	192	543
Hurd v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	193	507
Hurlbutt; Maginnis v., App.	193	606
Hutchinson Co. v. Marshall, App.	193	164
Hyman v. Karl Stern Co., App.	191	47
Illingworth & Dunnell; Genta v., App.	192	1041
Imperial County; Imperial Development Co. v., App.	191	53
Imperial Development Co. v. City of Calexico, App.	191	50
Imperial Development Co. v. Imperial County, App.	191	53
Imperial Water Co. No. 1; Hinrichsen v., App.	193	608
Imperial Water Co. No. 1; Security Commercial & Savings Bank v., Sup.	192	22
Industrial Accident Commission; City and County of San Francisco v., Sup.	191	26
Industrial Accident Commission; Engels Copper Mining Co. v., Sup.	192	845
Industrial Accident Commission; Gouanillou v., Sup.	193	937
Industrial Accident Commission; Hines v., Sup.	192	859
Industrial Accident Commission; Popst v., App.	192	296
Industrial Accident Commission of California; E. Clemens Horst Co. v., Sup.	193	105
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v., App.	192	166
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Pettit v., App.	192	109
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Quong Ham Wah Co. v., Sup.	192	1021
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Western Indemnity Co. v., App.	192	109
International Indemnity Co.; Buxton v., App.	191	84
Inyo Cerro Gordo Mining & Power Co.; Simons v., App.	192	144
Inyo County v. Given, Sup.	191	688
Jackson; Marple v., Sup.	193	940
Janssen; Anthony v., Sup.	191	538
J. Ellis Slater Co.; Charles Ehrlich & Co. v., Sup.	192	526
Jennings; Pyper v., App.	191	565
Jimeno v. Commonwealth Home Builders, App.	191	64
Johnson v. Nelson, App.	192	1031
Johnston; Clark v., App.	193	864
John W. Sward, Inc.; Bailey v., Sup.	193	952
Jones v. Della Maria, App.	191	943
Jones v. Jones, App.	192	463
Jones v. Jones, App.	192	867
Jordan v. Alderson, App.	192	170
Jordan; Edwards v., Sup.	192	856
Jordan; Hartigan v., Sup.	192	1084
Jordan; Sinclair v., Sup.	191	910
Jordan; Sturtevant v., Sup.	191	365
Joseph Musto Sons-Keenan Co. v. Pacific States Corporation, App.	192	138
Karl Stern Co.; Hyman v., App.	191	47
Karrer; Schumann v., Sup.	192	849
Katschinski v. Keller, App.	193	587
Kaufman; People v., App.	193	953
Keeler v. Baird, App.	191	563

	Vol.	Page
Keene v. Board of Directors of Veterans' Home of California, App.	192	872
Keiser v. Butte Creek Consol. Dredging Co., two cases, App.	191	552
Keller v. Gerber, App.	193	809
Keller; Katschinski v., App.	193	587
Kennedy; People v., App.	192	556
Kerckhoff; City of San Diego v., App.	193	801
Keym v. City of Los Angeles, App.	193	862
Kibbe v. Graves, App.	191	81
King v. Harford, App.	191	998
Kings County Development Co.; People v., App.	191	1004
Kings County Development Co.; People v., App.	191	1009
Kling, In re, App.	192	453
Kludjian; Merzoian v., Sup.	191	673
Knight v. Marks, Sup.	191	531
Koehl v. Carpenter, App.	191	43
Koeller; Thompson v., Sup.	191	927
Konig v. Lyon, App.	192	875
Koyer; City of Los Angeles v., App.	192	301
Kriebel; Newark Trust Co. v., App.	193	962
Krogh Mfg. Co. v. Churchill, App.	191	74
Kuster; Lally v., App.	192	78
Lally v. Kuster, App.	192	78
Lamport v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	191	527
Lampton v. Davis Standard Bread Co., two cases, App.	191	710
Lane v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., App.	193	589
Lafargue v. United Railroads of San Francisco, Sup.	192	538
Lathrop; People v., App.	192	722
Lauman v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., App.	192	128
Lavin; McPhee v., Sup.	191	23
Law; Robbins v., App.	192	118
Lawrence; Textile Nat. Bank v., App.	192	880
Layer; Thomas v., App.	191	949
Learned v. Peninsula Rapid Transit Co., App.	193	591
Lefebvre v. Lefebvre, App.	192	76
Lejkojes; People v., App.	192	160
Levy; Empire Securities Co. v., App.	192	153
Lewis; Biggart v., Sup.	192	437
Lewis v. Crenshaw, App.	191	72
Lewis v. Reed, App.	192	335
Lewis v. Tanner, App.	193	287
Lightfoot; Peterson v., App.	191	48
Linell v. Gordon, App.	191	37
Little v. Roop, App.	192	868
Locke-Paddon Co.; McKeever v., App.	193	258
Long Beach; Boyer v., App.	191	35
Los Angeles County; Elliott v., Sup.	191	899
Los Angeles County; Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. v., App.	193	142
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation; Zechiel v., Sup.	192	720
Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation; Zechiel v., Sup.	192	722
Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Frascona v., App.	191	968
Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Wasserman v., Sup.	193	130
Loynes; Fink v., App.	192	84
Lucid v. Citizens' Inv. Co., App.	193	161
Lynch v. Holbrook, App.	193	505
Lyon; Konig v., App.	192	875
Lyons; Casarotti v., Sup.	192	1085

	Vol.	P. Page
McAdoo; Bridgford v., App.	191	1113
McBride; Glos v., App.	191	67
McCaddon; People v., App.	192	325
McCarthy; Wisnom v., App.	192	337
McCarty v. Wilson, Sup.	193	578
McClure; W. P. Fuller & Co. v., App.	191	1027
McCord v. Martin, App.	191	89
McCoy v. Zahn Corporation, Sup.	191	20
McDowell v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., App.	192	103
McDuff v. McDuff, App.	191	957
MacFarlane v. Doyle, App.	192	462
McGehee v. Curran, App.	193	277
McKeever v. Locke-Paddon Co., App.	193	258
McKune v. McKune, App.	191	958
McMahan; Graves v., App.	191	81
McNutt v. Hannon, Sup.	191	1108
McPhail v. Nunes, App.	192	95
McPhee v. Lavin, Sup.	191	23
Madalena; Holmgren v., App.	192	867
Madison v. Weyl-Zuckerman & Co., App.	192	110
Maginnis v. Hurlbutt, App.	193	606
Malone; People v., App.	191	1113
Maloof v. Davis, App.	191	59
Manoogian v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, App.	192	168
March v. Board of Sup'rs of Sacramento County, Sup.	192	708
Marincovich, Ex parte, App.	192	156
Marin Water & Power Co. v. Town of Sausalito, App.	193	294
Marks; Knight v., Sup.	191	531
Marple v. Jackson, Sup.	193	940
Marr v. Wistler, App.	193	600
Marshall; Hutchinson Co. v., App.	193	164
Martin v. Hildebrand, Sup.	191	676
Martin; McCord v., App.	191	89
Martin v. Palmer Union Oil Co., Sup.	193	950
Mathews v. Mathews, App.	193	586
Mayen, Ex parte, App.	193	813
Mayen; People v., App.	193	173
Mazzurco; People v., App.	193	164
Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco v. All Persons Claiming, etc., Sup.	191	691
Merchants' Fire Assur. Corporation of New York; Mitchell v., App.	191	71
Merritt v. Hawkins, Sup.	192	30
Merzoian v. Kludjian, Sup.	191	673
Michelin Tire Co. v. Bentel, two cases, Sup.	193	770
Miguel v. Miguel, Sup.	193	935
Millar v. Bell, App.	192	172
Miller v. Hunt, Hatch & Co., App.	191	75
Mills; Fritz v., App.	192	92
Mills v. San Diego Conservatory of Music, App.	191	546
Mintaberry's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	909
Mitchell v. Henry, Sup.	193	502
Mitchell v. Merchants' Fire Assur. Corporation of New York, App.	191	71
Mitchell v. Whitford, App.	192	457
Mohn v. Sumner, App.	191	991
Monk v. Morgan, App.	192	1042
Monterey County Gas & Electric Co.; Bank of Newman v., App.	191	970
Mooney v. Superior Court in and for Kern County, Sup.	192	542

P.

	Vol.	Page
Moore v. Franklin, App.	192	1047
Moore; People v., App.	191	980
Moore; Woods Lumber Co. v., Sup.	191	905
Moran v. Freeman, App.	192	155
Mordecai v. Board of Sup'rs of Madera County, Sup.	192	40
Mordoff; Silvius v., Sup.	192	289
Morgan v. Asher, App.	193	288
Morgan; Monk v., App.	192	1042
Morse; Petersen v., App.	192	51
Mosley; People v., App.	191	1118
Mosley v. Seely, App.	191	36
Mulville v. City of San Diego, Sup.	192	702
Murray v. California Conserving Co., App.	193	959
Murray; Harper v., Sup.	193	576
Murray v. United Railroads of San Francisco, App.	193	596
Musto Sons-Keenan Co. v. Pacific States Corporation, App.	192	138
Nakis; People v., Sup.	193	92
National Pacific Oil Co. v. Watson, Sup.	193	133
Nave v. Taugher, App.	193	508
Nelson; Johnson v., App.	192	1031
Newark Trust Co. v. Kriebel, App.	193	962
Newbert Protection Dist.; Pacific Seaside Home for Children v., App.	193	169
New Pedrara Onyx Co.; Young v., App.	192	55
Nunes; McPhail v., App.	192	95
Nutter; Clayes v., App.	192	870
Oakland Bank of Savings v. California Pressed Brick Co., Sup.	191	524
Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Duffet, App.	192	298
Ormaca; Bidegaray v., App.	192	176
Otten v. Spreckels, Sup.	191	11
Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. v. City of Los Angeles, App.	193	137
Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. v. Los Angeles County, App.	193	142
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Consolidated Const. Co. v., Sup.	193	238
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; De Soto v., App.	193	270
Pacific Finance & Investment Co. v. Pierce, App.	191	1115
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Lane v., App.	193	589
Pacific Seaside Home for Children v. Newbert Protection Dist., App.	193	169
Pacific States Corporation; Joseph Musto Sons-Keenan Co. v., App.	192	138
Pacific Wharf & Storage Co. v. Standard American Dredging Co., Sup.	192	847
Padgett; Pratt v., App.	191	39
Palace Amusement Co.; Glockner v., App.	191	46
Palmer Union Oil Co.; Martin v., Sup.	193	950
Panama Macaroni Co.; Alexander v., App.	191	955
Parkford; Stevens v., App.	191	699
Peake v. Harris, App.	192	310
Peckham; Suttori v., App.	191	960
Peninsula Rapid Transit Co.; Learned v., App.	193	591
People v. Adkins, App.	193	800
People v. Arcega, App.	193	264
People v. Arcega, App.	193	268
People v. Argrusa, App.	193	819
People v. Baca, App.	193	868
People v. Bay Side Land Co., App.	191	994
People v. Bruno, App.	193	511
People v. Carnes, App.	192	1088
People v. Carson, App.	192	318
People v. Christian, App.	192	182

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Clark, Sup.	192	521
People v. Cosgrove, App.	192	165
People v. Dewar, App.	193	156
People v. Foster, App.	192	142
People v. Fuski, App.	192	552
People v. Gavin, App.	193	174
People v. Goddard, App.	191	1012
People v. Graham, App.	192	123
People v. Graney, App.	192	460
People v. Hamilton, App.	192	467
People v. Herman, App.	193	868
People v. Kaufman, App.	193	953
People v. Kennedy, App.	192	556
People v. Kings County Development Co., App.	191	1004
People v. Kings County Development Co., App.	191	1009
People v. Lathrop, App.	192	722
People v. Lejkojes, App.	192	160
People v. McCaddon, App.	192	325
People v. Malone, App.	191	1113
People v. Mayen, App.	193	173
People v. Mazzurco, App.	193	164
People v. Moore, App.	191	980
People v. Mosley, App.	191	1118
People v. Nakis, Sup.	193	92
People v. Poo On, App.	192	1090
People v. Porter, App.	191	951
People v. Prince, App.	191	1115
People v. Reynolds, App.	192	343
People v. Ruiz, App.	192	327
People v. Silva, App.	192	330
People v. Smith, App.	191	996
People v. Smith, App.	192	321
People v. Taylor, App.	193	871
People v. Tinnen, App.	192	557
People v. Torres, App.	192	175
People v. Wilhite, App.	193	151
People v. Wyett, App.	193	153
People v. Zentgraf, App.	193	274
Peterkin v. Randolph Marketing Co., App.	191	947
Petersen v. Morse, App.	192	51
Peterson v. Lightfoot, App.	191	48
Peterson v. Rasmussen, App.	191	30
Petit; Hogue-Kellogg v., App.	192	113
Pettit v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	192	109
Philbrook, Ex parte, App.	191	77
Pierce; Pacific Finance & Investment Co. v., App.	191	1115
Pinnell's Guardianship, In re, Sup.	193	574
Plax v. Plax, Sup.	193	242
Pleasants v. Hanson, App.	192	183
Poo On; People v., App.	192	1090
Popst v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	192	296
Porter; People v., App.	191	951
Porterfield; Rolland v., Sup.	191	913
Porterfield; Simons v., App.	193	172
Portuguese American Bank v. Schultz, App.	193	806
Pos; Roy v., Sup.	191	542

P.

	Vol.	Page
Potter v. Smith, App.	191	1023
Potter Huffman Land & Live Stock Co. v. Witcher, App.	191	725
Prather; Ulm v., App.	192	878
Prather's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	521
Pratt v. Padgett, App.	191	39
Pridham Co.; Schalk Chemical Co. v., App.	192	195
Prince; People v., App.	191	1115
Pringle; City Inv. Co. v., App.	193	504
Pryor; Watson v., App.	193	797
Puccinelli v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	192	707
Puente Oil Co.; Hall v., App.	191	39
Pyper v. Jennings, App.	191	565
Quinn v. Quinn, App.	193	593
Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, Sup.	192	1021
Railroad Commission; City of San Leandro v., Sup.	191	1
Railroad Commission; Traber v., Sup.	191	366
Railroad Commission of California; City of Pasadena v., Sup.	192	25
Randolph Marketing Co.; Peterkin v., App.	191	947
Ranger; First Nat. Bank v., App.	193	788
Ranger v. First Nat. Bank, App.	193	790
Rasmussen; Peterson v., App.	191	30
Raymond, Ex parte, App.	192	459
Reclamation Dist. No. 1001; Roth v., Sup.	191	890
Reed; Lewis v., App.	192	335
Reese; Bente v., App.	191	945
Reineger, Ex parte, Sup.	193	81
Remley v. Remley, App.	193	604
Revert v. Hesse, Sup.	193	943
Rex Midway Oil Co.; American Well & Prospecting Co. v., Sup.	193	779
Reybolds; People v., App.	192	343
Richardson; Union Tank Line Co. v., Sup.	191	697
Richmond v. Denny, App.	191	554
Rickard v. Council of City of Santa Barbara, App.	192	726
Riegel v. Wollenshlager, App.	193	160
Robbins v. Law, App.	192	118
Roberts v. Abbott, App.	192	345
Robertson; Sherwood v., App.	191	972
Robertson's Estate, In re, Sup.	193	769
Roche; Aitken v., App.	192	464
Rolland v. Porterfield, Sup.	191	913
Roop; Little v., App.	192	868
Ross v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. Co., App.	191	703
Ross; Santa Barbara Lumber Co. v., Sup.	192	436
Ross; Smith v., App.	191	974
Roth v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1001, Sup.	191	890
Rothwell v. Vaughn, App.	193	611
Roy v. Pos, Sup.	191	542
Rudneck; Cohn v., App.	192	461
Rudneck v. Southern California Metal & Rubber Co., Sup.	193	775
Ruiz; People v., App.	192	327
R. W. Pridham Co.; Schalk Chemical Co. v., App.	192	195
Ryan; Federal Const. Co. v., App.	191	69
Ryan v. Superior Court of California in and for Sacramento County, App.	192	1036
San Diego Conservatory of Music; Mills v., App.	191	546

	Vol.	P. Page
San Diego County; Southern Pac. Land Co. v., Sup.	191	931
San Francisco, N. & C. Ry.; Hamilton v., App.	192	323
San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys.; Frederick v., App.	191	1020
San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. v. Superior Court in and for Alameda County, App.	192	116
San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys.; Wilson v., App.	191	975
San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. Co.; Ross v., App.	191	703
San Gabriel Valley Country Club v. City of Pasadena, Sup.	193	97
San Jacinto & Pleasant Valley Irr. Dist.; Farwell v., App.	192	1034
San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., Sup.	191	536
Santa Barbara Lumber Co. v. Ross, Sup.	192	436
Sarrasin; Collette v., Sup.	193	571
Schalk Chemical Co. v. R. W. Pridham Co., App.	192	195
Schloss; Beeson v., Sup.	192	292
Schneider v. Schneider, Sup.	191	533
Schultz; Portuguese American Bank v., App.	193	806
Schumann v. Karrer, Sup.	192	849
Security Commercial & Savings Bank v. Imperial Water Co. No. 1, Sup.	192	22
Security Mortg. Co. v. Delfs, App.	191	53
Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Sup.	193	102
Seely; Mosley v., App.	191	36
Seelye; United Canneries Co. of California v., App.	192	341
Selig; Cooper v., App.	191	983
Sherwood v. Robertson, App.	191	972
Shoults v. Williams, Sup.	191	16
Shriver v. Superior Court in and for Sonoma County, App.	192	124
Sierra; Gaschlin v., App.	191	550
Silva; People v., App.	192	330
Silvers v. Grossman, Sup.	192	534
Silvius v. Mordoff, Sup.	192	289
Simmonds v. Bell, App.	193	606
Simmons v. Stephens, App.	191	978
Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Mining & Power Co., App.	192	144
Simons v. Porterfield, App.	193	172
Simons Brick Co.; Bituminized Brick & Tile Co. v., Sup.	192	528
Simons Brick Co. v. Wiglesworth, Sup.	193	947
Simpson v. Hosin, App.	193	867
Sinclair v. Jordan, Sup.	191	910
Singh; Coffman v., App.	193	259
Slater Co.; Charles Ehrlich & Co. v., Sup.	192	526
Slocum; Baker v., App.	192	551
Smart v. Sosey, App.	193	167
Smith v. Bach, Sup.	191	14
Smith; People v., App.	191	996
Smith; People v., App.	192	321
Smith; Potter v., App.	191	1023
Smith v. Ross, App.	191	974
Smith v. Smith, App.	191	60
Sosey; Smart v., App.	193	167
Southern California Metal & Rubber Co.; Rudneck v., Sup.	193	775
Southern Pac. Co.; Baker v., Sup.	193	765
Southern Pac. Co.; Ferraris v., App.	191	45
Southern Pac. Co.; Lamport v., Sup.	191	527
Southern Pac. Land Co. v. San Diego County, Sup.	191	931
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Couldthirst v., App.	193	796

	Vol.	P. Page
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Hannah v., App.	192	304
Spangler; First Nat. Bank v., App.	192	874
Spence v. Fisher, Sup.	193	255
Spreckels; Boehm v., Sup.	191	5
Spreckels; Otten v., Sup.	191	11
Spring v. Tawa, App.	192	1051
Standard American Dredging Co.; Pacific Wharf & Storage Co. v., Sup.	192	847
Stearns; Williams v., App.	191	965
Stephan v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	192	1083
Stephens; Simmons v., App.	191	978
Stern Co.; Hyman v., App.	191	47
Stevens v. Parkford, App.	191	699
Stone, Ex parte, App.	192	71
Streeter & Riddell v. Bacon, App.	193	285
Streeton's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	16
Sturtevant v. Jordan, Sup.	191	365
Sumner; Mohn v., App.	191	991
Superior Court in and for Alameda County; San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. v., App.	192	116
Superior Court in and for Butte County; Sutter Butte Canal Co. v., Sup.	191	529
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Gould v., App.	191	56
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Puccinelli v., Sup.	192	707
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; Manoogian v., App.	192	168
Superior Court in and for Kern County; Mooney v., Sup.	192	542
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Stephan v., Sup.	192	1083
Superior Court in and for Merced County; Candelas v., App.	193	957
Superior Court in and for Riverside County; Wall v., App.	192	134
Superior Court in and for Sonoma County; Shriver v., App.	192	124
Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Vance v., App.	191	945
Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco; Danford v., App.	193	272
Superior Court of California in and for Imperial County; Davenport v., Sup.	191	911
Superior Court of California in and for Sacramento County; Ryan v., App.	192	1036
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Cline v., Sup.	193	929
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Helmer v., App.	191	1001
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Vignaut v., App.	191	1112
Sutter Butte Canal Co. v. Superior Court in and for Butte County, Sup.	191	529
Suttori v. Peckham, App.	191	960
Sward, Inc., Bailey v., Sup.	193	952
Tanner; Lewis v., App.	193	287
Taugher; Nave v., App.	193	508
Tawa; Spring v., App.	192	1051
Taylor; Clark v., App.	193	864
Taylor; People v., App.	193	871
Teatsen, Ex parte, Sup.	191	684
Textile Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, App.	192	880
Thannhauser & Co.; Cabrera v., Sup.	192	45
Thomas v. Layer, App.	191	949
Thos. D. Campbell & Co. v. Holehan, App.	192	121
Thompson v. Koeller, Sup.	191	927
Thornberry; Fowler v., App.	191	940

	P. Vol.	Page
Thorn's Estate, In re, Sup.	192	19
Throop v. Western Indemnity Co., App.	193	263
Tiffany, Ex parte, App.	192	547
Tiffany, Ex parte, two cases, App.	192	548
Tillman v. Gibson, App.	192	1033
Tinnen; People v., App.	192	557
Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; McDowell v., App.	192	103
Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Gould, App.	191	556
Torres; People v., App.	192	175
Towne; Fuller v., Sup.	193	88
Town of Sausalito; Marin Water & Power Co. v., App.	193	294
Traber v. Railroad Commission, Sup.	191	366
Trapp; Bradford v., App.	193	584
Travers, Application of, App.	192	454
Ulm v. Prather, App.	192	878
Union Tank Line Co. v. Richardson, Sup.	191	697
United Canneries Co. of California v. Seelye, App.	192	341
United Railroads of San Francisco; Lafargue v., Sup.	192	538
United Railroads of San Francisco; Murray v., App.	193	596
United States Macaroni Co.; Humphrey v., App.	193	609
Valine v. Valine, App.	192	69
Vance v. Superior Court, Los Angeles County, App.	191	945
Van Duzer; Humboldt County v., App.	192	192
Van Horn; Donley v., App.	193	514
Van Nostrand v. Collins, Sup.	192	707
Vaughn; Rothwell v., App.	193	611
Vezu; Demateis v., App.	193	793
Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, Sup.	193	243
Vietti v. Hines, App.	192	80
Vignaut v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, App.	191	1112
Vogh; Cruickshank v., App.	192	86
Wall v. Superior Court in and for Riverside County, App.	192	134
Walling v. Williams, Sup.	192	34
Wall's Estate, In re, Sup.	191	687
Wasserman v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, Sup.	193	130
Wassman; Zellner v., Sup.	193	84
Watson; National Pacific Oil Co. v., Sup.	193	133
Watson v. Pryor, App.	193	797
West; Donley v., App.	193	519
West Coast Life Ins. Co.; Whitney v., App.	193	149
Western Auto Stage Co.; Baker v., App.	192	73
Western Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	192	109
Western Indemnity Co.; Throop v., App.	193	263
Weyl-Zuckerman & Co.; Madison v., App.	192	110
Wheatley's Estate, In re, Sup.	193	934
Whistler; Marr v., App.	193	600
Whitford; Mitchell v., App.	192	457
Whitman v. City of San Diego, Sup.	193	98
Whitmore; California Nat. Supply Co. v., Sup.	193	785
Whitney v. West Coast Life Ins. Co., App.	193	149
Wiglesworth; Simons Brick Co. v., Sup.	193	947
Wilhite; People v., App.	193	151
Williams; Shoults v., Sup.	191	16
Williams v. Stearns, App.	191	965
Williams; Walling v., Sup.	192	34

	Vol.	P. Page
Willson; Anderson v., App.	191	1016
Wilson; Crouch v., Sup.	191	916
Wilson; McCarty v., Sup.	193	578
Wilson v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys., App.	191	975
Wilson's Estate, In re, Sup.	193	581
Wisnom v. McCarthy, App.	192	337
Witcher; Potter Huffman Land & Live Stock Co. v., App.	191	725
Wolff, Petition of, Sup.	192	33
Wolff v. City of Los Angeles, App.	193	862
Wolfskill; Cole v., App.	192	549
Wollenshlager; Riegel v., App.	193	160
Woods Lumber Co. v. Moore, Sup.	191	905
W. P. Fuller & Co. v. McClure, App.	191	1027
Wright-Callender-Andrews Co. v. Eaton, App.	191	68
Wuest; Henning v., App.	191	713
Wyett; People v., App.	193	153
Young; Hess v., Sup.	192	35
Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., two cases, App.	192	55
Yount; Eaton v., App.	191	1009
Zahn Corporation; McCoy v., Sup.	191	20
Zechiel v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation, Sup.	192	720
Zechiel v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation, Sup.	192	722
Zellner v. Wassman, Sup.	193	84
Zentgraf; People v., App.	193	274

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

191 PACIFIC REPORTER

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

191 PACIFIC REPORTER

183 Cal. 229

CITY OF SAN LEANDRO v. RAILROAD COMMISSION, and four other cases. (S. F. 9306–9309, 9314.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1920.)

1. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(6)—Commission can fix charges of water company on municipalities, if property devoted to public.

The jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission to impose charges on municipalities for the service of a water company is dependent on whether, as regards the services for which the charges are sought to be imposed, the company has actually devoted its property to a public use.

2. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(6)—Water service furnished municipalities a public use.

Water service dedicated by water company impartially to all municipalities requiring such service held a public use, so that the Railroad Commission had jurisdiction to fix charges on such municipalities.

3. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(1)—Water company must be compensated by cities for cost of operation and maintenance.

A water company, supplying municipalities, must be compensated for the cost of operating and maintaining the portions of its system devoted to their requirements; the services in return for which charges are imposed being those involved in supplying water and maintaining the system.

4. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(6)—Fixing of water company's charges to cities within power of Railroad Commission; "interference with municipal affair."

Fixing of charges for service on municipalities in favor of water company held within rate-fixing power of the Railroad Commission, and not an interference with municipal money or property by the imposition of a tax, in violation of Const. art. 11, § 13; fixing of rates for service not being interference with municipal affair, within sections 6, 8.

5. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(12) — Failure to object in applications for rehearing by commission precludes review.

Under Public Utilities Act, § 66, municipalities which, in their applications to the Railroad Commission for rehearing of the matter of fixing rates to be charged them by a water company for its service, fail specifically to set forth the alleged failure of the commission to fix a rate base for its award, cannot urge the objection to the award in the Supreme Court on certiorari.

6. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(6)—Requiring cities to pay for water service not in excess of jurisdiction of Railroad Commission or confiscatory.

Requirement of Railroad Commission that certain municipalities pay a water company for its service of fire protection, etc., a sum amounting to less than 10 per cent. of the total revenue allowed the water company, held not to have exceeded the jurisdiction of the commission, or to have amounted to confiscation of the property of the cities.

7. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(12)—Supreme Court will not disturb discretionary findings of commission.

The Supreme Court will not disturb the discretionary finding of the Railroad Commission on the question whether a water storage project would be available to meet the needs of water consumers during the year for which rates to be allowed a water company were imposed on municipalities.

8. Waters and water courses ⊂=203(12)—Inability of cities to meet charges in favor of water company cannot be considered by Supreme Court.

The inability of municipalities to meet certain rates for water service imposed on them in favor of the water company by the Railroad Commission, though a matter of expediency to be weighed by the commission, cannot be considered by the Supreme Court in a proceeding attacking the legality of the charges or rates.

In Bank.

Certiorari by the City of San Leandro, by the City of Richmond, by the City of Oakland, by the City of Berkeley, and by the city of Alameda, respectively, to review an order of the Railroad Commission of the state of California fixing rates. Decision of the commission affirmed.

H. L. Hagan, City Atty., and Leon E. Gray, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, Frank V. Cornish, City Atty., of San Francisco, Wm. J.

Locke, City Atty., of Alameda, D. J. Hall, City Atty., of Richmond, and Harris P. Jones, City Atty., of San Leandro (G. Clark, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners.

Hugh Gordon, of Los Angeles (Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent Railroad Commission.

Creed, Jones & Dall, of San Francisco, and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for East Bay Water Co.

LENNON, J. Certiorari upon the petition of each of the above-named petitioners, seeking a review by this court of an order of the Railroad Commission of the state of California which fixed the rates to be charged by the East Bay Water Company for water supplied. In the order directing the issuance of a writ of review, the above-entitled proceedings were consolidated. The petition in each one of the separate proceedings attacks the same portion of the decision of the commission upon practically the same grounds. The rates fixed in said decision make no distinction between the residents of each community, and, while it is true that the basic charge allocated to each community varies, the underlying principle is the same in all cases. Therefore it is obvious that, if any one of the cities prevails, there must be a readjustment of the rates as to all the communities, or, in other words, an entire new allocation of rates.

On July 1, 1918, the Railroad Commission, by decision No. 5534, fixed the total revenues to which the water company was entitled at $2,000,000. In allocating or apportioning this total sum among the various classes of consumers, the commission determined that approximately $192,000 should be charged against the East Bay cities. Portions of this $192,000 charge were imposed upon the respective petitioners as follows:

Oakland	$105,500.00
Berkeley	43,000.00
Alameda	22,000.00
Richmond	11,000.00
San Leandro	2,500.00

The cities were, in addition, required to pay rates upon all pipe lines and hydrants installed subsequent to January 1, 1917, and a surcharge of 10 per cent. on the above amounts. Upon the cities making a showing to the commission that their tax budgets had already been made up, and that it would be impossible to provide money to meet this new charge, the commission, by a supplemental order on August 13, 1918, temporarily suspended the above rates as to the municipalities. On August 8, 1919, the East Bay Water Company filed an application, alleging the necessity of increased revenue and requesting the reimposition of the rates upon the municipalities. After a hearing, the commission by its decision No. 6755, determined that the water company was entitled to a gross income of $2,350,000, approved rates which it was estimated would yield that income, and reimposed upon the East Bay cities the charges fixed in its prior decision. Applications of the petitioners for a rehearing were denied by the commission in November, 1919.

[1] Petitioners urge the objection, in various forms, that the commission is without jurisdiction to impose these charges, for the reason, it is claimed, that as to the services in return for which the charges are imposed the water company is not a public utility. The jurisdiction of the commission to fix the charges is, of course, dependent upon whether, as regards the services for which the charges are sought to be imposed, the company has actually devoted its property to a public use. Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 89, 175 Pac. 466. Upon this phase of the case, the decision of the commission declares that the basic charges in controversy are imposed upon the several municipalities mentioned—

"for water used by them for fire fighting, street sprinkling, and other purposes. * * * Admittedly it is difficult to equitably distribute the expense of maintaining and operating a system such as this among the various consumers in proportion to the benefits derived by each. An exact allocation of the cost to the company of rendering a service such as is rendered to the cities is impossible. The amount of water used is not a proper measure, because the demand for fire purposes is wholly unexpected, and the company must stand ready to deliver a large quantity of water within a short period at any point where the fire may occur. This has been designated a 'readiness to serve' or 'stand-by' service. The utility is rendering a valuable service to the municipality and its taxpayers, which requires an investment and operating expense largely in excess of what would be required, if domestic and industrial consumers only were served."

It has been decided in this state that the law does not impose any duty upon a water company, as a public utility, to furnish a municipality, or its inhabitants, with water for a particular purpose. Ukiah v. Ukiah Water & Improvement Co., 142 Cal. 173, 75 Pac. 773, 64 L. R. A. 231, 100 Am. St. Rep. 107; Niehaus Bros. Co. v. Contra Costa, etc., Co., 159 Cal. 305, 113 Pac. 375, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045. The cases cited further hold that liability for loss resulting from fire is not an incident of the ordinary relation of water distributor and consumer, but such liability on the part of a water company can only be created by an express private contract whereby the water company agrees to furnish water as a protection against fire. Accordingly, throughout the hearing in the case now before the court, the water company steadfastly denied that it had assumed, or could as a public utility be compelled to assume, any liability to furnish water to the municipalities or their inhabitants for the particular purpose of fire protection, claiming that it is a public utility to the extent, and only to the extent, that it furnishes water as a commodity, and irrespective of the purpose for which the water is used by the consumer. It is upon this stand taken by the water company that petitioners rest their argument that the commission is attempting to impose upon them charges for a service which they are not receiving, and which rests upon private contract, and cannot be regulated as a public utility service.

[2] The argument in this behalf, however, fails to distinguish between the furnishing of water for a particular purpose, such as for fire protection, and supplying it as a commodity merely, in the quantity and manner desired, but without reference or regard to the use to which it is put by the consumer. While the company is not furnishing water to the municipalities for any particular purpose, and is not liable for fire protection, it is furnishing water as a commodity, which is ready for use and may be received and used by the municipalities for certain purposes, the most important of which is that of fire protection. That the water company is thus rendering a material municipal service, and that such service cannot be dispensed with by the cities at present, is beyond question. It is equally indisputable that this service has been dedicated impartially to all consumers within the class that requires such services. Having been devoted to all municipalities within the field of the company's operations, and the use being one of importance to the public generally, the dedication is of such a character that every member of the class has a legal right to the use, and it falls, therefore, within the accepted definition of a public use. Allen v. Railroad Commission, supra.

The cases of Lewis v. People's Water Co., 3 Cal. Railroad Com. Rep. 416, and City of Alameda v. People's Water Co., P. U. R. 1916D, 865, hold that, in the absence of a public duty to furnish fire protection, a water company cannot be compelled to extend its mains solely for the purpose of rendering such protection adequate. Petitioners rely upon these cases as establishing the principle that the commission is without jurisdiction to control the services for which it has imposed the charges. It will be noted that these cases do not go to the extent of holding that the company cannot be compelled to extend its service, so as to furnish the municipalities with water in an adequate manner, provided that the municipalities compensate the company for such extension and that the water is supplied as a commodity and without liability for loss by fire in case it is used by the municipalities for fire protection. Section 549 of the Civil Code provides:

"All corporations formed to supply water to cities or towns must furnish pure fresh water to the inhabitants thereof, for family uses, so long as the supply permits, at reasonable rates and without distinction of persons, upon proper demand therefor; and must furnish water to the extent of their means, in case of fire or other great necessity, free of charge."

Aside from the fact that water need no longer be furnished "free of charge," this section remains in force. The phrase "to the extent of their means," as used in that section, may signify merely that the company is not an insurer as regards fire protection, or that the furnishing of water to municipalities is a function secondary in importance, and one which must not be permitted to interfere with the primary function of furnishing water to private individuals. On the other hand, it may mean that water companies cannot be compelled to increase their means in order to supply water to municipalities. That point has never been passed upon by the Railroad Commission, nor by this court, and seems not likely to arise in so far as petitioners are concerned, for the reason that the company has stipulated to such an extension and asserts its refusal in the past to have been due solely to the failure of petitioners to provide for compensation to the company for the additional expenditure. Moreover, it is unnecessary, for the purposes of this decision, to pass upon the question as to whether or not such extension of service can be compelled. While the power to compel an extension of plant is an ordinary element of the right to regulate a public utility, the mere fact that the Legislature deemed it expedient to dispense with this power does not take away the public utility character of the service nor prevent regulation of the service "within the present means."

[3] The fact that the commission stated that the charges are imposed for "services" is not, as is contended by petitioners, inconsistent with the principle that the company is furnishing water to the cities as a commodity, and not as a fire protection service. Admittedly the amount of water furnished the municipalities is not a fair standard of valuation. The water company must be compensated for the cost of operating and maintaining the portions of its system devoted to the requirements of the municipalities, and the "services" in return for which the charges are imposed are those involved in supplying the water and maintaining the system.

[4] The fixing of the charges is within the rate-fixing power of the commission, and is not an interference with municipal money or property or the imposition of a tax in violation of section 13 of article 11 of the Constitution of this state. The services are rendered to the municipalities, and should be paid for by them, and not by the ordinary consumers. Merely because the money to pay the charges will probably be raised by taxation is no argument for holding the charges themselves to be taxes, and, since the payment of the charges is dependent upon the continuing acceptance by the cities of the services in question, they are essentially rates and not taxes. Nor is the fixing of rates for the services to the cities an interference with a "municipal affair" within the control of the municipalities, within the meaning of sections 6 and 8 of article 11 of the state Constitution. Furthermore, even if it were, the provisions of section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution, and of the Public Utilities Act (Laws Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 18), give the Railroad Commission power to regulate public utility services rendered to municipalities as well as those to individuals.

Section 23 of article 12 of the Constitution of this state, in vesting the commission with jurisdiction in the matter of the regulation of public utilities, saves to the cities the power to make local regulations governing public utilities, "other than the fixing of rates." Therefore, by virtue of this provision, a vote of the respective petitioners is unnecessary to confer upon the commission jurisdiction to regulate the rates in question.

The contention is made that, even if the service is a public utility service, subject to regulation by the commission, the commission did not regularly pursue its authority in fixing the amount of the charges. The method pursued was as follows: There were submitted, on behalf of the company and also on behalf of the cities, various rate bases which purported to comprise the value of the property upon which the company was entitled to a reasonable return. The smallest rate base was submitted by a representative of one of the petitioners, the city of Berkeley. At the same time the company submitted a statement of its financial needs. The commission expressly refrained from passing upon the value of the company's property or a proper interest return; it computed the revenue to which the company would be entitled, if allowed interest at 8 per cent. on the rate bases submitted, and found that, allowing interest at this per cent. the smallest rate base submitted, if corrected by the addition of certain items erroneously omitted, would yield a return at least equal to the amount claimed as necessary to meet the financial needs of the company. Accordingly a sum equal to the amount of the financial needs of the company, plus operating expenses, was fixed by the commission as the amount of revenue to be allowed the company. The commission then estimated from the evidence before it the proportion of this revenue to be borne by the cities. It is now claimed that the commission arbitrarily allowed a return based upon the financial needs of the company, whereas the amount to which the utility is entitled is a fair return on a reasonable rate base. In its decision of October 11, 1919, the commission states:

"It is very important to provide a sufficient revenue to put the company's credit upon a sound basis so that it may obtain money at reasonable rates, thus preventing a heavier burden being placed upon the consumers. The production of this revenue, however, to care for the financial needs of this company, should not place an unreasonable burden upon its consumers nor should it be in excess of a reasonable return upon the value of the utility's property." (Italics are ours.)

[5] The commission then proceeded to compare the amount of the financial needs with an 8 per cent. return on the lowest rate base submitted, and found it did not exceed that return. Therefore, even though no rate base nor rate of interest was expressly found and adopted by the commission, nevertheless it follows, as a necessary implication from all that was said and done by the commission, that it found that this particular rate of interest and rate based represented at least a reasonable rate of return on the fair value of the company's property, in the sense that neither were, as against the consumer, excessive. Since the amount allowed the company was first compared with this return to ascertain that it did not exceed such return, the allowance was, in effect, nothing more than an allowance of a return on the investments of the company. In view of the fact that it is not claimed that the revenue allowed exceeds a reasonable return on a reasonable rate base, petitioners' objection to the method of procedure is purely academic. But, however that may be, petitioners failed to specifically set forth the alleged failure to fix a rate base in their applications to the commission for a rehearing, and are therefore precluded by the terms of section 66 of the Public Utilities Act from urging the objection in this court.

It is further contended that the commission was without jurisdiction to impose the charges upon the cities, unless it first ascertained the value of the portion of the system of the water company devoted to service to the cities, and also the cost of operating this portion of the system. As previously indicated herein, the commission states:

"Admittedly it is difficult to equitably distribute the expense of maintaining and operating a system such as this among the various consumers in proportion to the benefits derived by each. An exact allocation of the cost to the company of rendering a service such as is rendered to the cities is impossible."

[6] There is no rule which requires the commission to allocate charges for public service among the different classes of consumers by an exact mathematical calculation. In the vast majority of cases this is impossible, for there is no segregation of plant. If the mere fact that a segregation of plant or cost of operation is impossible rendered invalid the charges here sought to be imposed, for like reason the commission would be without jurisdiction to fix the rates for water supplied to private individuals. Of course, an allocation based upon estimate presents the possibility of an abuse of the rate-fixing power. For that reason the court will closely scrutinize rates so fixed, lest the exercise of the rate-fixing power merge into a system of confiscation. We take into consideration the facts that the cities are receiving substantially all of their water fire protection from the East Bay Water Company, with the possible exception of San Leandro; that, in conjunction with the domestic and industrial consumers, they are using the entire water supply, pumps, reservoirs, transmission lines, all the mains of 4 inches in diameter, and all the larger mains, aggregating approximately 440 miles in length, and are having the use of special service and higher pressure in the case of sudden demands caused by large fires. Having this in view, it cannot be said that a requirement that these cities pay a sum amounting to less than 10 per cent. of the total revenue allowed exceeds the jurisdiction of the commission or amounts to confiscation.

[7] Certain property of the East Bay Water Company, known as the San Pablo project, is now under construction. There was testimony at the hearing that this lake contained at the time of the hearing about 2,000,000,000 gallons, or 8 months' water storage; that this could be connected with the water company's mains supplying water to East Bay consumers within 30 days in case of an emergency; that the company was at the time drawing from San Leandro Lake 2,000,000 gallons a day in excess of the safe yielding capacity of that lake, and was able to do so because of the San Pablo storage available in case of an emergency. The value of the San Pablo project was excluded from the rate bases with which the statement of financial needs was compared.

It is contended by petitioners, however, that because certain expense items, including taxes and interest on bonds, connected with the San Pablo project, were included in the statement of financial needs approved by the commission, the San Pablo project was treated as property used and useful, upon which the company was allowed a return. Even assuming this view to be tenable, it was within the jurisdiction of the commission, in the exercise of its discretionary powers, to determine from the facts before it whether or not the San Pablo project would be available to the needs of the consumers during the year for which the rates were imposed. This court will not disturb the finding of the commission upon that question. Union Hollywood Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 178 Cal. 206, 172 Pac. 983.

[8] Petitioners urge their inability to meet this additional financial obligation as an objection to the imposition of the charges. This was a matter of expediency to be weighed by the commission, but, of course, cannot be considered by this court in a proceeding attacking the legality of the charges.

The decision is affirmed.

We concur: OLNEY, J.; SHAW, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 239

BOEHM et al. v. SPRECKELS. (S. F. 7692.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1920.)

1. Pleading ⊜8(3) — Allegation that newspaper route was property right held allegation of opinion.

An allegation that it was the custom and usage of newspapers in a certain city to treat and deal with routes and the business connected therewith as property was but an allegation of an opinion.

2. Sales ⊜7—Agreement transferring route to newspaper carrier not sale of property.

An agreement whereby a newspaper transferred and delivered a newspaper route for a consideration held to create an agency and not to declare a sale of property.

3. Principal and agent ⊜27—Agent can convey only opportunity to vendee to offer himself as substitute.

In a qualified sense an agent of an agency terminable at will may sell or transfer his right to the agency, but he cannot transfer to the purchaser anything more than the opportunity to offer himself to the principal as a substitute.

4. Principal and agent ⊜34—Interest in money collected not "interest in subject of agency."

The interest which an agent authorized to collect a debt may have in the money collected, a part of which he is to take as compensation for his services, is an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of his power, and not an interest in "the subject of the agency," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 2356, as to agency coupled with an interest.

5. Principal and agent ⊜36—Sale of subject of agency terminates agency.

The sale of the subject of an agency terminable at will made in good faith by the principal operates as a termination of the agency and is equivalent to a revocation thereof.

6. Evidence ⊜65—Every one presumed to know law.

Every one is presumed to know the law.

⊜For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

7. Principal and agent ⟹41—No damages for termination of indefinite agency.

An agent cannot recover damages from the principal on account of the termination of an agency for an indefinite period for causes mentioned in Civ. Code, § 2355, except where the agency was procured for a valuable consideration passing from the agent to the principal and the revocation is prior to the expiration of a reasonable time after its creation.

8. Principal and agent ⟹33—Principal may revoke unless agent's power is coupled with interest.

Except where an agent's power is coupled with an interest, the power to revoke always exists under Civ. Code, § 2355, but the right to revoke without liability for damages depends upon circumstances.

9. Principal and agent ⟹41 — Revocation of agency for consideration after 10 years not unreasonable as matter of law.

In an action by a newspaper carrier who paid $3,250 for the right to deliver papers in a certain district for an indefinite period, it cannot be said that 10 years was not a reasonable time for the continuance of the agency and that revocation at the end of that period would give the carrier the right to recover the original sum paid for the agency, in the absence of a showing of special hardship or of facts indicating that a longer period was contemplated or expected.

10. Principal and agent ⟹41 — Benefits to business arising from performance by agent inure to principal.

The benefits to the business of the principal arising from the performance by the agent of his duties under the contract of agency inure entirely to the principal, and the agent is entitled to nothing except the agreed compensation, unless the contract of agency expressly provides for something more.

Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by M. Boehm and others against John D. Spreckels. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, Wm. M. Cannon, Fabius T. Finch, Paul F. Fratessa, and Geo. B. Keane, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In the court below a demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and judgment was thereupon given for the defendant. The plaintiffs appeal.

The plaintiffs are the assignees of all the rights of one James Shepherd to recover damages under a contract made between Shepherd and Spreckels on September 1, 1903. Spreckels was at that time the owner of the San Francisco Call, a morning newspaper of general circulation in San Francisco, which had been published and circulated therein for more than 40 years prior to said date. For the more convenient transaction of the business the city of San Francisco had been divided into districts, in each of which the newspapers taken by patrons thereof were delivered to such patrons by carriers who received the papers from the publisher and delivered the same to such patrons. These districts were commonly known as "newspaper routes." The contract between Spreckels and Shepherd related to one of these routes. Spreckels was the party of the first part and Shepherd the party of the second part therein. Substituting their names for these phrases, the material parts of the agreement are as follows:

"That for and in consideration of the sum of $3,250.00 gold coin of the United States in hand paid to said Spreckels, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and of the further conditions and covenants named in this agreement, said Spreckels has transferred and delivered and by these presents does transfer and deliver to said Shepherd, that certain route for the delivery of said newspaper the San Francisco Call lying and being in said city, county and state aforesaid, and more particularly described as follows, to wit:

"Route number 4 of the San Francisco Call, embracing the following territory: Commencing at the southeasterly corner of Sixteenth and Howard streets, thence southerly along the easterly line of Howard street to the corner of Twenty-Fourth street, thence easterly along the northerly line of Twenty-Fourth street to Potrero avenue, thence northerly along the westerly line of Potrero avenue to Channel street, thence westerly along the southerly line of Channel street to Harrison street, thence southerly along the easterly line of Harrison street to Sixteenth street, thence westerly along the southerly line of Sixteenth street to point of commencement.

"Spreckels agrees to deliver to Shepherd daily, a sufficient number of issues of said newspaper to supply said newspaper route, and said Shepherd agrees to receive the same and to pay said Spreckels therefor at the rate of $10^{11}/_{13}$ cents per paper per week, said payments to be made weekly and upon Saturday of each and every week during the existence of this agreement.

"It is expressly understood and agreed that said Shepherd shall manage, conduct and control said newspaper route above described in such manner and with such efficiency as shall be for the best interests of said the San Francisco Call newspaper, and shall maintain and preserve the extent and value of said newspaper route to the satisfaction of said Spreckels, and said Spreckels hereby reserves the right to make such changes in the rate to be paid for the newspapers delivered Shepherd under this contract, as changed conditions in said route and the service thereof or in the cost of production of said newspaper shall render reasonable and just, and further reserves the right to give his written consent before any legal transfer of this contract shall be made.

"It is distinctly understood and made a part of this agreement that this bill of sale shall not be hypothecated or loans negotiated thereon where loans may be raised on said route without the full knowledge and sanction of said San Francisco Call, John D. Spreckels, proprietor."

Attached thereto as a part thereof was the following:

"It is hereby agreed and understood by and between Spreckels, proprietor, and James Shepherd, owner and holder of that certain newspaper route on the San Francisco Call known as route number 4, as described in the attached bill of sale, of which this agreement is made a part;

"That whereas the subscription price of said newspaper has been increased from 65 cents to 75 cents per month from and after July 1st, 1903.

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, and of said increase of 10 cents per month in said subscription price, it is understood and agreed that of said increase of 10 cents per month in the subscription price said James Shepherd shall receive 2 cents per calendar month and the Call shall receive 8 cents per calendar month, in addition to the amount received by each of them respectively previous to said increase. That the said San Francisco Call may at any time increase its subscription price, or reduce the same back to 65 cents per month, to suit existing conditions as the judgment of said newspaper management shall deem reasonable, and said rate to James Shepherd will be increased or decreased in proportion to the increase indicated herein."

The complaint further alleges that at the time the contract was made, and ever since, it was, and has been, a custom and usage of publishers of newspapers in San Francisco, including the defendant, to treat and deal with newspaper routes, the lists of subscribers thereon, and the exclusive right to sell and deliver newspapers and procure new subscribers upon said routes and the good will of the business thus carried on over such routes, as property, and to make sales and transfers thereof accordingly; that the defendant, during all the period of his ownership of said newspaper, had known and acted upon said custom and usage, and that he and Shepherd executed the aforesaid contract with knowledge of said custom and in pursuance thereof; that Shepherd continued to perform his part of said contract, until September 1, 1913, and by his efforts had secured large numbers of new subscribers to the paper whereby the value of the business was materially increased and at that time was of the value of $4,000; that it had returned to him a net annual profit of $227.50, and he would have continued to have received that profit for the period of at least 14 years succeeding said date if the defendant had continued to perform his part of the said agreement; that on August 15, 1913, defendant, intending to take said newspaper route from said Shepherd and deprive him of the same and all benefits and advantages of the business conducted by him under said agreement and to transfer and sell said newspaper route with the business aforesaid to other parties, gave notice to each of the subscribers of said paper upon said route that they would be served with the San Francisco Chronicle instead of the Call until September 1, 1913, and that thereafter the San Francisco Chronicle would be delivered to them daily instead of the San Francisco Call; that on September 1, 1913, defendant refused, and ever since has refused, to deliver to Shepherd any copies of said San Francisco Call, although delivery thereof was demanded of defendant by said plaintiff, and defendant has repudiated said agreement; and that by reason thereof the business of the defendant in selling and distributing said newspaper upon said route has been destroyed, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $7,185. In said item of damages is contained the sum of $3,185, alleged to be the value of the profits which the plaintiff would have received after September 1, 1913, if the defendant had continued to deliver the said newspapers as provided in the contract.

[1] The allegation that it was the custom and usage of the publishers in San Francisco to treat and deal with such routes and the business connected therewith as property adds nothing to the case of the plaintiff. It amounts to nothing more than a statement that it was the opinion of such publishers that rights concerning said newspaper routes constituted property. The question whether the rights relating thereto constitute property which is a subject of sale is a question of law that is to be determined by the principles of law and not by the opinions or customs of persons who deal with such matters.

The plaintiffs contend that the agreement aforesaid operated as a grant to Shepherd of that portion of the business of Spreckels which was transacted within the territory included in said route, consisting of the delivery of the paper to the subscribers along said route and making sales of the paper to others within the territory; that this grant included the good will of the business; and that it gave Shepherd the absolute right to continue the business and compel Spreckels to perform his part thereof during the life of Spreckels. They also contend that, if the agreement created an agency authorizing Shepherd to sell and deliver papers for Spreckels, it was an agency coupled with an interest in the subject-matter thereof and was therefore irrevocable by Spreckels except for cause. Also that, even if the agency was not coupled with an interest, it was created for a valuable consideration and therefore was irrevocable at the will of Spreckels, and that inasmuch as it did not specify the time for its continuance it could not be revoked for a reasonable time, which reasonable time is a period equal to the life of the newspaper, or the life of Spreckels.

[2] The facts stated in the complaint must be considered in construing the contract. At and before the time it was made, Spreckels was the publisher and proprietor of the newspaper. It circulated generally throughout the city, and there were subscribers thereto and patrons thereof living or doing business along said route, to whom it was then being delivered. The contract shows that the subscription price was 75 cents per month and that Spreckels had the right to raise or lower this price at will and could also make reasonable changes in the rate to be paid by Shepherd. The contract is not entirely complete on the subject, but it is reasonably clear from its contents in connection with the facts alleged that, subject to this power to change the price, Shepherd was to pay to Spreckels for each paper received, the sum of $10^{11}/_{13}$ cents per week, plus 8 cents per month, and that he was to collect from the subscribers 75 cents per month and keep the difference for his own compensation. Spreckels does not agree to sell the papers to Shepherd. The fact would appear to be that the papers were sold by Spreckels to the subscribers. That was the condition when the contract was made, and there is nothing in the contract to indicate that it was to effect a change in the relations between the publisher and the subscribers. The agreement of Spreckels is that he will "deliver" to Shepherd "a sufficient number of issues of said newspaper to supply said route." In view of the fact that Spreckels had already agreed to sell and deliver the papers to the subscribers, this language cannot reasonably be construed to import a sale of the same copies to Shepherd.

If Spreckels had sold an interest in his business as publisher of the newspaper, the two would have become partners. If a separable part of that business, assuming that a separation was possible, had been sold, they would have been partners in the ownership of that part. In either case the ownership of the respective interests would have continued after a dissolution of the partnership, each would have been entitled to his share of the profits, and would be liable to the other for a share of losses, and would be liable for the debts of the joint enterprise. The contract manifestly had no such effect. The statement that Spreckels does "transfer and deliver" to Shepherd "that certain route for the delivery of said newspaper" therein described cannot reasonably be understood to be a transfer to Shepherd of any interest in the business of publishing the newspaper. The more reasonable conclusion, in view of all the facts, is that it is only a rather awkward expression of the idea that Shepherd was to have the right and duty, as agent of Spreckels, of delivering the papers, soliciting and taking new subscriptions thereto, and conducting the business incidental thereto within the territory described, including the collection of the price of the subscriptions owing to Spreckels. The statements that Shepherd was to receive the papers, distribute them within the territory, and "manage, conduct and control said newspaper route in such manner and with such efficiency as shall be for the best interests" of said newspaper, "and as shall maintain and preserve the extent and value of said newspaper route to the satisfaction of" Spreckels, are apt expressions to describe the duties and powers of an agent. They strongly imply that an agency only was contemplated. They are meaningless as applied to a sale of the business, or a part thereof, to the carrier. For these reasons we conclude that the contract created an agency and did not declare a sale of property. This is the effect of the decisions of other courts upon similar contracts. Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 45 Or. 525, 78 Pac. 737; Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 53 Or. 272, 100 Pac. 7; Staroske v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 235 Mo. 67, 138 S. W. 36; Wilcox & Gibbs Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 636, 12 Sup. Ct. 94, 35 L. Ed. 882. So far as the opinion of the District Court of Appeal in Otten v. Spreckels, 24 Cal. App. 262, 141 Pac. 224, contains anything inconsistent with this conclusion, that case is disapproved.

[3] Appellants refer to cases which say that an agent may sell or transfer his right to the agency even where it is terminable at will. In a qualified sense he may do so, but he cannot transfer to the purchaser anything more than the opportunity to offer himself to the principal as a substitute for the transferror. He buys a mere chance that the principal may accept him in place of the other. No interest in the agency, or in the business which the former agent was authorized to transact for the principal, can be thus sold or transferred. These cases are not authority for the proposition that such an agent has a property interest in the business which he carries on and which is the subject of his agency. Expressions may be found in such decisions indicating that the agent may sell his agency, but they cannot be considered as declaring that he has any interest in the business which may be the subject thereof.

[4] Shepherd had an interest in collecting the subscription price, for upon that his compensation as agent was dependent. But the interest which an agent authorized to collect a debt may have in the money collected, a part of which he is to take as compensation for his services, is an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of his power, and not an interest in "the subject of the agency," within the meaning of section 2356. Hunt v. Rousmanier, 21 U. S. 204, 5 L. Ed. 589; Meyer v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 156 Mo. App. 176, 136 S. W. 5; Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 260, 11 Pac. 706; Hartley and Miner's Appeal, 53 Pa. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207. We therefore conclude that the action cannot be maintained on the theory that Shepherd had an interest in the subject of the agency and that, as the first count of the complaint is founded on this theory, it does not state a cause of action.

The second count of the complaint is founded upon the theory that the payment of a valuable consideration by Shepherd implies an agreement that the agency should continue for a reasonable time, and that the revocation by Spreckels occurred before such reasonable time had expired. This count prays only for the recovery of the $3,250 paid for the route by Shepherd to Spreckels, with interest thereon from the time of revocation. It alleges that 7 per cent. upon said sum was received by Shepherd annually during the 10-year period; that it was only a reasonable return thereon; and that he had never received or had returned to him any part of the principal. It also repeats the other facts hereinbefore stated.

[5, 6] It is contended that the implied agreement for a reasonable time means that the agency should continue for a period which would "enable the carrier to get back his invested capital, together with a fair profit on his investment." The Civil Code provides that an agency is terminated by:

"(1) The expiration of its term; (2) the extinction of its subject; (3) the death of the agent; (4) his renunciation of the agency; or (5) the incapacity of the agent to act as such." Section 2355.

Also, that when not coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency it is terminated by:

"(1) Its revocation by the principal; (2) his death; or (3) his incapacity to contract."

It is also an established rule that a sale of the subject of the agency made in good faith by the principal operates as a termination of the agency and is equivalent to a revocation thereof. 1 Mechem on Agency, § 698. Every one is presumed to know the law, and it must therefore be presumed that the parties to the agreement contracted with knowledge of the possibility of a termination of the agency by either of the causes above specified.

[7-9] We know of no rule of law which allows the agent to recover damages from the principal on account of a termination of an agency for an indefinite period for any of the causes above mentioned, except where the agency was procured for a valuable consideration passing from the agent to the principal and the revocation is prior to the expiration of a reasonable time after its creation. In Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 309, 11 Pac. 820, it is said that an agency created for a valuable consideration is irrevocable, but as this is directly contrary to the Civil Code, and as the expression was clearly obiter, the case cannot be considered as authority. There is a distinction between the "power" to revoke and the "right" to revoke an agency. Except where the agent's power is coupled with an interest, the power to revoke always exists, but the right to revoke without liability for damages depends upon circumstances. 1 Mechem on Agency, vol. 1 (2d Ed.) § 568. If the right does not exist, the principal will be liable for damages upon a revocation. In Brown v. National Electric Co. Works, 168 Cal. 337, 143 Pac. 606, the defendant, for a valuable consideration agreed to employ the plaintiff at a monthly salary for an indefinite time. The plaintiff was discharged without cause after three months' service. It was held that there was an implied contract arising from the valuable consideration, to continue the employment for a reasonable time, that the discharge in three months was a breach of the implied contract, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff was entitled to rescind the contract and recover what he had paid thereon. In the present case the paper had been published for more than 40 years before the contract was made in 1903. The payment of $3,250 for an agency for an indefinite period raises the inference that both parties considered the privilege valuable and that both assumed that it would be continued for a considerable period of time. The plaintiff contends that under such circumstances the implied agreement is that the agency shall continue until the agent has received, as compensation, a sum sufficient to repay the consideration paid by him to the principal, together with a fair profit thereon during the necessary period, in addition to a reasonable compensation for his own time and labor in performing his duties. We cannot agree to this proposition. It would add to the agreement something not contained therein, and instead of being an agency for an indefinite time, terminable at will, it would become an agency, indefinite, it is true, but one which must necessarily continue for a long time after its creation, the length of the period depending upon the capacity and diligence of the agent and on many other future conditions which might arise affecting his success or failure, none of which could be foreseen. No subsequent condition which affected the ability of the plaintiff to recoup his outlay is alleged. The contention is that the obligation to allow him time to recoup arises solely from the payment of a consideration for the agency. The complaint does not disclose the amount which Shepherd received and applied as compensation for his own time and labor. It must be presumed that the opportunity of obtaining such employment and compensation was one of the main inducements which caused him to enter into the arrangement. No standard can be fixed for the determination of the question what is a reasonable time. Under all the circumstances of the case, and in the absence of any showing of special hardship or of further facts indicating that a longer period was contemplated or expected, we think it cannot be said that 10 years was not a reasonable time for its continuance, and that the revocation at the end of that period would not give a right to Shepherd to recover the original sum paid for the agency.

[10] In support of the proposition that the agency was terminated before a reasonable time had expired, the plaintiff cites the Brown Case above mentioned and also Pierce v. Tenn., etc., Co., 173 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 335, 43 L. Ed. 591, Davidson v. Laughlin, 138 Cal. 320, 71 Pac. 345, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579, Brown v. Crown, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 385, 89 Pac. 86, Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co., 53 Or. 272, 100 Pac. 7, and Meyer v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 156 Mo. App. 177, 136 S. W. 5. We have already stated the effect of Brown v. Natl. Elec. Co. Works, supra. In Pierce v. Tenn., etc., Company the decision was put upon the ground that the contract was that the employment was to continue as long as the employé was able to do the kind of work specified. It has no bearing upon the question of a reasonable time. Neither Davidson v. Laughlin nor Brown v. Crown, etc., Co., touch upon the question. In Meyer v. Pulitzer Pub. Co. the carrier had paid $45.46 for his agency and had enjoyed it for more than 11 years. The court said that if it appeared that the agent, induced by his appointment, had in good faith incurred expense, devoted time, and bestowed labor in the matter of the agency without having had a sufficient opportunity to recoup the same from the agency, the principal would be required to compensate him to that extent, but that the law required no more than that—

"In every instance the agent shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to avail himself of the preliminary expenditure and efforts put forth to the end of executing the authority conferred."

The conclusion was that the plaintiff in that case had had ample time for that purpose and he was denied a recovery. The main reliance of the plaintiff is upon the case of Harlow v. Oregonian Pub. Co. This case is somewhat remarkable, both in its facts and in the law declared thereon. The agency in that case was created in the year 1864 for the delivery of the Daily Oregonian in a certain part of the city of Portland. The consideration paid by the agent was $350. It continued for 48 years and was then terminated by a revocation. In the meantime the population of the city had greatly increased and the value of the privilege was declared to have increased to more than $5,000. The decision did not go upon the theory that the valuable consideration implied an agreement that the agency should continue for a reasonable time, but upon the meaning of the contract creating the agency. The court construed it to provide that, no matter how long the agency might continue, a just and equitable allowance was to be made to the agent for the value of the privilege at the time of its revocation. A jury had allowed him $5,000 for his loss caused by the revocation of the agency, and this allowance was upheld, although the contract was construed to create a mere agency not coupled with any interest in the subject thereof. In other words, the decision, aside from what we deem a strained construction of the contract itself, appears to go upon the idea that, where an agent is employed to assist in the business of the principal and receives from time to time the compensation agreed upon between them, he nevertheless becomes entitled to the value which his efforts add to the business of his principal, in case the agency is terminated by the principal without the fault of the agent. It appears to us that the correct rule is that the benefits to the business of the principal, arising from the performance by the agent of his duties under the contract of agency, inure entirely to the principal and that the agent is entitled to nothing except the agreed compensation, unless the contract expressly provides for something more. The contract there involved contained no such covenant, and we think none could be implied from its terms. Neither this nor any of the other cases cited sustain the contention of the plaintiff. The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (dissenting). In all respects except one I concur in the opinion. It is conceded that because of the payment of a valuable consideration there was an implied agreement that the agency should be allowed to continue for what under all the circumstances would be a "reasonable time," and with this view I am in accord. I have no doubt that, if the agency here was allowed to continue through the life of the newspaper, it should be held that it had been allowed to continue for such time as was contemplated, with the result that no recovery could be had by plaintiff. But the complaint does not show that such was the fact, and we are here dealing only with the question of the sufficiency of the complaint. Assuming that the publication of the newspaper continued, it seems to me that the complaint sufficiently alleges matters showing that the agency was terminated prior to the expiration of the "reasonable time" for which it was given. I dissent from the judgment solely for this reason.

183 Cal. 252

OTTEN v. SPRECKELS. (S. F. 8203.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=1097(6)—Decision of Court of Appeals law of case on subsequent appeal to Supreme Court.

A decision of the District Court of Appeals was the law of the case on a subsequent appeal to the Supreme Court.

2. Appeal and error ⊂=1097(6)—Record on former appeal may be examined under doctrine of law of case.

Where an appeal was had to the District Court of Appeals and a hearing was denied in the Supreme Court, on a subsequent appeal to the Supreme Court, the record used on the former appeal could be examined in order to determine whether the evidence on the former trial was substantially the same as on the second trial, to determine whether the doctrine of the law of the case applied.

3. Appeal and error ⊂=1097(3)—Doctrine of law of case inapplicable where facts are different.

Where the facts on a second appeal are substantially different from those on a former appeal, the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply.

4. Principal and agent ⊂=33—Mutual stipulations not consideration preventing termination by principal.

Stipulations of one transferred a route by a newspaper to faithfully perform the duties required of him by his contract was not such a valuable consideration as would take the contract out of the rule of Civ. Code, § 2356, that an agency may be terminated by the principal, or to bring it within the rule that, if an agency is given for a valuable consideration, the principal will be liable in damages if he revokes it before the agent has had a reasonable time to enjoy his agency so as to some extent to reimburse himself, since the law would make him subject to such obligation without any stipulation, under section 2228.

5. Principal and agent ⊂=41 — Benefits of agent's services go to principal and give agent no interest in business.

The benefits of an agent's services go to the principal and not to the agent, and while a contract of agency which gives the agent a profitable employment is valuable to him, and if he is allowed by his principal to perform his agency in his stead, his agency may have a commercial value, and as between the agent and a substitute it may have all the attributes of property, such agent has no interest or right which he can assert against his principal as a basis for damages for revocation, where the agency is revocable at will.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by C. H. Otten against John D. Spreckels. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

[1] The cause has been tried twice. Upon the first trial a verdict was returned for the plaintiff and a new trial was thereupon ordered. From this order the plaintiff appealed. The appeal came before the District Court of the Third District for decision and the order was affirmed. 24 Cal. App. 251, 141 Pac. 224. The plaintiff applied to the Supreme Court for a rehearing and it was denied. The respondent contends that the decision of the District Court upon the appeal from the order granting a new trial constitutes the law of the case, binding upon the lower court and upon this court upon the question of the legal effect of the contract set forth in the complaint upon which the judgment is based. The denial of a rehearing by this court is of no significance as an approval of the law stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, for the plaintiff in his petition did not complain of the points there decided in his favor. The plaintiff now invokes, as the law of the case, certain parts of the opinion which are favorable to him and which this court has had no occasion to consider. The decision, nevertheless, constitutes the law of the case to the same extent as if it had been made by this court. It is necessary, therefore, to determine whether or not, upon the second trial, the facts were the same as those upon which the conclusions of the district court as to the law were predicated, since otherwise the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply.

[2] The complaint alleges a contract in writing, which it sets out in full. It then alleges facts which it is claimed constituted a breach thereof and states the amount of the resulting damages. On the first trial this writing was not admitted in evidence. Evidence of oral negotiations leading up to the execution of the writing was given and the trial court treated this as evidence of an oral contract. The complaint was not amended, but the cause was submitted to the jury on the theory that proof of an oral contract was admissible, with the result already stated. The District Court held that the writing was improperly excluded by the court below. Upon the second trial the writing set forth in the complaint was admitted in evidence, and it formed the basis of the verdict and judgment. It is necessary therefore to inquire whether or not the evidence of the oral negotiations upon which the district court based its conclusion as to the effect of the contract was substantially the same as the written contract upon which the present judgment was based. The record used on the former appeal may be examined by us on this appeal in order to determine this question. McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 576.

The contract alleged was executed on September 30, 1903, between "The San Francisco Call, and John D. Spreckels, the parties of the first part, and C. H. Otten, the party of the second part." It may be inferred from its language that the San Francisco Call was a newspaper which was then being printed somewhere and circulated in Berkeley, and that Spreckels was either the owner, or was in control, of the business of publishing and circulating it; but these facts are not alleged in the complaint. In describing the contract we use the name "Spreckels" to designate the party of the first part. Its material provisions are as follows:

"In consideration of $3,000.00 paid to Spreckels by Otten," Spreckels sold, transferred, and delivered to Otten "the agency of and for the San Francisco Call, and of and for that certain newspaper route" of said paper in Berkeley, particularly described.

Spreckels also agreed to deliver to Otten, daily, enough copies of the paper to supply said route. Otten was to pay therefor one cent per copy and 8 cents per month in addition. The subscription price of the paper was 75 cents per month, subject to increase or reduction at the will of Spreckels. It provided that Otten "shall manage, control and conduct the said newspaper route above described in such a manner, and with such efficiency, as shall be for the best interests of the said San Francisco Call newspaper, and shall maintain and preserve the extent and value of said newspaper route to the satisfaction of said Spreckels, and in all respects keep and perform all of his obligations unto the said Spreckels, arising out of the possession and management of said newspaper route during such time as the said Otten shall be in possession thereof." It further provided that Spreckels reserved the right to give his "written consent before any legal transfer of this contract shall be made." This is the contract the effect of which the court is now required to consider and to compare with the oral contract proven in the case and construed by the District Court of Appeal as above stated. It is to be observed, however, that the recitation in the instrument that the $3,000 was paid by Otten to Spreckels for its execution was not true. It was admitted upon the last trial that no consideration for the contract passed between the parties, other than their respective stipulations therein.

The record on the first appeal shows that, on the first trial, evidence was given regarding the oral negotiations. The District Court considered this as evidence of the contract between the parties. This evidence was in effect that Otten had been engaged in distributing the San Francisco Call in Berkeley ever since the year 1896, in connection with one Cordes; that on or about September 30, 1903, he made an arrangement with the agents of Spreckels to continue the delivery of the papers in the territory in Berkeley embraced in the territory described in the contract aforesaid and to pay Spreckels one cent the copy for the papers so distributed; that Spreckels was to deliver to him at Oakland the number of papers required to supply the subscribers in the Berkeley territory, and that Otten had them distributed to subscribers within the territory by certain persons whom he employed for that purpose; that he made out the bills to the subscribers and collected them monthly as they became due, deducting his own charges as arranged and returned the balance to Mr. Spreckels. It was further shown that Otten was to be allowed to sell the territory at any time he had a party who would buy it, who would be agreeable to Spreckels; that, if Spreckels was not satisfied with Otten's services, Otten was to be notified and then have an opportunity to sell out the territory to some other person; that Otten paid between $8,000 and $9,000 for the route; and that when the agency was terminated on January 1, 1909, the defendant had procured one McCoy to buy out Otten and pay him $5,000 and offered the opportunity to Otten to sell out his rights or route at that price, which offer Otten refused.

Concerning the rights of Otten under this oral contract the District Court on the former appeal, in discussing the question of the sufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict for the amount of damages allowed, said (24 Cal. App. 262, 141 Pac. 228):

"Unquestionably, he acquired, by virtue of the agreement, a right of property in said territory—the exclusive right to distribute and deliver the Call therein—of which he cannot be divested without just compensation. * * * The right remained absolute only so long as the plaintiff rendered efficient service."

This declaration, it is now claimed, establishes the law of the case.

The oral contract, according to the testimony above related, was given for a valuable consideration, amounting to at least $8,000, and it included an agreement by Spreckels that Otten should have the right at any time to transfer the agency to some other person acceptable to Spreckels, and that even if Spreckels was not satisfied with Otten's manner of performing the service, Otten was to have notice thereof and an opportunity to transfer the agency to some person satisfactory to Spreckels and to obtain for himself whatever sum of money such person would pay for the privilege of becoming such agent.

[3] No such provisions are contained in the written contract, and at the last trial it was admitted that Otten did not pay Spreckels any money for its execution. The facts are therefore substantially different, and the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply. Allen v. Bryant, 155 Cal. 259, 100 Pac. 704; McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 337, 14 Pac. 879, 2 Am. St. Rep. 814; Mitchell v. Davis, 23 Cal. 383; Smith v. Goethe, 159 Cal. 631, 115 Pac. 223, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1205, 4 Cor. Jur. 1095, footnote 78.

We may therefore consider the effect of the contract pleaded free from any embarrassment arising from the law laid down in the former decision.

In the case entitled Boehm v. Spreckels (S. F. No. 7692, 191 Pac. 5), submitted simultaneously with the present case, we considered the question of the legal effect of a contract relating to a "newspaper route" which is similar to the contract with the plaintiff, Otten, set forth in the complaint, and certainly more favorable to the theory that it vests a property right in the carrier of the papers. We have there held that such a contract creates an agency only; that it does not vest in the agent any interest in the subject of the agency; that the agency is not coupled with an interest; that it is for an indefinite period, and hence that it is revocable by the principal at any time.

We further held that, unless such agency was given for a valuable consideration, it could be revoked by the principal without liability to the agent for any loss or damage to him that might be caused by loss of the compensation provided for him by the contract of agency. The agency in the present case was not given for a valuable consideration.

[4] It cannot seriously be contended that the effect of the stipulations of the respective parties, as being a consideration sufficient to support it as a contract, is sufficient to take it out of the rule of section 2356 of the Civil Code that an agency may be terminated by the principal, or to bring it within the rule that if an agency is given for a valuable consideration the principal will be liable in damages if he revokes it before the agent has had a reasonable time to enjoy his agency so as to some extent to reimburse himself for his outlays in getting it or in preparing to perform the duties imposed on him thereby. All of the cases on that subject involve the payment of some money by the agent to secure the agency, or the incurring of preliminary expenses by him in preparing to execute the powers given him. No reason can be given for the proposition that his agreement to faithfully perform the duties required of him by his contract of employment will, as a valuable consideration, make this rule applicable. The law would make him subject to that obligation without any stipulation. 2 Cor. Jur. p. 692; Civ. Code, § 2228; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 641, 76 Pac. 486.

[5] Throughout the trial the counsel for the plaintiff apparently assumed that in an agency of this character the efforts of the agent to increase his compensation by increasing the number of subscribers to the defendant's newspaper within the described territory operated to give him an interest in the principal's business, an interest distinct and separate from that of the principal and of which the principal could not deprive him without his consent, or without adequate compensation in damages equal to the value of that interest. This is a manifest mistake in every case in which the contract of agency does not so provide. The contract in this case required that Otten should control and conduct the route for the best interests of Spreckels and maintain and preserve its extent and value to the satisfaction of Spreckels. His commissions were allowed for the purpose of paying him for this service. If he was required by the contract to endeavor to increase the number of subscribers within the territory he served, the commissions paid for that endeavor also, and his compensation would be automatically increased proportionally thereby. In contemplation of law, in this and all similar cases, the benefits of the agent's services go to the principal and not to himself, and the agent has no interest therein. A contract of agency which gives the agent a profitable employment by reason of the large compensation allowed him is, of course, valuable to him, and if he is allowed by his principal to procure another to perform the service in his stead, his agency may have a commercial value, similar in many respects to a right of property. As between him and the substitute with whom he agrees to abdicate, it may indeed have all the attributes of property and the transfer may command a high price. But where the agency is revocable at will, as in this case, he has no interest or right which he can assert against his principal who revokes it, as the basis of damages for such revocation.

These principles are decisive of the case. The only breach of contract alleged was the revocation of the agency by Spreckels on January 1, 1909. The only damage alleged or proven was that Otten thereby was deprived of the agency. The agency being terminable at will by the principal and being for an indefinite term and without a valuable consideration, its revocation was not a breach of the contract. The plaintiff has no cause of action and the judgment should have been for the defendant. This renders it unnecessary to consider other questions presented.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 259

SMITH et al. v. BACH et al. (L. A. 5121.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1920.)

1. Statutes ⟸205—Entire statute to be considered.

For the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent, courts should consider the entire statute.

2. Contracts ⟸105 — Ipso facto void when made as prohibited by statute.

A statute prohibiting the making of contracts, except in a certain manner, ipso facto makes them void if made in any other way, notwithstanding that the statute does not expressly pronounce it void, and it is immaterial whether the thing forbidden is malum in se or merely malum prohibitum.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⟸39—Contract of sale by reference to unrecorded map void.

A contract of sale of land made in violation of Act March 15, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 290), making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale land with reference to an unrecorded map, is void.

4. Contracts ⟸139 — Vendee may recover money paid under unlawful contract of sale.

Where a contract of sale of land is made in violation of Act March 15, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 290), making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale land by reference to an unrecorded map, the vendee may rescind and recover money paid; the prohibition in the statute being for the vendee's benefit, and he therefore not being in pari delicto.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Clara L. Smith and others against George J. Bach and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

F. G. Blood and Crouch & Chambers, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward and C. C. Pease, all of San Diego, for respondents.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice KERRIGAN of the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District, while acting as justice pro tempore in this court in place of Mr. Justice MELVIN. It is adopted as the opinion of this court.

This action is one in assumpsit for money had and received. The case grows out of a contract relating to the sale of certain tracts of land in a subdivision situated in San Diego county. Plaintiffs paid defendant a part of the purchase price under the terms of the contract of sale, and they seek by this action to recover the same upon the ground that the contract relating to the sale is void. The claimed invalidity is based upon the admitted fact that the sales were made in violation of the act of March 15, 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 290), making it unlawful to sell or offer for sale land by reference to an unrecorded map. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case the trial court granted a nonsuit, and from the judgment and the order denying a new trial plaintiffs appeal. The main question here presented is whether or not such a contract is void, so as to prevent any right of action being based thereon.

By the terms of the statute in question not only is the selling or offering for sale of lots of land by reference to an unrecorded map or plat expressly prohibited, but the act makes it a misdemeanor so to do, the penalty for which is fixed at both a fine and imprisonment. This precise question has been presented to the appellate courts of this state in three different cases, in none of which, however, have the rights of a vendee thereunder been passed upon. See Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 96 Pac. 890; Baines v. Shank, 12 Cal. App. 391, 107 Pac. 631; King v. Johnson, 30 Cal. App. 63, 157 Pac. 531; Shultz v. Redondo Imp. Co., 156 Cal. 439, 440, 105 Pac. 118. In the Bentley Case this court found it unnecessary to pass upon the validity of the contract, for the reason that the evidence showed that the statute had been substantially complied with. In Baines v. Shank, supra, the District Court of Appeal also found it unnecessary to consider the question; the case being disposed of upon a different point. The only case, therefore, where the question has received consideration in this state, is King v. Johnson, supra, which is hereinafter referred to.

Many of our sister states have adopted laws of a similar character. These statutes differ in terms; some containing no express prohibitory words, but recognizing that the act may be done subject to a fine for its disregard, while others, analogous to our own, contain an express prohibition and a penalty for violation. The decisions of the courts of these various jurisdictions, construing these statutes to determine the legislative intent, are not harmonious. See 39 Cyc. 1215;

13 Corpus Juris, p. 410 et seq. An extensive review of these numerous cases would answer no useful purpose. Frequently, as here, a statute imposes a penalty on the doing of an act without expressly declaring such act illegal and void.

Applying the doctrine, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," some of the courts have held that, the Legislature having fixed the penalty for the execution of the contract, courts cannot impose another, invalidating the agreement. See 39 Cyc. 1215. In cases announcing this doctrine a distinction is usually made between acts malum in se, which are generally regarded as void, and those which are mala prohibitum. On the authority of these cases, respondent in effect contends, in support of the judgment, that the statute imposing specific penalties for its violation, and the act condemned not being malum in se, the purpose of the act can be accomplished without declaring contracts made in violation thereof illegal, and that the inference is that it was not the intention of the Legislature to render them illegal, or it would have so declared in unequivocal terms.

The decisions supporting the doctrine invoked are in the main based upon revenue statutes, which simply impose a fine or penalty, the amount of which is definitely fixed, as distinguished from those, as here, which prohibit and declare the violation of the act a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment.

[1-3] For the purpose of ascertaining the legislative intent courts should consider the entire statute, and if from such consideration it is manifest that the Legislature had no intention of declaring a contract void, they should be sustained and enforced; otherwise, they should be adjudged void. Dunlop v. Mercer, 156 Fed. 548, 86 C. C. A. 435. Here it is manifest from a reading of the entire act that the statute in question was passed for the protection of the public, and not as a revenue measure. King v. Johnson, 30 Cal. App. 63, 157 Pac. 531. In such a case a contract made in violation of its terms should be held to be void. Levinson v. Boas, 150 Cal. 193, 88 Pac. 825, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Iowa, 548. The general rule controlling in cases of this character is that, where a statute prohibits or attaches a penalty to the doing of an act, the act is void, and this, notwithstanding that the statute does not expressly pronounce it so, and it is immaterial whether the thing forbidden is malum in se, or merely malum prohibitum. A statute of this character, prohibiting the making of contracts except in a certain manner, ipso facto makes them void if made in any other way. 13 Cyc. 351; 13 Corpus Juris, p. 410. The imposition by statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and a contract founded upon such act is void. This general rule finds support in the decisions of this state. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 127, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31, and cases cited; Bentley v. Hurlburt, supra.

It is true, as stated by Mr. Justice Sloss in Bentley v. Hurlburt, that cases may be found holding a contrary doctrine; but an examination of those cases will, as hereinbefore stated, show that the statutes upon which they are based generally do not prohibit, but merely impose a fine as an exclusive punishment. This identical statute was construed in King v. Johnson, supra, where the general rule above stated was applied. It is there said that—

> "Cases * * * from other jurisdictions are based upon statutes which the court, for different reasons, construed as not prohibiting the sale, while the statute under consideration, in express terms, prohibits the doing of the act."

Concluding, as we do, that the contract in question is void, it only remains to determine the rights of plaintiffs to recover in this action.

[4] There are authorities which, while not denying the general rule that an illegal contract cannot be enforced, whether malum in se or malum prohibitum, hold that all the consequences which attend a contract contrary to public morals do not attend one which is purely malum prohibitum, and that in the latter case courts will take notice of the circumstances, and will give relief, if justice and equity require a restoration of money received by either party thereunder. 13 Corpus Juris, p. 411, § 341. In such a case the complaining party is protected, the prohibition being for his benefit, and, not being in pari delicto, he is entitled to relief. Id., p. 501, § 443. By the weight of authority, where money has been paid in consideration of an executory contract which is illegal, the party who has paid it may repudiate the agreement at any time before it is executed and reclaim the money. In such a case it is the duty of the court in furtherance of justice to aid one not in pari delicto, though to some extent involved in the illegality, but who, as here, is comparatively the more innocent, and to permit him to recover back money paid on a contract as the circumstances of the case may require. Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 942; Gray v. Roberts, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 208, 12 Am. Dec. 385; Wassermann v. Sloss, 117 Cal. 431, 49 Pac. 566, 38 L. R. A. 176, 59 Am. St. Rep. 209; City of Los Angeles v. City Bank, 100 Cal. 18, 34 Pac. 510; Savings Bank v. Burns, 104 Cal. 480, 38 Pac. 102; Manchester R. R. v. Concord R. R., 66 N. H. 100, 20 Atl. 383, 9 L. R. A. 689, 49 Am. St. Rep. 589; 13 Corpus Juris, p. 501, § 444.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and SHAW, WILBUR, OLNEY, LAWLOR, and LENNON, JJ., concur.

(183 Cal. 284)

In re STREETON'S ESTATE.

SHOULTS v. WILLIAMS.

(L. A. 6329.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1920.)

1. Wills ⇐111(2) — Test for determining whether signature not at end of will intended as token of execution.

The test whether a will has been signed by the testator is, under Civ. Code, § 1277, that, if placed at the end of document, and nothing to the contrary appears, he intended to so sign, but, if placed elsewhere, it is for the court to say, from an inspection of the whole will as to language and form and the relative position of its parts, whether there is positive and satisfactory inference that the signature was so placed as a token of execution.

2. Wills ⇐133 — Signature at top of will where no other space left held intended to authenticate will.

Where no space was left at the bottom of an olographic will, and testator's name was signed in the only blank space which had been left, which was in the upper left-hand corner, held, that the document showed testator's intention to thus authenticate the instrument.

3. Wills ⇐386—Finding as to execution not overthrown unless without evidentiary support.

The due execution of a will is a question of fact and its determination by the trial court will not be overthrown unless without support in the evidence.

4. Wills ⇐289—Face of document held to show testator's intention to sign at top to authenticate instrument.

The trial court's finding that testator signed his name at the top of the will with the intention of authenticating the instrument held sustained by positive and satisfactory inference arising from the face of the document.

5. Wills ⇐278—Allegation that instrument is not deceased's will insufficient as plea of revocation.

An allegation "that said written instrument is not the last will and testament of said S., deceased," is a mere conclusion of law, and is insufficient to plead a revocation.

6. Wills ⇐306—Evidence held insufficient to show revocation.

Evidence held insufficient to show that an olographic will admitted to probate had been revoked.

7. Wills ⇐290—Crumpling of instrument insufficient to support presumption of revocation.

While the crumpling of a will might be a sufficient act of destruction if accompanied by clear evidence of other circumstances showing an intent to revoke, yet such act of itself is insufficient to support a presumption of intention to revoke, particularly where it is not shown that the will had been continually under testator's control until his death.

8. Wills ⇐290—Tearing of part of instrument held not to revoke part remaining.

The tearing of a portion of a will as originally drafted from the remaining text raises no presumption of intention to revoke the whole instrument, particularly where so torn as to leave the portion found intact and complete, the torn edge being practically horizontal except the lower left-hand corner where such line is departed from to preserve two syllables of a word divided at the end of the preceding line, so that the mutilation affected only the part destroyed.

9. Wills ⇐290—Presumption of intent to revoke by destruction of signature overcome by restoration.

Although the destruction of a signature of a will may be sufficient to support a presumption of intention to revoke the whole, yet, if the signature destroyed has been later restored or rewritten, courts in general will admit the will to probate; for it then affirmatively appears there was no intention to revoke.

10. Wills ⇐290—Replacing of testator's signature in different place after destruction repels presumption of revocation.

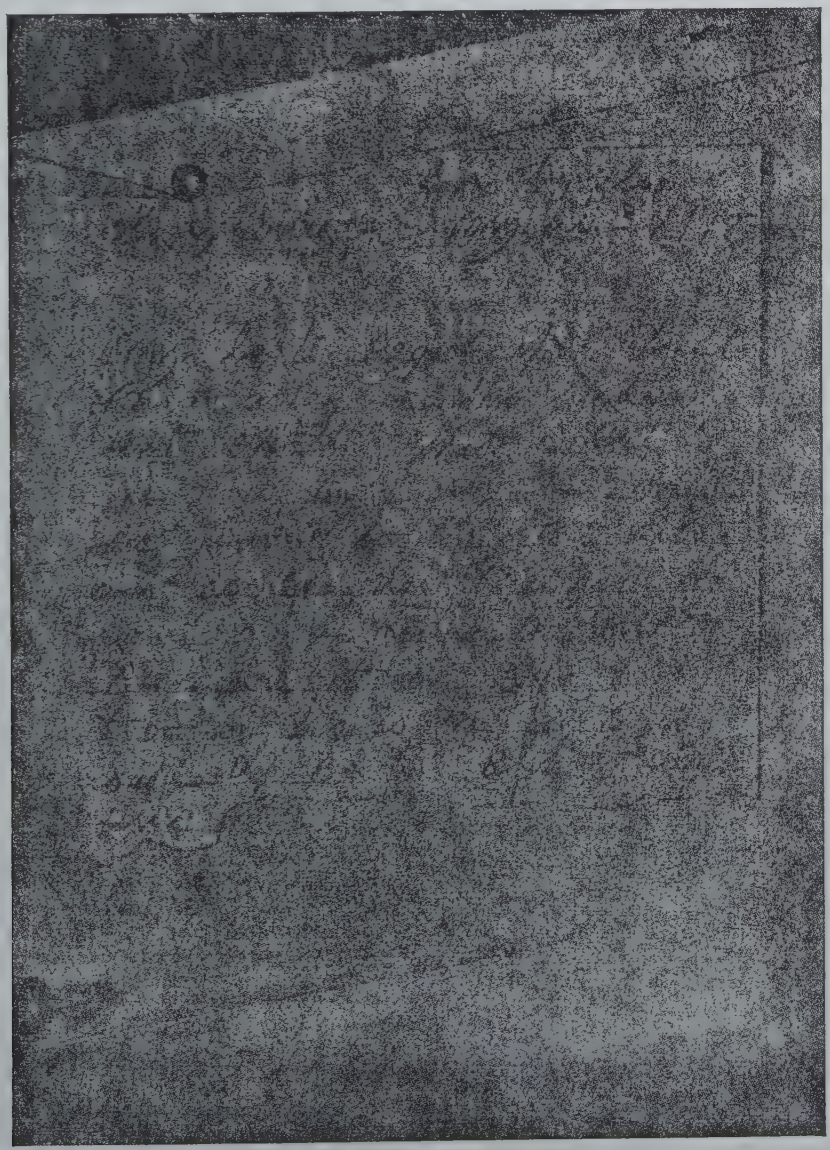
Assuming that a testator tore his signature from the will together with a part thereof, any presumption therefrom of an intent to revoke is repelled by the fact that his signature was again appended to and appeared at the top of his will for the obvious purpose of authentication and execution.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Harry Streeton, deceased. Petition by Emma Louisa Shoults against Nellie Williams, administratrix. Fron an order denying petition to revoke the probate of an olographic will, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Robert M. Clarke and Henry L. Knoop, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.



I. R. Rubin, of Los Angeles, and M. G. C. Harris, for respondent.

LENNON, J. The superior court of Los Angeles county denied a petition for the revocation of an order which admitted to probate a certain written instrument, olographic in form, as the last will and testament of Harry Streeton, deceased. Petitioner appeals. The respondent herein is the administratrix with the will annexed. The petitioner, an heir at law of said decedent, sought to have the probate of the will revoked, apparently upon three grounds: (1) That the instrument was not executed as required by law; (2) that the will had been revoked; (3) that the decedent was not of sound mind at the time the instrument was executed. In view of substantial conflict in the evidence, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court upon the question of mental competence is not challenged, and petitioner, upon this appeal, relies entirely upon the first two grounds.

After the death of Harry Streeton the instrument in question, which consists of a single sheet of paper, was found in an envelope. At the time it was found, the lower portion of the page had been torn off in such a way as to disclose, by "pencil marks and dots" appearing along the torn edge of the paper, that there were written words on the part torn off. There were creases in the paper indicating that it had been crumpled. The document is entirely in the handwriting of decedent. The date is written in the upper right-hand corner of the page, and in the upper left-hand corner, on a line with the date and above all the other writing, appears the name of decedent.

The condition of the will is best portrayed by a photographic reproduction thereof, which appears in the record, and is therefore reproduced in this opinion as follows:

[1] The alleged defect in the execution of the will is the claimed insufficiency of the signature as a token of authenticity. The test to be applied in determining whether a will has been "signed by the hand of the testator himself," as required by section 1277 of the Civil Code, was stated in Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 163 Pac. 358, L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227, as follows:

"The true rule, as we conceive it to be, is that, wherever placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself. If it is at the end of the document, the universal custom of mankind forces the conclusion that it was appended as an execution, if nothing to the contrary appears. If placed elsewhere, it is for the court to say, from an inspection of the whole document, its language as well as its form, and the relative position of its parts, whether or not there is a positive and satisfactory inference from the document itself that the signature was so placed with the intent that it should there serve as a token of execution. If such inference thus appears, the execution may be considered as proven by such signature."

[2] Applying this test in the present case, we find no language in the document which adopts the name as a signature for the purpose of execution. Reference to the name as a signature is not essential, however, if the form of the document is such that the relative position of its parts alone gives rise to a positive inference that the name was affixed for the purpose of execution. In the document now under consideration, there is no space at the end of the writing in which a signature could have been placed. The name of the testator appears in a blank space, disconnected from the rest of the written matter both as to location and meaning. Had the name appeared in the exordium, the logical inference from the context would probably have been that it was intended merely to identify the person making the will, and additional facts might have been necessary to raise the inference that it was also intended as a signature in execution of the will. Estate of Hurley, 178 Cal. 713, 174 Pac. 669; Estate of McMahon, 174 Cal. 423, 163 Pac. 669, L. R. A. 1917D, 778. But, as above stated, the name of decedent appears entirely separate from the rest of the writing and by itself. It must be assumed that it was placed on the document for some purpose, and the only apparent and reasonable purpose under the circumstances would seem to be the signing of the instrument with the intention of authenticating the same. This conclusion becomes the more compelling when we consider that the name is written in a blank space at the beginning of the instrument; for such a space is the most natural one in which to place a signature when the usual place at the end of the document is unavailable. The fact that the end of the page was torn off, whatever its importance in a determination of the question of revocation, if of any weight in a consideration of the sufficiency of the signature, tends to support, rather than defeat, the inference that the name was written at the top of the page with the intention of authenicating the instrument.

[3, 4] The due execution of a will is a question of fact, and its determination by the trial court is not to be overthrown unless that determination is without support in the evidence. Estate of Cullberg, 169 Cal. 365, 370, 146 Pac. 888. We are satisfied that the finding of the trial court to the effect that the testator signed his name at the top of the will with the intention of authenticating the instrument was sustained by a "positive and satisfactory inference" arising from the face of the document itself.

[5] The petition to revoke the probate of the will contains no direct allegation of the revocation of the will by the testator. The allegation "that said written instrument is not the last will and testament of said Harry Streeton, deceased" was evidently intended as an allegation of revocation. Such an allegation is a mere conclusion of law, and therefore insufficient.

"In stating the grounds of contest, if unsoundness of mind is relied on, it is sufficient to state that the deceased, at the time of the alleged execution of the proposed paper, was not of sound and disposing mind. And the same is true as to undue execution. But when the grounds of contest embrace fraud, duress, or undue influence, a subsequent will, revocation, or the like, such matters, not being ultimate facts, but conclusions of law to be drawn from facts, must be pleaded, not in the language of the statute, but the facts relied on must be stated." 40 Cyc. 1269; Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 274, 279; Estate of Harris, 3 Cof. Prob. 1; Barksdale v. Davis, 114 Ala. 623, 22 South. 17.

However that may be, no demurrer was interposed, and, inasmuch as the question of revocation was apparently a contested issue in the court below, we shall consider the point upon its merits.

[6, 7] With reference to the question of revocation there was the following testimony of respondent concerning the condition in which the will was found:

"Q. It appears from the pencil marks and dots along the tear that there was other writing upon this paper. Can you give us any light on that, or do you know anything about it? A. I don't know anything about it. I got it after he died. I opened the envelope, and that was the condition of the will.

"Q. With reference to the crumpled condition, is that the condition that it was? A. That is the condition; I suppose laying around. I have no other reason; I don't know why."

No other evidence was adduced. Petitioner, however, claims to have thereby borne the burden of proving a revocation. In this behalf petitioner relies upon the statement in Estate of Olmsted, 122 Cal. 224, 230, 54 Pac. 745, to the effect that, where it appeared that an instrument during the lifetime of the maker had been in his secure possession, and, when discovered by the two parties in interest, bore marks of cancellation, "from these circumstances alone arise the presumptions: (1) That the cancellations were the act of the testator; and (2) that they were performed with the intent and purpose of revoking the instrument." The facts of that case are, however, distinguishable from the facts now presented. In the case at bar there was, apparently, no proof that the will had been continually under the control of the testator until the time of his death; moreover, the acts from which it is claimed the intent to revoke is presumed are of a different character from the acts proved in the Estate of Olmsted. In that case it was also said:

"What act of destruction will supply the requirement of the statute is a question much discussed. It is apparent that the destruction may be total or partial. The will, for example, may be wholly burned or totally obliterated, or it may be but partially destroyed, and still legible. Generally, it may be said that, if the intent to revoke clearly appears, a slight act within the statute will be deemed sufficient." (Italics are ours.)

In other words, there must be an act coupled with an intent. If the act is a slight one, the evidence of intent must be clear; if, on the other hand, the act is sufficiently definite in character, the intent may be presumed from the very nature of the act and the surrounding circumstances. While the crumpling of the instrument in the instant case might be a sufficient act of destruction if it were accompanied by clear evidence of other circumstances showing, or tending to show, an intent to revoke, the mere act of crumpling in and of itself is insufficient to support a presumption of an intention to revoke.

[8-10] Nor does the fact that a portion of the will as originally drafted was torn from the remaining text raise any presumption of an intention to revoke the whole instrument.

"The slightest act of tearing with intent to revoke the whole will is sufficient for the purpose. But the whole will is not necessarily revoked by the destruction of a part. It is the animus which must govern the extent and measure of operation to be attributed to the act, and determine whether the act shall effect the revocation of the whole instrument, or only of some, and what portion thereof. It is obvious that the mutilation may be of such a part as to afford evidence that the deceased did not intend the document any longer to operate as his will. On the other hand, in the absence of evidence aliunde an intent to revoke the whole will cannot be inferred from a partial mutilation which does not affect the instrument as an entirety, or destroy that part which gives effect to the whole." 40 Cyc. 1191.

The fact that a will is found with the signature destroyed may be sufficient to support a presumption of an intention to revoke the whole will. King v. Ponton, 82 Cal. 420, 22 Pac. 1087. While this act imports prima facie an intent to revoke, it is nevertheless a presumption which may be repelled by accompanying circumstances. Therefore, if a signature has been destroyed, but later restored or rewritten, the courts in general admit the will to probate; for it then appears affirmatively that there was no intent to revoke. Re Wood (Sur.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 157; Sellards v. Kirby, 82 Kan. 291, 108 Pac. 73, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 270, 136 Am. St. Rep. 110, 20 Ann. Cas. 214; Re Brock, 247 Pa. 365, 93 Atl. 487, L. R. A. 1915D, p. 1140. Even assuming, then, in the present case, that the testator tore his signature from the will, any presumption therefrom of an intent to revoke is repelled by the fact that his signature was again appended to and appeared on the will when it was found after his death, obviously placed there for the purpose of authentication and execution.

The document was carefully torn so as to leave the portion found in the envelope intact and complete in itself. The torn edge is practically horizontal, with the exception of the lower left-hand corner, where the horizontal line is departed from so as to preserve two syllables of a word divided at the end of the preceding line. The mutilation is a partial one "which does not affect the instrument as an entirety, or destroy that part which gives effect to the whole."

After a careful examination of the photographic copy of the document, we are convinced that the marks of crumpling and tearing which it bears are, in the absence of additional evidence, insufficient to support a presumption of an intention on the part of the testator to revoke the whole will.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 191

McCOY v. ZAHN CORPORATION.
(L. A. 6366.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 15, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⟸51—Must place client in touch with customer or procure contract.

An agent to procure a loan must have placed his client in touch with one ready, willing, and able to make the loan, or must have secured from a prospective lender an unqualified agreement to make the loan on the terms proposed to be entitled to commission, it not being sufficient that he first interested the lender in the proposed loan and told the borrower who the lender was.

2. Brokers ⟸51—Merely mentioning name of lender who subsequently made the loan through another is insufficient.

The fact that the broker, who knew that others were seeking to procure the same loan under an agreement that the first agent to bring in the money should receive the commission, told the owner that he was dealing with the one who subsequently made the loan, is insufficient to entitle him to a commission, where he did not introduce the lender to the borrower nor secure an agreement from the former.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Lon S. McCoy against the Zahn Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Paul H. McPherrin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This action was brought to recover $800 as commissions for services of plaintiff rendered pursuant to employment in assisting the defendant to procure a loan secured by mortgage on real property. The trial court found that the plaintiff had been employed to procure for the defendant a loan of $40,000 to be secured by mortgage on real property in the city of Los Angeles owned by the defendant corporation and known as the Gordon Apartments, defendant agreeing to pay the plaintiff for his services in "so securing such customer ready and willing to make said loan the sum of 2 per cent. on the amount of said loan, or the sum of eight hundred ($800) dollars." It was further found by the court.

That "plaintiff in this action fully rendered and performed all the services for which he was employed and procured a customer ready, able, and willing to make the loan of $40,000 desired by the defendant corporation on the same terms specified in his employment and on the security offered by defendant, viz. a first mortgage on the Gordon Apartments, and that said plaintiff was the means of bringing the said E. W. Hadley, the customer so secured by him, and the defendant corporation together in pursuance of his employment, according to the terms thereof, and that his efforts in so bringing the said Hadley and defendant corporation together were the proximate and procuring cause resulting in the making of the loan of the said Hadley to defendant corporation."

The judgment was for plaintiff in the amount demanded, and it is from this judgment that the appeal is taken. The grounds stated on the appeal are: First, the insufficiency of the evidence to establish the employment; and, second, the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the plaintiff was the efficient agent in bringing the lender and borrower together, or in procuring the loan. The finding as to the employment is not very seriously controverted, and is one clearly justified by the evidence and it may be dismissed from further consideration.

The finding that the plaintiff brought the parties together and secured the proffer of the loan is the real issue in controversy. The doubt on this point does not arise upon a conflict in the evidence, but from a challenge of the legal conclusions drawn by the court from the uncontroverted facts. One significant fact is that several agents were engaged in trying to place this loan for defendants, and plaintiff was informed during the negotiations that other agents than himself were employed, and that the commission would go to the agent who first brought in the money. The plaintiff himself testified:

"Hector N. Zahn told me at that time there were other agents working on the loan, and the first one who came in with the money would get the commission."

The agents concerned in these negotiations other than the plaintiff, McCoy, and one Allen, who was associated with him, were F. A. Pattee, A. W. Ross, and the firm of Rowan & Co. These agents actually closed the deal by obtaining the lender's final ratification of the loan and by securing an escrow deposit of the money or check for the amount of the loan. It was in response to a notice from some of these parties, and not the plaintiff, that the defendants met Mr. Hadley and made the loan and thus finally closed the deal.

While these facts are not disputed, it is contended in behalf of plaintiff that it was he who first brought this application for a loan to the attention of Hadley, and that prior to any negotiations between Hadley and the other agents Hadley had expressed himself favorably toward this loan, and had, in effect, agreed to take it if on personal inspection he was satisfied with the security.

It appears without dispute that Hadley, who lived in San Francisco, communicated about May 6, 1915, with several real estate firms in Los Angeles, including the various agents mentioned in this deal, by a circular letter in which he inquired about the demand for loans and stated that he was in the market to place a considerable amount of money on Los Angeles property. On May 10th plaintiff wrote to Hadley offering to aid him in placing loans. On September 29th Hadley wrote to plaintiff asking to be advised as to applications for loans that he might have to submit. On October 7th plaintiff for the first time mentioned the Gordon Apartments' application for $40,000. He had not then any agency from the defendants to act in the matter, but had learned of their desire to secure a loan from his associate, Allen. It is not necessary to follow the details of the negotiations. Plaintiff went to considerable pains to present the Gordon Apartments' loan in a favorable light. On October 14th Hadley sent a letter and telegram informing plaintiff that he thought he could take care of the $40,000 loan and he would soon be in Los Angeles to investigate. It was after this, on the 20th of October, that the plaintiff first met representatives of the defendant corporation and procured authority to act for them in obtaining the loan. He informed them that he had a prospective customer, but did not then mention the name. On the following day he claims to have read to them a telegram and letter from Hadley, including the signatures, and to have given them other information as to his negotiations, but did not give them the documents to read. It was on this occasion that he was informed that there were other agents working on the loan, and that the first to come in with the money would get the commission. Learning from a son of Hadley that the latter would be in Los Angeles on the 27th of October, plaintiff communicated with defendants, told them his client had not yet shown up, and requested them to wait until he had heard from him and asked if everything was O. K. He was answered in the affirmative, and was told that they were anxious to get the money. On October 29th Hadley called upon the plaintiff at his office and refused the latter's offer to show him the Gordon Apartments property. Hadley further said that he had already been to the Gordon Apartments and had investigated them, but had a little more investigating to do, and that he would let the plaintiff know about it in the afternoon or soon after. It developed later that Hadley had already inspected the property with Pattee, one of the other agents. Plaintiff testified that on the evening of October 29th he telephoned defendants that his client had been at the office that morning, that he had said he had a little more investigating to do, and that after he completed it he would make up his mind in a few minutes and let him know soon thereafter. Plaintiff further informed them that he would try to get an answer from his client the next day and not later than Monday, the 1st of November. He claims they told him they would let the matter rest in that way. Testimony was given by defendants, which was undisputed, that plaintiff stated in his telephone conversation that his man was in the office that morning and promised to come again in the afternoon, but had not come. This was the last communication that plaintiff had with either Hadley or the defendants until after the deal was closed through other agents on Monday, the 1st of November, about 4:30 p. m. Up to this time the defendants had not met Hadley. If they knew his name, there is no evidence that they knew where to find him, and he had not agreed with plaintiff to make the loan.

In the meantime the undisputed evidence shows that Pattee had learned about the same time plaintiff did of Hadley's desire to place loans in Los Angeles. He later learned of the Gordon Apartments' application through his associate, Ross, who had been authorized by defendants to find them the money. On the 14th of October Hadley telephoned Pattee that he expected to be in Los Angeles very soon. On October 21st Pattee reported to Hadley a number of applications for loans, including the Gordon Apartments' property. On October 27th Pattee and Hadley inspected this property together and saw each other nearly every day thereafter. On November 1st the loan was agreed to and the money placed in escrow. It was Ross, Pattee's associate, who notified the defendants that the money was in escrow and to go down at once and close the deal. The escrow included this loan on the Gordon Apartments and another loan to defendants upon other property. The commissions were divided between Pattee, Ross, and Rowan upon representations made to the defendants by Hadley that Pattee did the work and brought the parties together on the Gordon Apartments' loan.

[1] The law applicable to this sort of agency is well settled. It is clear that the agent, in order to recover a commission, must have placed his client in touch with a customer ready, able, and willing to make the loan, or must have carried on negotiations to such a point as to secure from the prospective lender an unqualified agreement to make the loan upon the terms proposed. Such is practically the rule as quoted in appellant's brief from the authorities cited. In Cone v. Keil, 18 Cal. App. 675, 124 Pac. 548, the court said:

"Merely putting a prospective purchaser on the track of property which is on the market will not suffice to entitle the broker to the commission contracted for, and, even though a broker opens negotiations for the sale of property, he will not be entitled to a commission if he finally fails in his efforts, without fault or interference of the owner, to induce a prospective purchaser to buy, or make an offer to buy, notwithstanding that the owner may subsequently, either personally or through the instrumentality of other brokers, sell the same property to the same individual at the price and upon the terms for which the property was originally offered for sale."

In the case of Massie v. Chatom, 163 Cal. 772, 127 Pac. 56, this language was quoted with approval:

"The contract of the broker is to negotiate a sale; that is, to procure a valid contract, to purchase, which can be enforced by the vendor if his title is perfect; or if he does not procure such contract to bring the vendor and the proposed purchaser together, that the vendor may secure such a contract, unless he is willing to trust to an oral agreement.' * * *

" 'The readiness and willingness of a person to purchase the property can be shown only by an offer on his part to purchase; and unless he has actually entered into a contract binding him to purchase, or has offered to the vendor, and not merely to the broker, to enter into such contract, he cannot be considered a purchaser.' "

We do not find that the authorities quoted by respondent distinguish the application of this rule. The opinion in Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 117 Pac. 575, quoting from Mechem on Agency, that it is not necessary that the broker should personally have conducted the negotiations between his principal and the purchaser leading to the sale, nor that he should have been present when the bargain was completed, "or even that the principal should, at the time, have known that the purchaser was one found by the broker," refers to a condition where the broker has brought the vendor and vendee together and then they contract for themselves. The rule as quoted from Ruling Case Law (4 R. C. L. "Brokers," §§ 46, 57, 58) holds that, where the services of the broker, as well as those of another agent, have contributed generally to the successful termination of the negotiations in question, "if the success of the transaction is directly attributable to the broker originally employed, his right to his commissions cannot be defeated by the mere fact that the negotiations were conducted, or the transaction finally consummated, through the medium of another broker." In this action the very controversy is as to whose agency actually brought about a meeting of the minds upon the proposed loan, and the contention here is that it does not appear that the final decision of the lender to accept the loan was affected through the influence or agency of the plaintiff. However nearly he may have brought him to a favorable decision, if the negotiations were broken off before a decision was reached and a final decision is brought about by another agent, the latter will be entitled to the commission. It may also be conceded as a correct statement of the law that, "if the broker is to merely find or procure a purchaser, it is not necessary that he should be present at the time the negotiations are entered into with the purchaser, or be an active participater in the consummation of the contract, provided he can show that the same was effected through his agency, and that the parties were brought together and the deal resulted from his acts as its procuring cause." But how can it be said in this case that the lender and borrower were brought together by the previous negotiations through the plaintiff when he failed to bring the parties together or in any way to introduce them to each other, and it is shown that this office was performed by other agents who had been employed under a contract and were negotiating with the same party?

[2] We do not see how, under the evidence here, it can be held that plaintiff met either of the requirements of his employment. It is certain that he at no time obtained an agreement from Hadley to make this loan. On the occasion of his last communication with the defendants, and after he had interviewed Hadley for the last time, Hadley had told him that he wanted to make further investigation, that he would make up his mind and let him know later, and plaintiff telephoned defendants that his customer had not shown up as agreed and asked them to wait on him until Monday. This was on Friday, the 29th of October. They did wait until Monday, as the deal through the other agents was not closed until 4:30 p. m. on Monday, November 1st, and no further word had been received by them from the plaintiff up to that time. Clearly the plaintiff, through his negotiations with Hadley, had not brought him to the "sticking point" of obtaining any final promise or agreement from him. Neither could he be said to have brought the parties together. Conceding that he had disclosed Hadley's name to the defendants as the party with whom he was negotiating, which is denied by defendants' witnesses, it does not appear that he had more than casually mentioned the name in the reading of a telegram and in a conversation relating to the loan, and he had at no time given Hadley's Los Angeles address or told defendants where they could find him or attempted in any way to bring the parties into personal contact. On the contrary, a fair inference from his conduct was that he was intending to carry negotiations through by himself to an acceptance of the loan. There is no justification for reaching a conclusion that the defendants would have met Hadley had they not been brought together by the other agents or that Hadley would have made the loan without their agency in the matter. It was understood that the agent who first produced the money would receive the commission. It seems to us that this was a controlling feature of the case. The defendants were anxious for the money. They had been in the market for this loan a number of months; they had to meet an outstanding mortgage on their property in the very near future; they had placed the procuring of the loan with various agents; and it was understood with plaintiff that the first agent who came with the money would receive the commission. These other agents produced the customer and the money. We do not think, under the circumstances, that it was incumbent upon defendants to trace back the negotiations of the different agents to ascertain who saw the customer first. The controlling fact was who saw him last and brought him to a favorable decision. Whatever may be said of the conduct of the lender in leading the plaintiff to believe that if he made the loan he would close it through plaintiff, no bad faith is attributable to defendants, and they are not responsible for any bad faith on the part of the customer. They unite in denying that they even knew Hadley was plaintiff's customer; but, accepting plaintiff's contention and the court's finding that the latter had disclosed Hadley's name, the last word they had received from plaintiff three days previous to the closing of the deal was that his customer had not then made up his mind, but had promised to let him know soon, and had not appeared, and up to the time that Pattee and Ross notified them they had the money in escrow no further word was had from plaintiff.

Under this condition of the law and the facts it becomes immaterial that the plaintiff may have notified defendants that he claimed the commission before the money had actually been paid out to the other agents. The decision of the case rests upon the conclusion that the evidence does not show that the plaintiff was the efficient agent in procuring the loan.

Judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.

183 Cal. 264

McPHEE v. LAVIN. (L. A. 5167.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1920.)

1. Negligence ⊂=72—One confronted by emergency not held to strict accountability.

One suddenly confronted with an unexpected danger may use such means for avoiding the danger as would appeal to a person of ordinary prudence in a like situation, without being held to strict accountability as to whether the course chosen is the most judicious or not.

2. Municipal corporations ⊂=705(10)—Plaintiff automobilist not contributorily negligent in swerving to wrong side of street to avoid collision.

Where defendant automobilist unlawfully cut a corner at a street intersection and bore down on plaintiff automobilist from the wrong side of the street, plaintiff was not contributorily negligent in turning his machine to the left in an effort to avoid the threatened collision, in view of the sudden emergency.

3. Municipal corporations ⊂=706(7) — Driver of automobile held not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law under crossing speed regulation.

Motor Vehicle Act, § 22, prohibiting greater speed than 10 miles an hour at street intersections where the view is obstructed, is complied with if speed is so reduced in the territory common to both streets at or within the lines of intersection, and one driving 15 miles an hour at a point 25 or 30 feet from the intersection could not be held guilty as a matter of law of contributory negligence therefor, especially where at 15 miles an hour he could stop completely within 15 to 30 feet.

4. Evidence ⊂=222(2)—Defendant's declaration that he carried accident insurance admissible as admission.

In automobile collision case, it was proper to admit in evidence, as part of a conversation had with defendant, defendant's declaration to plaintiff, immediately after the collision, that he carried accident insurance that would provide for plaintiff if he suffered injury; this tending to show an acknowledgment of responsibility by defendant for the accident.

5. Appeal and error ⊂=1060(1)—Trial ⊂=127—Eliciting that defendant carried accident insurance held error, but not prejudicial.

In automobile collision case, where upon questioning on behalf of defendant of a physician who had examined plaintiff, plaintiff's counsel asked if he made the examination at the instance of the Fidelity & Casualty Company, such line of examination was improper; but, the trial being before the court without a jury, and the witness' affirmative reply being afterwards stricken out, it could be treated as error without prejudice.

6. Damages ⊂=130(3)—$1,000 for bruises and shock from automobile accident not excessive.

Where plaintiff was pinned beneath an overturned automobile and subjected to severe nervous shock and numerous bruises, $1,000 for his injuries held not excessive.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by George McPhee against J. D. Lavin. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. P. Jennings, of Los Angeles (Frank B. Belcher, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

R. Y. Williams, A. W. Rutan, and Williams & Rutan, all of Santa Ana, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This appeal is from a judgment for plaintiff for injuries caused by an automobile collision. The principal point presented is on the contention of appellant that the record discloses contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

The parties, each driving an automobile, were approaching the crossing of intersecting streets in the city of Anaheim; the plaintiff going west on the north side of Center street and the defendant going south on the west side of Claudina street. The main facts in the case, as found by the trial court and supported by the undisputed weight of the evidence, show that the defendant, upon reaching the vicinity of the street intersection, instead of keeping to the right until he had passed the center of the intersection, as required by section 20 of the state Motor Vehicle Act, cut across the corner of the intersection to the east of the center of the street; that the plaintiff, who was approaching the intersection from the east, saw defendant's machine coming toward him on the wrong side of the street, and in an attempt to avoid a collision turned to the left and increased his speed. The defendant also, seeing the imminence of a collision, turned his car to the right, and the machines came together near the southern line of the intersection, with resultant injuries to the plaintiff. Under this state of facts thus found there can be no question but that the defendant, by reason of his negligent and unlawful crossing on the wrong side of the street, was responsible for the accident, unless the contention of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff can be maintained.

Section 22 of the Motor Vehicle Act, then in force, already referred to, prohibits the driving of a motor or other vehicle on a public highway—

"At a greater rate of speed than ten miles an hour where the operator's or chauffeur's view of the road traffic is obstructed either upon approaching an intersecting way, or in traversing a crossing or intersection of ways or in approaching or traversing a bridge, * * * causeway or viaduct, or in going around corners or a curve in a street or highway." Stats. 1915, p. 409.

Contributory negligence was pleaded by an allegation of the answer averring that the plaintiff was driving at an excessive rate of speed in violation of the statute and that contributory negligence is imputed as a matter of law. On the issue thus raised the trial court found as follows:

"The court finds: That the defendant negligently, recklessly, carelessly, and unlawfully caused his said automobile to be driven and propelled, so that the same was unlawfully driven to the east side of the intersection of the prolongation of Claudina street in and upon said Center street, in the city of Anaheim. That by the action of said defendant a collision was imminent between the automobiles of plaintiff and defendant. That plaintiff saw that a collision was imminent between the said automobiles, and on account of the same caused his said automobile to veer in a southwesterly direction towards the left-hand side of Center street. That if defendant had kept upon the proper side of the street there would have been no accident. That the proximate cause of said accident was the failure of defendant to follow the law in keeping on the right-hand side of the street, and by his unlawfully driving his automobile to the east side of the intersection of the prolongation of Claudina street in and upon said Center street, and by causing his said automobile to be driven upon the northeastern portion of said intersection when he was going in a southeasterly direction. That the defendant did, when a collision was imminent, attempt to turn his automobile towards the right for the purpose of avoiding a collision with the plaintiff's automobile, but that plaintiff's automobile was not then and there being driven at a high or dangerous or unlawful rate of speed. That the plaintiff turned his automobile to the left without slackening the speed thereof, and that up to the time of so turning to the left plaintiff was at all times proceeding at a speed of 15 miles per hour, and that upon so turning to the left he increased the speed of his automobile for the purpose of avoiding a collision." "That the rate of speed that plaintiff was driving his automobile prior to and at the time of the accident did not contribute to or cause the said collision and accident, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in the speed, way, or manner in which he was driving his said automobile."

[1, 2] It is appellant's contention that the specific finding of fact that at all the times mentioned the plaintiff was driving at a speed of 15 miles an hour negatives and supersedes the conclusion of the court that plaintiff was not driving at a dangerous or excessive rate of speed and that the rate at which he was driving did not contribute to the accident. If we may go behind the findings of the facts in this matter, it appears from the evidence that the plaintiff's view around the corner in the direction from which the other vehicle was coming was obstructed by buildings; that the plaintiff was driving in the direction of this intersection at a rate of 14 or 15 miles an hour, and was at a point 25 or 30 feet from the intersection when the defendant came into his line of vision, crossing directly toward him on the wrong side of the street. The plaintiff in an effort to avoid the threatened collision speeded up his machine and turned at an angle to the left. That he cannot be held as a matter of law guilty of negligence in doing this is clear from the well-established rule than one suddenly confronted with an unexpected danger may use such means for avoiding the danger as would appeal to a person of ordinary prudence in a like situation without being held to strict accountability as to whether the course chosen is the most judicious or not. Schneider v. Market St. Ry., 134 Cal. 482, 490, 66 Pac. 734. The defendant, by unlawfully cutting the corner and approaching the plaintiff from the wrong side of the street, is not in a position to complain of the plaintiff's deviation from the rule of the road in an attempt to avoid a collision. If the plaintiff was guilty of negligence at all, it was by virtue of the fact that he was driving at the rate of 15 miles an hour at a point within 25 or 30 feet of an intersection where the view of the intersecting street was obstructed. This situation involves the construction of the law in question as to the precise point on approaching such an intersection at which the driver must have reduced his rate of speed to 10 miles an hour.

[3] The purpose of this limitation of speed at intersections is obviously to avoid danger from the traffic crossing on the transverse street. Under the rules regulating such traffic, no danger arises until the passing vehicles reach the territory common to both streets at or within the lines of intersection. If then the speed has been reduced to 10 miles an hour at the point of intersection, the purpose of the limitation has been met. This is so held in Blackburn v. Marple, 184 Pac. 873, and we are in accord with the decision on that point. In this case the plaintiff was driving at the rate of 15 miles an hour as he came toward this intersection, and was within the speed limit prescribed by law on that part of the street. He was still from 25 to 30 feet from the intersection when driven by the emergency that confronted him to change his course and accelerate his speed. Testimony was given in the case that his brakes were in good order and that he could, while moving at 15 miles an hour, bring his car to a complete stop within 15 or 30 feet. Under these conditions he could without difficulty, had he been permitted to pursue a straight and uninterrupted course, have slowed down to 10 miles an hour before reaching the intersection. It cannot then be held as a matter of law that he was guilty of negligence because of driving at the rate of 15 miles an hour at this point. If defendant had kept to the right side of the street until he had passed the center of the intersection, there is no reason to assume that the plaintiff would not have slowed down to the prescribed speed at the intersection and allowed defendant the right of way to cross ahead of him.

We find no evidence of the presentation of any claim by plaintiff for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), or any assignment or subrogation of right, to support appellant's contention that plaintiff could not maintain this action in his own name and right.

[4, 5] The errors of law assigned upon admission of testimony over defendant's objections and motions to strike, so far as in any way suggestive of prejudice, arise upon the admission in evidence, as part of a conversation had with defendant, of defendant's declaration to plaintiff, immediately after the collision that he carried accident insurance that would provide for plaintiff if he had suffered injury. As this was admitted as tending to show an acknowledgment of responsibility by defendant for the accident, we think it was proper evidence. Later in the trial, upon questioning on behalf of defendant of a physician who had made an examination of plaintiff to discover the extent of his injuries, plaintiff's counsel was permitted over defendant's objection to ask if he made the examination at the instance of the Fidelity & Casualty Company. This line of examination was objectionable and improper, but as the trial was before the court without a jury, and the affirmative answer of the witness was afterwards struck out by the court as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, it may be treated as error without prejudice.

[6] Appellant complains of the judgment as excessive. It appears that $1,000 of the total amount of $1,241.50 included in the judgment was for personal injuries to the plaintiff. The evidence discloses that he was pinned beneath the overturned automobile, subjected to a severe nervous shock, and received numerous contusions and bruises, which, while they only confined him to his bed nine days, were still evidenced by swellings and soreness four months later. It also appeared that he was suffering from soreness of the kidneys, which the physician attributes to the accident, and expresses doubt as to whether or not it may be permanent. Under these conditions we are not prepared to say that the damages allowed are so great as to justify disturbing the findings and judgment of the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; OLNEY, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

183 Cal. 273

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 9260.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 30, 1920.)

1. Constitutional law ⊜20—Choice of Legislature between two possible meanings controls.

Where a constitutional provision may well have either of two meanings, the action of the Legislature in adopting one of such meanings by statute is well-nigh, if not completely, controlling.

2. Constitutional law ⊜48—Court cannot invalidate statute except for plain conflict.

The Supreme Court cannot declare void a provision of a statute, except for a plain and unmistakable conflict between it and the Constitution.

3. Master and servant ⊜372—"Injury" in provision for workmen's compensation includes disease.

In view of the construction of the word "injury" in Workmen's Compensation Act, § 3, subd. 4, and section 6, Const. art. 20, § 21, providing the Legislature may create and impose liability on employers to compensate employés for any "injury" in the course of employment, irrespective of the fault of either party, permits an award of compensation for death of a city's hospital employé, caused by influenza contracted in the course of employment, and not by any bodily injury through violence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Injury.]

4. Master and servant ⊜405(4) — Evidence held to sustain conclusion influenza contracted in employment.

In a widow's proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act for death of a city's hospital employé from influenza, evidence held sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the Industrial Commission that the employé contracted influenza in the course of his employment.

In Bank.

Proceedings for compensation for death of her husband under the Workmen's Compensation Act, by Geraldine Slattery, opposed by the City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, the employer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, the employer applies for certiorari. Affirmed.

George Lull, City Atty., Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., and Hugh L. Smith, all of San Francisco (Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner and A. A. Tiscornia, both of San Francisco (W. H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

OLNEY, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari annulling an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The applicant is a municipal corporation, and had in its employ as a hospital steward in one of its hospitals a man named Ernest F. Slattery. While so employed, Slattery was taken with influenza on October 15, 1918, and died of that disease eight days later. His widow presented to the commission a claim for compensation for his death, and the commission made an award in her favor. The present application is to annul this award.

Two grounds are urged why the award is invalid. The first, and more important, is that the awarding of compensation for death by disease, the origin of which was not a bodily injury suffered through violence, is beyond the powers of the commission. The second is that there is no evidence to support the finding of the commission that the disease of which Slattery died was contracted in the course of his employment, and arose out of it.

The decision on the first question presented turns on the meaning to be given to the word "injury" as used in article 20, § 21, of our Constitution. The section has been amended since Slattery's death, but at that time it read:

"The Legislature may by appropriate legislation create and enforce a liability on the part of all employers to compensate their employés for any injury incurred by the said employés in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of either party."

The word "injury" as so used means, of course, only bodily injury, and the position of the city is that it means only bodily injury suffered by or resulting from violence, while the position of the commission is that it covers any harmful effect upon the body, whether by violence or by disease. The word is frequently used in both the broader and the more limited sense. In common usage, it has the more general meaning. Thus, Webster defines "injury" as: (1) "Any wrong, damage, or mischief done or suffered"; as (2) "a source of harm"; or as (3) "a wrong or damage done to another." On the other hand, when personal injuries are spoken of, there are apt to be meant only bodily injuries suffered through violence in some form or to some extent, traumatic injuries. The exact meaning of the word "injury" as used in Workmen's Compensation Acts, or in a similar connection, has come before the courts for consideration on numerous occasions, and their rulings are by no means harmonious. On the one hand, there are a number of cases holding that the word has the more limited meaning. An example of this is Linnane v. Ætna Brewing Co., 91 Conn. 158, 99 Atl. 507, L. R. A. 1917D, 77, where it was held that the phrase "personal injury" did not include injury or harm suffered by disease, and that compensation was not allowable for the death of an employé by pneumonia contracted as the result of unusual exposure and exhaustion in the course of his employment. Other examples along the same line are Industrial Accident Comm., etc., v. Brown, 92 Ohio, 309, 110 N. E. 744, L. R. A. 1916B, 1277; Adams v. Acme, etc., Co., 182 Mich. 157, 148 N. W. 485, L. R. A. 1916A, 283, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 689; Richardson v. Greenburg, 188 App. Div. 248, 176 N. Y. Supp. 651; Liondale, etc., Works v. Riker, 85 N. J. Law, 426, 89 Atl. 929.

On the other hand, there are a large number of decisions which adopt the broader meaning, and hold that compensation is allowable for the injury or harm done by disease, although the disease is not contracted as the result of any violence whatever in the ordinary sense of that word.

Under the English Workmen's Compensation Act, compensation is, or was, allowable only for "personal injury by accident," a much more limited expression than that found in our constitutional provision, and one in which it might well be thought there was some implication of an injury by violent external means. Nevertheless, the House of Lords held in Brinton's v. Turvey, L. R. Ap. Cases (1905) 230, that compensation was allowable for the injury sustained by a workman from anthrax contracted by him in the handling of infected wool; there being no violence other than that bacteria from the wool found their way into his system.

Similarly, it was held in Scott v. Pearson, L. R. 2 K. B. Div. (1916) 61, that compensation was allowable for cattle ringworm contracted by an employé by coming in contact, not violent, with infected calves.

Along the same line, the House of Lords held in Glasgow Coal Co. v. Welsh, L. R. 2 Ap. Cases (1916) 1, that a miner was entitled to compensation for rheumatism contracted by him as a result of his being required to stand for a number of hours in cold water to bale out the mine pit.

The Indiana Workmen's Compensation Act, like the English Act, allows compensation for "personal injury or death by accident." But in United Paperboard Co. v. Lewis (Ind. App.) 117 N. E. 276, compensation was allowed to a workman for acute nephritis contracted by him through his being required to work for several hours in heated paper pulp. The following portion of the opinion is pertinent here, the italics being ours:

"The courts have also differed as to whether a disease following an employment, should be considered an injury by accident within the meaning of such acts. In the various decisions on this subject it is generally recognized that diseases are of two classes: First, the so-called industrial or occupational diseases, which are the natural and reasonably to be expected results of a workman following a certain occupation for a considerable period of time; second, diseases which are the result of some unusual condition of the employment. The first class is illustrated by lead poisoning and the second by pneumonia following an enforced exposure. As a rule such industrial or occupational diseases are not considered as injuries by accident and in the absence of special statutory provision compensation is not allowed therefor. On the other hand, it is generally accepted that a disease, which is not the ordinary result of an employé's work, reasonably to be anticipated as a result of pursuing the same, but contracted as a direct result of unusual circumstances connected therewith, is to be considered an injury by accident, and comes within the provisions of acts providing for compensation for personal injury so caused [citing a long list of authorities]."

In Hurle's Case, 217 Mass. 223, 104 N. E. 336, L.R. A. 1916A, 279, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 919, a workman employed to tend furnaces for making gas claimed compensation for the loss of his sight due to an acute attack of optic neuritis induced by poisonous gases from the furnaces to which his work constantly exposed him. The Massachusetts act allowed compensation for "personal injury" without requiring that it be by accident, and the question discussed by the court was as to whether the case was one of a "personal injury." The discussion concludes thus:

"The learned counsel for the insurer in his brief has made an exhaustive and ingenious analysis of the entire act touching the words 'injury' or 'injuries,' and has sought to demonstrate that it cannot apply to an injury such as that sustained in the case at bar. But the argument is not convincing. It might be decisive if 'accident' had been the statutory word. It is true that in interpreting a statute words should be construed in their ordinary sense. Injury, however, is usually employed as an inclusive word. The fact remains that the word 'injury,' and not 'accident,' was employed by the Legislature throughout this act. It would not be accurate, but lax, to treat the act as if it referred merely to accidents."

In State v. Trustees, 138 Wis. 133, 119 N. W. 806, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1175, the widow and children of a policeman dying from pneumonia contracted by exposure in the course of his duty made application for a pension under a statute which provided for a pension to the dependents of a policeman "injured" in the performance of his duty. It was contended that by injury was not meant disease merely, and upon this point the court said (138 Wis. 135, 119 N. W. 807, 20 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1175):

"The word 'injury,' in ordinary modern usage, is one of very broad designation. In the strict sense of the law, especially the common law, its meaning corresponded with its etymology. It meant a wrongful invasion of legal rights, and was not concerned with the hurt or damage resulting from such invasion. It is thus used in the familiar law phrase damnum absque injuria. In common parlance, however, it is used broadly enough to cover both the damnum and the injuria of the common law, and indeed is more commonly used to express the idea belonging to the former word, namely, the effect on the recipient in the way of hurt or damage, and we cannot doubt that at this day its common and approved usage extends to and includes any hurtful or damaging effect which may be suffered by any one. Hence, unless some reason to the contrary is presented, it should be so understood in these statutes. Subdivision 1, § 4971, Stats. (1898). The respondent contends that, nevertheless, the word should be limited to the results of external violence. By itself the word 'injury' or 'injure' has no more application to the result of violence than to the result of any other injurious influence. A disease resulting from negligence of a physician in failing to give treatment is just as much an injury in common phrase as if it resulted from affirmative maltreatment or external violence."

The following cases, in none of which was the element of violence present, are along the same line: Alloa Coal Co. v. Drylie, 6 B. W. C. C. 398 (death by pneumonia); Hood v. Maryland, etc., Co., 206 Mass. 223, 92 N. E. 329, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1192, 138 Am. St. Rep. 379 (contracting of glanders); Dove v. Alpena, etc., Co., 198 Mich. 132, 164 N. W. 253 (death by anthrax); Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co., 161 Wis. 370, 154 N. W. 640, L. R. A. 1916A, 273, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 293 (death by typhoid fever).

Finally there is the decision in this state in Hartford, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 32 Cal. App. 481, 163 Pac. 225, where an employé engaged in handling pulverized grain, and who contracted an affection of the nose and throat from the grain, was allowed compensation. The sole point discussed in the opinion, to be sure, is as to whether the disease was caused by the man's employment, but nevertheless it is a decision that cannot be justified unless the word "injury" is broad enough to include the harm done by disease.

[1] As between these two conflicting lines of decision it is not necessary to determine where the weight of authority lies, or which cases are the better reasoned. If those which give the broader meaning to the word "injury" do not lay down the better rule, they at least establish this, that it cannot be said that the broader meaning is an impossible or unreasonable one. The situation then, as it presents itself in connection with our constitutional provision, is at least that both by general usage and by the decisions of the courts the word "injury" may have either of two meanings, and that either is reasonable and possible. In such a situation, where a constitutional provision may well have either of two meanings, it is a fundamental rule of constitutional construction that, if the Legislature has by statute adopted one, its action in this respect is well-nigh, if not completely, controlling. When the Legislature has once construed the Constitution, for the courts then to place a different construction upon it means that they must declare void the action of the Legislature. It is no small matter for one branch of the government to annul the formal exercise by another and co-ordinate branch of power committed to the latter, and the courts should not and must not annul, as contrary to the Constitution, a statute passed by the Legislature, unless it can be said of the statute that it positively and certainly is opposed to the Constitution. This is elementary. But plainly this cannot be said of a statute which merely adopts one of two reasonable and possible constructions of the Constitution. In Fargo v. Powers (D. C.) 220 Fed. 697, 709, it is said:

"If the constitutional provisions in question are susceptible of two constructions—one being that contended for by complainants, the other that taken by the Legislature—the action of the Legislature in adopting one of those constructions and enacting a statute carrying it into effect, as thus construed, must be deemed conclusive. That rule is: 'That the acts of a state Legislature are to be presumed constitutional until the contrary is shown; and it is only when they manifestly infringe some provision of the Constitution that they can be declared void for that reason. In case of doubt, every presumption, not clearly inconsistent with the language or subject-matter, is to be made in favor of the constitutionality of the act. The power of declaring laws unconstitutional should be exercised with extreme caution, and never where serious doubt exists as to the conflict.'

"Where a statute has been adopted in carrying into effect a constitutional provision, the constitutional provision and statute must both be so construed as to permit the act to stand. This question was passed on in People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 151, 161, 162, where Judge Christiancy says: 'But it has been strenuously insisted here that these principles can only properly apply when the doubt exists as to the construction of the act, and not where it arises upon the meaning of a constitutional provision; that it is, in all cases the duty of the court first to fix and settle the meaning, definitely, of the Constitution, whatever may be their doubts upon it, and then to examine the act and apply it to the Constitution. Now, it strikes me, as a self-evident proposition, that the question whether a legislative act conflicts with the Constitution must, of necessity, equally involve the examination of both, and that, while it can make but little practical difference which is first examined and construed, the more logical order, when it is claimed that an act is unconstitutional, would be first to determine what the act is. Nor can I perceive any good ground for holding that the doubt which is to restrain us from pronouncing the act unconstitutional must be confined to the meaning of the act; nor why courts can be bound to settle, fix, and declare the meaning of the one, in spite of their doubts, more than of the other. The doubt which is to save the act is the doubt of the conflict; and this may arise alike from the construction of the one or the other, or both. In fact, it will be found that, in much the greater number of cases, where the rules above cited have been laid down, the doubts arise upon the construction of the Constitution, and not upon that of the act which was claimed to conflict with it.'

"In Board of Education v. State Board of Assessors, 133 Mich. 120, 94 N. W. 669, the question of the construction of this constitutional provision was before the court, which gave effect to the legislative construction, saying: 'But it is urged in behalf of the power exercised by the board in this case that, if the act is subject to this construction, it is in conflict with the constitutional amendment itself. In determining this question, under well-settled rules, we are not to ignore the contemporaneous construction placed upon the amendment by the Legislature itself.' Kennedy v. Gies, 25 Mich. 92; Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 564, 77 N. W. 250, 42 L. R. A. 536."

See, also, County of Tulare v. County of Kings, 117 Cal. 195, 49 Pac. 8; Railroad Commissioners v. Market Street Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 677, 64 Pac. 1065.

In the present case, the Legislature has construed the Constitution, and has placed upon the word "injury" the broader meaning possible to it. Section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) provides that compensation shall be given by an employer "for any injury sustained by his employés arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any such employé if the injury shall proximately cause death." Subdivision 4 of section 3 of the act defines injury as follows:

"4. The term 'injury,' as used in this act, shall include any injury or disease arising out of the employment. In case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to such injury, compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury."

[2, 3] The Constitution cannot be given the more limited meaning contended for by the city without declaring this provision in the statute void. This we cannot do, unless there is a plain and unmistakable conflict between the statute and the Constitution. But there is no such plain and unmistakable conflict, since the statute does no more than adopt what is at least a possible and not unreasonable construction of the Constitution. This being the case, it must be held that the provision of the Compensation Act, whereby a disease arising out of employment is declared to be an injury for which compensation shall be paid, is not unconstitutional, but is operative and controlling.

As to the second contention of the city, that Slattery did not contract the influenza from which he died because of his employment, the facts relied upon in its support are that an epidemic of the disease was raging in the city at the time, that the disease is highly infectious, and was so general that one out of every ten in the city contracted it, and that every member of the community was exposed to it to a more or less extent. The existence of these facts cannot be doubted, and from them it is argued that it cannot be said with any reasonable certainty that Slattery contracted the disease because of his employment as hospital steward, even though he was handling influenza cases. It is also contended, and truly, that compensation is not due merely for injury by disease contracted by an employé, while employed. The injury must be one arising out of the employment, and where the injury is by disease there must exist the relation of cause and effect between the employment and the disease. It is also true that to justify an award there must be an affirmative showing of a case within the statute or, concretely, it must affirmatively appear here that Slattery contracted the disease from which he died because of his employment.

On the other hand, the evidence showed that the incubation period of the disease is from one to four days, that Slattery in the course of his duties during the five days preceding his being taken ill had had to handle and had been exposed to at least 12 developed cases of influenza, that so far as known he was not exposed to any cases except in the course of his employment, that he lived only half a block from the hospital where he was employed, and during the two weeks preceding his illness had been working very hard, and had gone directly from his home to his work and from his work to his home, and had not been out, that his exposure because of his work was far greater than that of the average person, and that among the nurses in the hospitals of the city, a class exposed in much the same degree as Slattery, the proportion who contracted the disease ran from 50 to 85 per cent. as against 10 per cent. for the community in general. The preponderance of the medical testimony also was to the effect that Slattery contracted the disease as a result of his peculiar exposure to it incidental to his employment.

[4] It, of course, cannot be said that from these facts it is certain that Slattery contracted his sickness because of his employment. But certainty is not required. It is not even required that the award be, in our judgment in accord with the preponderance of the evidence, in order that we be not at liberty to annul it. We cannot disturb the award unless we can say that a reasonable man could not reach the conclusion which the commission did. This we cannot say in the present case.

If there had been no epidemic in San Francisco at the time, and it appeared that Slattery as hospital steward had been exposed directly to a considerable number of influenza patients, and was not known to have been exposed otherwise, and had come down with the disease within the period of incubation after his exposure, the conclusion that the disease was due to his exposure in the course of his work could hardly be questioned. But these are the actual facts, with the single exception that an epidemic was raging. To the extent of the severity of this epidemic the strength of the conclusion is weakened. It may well be that if the epidemic were so severe that the proportion of the general public who were attacked was anything like as great as the proportion of those exposed as was Slattery, the question of whether he was attacked because of the exposure incident to his employment or because of the exposure general to the public would be so much a matter of conjecture and speculation as not to warrant a definite conclusion as the basis of an award. But the actual fact is that of persons exposed as was Slattery the proportion of those attacked was from five to eight times as great as the proportion of those not so exposed. This ratio is so great that it cannot be said that the commission was not justified in concluding from it, in connection with the other facts, that Slattery's illness was due to the peculiar exposure of his employment. Its conclusion is the more justified by the fact that it coincides with the conclusions of most of the physicians who testified. Their opinions upon a point of this character are entitled to consideration, since it is a part of their vocation to observe diseases and how they spread, and to draw conclusions from their observations.

Award affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

47 Cal. App. 694

PETERSON v. RASMUSSEN et al.
(Civ. 2147.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 22, 1920. Rehearing Denied June 27, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Libel and slander ⟹112(1)—Finding that writing imputed want of chastity held warranted.

Findings that a letter written by one of the defendants imputed want of chastity, etc., to plaintiff held warranted.

2. Libel and slander ⟹21 — Party need not be named if otherwise identified.

To constitute libel a party need not be named in the writing if pointed to by description or circumstance tending to identify him.

3. Libel and slander ⟹7(16)—Imputation of unchastity actionable per se.

Words imputing to a woman want of chastity are actionable per se.

4. Libel and slander ⟹33—Damages to reputation presumed to result from libel per se.

Damages to a person's reputation are presumed to result from a libel per se; so, where a letter was libelous per se because imputing want of chastity to plaintiff, who was sufficiently identified, there is a sufficient presumption of damage.

5. Libel and slander ⟹44(2) — Libelous letter not "privileged communication."

Under Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3, a "privileged communication" is one made without malice to a person interested by one who is also interested or by one who stands in such a relation to a person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, etc.; hence a letter to plaintiff's friends written by defendant, the mother of one who was then engaged to marry plaintiff, imputing to her a want of chastity, etc., was not privileged, where it was not in response to any question by plaintiff's friends, who had introduced her to defendants' son.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Privileged Communication.]

6. Libel and slander ⟹101(4) — Burden of proving privilege on defendant.

Defendant has the burden of proving privilege set up in the answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Helga Peterson against Christ Rasmussen and Mrs. C. (Boline) Rasmussen. From a judgment for plaintiff, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. H. Johnson and Irving D. Gibson, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh, of Sacramento, for respondent.

NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action for damages for an alleged libel on plaintiff, committed by means of a letter written by appellant Mrs. C. (Boline) Rasmussen in the Danish language. It is not disputed that the said appellant wrote the letter, and that it was delivered to and read by the addressees, a certain Mr. and Mrs. Simonsen, in Sacramento.

Briefly the complaint alleges that plaintiff is an unmarried woman of 24 years of age; that the defendants are husband and wife, residing together as such near Loomis in Placer county; that on the 7th day of March, 1917, the plaintiff and defendants knew each other personally, and on said day, and for a long time prior thereto, the plaintiff and Mr. and Mrs. Simonsen (the addressees of the letter) were close friends; that at all times prior to the publication of the defamatory statements contained in the letter hereinafter set forth plaintiff had always maintained a good name and reputation among her neighbors, acquaintances, and friends for virtue, politeness, moral worth and integrity, and had never been suspected of being unchaste and without virtue; that on the 7th day of March, 1917, the defendant Mrs. C. Rasmussen wrote of and concerning plaintiff a letter in the Danish language to Mr. and Mrs. Simonsen in Sacramento; that by said letter the said defendant published of and concerning plaintiff a false, unprivileged, and malicious writing which, translated from the Danish into the English language, is as follows:

"Loomis, March 7, 1917.

"Mr and Mrs. Simonsen: Inclosed you will find receipt for $50.00, there is $15.00 due yet. We have heard you are selling milk for $14.00 per month, so we see she is paying for herself, which we are very glad to hear, but there is one thing we are not satisfied with, and that is, you put that old thing on Andrew, why she looks old enough to be his grand mother, with her glasses on and false teeth, no, just leave other peoples children alone, you may have trouble enough before you have your own boys brought up and send out into this world, so you shall not do ill to others, it may fall back on yourself some day, and what is that kind of talk he is telling about her operation? is that why she had to wear a maternity dress, when she comes up to visit us, was she afraid we should see her shape and then she comes up here before I even had a chance to invite her, no, that is the most shameful I have seen, and I am absolutely ashamed that she is Danish, we have never in our lives seen such an impudent woman before in this country next time she comes up here I will lock the door, as we do not like to be insulted in our own house. Thanks for the money but let Andrew alone he has plenty of time he can get plenty of sickness, he don't need to marry it.

"[Signed] Mrs. C. Rasmussen

"Box 105. Loomis, Cal."

It was alleged that by the language used in this letter the said defendant intended to charge, and to be understood as charging, that plaintiff was pregnant, and was wearing a maternity dress to hide and conceal her shape, in order that her pregnant condition might not be disclosed, and that she was to have an unlawful operation performed to relieve her of the child, and further that the letter was so understood by the readers thereof. It was further alleged that the charges so made in said letter were and are in every particular false, untrue, defamatory, libelous, and unprivileged, and that they did expose plaintiff to hatred, contempt, ridicule, and obloquy, and that by reason thereof she was injured in her reputation and good name, and has also caused her grievous mental suffering and humiliation.

The Simonsens, to whom this letter was addressed, were intimate friends of the plaintiff and had introduced appellant's son Andrew to plaintiff. The plaintiff and Andrew thereafter were engaged to be married, but the engagement was broken when plaintiff learned of the letter above set forth. At the time of the trial Andrew was in the United States forces in France.

An answer was filed denying the material allegations of the complaint, and by way of defense sets up that the communication was privileged. The case came on for trial before the court without a jury, and the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law sustaining the material allegations of the complaint and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant Mrs. C. Rasmussen, from which judgment said defendant has appealed.

Appellant argues that the judgment should be reversed for the following reasons: (1) That the allegations of the complaint that the letter was written "of and concerning plaintiff" is not sustained by the evidence; (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages, as there is no presumption of general damages, since the words in the letter are not libelous per se; that they do not on their face apply to plaintiff and are not libelous of themselves; and (3) that the letter was a privileged communication.

[1] 1. The court found that by the use of the words and language contained in said letter "the said defendant Mrs. C. Rasmussen intended to charge and assert and to be understood as charging and asserting, and was by the readers of the said letter, and those to whom the contents thereof were disclosed, in fact understood as charging and asserting and it did charge and assert therein, among other things, that the plaintiff was pregnant and with child and was wearing a maternity dress to hide and conceal her shape in order that her pregnant condition might not be disclosed, and that the said plaintiff was to have an unlawful abortion performed to relieve her of the child."

And the court further found that the said charges "were in every particular false, untrue, defamatory, libelous, and unprivileged. * * *"

These findings are fully sustained by the evidence. That the said defendant referred to the plaintiff in this letter appears from her own testimony given at the trial:

"Mr. Welsh: Q. Who were you referring to, Mrs. Rasmussen? A. I was referring to that girl. Q. Miss Peterson here? A. Yes; I did. Q. That is the one you referred to? A. Yes."

It is also plain from the record that Mr. and Mrs. Simonsen (the addressees of the letter) understood the letter as referring to the plaintiff. S. Simonsen testified:

"I have known Helga Peterson since she came to this country. She came to our house quite often. Miss Peterson and my wife are very close friends. * * * I have no feeling against the Rasmussens. I don't like that letter they sent her very much. I have a feeling against them at the present time on account of the letter. * * * I did not make any effort to have Andrew Rasmussen become engaged to Miss Peterson, nor did my wife, that I know of. It is not true that my wife invited her there when she came there in the first place. My wife invited her to come to my place in North Sacramento. Andrew Rasmussen was there at the time. He came first."

The plaintiff testified that when Mrs. Simonsen showed her the letter the first time "she said some mother-in-law I had to write a letter like that." This evidence of the plaintiff was received without objection. The testimony in the case shows that the Simonsens understood the letter to refer to the plaintiff and plaintiff's engagement to Andrew Rasmussen, the son of defendants.

[2] To constitute libel a party need not be named in the writing if pointed to by description or circumstance tending to identify him. Burkhart v. North American Co., 214 Pa. 39, 63 Atl. 410; Clark v. North American Co., 203 Pa. 346, 53 Atl. 237; Bohan v. Record Publishing Co., 1 Cal. App. 429, 82 Pac. 634.

[3, 4] 2. The appellant takes the position that, since plaintiff's name is not mentioned in the letter, there is no libel per se, and therefore no presumption of general damages. Her position in this regard is untenable. The letter, we think, is on its face libelous; and it is alleged and proven that the said letter referred to the plaintiff. Words imputing to a woman a want of chastity are actionable per se. Preston v. Frey, 91 Cal. 107, 27 Pac. 533; Hitchcock v. Caruthers, 82 Cal. 523, 23 Pac. 48; Kedrolivansky v. Niebaum, 70 Cal. 216, 11 Pac. 641; McKinney v. Roberts, 68 Cal. 192, 8 Pac. 857. Damages to a person's reputation are presumed to result from the publication of a libel per se. Bohan v. Record Publishing Co., 1 Cal. App. 429, 82 Pac. 634.

[5] 3. There is nothing in the record showing, or tending to show, that the letter was a privileged communication. The letter was not in response to any inquiry made by the Simonsens. A privileged communication is one made "without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Section 47, subd. 3, Civ. Code.

[6] The burden of proving the privilege as set up in the answer was upon the defendant. Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 Pac. 290; Adams v. Cameron, 27 Cal. App. 625, 150 Pac. 1005, 151 Pac. 286. The testimony shows an absence of privilege and the said letter and charges were by the trial court found to be false, malicious, and unprivileged.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

47 Cal. App. 555

BOWDEN v. HERBERGER et ux.

(Civ. 2684.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 19, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⇐100(1)—Verdict not disturbed where sustained by evidence.

Where there is sufficient evidence to warrant the jury on finding as it did on a question of fact, the appellate court will not disturb the verdict.

2. Animals ⇐70—Knowledge of viciousness essential to liability for injury.

The owner of an animal not naturally vicious is liable for injuries done by it if in fact vicious and he had knowledge.

3. Animals ⇐74(7)—Instruction on dog's propensity termed "mischievous," held not erroneous.

In an action for injuries to a boy when bitten by defendant's bulldog, use of word "mischievous" in addition to "vicious," in an instruction on the dog's propensity and defendant's knowledge thereof, held not erroneous as importing misconception into the instruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Edward Frank Bowden, a minor, by K. K. Keith, his guardian ad litem, against L. J. Herberger and wife. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Griffith Jones, Warren L. Williams and Leland S. Bower, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Riddle & Cheroske, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WELLER, J. This is an action to recover for injuries to plaintiff, caused by the attack of a dog belonging to the defendants. A jury fixed the damages at $1,000, and from the judgment entered on the verdict defendants appeal.

Defendants were the owners of two bulldogs, and kept them in defendants' back yard, which was inclosed with a high-board fence, and from which a gate opened into the alley in the rear of the premises. Plaintiff, a minor six years of age, lived with his mother in the same block, and was accustomed to play in the alley. On the occasion of the injury, he was in the alley spinning a top. One of the dogs had escaped from defendants' premises into the alley, and Mrs. Herberger stood at the open gate calling him.

From this point confusion reigned. No witness gives a clear statement of what occurred. Mrs. Herberger testified that as the dog approached her the boy threw the top at him, provoking the assault. Plaintiff denied being the aggressor, and stated that he struck the dog with the top after the animal bit him. But the result was that the dog attacked the boy, and inflicted the injuries upon which this action is based.

[1] Appellants challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict claiming a lack of proof that the dog was vicious, and that the defendants were aware of its viciousness. Witnesses testified to previous attacks by the dogs on other persons, and that knowledge thereof had been communicated to defendants. While there is a conflict in the testimony on this point, there is sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding as it did; and, under the well-established rule, this court will not disturb the verdict.

The second point urged by appellants is that the court erred in instructing the jury. Defendants requested the following instruction:

"You are further instructed that the plaintiff's evidence must be sufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint as to the vicious character of the dog and the defendants' knowledge thereof, and the plaintiff's ignorance thereof."

The court modified the instruction by striking out the words "and the plaintiff's ignorance thereof." Counsel cites the case of Haneman v. Western Meat Co., 8 Cal. App. 698, 97 Pac. 695, as authority for his assignment of such action by the court as error. The court in that case did hold that the plaintiff was required to prove the allegations of his complaint that the horse was vicious, that the defendant knew of that fact, and that plaintiff was ignorant thereof. But that was an action by a servant against his master; and, as stated in the opinion, the employé assumes the risks that are ordinarily incident to the business in which he is employed.

[2] The general rule is that the owner of an animal, not naturally vicious, is liable for injury done by the animal if it was in fact vicious, and the owner had knowledge of that fact. Finney v. Curtis, 78 Cal. 498, 21 Pac. 120. The instruction as given was in accord with that rule, and the court properly applied it.

The jury was fully instructed on the question of contributory negligence, and it was not limited in its scope to a child of tender years; so that the defendants had the advantage of the instruction as though plaintiff had been an adult and in full possession of his faculties.

At the request of plaintiff the court gave the following instruction:

"Before the plaintiff can recover you must find from the evidence: First, that the dogs before the biting, or alleged biting, of the plaintiff complained of, were of a vicious, mischievous propensity, and accustomed to biting mankind. Second, that the defendants had knowledge or notice of these characteristics."

[3] Appellants assert that the use of the word "mischievous" imports a wholly erroneous conception into the instruction. In support of their criticism counsel cite Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 610, 75 Pac. 164. We cannot find therein any analogy to the facts in the instant case. The word did not add to or detract from the efficacy of the instruction.

No other points are discussed by appellants, and we find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; THOMAS, J.

47 Cal. App. 673

COMMERCIAL ACETYLENE SUPPLY CO. v. FOX. (Civ. 3221.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 22, 1920.)

1. Bailment ⟸11—Contract enlarging bailee's liability must be clear.

A contract, enlarging a bailee's liability to that of an insurer, must be specific and in clear and unambiguous language, when, though it will not be extended beyond its terms, it must be given effect as showing the intention of the parties.

2. Bailment ⟸14(1)—Bailee of gas cylinders liable as insurer.

Contract covering bailment of gas cylinders sent defendant by plaintiff as containers of gas sold, and providing that defendant was responsible for any damage to the cylinders while in his possession or control, held to render defendant liable for damage not caused by his negligence; provision defendant should trace and make claim against railroad company for lost cylinders being insufficient to nullify effect of agreement to be responsible.

3. Bailment ⟸14(1)—Bailment consideration for bailee's obligation as insurer.

The bailment of gas cylinders as containers of gas sold was sufficient consideration for the bailee buyer's obligation to make good all damage to the cylinders while in his possession, whether or not due to his negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by the Commercial Acetylene Supply Company against E. Fox, doing business under the firm name and style of Markovits & Fox. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Rosenthal, of San Jose, for appellant.

Adams & Adams, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Judgment in the sum of $400 was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in this action, from which the latter appeals.

The action (which was tried on an agreed statement of facts) was for damage to four gas cylinders, of the value of $440, owned by plaintiff, and which were almost totally destroyed by fire while in the possession of defendant, without negligence on his part. Their value, when subsequently returned to the plaintiff, was but $40. The cylinders contained acetylene gas sold by plaintiff to defendant upon a contract in the form of a letter addressed by plaintiff to defendant and accepted by the latter. It provided as follows:

"We acknowledge, with thanks, your order for one tank of acetylene, which we are shipping to-day via Southern Pacific freight. This cylinder is the property of this company and valued at $110. It is merely loaned you while you are using the gas contained therein. Refilling of same, except by us, or the reloaning of any cylinder without our written consent, is prohibited. When empty they are to be returned to us at West Berkeley, via Southern Pacific freight, charges prepaid. You are also responsible for any damages to any of our cylinders while they are in your possession or care, and we hold you responsible for same until they are received back at our plant. Any cylinders lost in transit to us are to be traced by you until located and if this cannot be done, you are to enter claim with railroad or express company for the value of the cylinders. We require this as our gas is sold f. o. b. West Berkeley, Cal. We reserve the right to charge rental on cylinders retained by you in excess of thirty days. The above is equally applicable to future orders for acetylene except that should you at any time receive different size cylinders the value of same will vary accordingly. Kindly sign and return duplicate of this agreement, sent you herewith. Yours very truly, Commercial Acetylene Welding Co. [Signed] A. R. Chandler. Accepted. [Signed] Markovits & Fox. E. Fox. [Customer.]"

The determination of this action resolves itself into a proper interpretation of the foregoing agreement. It is conceded that a bailee may by a special contract assume the liability of an insurer. The question here is whether this agreement met the requirements necessary for such a contract so as to make the bailee liable for damages occurring without his negligence.

Appellant argues that it enlarged his liability only in that it increased the degree of care to be exercised by him; that otherwise it merely expressed what the law would have implied in the absence of an agreement, and that, therefore, with the exception mentioned, his liability was the same; that is, the damage having occurred without negligence on his part, he was not liable.

[1, 2] A contract enlarging a bailee's liability must be specific and in clear and unambiguous language; and, while it will not be extended beyond the obvious scope of its terms, it must be given effect as showing the intention of the parties. The provision, "You are responsible for any damages to any of our cylinders while they are in your possession or care," determines the nature of the contract and fixes appellant's liability. As the obligation to be responsible for any damages is not one which the law would have implied—the law implying responsibility only for damage due to a bailee's negligence (Commercial Elec. Sup. Co. v. Missouri Com. Co., 166 Mo. App. 332, 148 S. W. 995, 997)—it must be presumed that the purpose of including this clause in the agreement was to protect respondent from loss occurring under just such circumstances. It does not appear that the provision for tracing and making claim against the railroad company for lost cylinders is, when taken in connection with the entire agreement, sufficient indication of a contrary intention to nullify the effect of the definite agreement to be responsible for any damages while in appellant's possession. This provision is easily distinguishable from the provision of the contract in Fairmont Coal Co. v. Jones & Adams Co., 134 Fed. 711, 67 C. C. A. 265, cited by appellant, holding that an agreement to be "responsible" for coal after delivery was not a contract of insurance.

[3] There is no merit in the point urged by appellant that there was no consideration to support this obligation. The bailment itself is a sufficient consideration for such an obligation. Commercial Elec. Sup. Co. v. Missouri Com. Co., supra. In addition to that, in this instance, the bailee was given the use of the cylinders for one month without rent.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 617

BOYER v. CITY OF LONG BEACH.
(Civ. 3371.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=134(2)—Order of dismissal an appealable "final judgment."

Order, dismissing an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, in view of section 581, when entered upon the minutes of the court, is a "final judgment," from which an appeal may be taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Decree or Judgment.]

2. Appeal and error ⊂=927(2)—Proceedings on hearing of motion to dismiss action presumed to have been regular.

In the absence of a record of proceedings had on hearing of motion to dismiss action, the presumption is that they were regular.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⊂=81(5)—Motion to vacate order dismissing action held properly denied.

Where the trial court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and notice of substitution of attorneys was not treated as an appearance by either party until long after dismissal of the action, the notice was not followed by demurrer or answer, no attempt was made to bring the cause to trial, no stipulations were made on behalf of defendant, and no concessions were given by plaintiff, plaintiff's motion to vacate order dismissing the action was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Samuel C. Boyer against the City of Long Beach. From an order denying motion to vacate order dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Falkner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James E. Kelby, G. Hoodenpyl, and Christain Hoeppner, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order denying his motion to vacate an order dismissing his action against defendant, made under section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the summons in the action was not served on defendant within three years next after the commencement of the action, and that defendant had not appeared in said action. The complaint was filed on May 12, 1914. Summons was not served upon defendant at any time. On October 4, 1915, the mayor of the defendant city served on counsel for plaintiff a notice that certain attorneys had been substituted by defendant for other attorneys, and this notice was filed with the papers in the case. Nothing further was done until January 4, 1918, when the attorneys so substituted for the first time appeared in the action and moved a dismissal on the grounds above stated. This motion was granted on January 16, 1918, no opposition being made thereto on behalf of plaintiff. Thereafter, and on August 5, 1918, plaintiff filed a notice of motion to vacate the order of dismissal on the grounds that: (1) The motion was made by one who was not an attorney of record; (2) that the face of the record showed that a general appearance had been made by defendant; and (3) that the motion was not supported by affidavits or other evidence. This motion was denied by the trial court, and from that order the appeal is taken.

[1] An order dismissing an action under section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure, is, when entered upon the minutes of the court, a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken. It was so held in Marks v. Keenan, 140 Cal. 33, 73 Pac. 751, when the provisions of this section were contained in section 581. It is true the latter section also provided that the orders of dismissal should be entered in the minutes of the court and that when so entered they should be effective for all purposes. This language was not carried into section 581a when the change was made, but the record here discloses that the order was entered in the minutes of the court, and the effect of the entry can be none other than that specified in section 581. When a judgment or order is not void on its face because the subject-matter is without the jurisdiction of the court reviewing it, the law provides sufficient methods to reverse or correct it by appeal, by certiorari, by a suit in equity, and by motion under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. The time within which relief may be sought by appeal or motion under section 473 is limited by statute, the time within which certiorari or a suit in equity may be instituted is determined by the equities of the case. There is no statutory authority for a motion to set aside a judgment after the period fixed by section 473 has expired, at least if such judgment is not void on its face because of want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It is not necessary to discuss the remedies for relief from the latter class of judgments, because this is not such a case.

[2] The motion to vacate the judgment was made more than six months after its entry. The first and third grounds urged in the motion cannot be considered because, in the absence of a record of the proceedings had on the hearing of the motion to dismiss, the presumption is that they were regular. The second ground urged—that the defendant had made a general appearance in the action within the three-year period—presented a mixed question of law and fact which the trial court was required to determine upon the hearing of the motion. If it correctly determined that no appearance had been made—failure of service of summons being admitted—then the order dismissing the action was proper. If the court was in error, plaintiff had a plain remedy by appeal.

[3] In any event, the trial court certainly had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the judgment is not void on its face for that reason. It is apparent that the notice of substitution of attorneys was not treated as an appearance by either party until long after the action had been dismissed. The notice was not followed by demurrer or answer, no attempt was made to bring the cause to trial, no stipulations were made on behalf of defendant, and no concessions were given by plaintiff. That the notice was not intended to be an appearance is clear.

The trial court properly denied the motion to vacate the judgment, and its order is therefore affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 608

MOSLEY v. SEELY. (Civ. 3131.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Bills and notes ⟸211 — Indorsement by payees rendered note transferable by delivery.

A note payable to parties who indorsed it was like a note payable to bearer, subject to transfer by mere delivery with intent to pass title.

2. Patents ⟸215 — Evidence held to show plaintiff's agreement to repurchase invention for which note was given.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that plaintiff suing on a note agreed to rebuy from defendant the interest in a camera improvement for which the note was given at a like price to that paid by him, and that subsequently defendant elected to sell back and did so sell.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1170(1)—Errors not resulting in miscarriage of justice not reversible.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, errors committed on trial but not resulting in a miscarriage of justice are not reversible.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by L. J. Mosley against Will H. Seely. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Allison & Dickson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Cecil H. Phillips, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover upon a promissory note for $500 made by defendant to plaintiff and one H. K. Fairall, in which, as alleged in the complaint, Fairall transferred his interest therein to plaintiff, who was the legal holder thereof, and all of which remains unpaid.

The answer not only raised issues as to the ownership of the note and nonpayment thereof, but alleged that the note was in part consideration for a transfer to him by plaintiff and Fairall of a one-third interest in an invention for the improvement of cameras, for which at the time he paid $500 in cash and gave the note in question; that thereafter by mutual consent he reconveyed the interest, whereupon the obligation was rescinded.

Further answering and as a counterclaim, he alleged that, at the time of the making of the note, plaintiff and Fairall gave him a written agreement that in case he should desire to sell the interest and improvement in cameras so transferred to him on September 8, 1914, which was the date of the note, they would repurchase the same on or about January 15, 1915, at the price so paid by him; that thereafter, to wit, on or about January 14, 1915, he elected to sell the same back to them and so notified Fairall and plaintiff, who repurchased his interest for the sum of $1,000, upon which they paid the sum of $250, leaving a balance due and unpaid of $750, all of which allegations plaintiff by answer denied.

[1, 2] Upon the issues so tendered, the court made findings adverse to plaintiff and gave judgment thereon in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff appeals, claiming the evidence is insufficient to support certain findings. These findings are, first, that plaintiff is not the legal holder and owner of the promissory note. As appears from the record, the note was made payable to H. K. Fairall and L. J. Mosley, by both of whom it was indorsed and, therefore, like a note payable to bearer, subject to transfer by mere delivery with intent to pass title thereto. Meyer v. Foster, 147 Cal. 166, 81 Pac. 402; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873. Conceding, however, that this and the further finding that the payees of the note agreed that they would not transfer the same are without support of evidence, the error could not affect the judgment, since the note was not transferred, and, in our opinion, the evidence is sufficient to support the further finding, upon which the judgment rests, to the effect that plaintiff agreed to rebuy from defendant the interest in said camera improvement at a like price to that paid by him therefor, and "that on or about the 14th day of January, 1915, defendant elected to sell and on or about the 29th day of May, 1915, did sell his said one-third interest in said improvement in cameras, to said plaintiff and said Fairall, in accordance with last-mentioned agreement, and on or about last-mentioned date said plaintiff and said Fairall bought the same back from defendant in accordance with said agreement," which sale so made by defendant to plaintiff and Fairall was by them accepted. And, in this connection, the court, upon sufficient evidence, further found that plaintiff and Fairall paid to him the sum of $250, which, together with the promissory note, amounted to $750, thus leaving a balance due him of $250, for which he was given judgment. The evidence in support of these findings is: First, a written agreement signed by Fairall and Mosley whereby they agreed to repurchase the improvement in cameras from defendant at the same price paid therefor by him; and, second, testimony of Fairall to the effect that, for himself and plaintiff and pursuant to the terms of said agreement, he purchased from defendant the interest by them sold to him in said camera invention, and paid thereon the sum of $250. This was on May 29, 1915, from which date, his testimony tends to prove, they did not regard defendant as having any interest in the invention and dealt with other parties as to the invention, assuming they owned the whole thereof. The alleged insufficiency of evidence to support these findings is based upon the sole claim that defendant did not execute a written assignment of transfer of his interest in said invention to plaintiff and Fairall; the argument being that, under section 4898 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, an interest in a patent cannot be assigned except by an instrument in writing, in support of which he also cites several authorities. Conceding this to be true, there is no evidence that the invention was patented or that it was even patentable, and, as said in Burr v. De La Vergne, 102 N. Y. 415, 7 N. E. 366, said section 4898 has reference solely to patents or an interest therein. It does not relate to an invention which has not been and may never be patented.

[3] The evidence clearly tends to prove that plaintiff and Fairall, his copartner, agreed in writing to repurchase the interest sold by them to defendant in case he desired to sell; that he did express his desire to resell, and thereupon Fairall, with the knowledge of plaintiff, paid him $250 towards the repurchase, and, according to his testimony and that of defendant, both regarded the interest as belonging to plaintiff and Fairall, and in subsequent transactions dealt with it as being their own. We perceive no merit in the errors pointed out by appellant. Plaintiff and Fairall owned the invention. They agreed, at his option, to buy back the interest therein sold to him, and, upon his exercising the option, paid him $250 on account of such resale, thus leaving a balance due him of $750, upon which the effect of the judgment is to credit them with the $500 note. Applying section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we cannot escape the conviction that, whatever errors were committed in the trial, they did not result in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(47 Cal. App. 691)

LINELL v. GORDON. (Civ. 2339.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1920.)

Account stated ⇐19(3)—Evidence held insufficient to support finding of no account stated.

Evidence held insufficient to support the court's finding that there was not an account stated and that the defendant had not agreed to pay balance shown thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by N. L. Linell against J. A. Gordon. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Andrew Johnston, of Turlock, and Walter C. Davison, of Riverside, for appellant.

Thomas C. Yager, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover money due on an account stated. From the judgment entered in favor of the defendant the plaintiff appeals.

The only controversy which we shall find it necessary to determine arises upon appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the court that there was not an account stated and that the defendant did not agree to pay the balance shown by the alleged statement of account. Under date May 5, 1914, the defendant sent to plaintiff by mail a statement of account showing the result of certain financial transactions in which the plaintiff and the defendant were jointly interested, which statement of account closed as follows: "May 5/14. By balance due L. Linell, $1,009.65." The statement was accompanied by a letter in which the defendant informed the plaintiff that defendant had traded 40 acres of land of the plaintiff, together with other land of the defendant, and had received a trust deed for $21,000 secured on an alfalfa ranch near Riverside; that plaintiff's land had been put in at $4,000 and defendant had paid a commission of 5 per cent. The letter closes as follows:

"The trust deed is drawing 7% interest and no taxes, and the first payment will be Dec. 1/14, when you will get your money and 7% interest on it. I am very sorry that I could not get cash for this, but this is the very best offer that I have had since I saw you, and I hope this will meet with your approval. I have some notes due in Aug., and if I get the money on them I will pay you off. There will be some more small charges for certificate of title and escrow charges."

Plaintiff replied to that letter under date July 12, 1914, wherein he acknowledged receipt of defendant's letter, and said:

"I am very glad that you succeeded in disposing of the land at Thermal Heights."

The defendant, in his answer, denied that he rendered to the plaintiff an account stated, and denied that by said account stated there was any amount found due to the plaintiff from the defendant. To the contrary, defendant alleged that on or about February 14, 1913, they entered into a contract in writing, set out as Exhibit A of the answer. This contract, over plaintiff's objection, was received in evidence. It shows that the defendant advanced a sum of money to secure the redemption of plaintiff's 40 acres of land, and the plaintiff conveyed the land to the defendant; that the defendant thereupon agreed "that when said property shall be sold, and that at the time of such sale and out of the proceeds of which second party shall receive" certain specified moneys advanced by him, "then the balance of the proceeds shall be divided equally between both parties hereto." The account rendered in May, 1914, represents the outcome of that transaction down to that date.

Respondent contends that the evidence shows, not an account stated, but only an agreement under which appellant was not to receive any moneys from the defendant, except out of the proceeds of the sale of the plaintiff's property. It should be conceded that if the property had been sold for money only, as contemplated by the agreement of February 14, 1913, the defendant would have been bound to pay to plaintiff only plaintiff's share of the net proceeds of such sale. It appears, however, that, acting upon his own responsibility, he disposed of plaintiff's land in connection with the trade which he made for the trust deed. His statement to the plaintiff, and the report which he made, that "I have some notes due in Aug., and if I get the money on them I will pay you off," are inconsistent with his present theory that, having traded for the trust deed, he was to pay the plaintiff only out of the cash proceeds of the sale of plaintiff's land. In making this statement, together with his statement of account showing "balance due" from himself to Linell on May 5, 1914, he offered a statement of account, which, when accepted by the plaintiff, as it unqualifiedly was accepted, constituted an account stated. The money was then due, but the defendant explained that he was not prepared to pay at that time.

Our conclusion that this was an account stated on which the specified amount then became due is confirmed by the subsequent conduct of the defendant. Under date of September 20, 1915, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff a further statement of the situation. Here he states for the first time that the land covered by the $21,000 trust deed was subject to a first mortgage of $15,000. He then states that the owner of the land failed to pay the interest on the first mortgage; that defendant had been required to pay the interest, together with taxes and other expenses on the land; that—"I finally had to foreclose on the trust deed and that cost me $438, and now that I have a title to it I am trying to sell or trade it, but times are so hard that I have not much hopes of doing either. You can rest assured that as soon as I get any money out of the property that I will pay you with interest, but it is impossible for me to do anything now."

The promise to pay plaintiff "with interest" implies a debt due; for if defendant was to pay only out of cash proceeds of the sale of plaintiff's land, he would not be chargeable with interest until such cash proceeds had been received. Moreover, defendant's admission that he foreclosed on the trust deed and obtained title to the land secured thereby, places him in the same position as if, on foreclosure of such trust deed, the land had been purchased by some third person and the purchase price paid over to the defendant. From the foregoing summary of the evidence we conclude that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's finding that there was not an account stated and that the defendant had not agreed to pay the balance shown thereby.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 563

PRATT v. PADGETT. (Civ. 2954.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 19, 1920.)

Landlord and tenant ⊜29(3)—Landlord renting house for gambling cannot recover for injury to its reputation.

One renting a house, with the intention of both parties that it be used for gambling, could not claim damages because the reputation of the house was injured by such use; the contract having for its object the violation of law; but the tenant, on landlord's seizing apparatus in the house to reimburse himself for damage by reason of such loss of reputation, could recover the same.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by G. M. Pratt against J. M. Padgett. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Johnson, of San Diego, for appellant.

H. V. Richardson, of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. From a judgment for $265 entered in favor of plaintiff, the defendant has appealed upon the judgment roll.

The findings, in so far as applicable to the cause of action upon which the judgment was rendered, are as follows: On February 28, 1918, plaintiff was the owner, entitled to and in possession of certain personal property consisting of tables, pictures, stools, cushions, water, and wine glasses, cuspidors, a quantity of assorted liquors, one ice box, 2,000 chips, and a faro card case and check rack, of the value of $265, all of which defendant on said date wrongfully and unlawfully took possession of and converted to his own use. That these findings fully support the judgment rendered is not open to the slightest question. It is true that, in response to the allegations of a cross-complaint filed by defendant, wherein he sought a judgment against plaintiff for damages due to the fact that plaintiff had conducted a gambling house in a residence leased to him by defendant, thereby injuring the reputation of the house, as to which the court found that such lease of said premises so made by defendant to plaintiff was with the intention of both parties that the same should be so used, and hence, as held by the court, defendant was estopped from claiming damages by reason of such use. In other words, as to defendant the court applied the well-recognized rule that no recovery can be had by either party to a contract having for its object the violation of law. As said in Dunn v. Stegemann, 10 Cal. App. 38, 101 Pac. 25: "Where it appears that a contract has for its object the violation of law, the court should sua sponte deny any relief to either party."

The lease of the house for an unlawful purpose, so far as shown by the findings, had no connection with defendant's act in wrongfully converting plaintiff's property to his own use, and which presumably he took to reimburse himself for the alleged damage sustained. For aught that appears to the contrary, the property converted might have been elsewhere than in the building let by defendant to plaintiff, and which was used for gambling purposes. However this may be, there is nothing in the findings which brings the unlawful act of defendant within the rule invoked by appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 611

HALL v. PUENTE OIL CO. et al. (Civ. 3063.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Master and servant ⊜330(3) — Evidence held insufficient to sustain findings salesman did not operate automobile on own business.

In an action against an oil company and its salesman, who used an automobile, for injuries to a pedestrian struck by the car, evidence held insufficient to sustain findings that the salesman was not operating the car on his own business, but within the scope of his employment by the oil company at the time.

2. Master and servant ⊜302(1)—Respondeat superior not invoked unless servant engaged in employment.

The doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be invoked unless at the time of the negligent act causing the injury the servant was engaged in performing a service for the master or incidental thereto.

3. Master and servant ⊜302(6)—Loan of car to salesman by company did not render it liable for injuries.

Where an oil company lent to its salesman for his own use an automobile which he used in the course of his employment, the consent of the company to such personal use did not render it liable for negligent injuries to a pedestrian.

4. Appeal and error ⊜1011(1)—Determination of trial court on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Where the evidence on the question of the contributory negligence of plaintiff injured by defendant's automobile presented a conflict, the determination of the trial court was conclusive.

5. Compromise and settlement ⟸23(3)—Evidence held insufficient to show settlement of claim for personal injuries.

In an action against an oil company and its salesman for injuries from the company's automobile driven by the salesman, evidence held insufficient to show the making of any agreement between plaintiff and the salesman whereby the latter agreed to pay plaintiff $15 a month for 100 months, which plaintiff agreed to accept in full settlement.

6. Frauds, statute of ⟸44(1)—Parol agreement to pay sum per month for 100 months not enforceable.

Agreement of defendant, who injured plaintiff with an automobile, to pay plaintiff $15 a month for 100 months, not being in writing, was not enforceable against defendant under Civ. Code, § 1624, the statute of frauds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by John Hall against the Puente Oil Company and John J. Roberts. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed as to the corporate defendant; affirmed as to the individual defendant.

H. W. Kidd and Perry F. Backus, both of Los Angeles (A. J. Verheyen, of Hollywood, of counsel), for appellants.

Hugh E. Macbeth, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, awarded as damages for personal injuries.

Roberts was employed by his codefendant, whose place of business was in Los Angeles, as a traveling salesman of oil, and, in the performance of his duty, which required him to travel in Los Angeles and adjoining counties, the oil company provided him with an automobile and at all times furnished the oil and gasoline necessary in the operation thereof. His daily duties covered the period from 8 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p. m. With the consent of his employer, Roberts used a garage at his home in Alhambra, wherein the car was kept at night and when not in use. In addition to his use of the car in traveling back and forth from his residence to the oil company's place of business in Los Angeles, he had the privilege, when not on duty to his employer, of using it for pleasure rides and purposes of his own. On the day of the accident he returned from Orange county to the yard of the oil company at approximately 5 o'clock p. m.; whereupon, his day's work being at an end, he, in his car, came up town, in Los Angeles, where, at Fourth and Spring streets, he had an appointment to meet a friend at 7 o'clock, who was to accompany him to a meeting of the lodge of Elks in Alhambra. During the time between his arrival up town, at about a quarter after 5 o'clock, and 7 o'clock, at which hour he met his friend, he wandered around town, "loafing and taking a drink here and there." At 7 o'clock he left Fourth and Spring streets, Los Angeles, for the lodge rooms at Alhambra, and at First street the automobile operated by Roberts collided with plaintiff, who was thereby injured.

Upon these facts the trial court found that it was untrue, as alleged in the answer of defendant Puente Oil Company, that John J. Roberts, at the time of said accident, was operating the car on and about a mission of his own and not within the course or scope of his employment as an employé of said oil company, or in the performance of any act for or on behalf of said oil company, and also found that "the defendant John J. Roberts, while engaged within the general scope of his said employment, carelessly and negligently drove and operated the said Ford automobile, then and there the property of the said Puente Oil Company."

[1, 2] In our opinion, appellants' challenge to these findings, upon the ground that they are not supported by the evidence, must be sustained. It is apparent the trial court, in making the findings, deemed the facts sufficient to establish a case for the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior; but this principle cannot be invoked unless at the time of the negligent act causing the injury the servant was engaged in performing a service for the master or incidental thereto. The doctrine rests upon the proposition that in doing the acts out of which the negligence arose the servant was representing the master at the time and engaged in his business. As said in Higgins v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537:

"Beyond the scope of his employment the servant is as much a stranger to his master as any third person. * * * And if the servant step aside from his master's business, for however short a time, to do an act not connected with such business, the relation of master and servant is for the time suspended, and an act of the servant during such interval is not to be attributed to the master."

"The test," says the court in Chamberlain v. California Edison Co., 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25, "is, whether the act was done in the prosecution of the business in which the servant was employed to assist."

To the same effect see Gousse v. Lowe, 183 Pac. 295; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., 179 Pac. 697; Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 93 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 234, 15 L. R. A. 475, 27 Am. St. Rep. 223.

Clearly Roberts was not engaged in the performance of any duty which he owed to his employer. Since the garage in which he was accustomed to keep the automobile was at his home, the taking of the car from his place of employment to such garage would have been an act within the scope of his employment. Riordan v. Gas Consumers' Ass'n., 4 Cal. App. 639, 88 Pac. 809. The evidence, however, shows that he was not operating the car with a view of reaching such destination; and, while the testimony shows that he might have accepted an order for the delivery of oil by his empoyer at any time or place, he owed no duty to his employer so to do and was not seeking such sales and did not take any orders on the day of the accident after 5 o'clock, when his duties to his employer ended for the day. Neither, in our opinion, does the fact that the employer supplied the gasoline and oil required in the operation of the car affect the question in the slightest degree. After 5 o'clock p. m. on the day of the accident his time was his own to use as he pleased, and he likewise, with the consent of his employer, had the use of the car for his own purposes, and when the injury to plaintiff occurred he was engaged in a mission the purpose of which was his own pleasure, and which could have no possible connection with the duties which he owed to his employer, any more than if he had taken the car on a holiday or Sunday for a pleasure ride for himself and family or upon a fishing trip.

[3] Respondent lays much stress upon the fact that the use of the car by Roberts for his own purposes was with the consent of the Puente Oil Company, his employer. At most, this was a mere lending of the car to him for his own use, as to which, says the court in Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., supra, "it is uniformly held that the owner is not responsible for injuries resulting from the negligence of a driver whose only relation to the owner is that of borrower," in support of which the court cites Berry on Automobiles, § 684, Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 115, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 81, and Segler v. Callister, 167 Cal. 377, 139 Pac. 819, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772. We are unable to draw any distinction between a case where the use of the car by a servant for his own purpose is without the master's consent and that where such use is permissive. Carried to its logical conclusion, the contention of respondent, which was adopted by the trial court, would render the owner of a shotgun liable for the act of one to whom he had loaned it for use on a hunting trip and due to whose negligent use thereof he had shot another. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the findings of which appellants complain are not supported by the evidence.

[4] Appellants also predicate error upon the insufficiency of evidence to support the finding whereby the injury to plaintiff was by the court attributed to the negligence of Roberts, and exonerating plaintiff from contributory negligence. An examination of the record discloses no merit in this contention. At most, the evidence presents a conflict from which, and the circumstances shown to exist, different inferences might be deduced, and hence the determination of the trial court thereon must be deemed conclusive. Neither is there the slightest merit in the contention that the finding as to the extent of plaintiff's injury, is without support.

[5] Both defendants alleged the making of an agreement between plaintiff and Roberts whereby the latter agreed to pay him $15 per month for a period of 100 months, which plaintiff agreed to accept in full settlement of his damages, which allegation the court found to be untrue, but allowed upon the judgment rendered the sum of $60, which defendant had paid to another for plaintiff's benefit. There is nothing in the evidence upon which to base a finding other than that made. It appears from the evidence that plaintiff was not a party to any agreement touching the matter, but that in some criminal proceeding growing out of Roberts' negligent act Judge Craig, before whom he appeared, told defendant that he would have to make some reparation for the injury sustained by plaintiff, and left the matter in the hands of the probation officer of the court who, upon consulting Roberts and his wife and going over his income and his domestic expenses, concluded that he could pay plaintiff $15 a month, which sum, it seems, defendant paid for four months.

[6] There was no writing executed between plaintiff and Roberts evidencing such agreement, and, since the same was to cover a period of 100 months, it was not, in the absence of such writing, enforceable against Roberts. Section 1624, Civ. Code. In addition to all of this, the evidence touching the question is too vague and uncertain upon which to base a contract of such character.

As to the defendant Puente Oil Company, the judgment is reversed; and as to the defendant John J. Roberts, it is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 564

BAILIFF v. HILDEBRANDT. (Civ. 2049.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 19, 1920.)

1. Judgment ⟸161—Application to set aside default must be accompanied with copy of answer.

An application, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 242), to set aside a default upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect, must be accompanied with a copy of the answer or other pleading proposed to be filed, and it was not sufficient that, prior to default, the defendant had filed a demurrer; such demurrer having been overruled, and defendant having been given time to answer and having failed to do so.

2. Appeal and error ⟸938(4)—Not presumed that defendant filed answer with application to set aside default.

Where certificate of judge to bill of exceptions stated that it "contains the statement of all papers and evidence used in the above entitled matter," and a stipulation of attorneys was "that the foregoing bill of exceptions contains a true and correct statement of all the evidence introduced, etc.," it will not be presumed in support of an order of the court setting aside the default that defendant filed an answer with his application to set aside such default as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, as amended by St. 1917, p. 242, assuming that it is necessary that bill of exceptions affirmatively show that no other evidence was offered than that stated in the bill, and that, in absence of such showing, it would be presumed that an answer was filed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by J. D. Bailiff against A. M. Hildebrandt. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order setting aside defendant's default and the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hiram E. Casey, L. R. Lambert, and Casey & Lambert, all of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order vacating and setting aside the default of defendant and the judgment entered thereon against the said defendant.

The motion to set aside the default and judgment was one under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure and in substance was made upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint was overruled by the court on December 9, 1918, and by the order he was given 10 days within which to answer. On December 26, 1918, the defendant not having answered in compliance with the said order, his default was entered, and on the same day judgment was duly entered for the amount prayed for in the complaint, together with costs; execution was issued and levied upon moneys belonging to the defendant, and the judgment by virtue thereof was fully paid and satisfied on the 26th day of December, 1918. On June 2, 1919, defendant filed his notice of motion to set aside the said default and judgment. The motion came on for hearing before the court on June 16, 1919, and was on said day by the court granted.

[1] The notice of motion stated that it would "be made and based upon all the records, papers and files and proceedings in this action, and upon this notice and the affidavit of defendant and of W. F. Cowan which is served and filed herewith, and upon such oral and documentary evidence as may be offered. * * *" No copy of any answer, or other pleading proposed to be filed, accompanied said notice of motion. Section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 242), provides that an application like the one in the case at bar "must be accompanied with a copy of the answer, or other pleading proposed to be filed therein, otherwise said application shall not be granted." The Supreme Court, in speaking of this amendment in the case of Los Angeles County v. Lewis, 179 Cal. 398, 177 Pac. 154, said:

"The plain object of the provision was simply to require the delinquent party seeking leave to contest on the merits, to show his good faith and readiness to at once file his answer in the event that leave is granted by producing a copy of the proposed answer for the inspection of his adversary and the court. Substantial compliance with the provision of course requires such production in connection with the application for relief."

In this case of Los Angeles County v. Lewis, no copy of the answer was served with the notice of motion to set aside the default, but the defendant two days before the giving of the notice of motion offered his proposed answer for filing and left the same in the custody of the clerk and served the same by delivery of a copy on the adverse party. The notice of motion stated that this was the answer that the defendant desired to file and that the motion would be based in part on the same and the affidavit of the defendant, a copy of which was served with the notice of motion, showed that the answer that the defendant desired to be filed was the one which the defendant had offered for filing and which had remained in the custody of the clerk. The Supreme Court held that this was a compliance with the said amendment, and that—

"The provision of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, here involved, like the remainder of the section, must be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice, and we are of the opinion that it must be held that, in view of the facts stated, the application for relief was 'accompanied' with a copy of the answer proposed to be filed."

In the case at bar, as before stated, no copy of any answer, or other pleading proposed to be filed, accompanied defendant's notice of motion, nor does the record anywhere show that any answer, or other pleading, was served upon the plaintiff or offered to the clerk for filing. There was no compliance made by defendant with the said provision.

[2] The respondent argues that the record or bill of exceptions must affirmatively show that no other evidence was offered than that stated in the bill of exceptions, and that in the absence of such showing it will be presumed in support of the order of the court that an answer was filed. Conceding that respondent's argument in this respect is sound, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the record in this case sufficiently shows that no other evidence was offered on this motion than that which is contained in the bill of exceptions. The certificate of the judge to the bill of exceptions states that it "contains the statement of all papers and evidence used in the above-entitled matter," and the stipulation of the attorneys is:

"That the foregoing bill of exceptions contains a true and correct statement of all the evidence introduced and of all of the proceedings had upon the hearing of the above-entitled motion."

It follows that the order appealed from should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

47 Cal. App. 642

KOEHL et ux. v. CARPENTER et al.

(Civ. 3367.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸706(5)—Alighting passenger held not shown to be negligent as to passing automobile.

In an action against an automobile owner for death of one alighting from a street car, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that decedent was not guilty of contributory negligence.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Finding sustained by evidence not disturbed.

Where there was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸705(10)—Pedestrians not under positive duty to stop, look, and listen.

There is no positive duty on the part of pedestrians about to cross a street to stop, look, and listen, and the question of negligence of such a pedestrian must be examined in the light of all the attending circumstances, one of which may be knowledge of existence of statute, or ordinance, prescribing fixed regulations for observance by automobile drivers.

4. Municipal corporations ⟸705(4) — Motorists should not trail street cars so closely they cannot stop.

In view of the obvious danger in an automobile passing a street car when it stops for accommodation of passengers, motorists should neither trail cars so closely that they cannot comply with city ordinance requiring that they stop, nor attempt to pass a car at a regular stopping point until they are sure it will not stop.

5. Appeal and error ⟸1004(1)—No reversal for amount of recovery for death unless conscience is shocked.

The amount of damages to be awarded for a death is a matter peculiarly within the province of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless the amount is so disproportionate to the injury as to shock the conscience at first glance.

6. Death ⟸77—Evidence held to support allowance for funeral expenses.

Allegation of parents' complaint for death of daughter that funeral expenses had been incurred held sufficient to support finding that plaintiffs had been damaged to the amount of $1,000, including funeral expenses of $272.50, though the undertaker's bill was made out to the brother of the girl, colloquy between counsel regarding funeral expenses being sufficient to support implied finding expense was incurred by parents.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul McCormick, Judge.

Action by John W. Koehl and Mary Koehl, his wife, against Adolph D. Carpenter and Julia L. Carpenter. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellants.
G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants, sued as husband and wife, by the parents as heirs of Mae C. Koehl, who died as the result of her being struck by an automobile driven by Mrs. Carpenter, appeal from a judgment for $1,000, rendered by the trial court sitting without a jury. The appellants rely on three grounds which will be disposed of in the order of their presentation, after the following statement of facts shown by the record:

Mae Koehl was between 21 and 22 years of age. She had previously been employed as a cashier in a business concern in Los Angeles. She was out of employment for about a month, during which time she remained at home, helping with the household duties. She then went to work as an assistant bookkeeper in the office of her father, who, with his son, was engaged in the manufacturing business. She had been so occupied about a month, and was acquainted with the streets in Los Angeles and with the particular crossing, near her place of business, where the accident occurred.

At the time of the accident, in November, 1917, there was, and had been from some time in 1914, an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which provided that it should be unlawful for the driver of any vehicle, "upon overtaking any street or interurban railway car which has stopped for the purpose of discharging or taking on any passengers, to fail, neglect or refuse to stop such vehicle at least ten feet in the rear of such * * * car and to keep such vehicle standing where so stopped until such pasengers or intending passengers have safely alighted from or boarded said * * * car, or until such * * * car shall have started."

About noon on November 27, 1917, Mae Koehl was a passenger on a street car running west on Seventh street, and told the conductor to stop the car at Anderson street. The car stopped on the east side of Anderson street at the corner and she alighted, starting to walk diagonally in a northwesterly direction toward the sidewalk at the corner of Seventh and Anderson streets. The conductor heard a scream, and the car, which had started and had gone a few feet, again stopped. The conductor saw her reach a point 3 or 4 feet from the curb line when she was struck.

Mrs. Carpenter was driving her motor west on Seventh street, trailing the street car, and had been following it for several blocks. At the time of the accident, she testified she was moving at the rate of about 10 miles per hour. She did not stop the automobile, nor did she sound any warning as she approached the crossing. She testified that she thought the car was slowing down for the crossing, that when she saw Miss Koehl in the act of alighting she screamed, and, being afraid that the brakes would not hold, she turned the machine sharply to the right to avoid the impending collision. She did not run it into the sidewalk, but turned it so that it continued its course westerly near the curb. She testified that the brakes were in good order, and that at the rate at which she was traveling she could have stopped the car in about 5 feet. The street car had been running at about 6 or 8 miles an hour, and as it reached Anderson street Mrs. Carpenter turned from immediately behind it to the north side to pass it while crossing Anderson street. She testified she had put on the foot brake, but when she struck Miss Koehl she lost control of herself, and did not know what happened. When she first saw Miss Koehl she was 10 or 15 feet away. Miss Koehl was struck when she was near the curb line of Anderson street and her body was carried nearly to the middle of the street, the automobile running over her and for 10 to 15 feet beyond.

During the trial the plaintiffs' attorney said: "Here is a list of the costs of burial, subject to your objections as to some items." The attorney for the appellants replied: "Yes, Bresee Brothers have put it in. I suppose we have to pay these things when we die. I will not raise any question about it." The document was marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit 3, and was in the form of a receipted bill of Bresee Brothers, undertakers, for $272.50, funeral expenses of Mary Koehl. It was made out to Albert Koehl, a brother of Miss Koehl.

[1-3] The appellants argue that Miss Koehl was guilty of contributory negligence. This court cannot so determine as a matter of law in view of all the circumstances. Considered as a question of fact it was determined by the trial court adversely to the appellants. There was sufficient evidence to sustain its finding. In such a case that finding will not be disturbed on appeal. The rules of law concerning the respective rights and obligations of persons using the public streets recently received lengthy consideration by the Supreme Court. It was there held that there is no positive duty on the part of pedestrians about to cross a street to stop, look, and listen, and that the question of negligence, under the usual rule of ordinary care that devolved upon foot travelers, must be examined in the light of all the attending circumstances, one of which may be knowledge of the existence of a statute or an ordinance prescribing fixed regulations for observance by automobile drivers. Mann v. Scott (Sup.) 182 Pac. 281.

[4] It is argued that the ordinance was only operative against those automobile drivers who are so far back of a street car as to be able to stop 10 feet in the rear of the street car when it stops for the purpose of taking on or discharging passengers. There are two answers to this contention. Cars ordinarily stop for those purposes at street corners. In view of the obvious danger of passing cars when they do stop for the accommodation of passengers, it behooves motorists neither to trail cars so closely that they cannot comply with the ordinance, nor to attempt, as Mrs. Carpenter did, to pass a car at a regular stopping point until they are sure that there will be no stop. Further, the court is of the opinion, that, regardless of the provisions of the ordinance, there is ample evidence to sustain the judgment.

[5] It is next contended that the damages are excessive, but the amount of damages is a matter peculiarly within the province of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless the amount is so disproportionate to the injury as at first glance to shock the conscience. This does not appear to be the case in the present instance. Martin v. Shea (Sup.) 187 Pac. 23.

[6] Lastly it is contended that the damages should not have included the amount paid to the undertaker, because the bill was not paid by either of the plaintiffs. The allegation of the complaint was that these expenses had been incurred. This was sufficient to support the finding that the plaintiffs had been damaged to the amount of $1,000, including funeral expenses of $272.50. The colloquy between counsel at the trial regarding the funeral expenses is sufficient to support the implied finding that though the bill was made out to the brother of Miss Koehl, the expense was incurred by her parents, the plaintiffs. If timely objection had been made, the plaintiffs might have supplied the missing proof. After the statement of counsel for the appellants that he would not raise any objection about it, referring to the list of costs of burial, that objection will not be seriously considered here.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

47 Cal. App. 560

FERRARIS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 2778.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 19, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⟸13—Well recognized that cold for short time will not damage fruit.

It is a well-recognized fact that fruit for a short time will stand a low degree of temperature without damage, when under a temperature several degrees higher, but prevailing for a longer time, damage will result from the cold.

2. Carriers ⟸134—Finding that fruit was damaged by cold through carrier's negligence sustained.

In an action against a carrier for damage to fruit by cold, evidence held to justify finding that the damage resulted from negligence of the defendant in leaving a door open at destination all night, and not from cold weather encountered for a short time en route.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Peter Ferraris against the Southern Pacific Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage, W. I. Gilbert, and Floyd S. Sisk, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frederick R. Levee and W. R. Law, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff on account of defendants' negligence in transporting a car of bananas from New Orleans to Los Angeles. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendants appeal, claiming the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the court to the effect that the deterioration of the fruit, delivered to defendants at New Orleans in good condition, was due to the failure of defendants to keep the same under proper refrigeration.

Testimony received on the part of plaintiff was to the effect that in shipping bananas in carload lots it is necessary to place them in charge of a messenger, as was done in this instance, whose duty it is to maintain a temperature inside the car of 58 or 60 degrees, which is done by the opening and closing of plugs and vents, depending upon the outside temperature, which varies along the route of travel. The testimony also tends to show that the messenger in charge of the car properly looked after the ventilation thereof, which arrived in Los Angeles at 8:20 p. m. December 13, 1917, with the fruit in good condition; that the damage to the bananas occurred between the time of arrival on December 13th and 8:30 a. m. December 14th, and was caused by the fact that, due to defendants' negligence, one door of the car had during the night been opened and left in that condition, as a result of which the fruit was badly chilled and spoiled. As against this evidence, which, if true, was ample to justify the finding, defendants introduced a report made by the messenger in charge as to the degrees of temperature through which the fruit was transported from New Orleans to Los Angeles, and which, it is claimed, shows the inaccuracy of his testimony. From this report it appears that the outside temperature along the route of travel varied from 20 degrees to 68 degrees above zero, and that the inside temperature, so far as shown by the report, was not less than 54 degrees above zero, and the difference between the outside and inside temperature, so far as shown by this report, and in the absence of a stove or other means of heating, varied from 4 degrees to 18 degrees; for instance, at one point, when the outside temperature was 60 degrees, it was 64 degrees inside, and at another point, when the outside temperature was 36 degrees, it was 54 degrees inside. At one point along the line, however, the outside temperature is shown to have dropped to 20 degrees, and at another point 22 degrees, without any showing made by the report as to the inside temperature at such times, and hence appellants' claim that the inside temperature must have dropped to 40 degrees or less, which it is conceded was so low that the fruit would have been damaged, and that such damage must be attributed to the negligence of the messenger. While the argument is plausible, it omits from consideration the length of time during which the low outside temperature of 20 degrees at one point and 22 at another prevailed, and also ignores the degree of heat generated inside the car by reason of the bananas being packed in bulk, the extent of which, according to the testimony, depends upon the density of the loading and other varying conditions.

[1] It is a well-recognized fact that fruit for a short time will stand a low degree of temperature without damage when, under a temperature several degrees higher, but prevailing for a longer time, damage will result from the cold. Hence, since the injury due to the low temperature would depend upon the duration thereof, we cannot assume the direct testimony overcome by the mere showing that en route the car passed through a zone where the outside temperature was 20 or 22 degrees, and therefore the temperature on the inside of the car dropped and continued at a point, as a result of which the fruit was damaged.

[2] We agree with the trial court that the direct testimony of the messenger in charge of the car and others, which tends to show that the damage resulted from leaving the car door open during the night of December 13th, after its arrival in Los Angeles, is not overcome by the inferences sought to be drawn from the report as to the varying outside temperature along the line of travel.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 597

GLOCKNER v. PALACE AMUSEMENT CO.
(Civ. 3122.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Judgment ⊂⊃744—Defendant estopped to plead same fraud which in former action was adjudged unavailing.

In an action to recover installments upon a contract, the defendant is estopped to plead the same fraud which in a suit under the same contract for former installments was adjudged unavailing.

2. Judgment ⊂⊃948(1)—Where answer pleaded fraud already adjudged against defendant, plaintiff could prove the estoppel without pleading it.

Plaintiffs could not anticipate that defendant would plead a defense of fraud which had already been adjudged against defendant in a prior action, and hence was entitled without pleading the judgment to offer evidence of such facts as constituted estoppel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by William L. Glockner, doing business under the name of the William L. Glockner Music Company, against the Palace Amusement Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Smith & Breslin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. T. Blakely, of Los Angeles, and M. L. Haines, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover certain unpaid monthly installments of money alleged to be due under a contract for the purchase by defendant from plaintiff of a motion picture orchestra.

Judgment went for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

For defense to the action defendant relied upon certain alleged fraudulent acts practiced by plaintiff, whereby defendant was induced to enter into the contract, as to all of which the court found in defendant's favor.

[1] It appears that prior to the institution of the action there had been another action between the same parties and upon the same contract to recover monthly installments of money theretofore accruing thereon and which defendant had failed to pay. In this first action the defendant, as here, pleaded in defense of recovery therein the same fraudulent acts of plaintiff which it sets up in its answer in the instant case, and, as shown by the judgment roll in said first action, introduced in evidence, the court, as to such defense, found adversely to defendant and gave judgment for plaintiff, which judgment had, at the time of filing the complaint herein, become final. Hence, the court having in the trial of the first case adjudged as unavailing the defense of fraud therein pleaded, defendant must, in the second suit, upon the principle of estoppel, be deemed concluded thereby. While the subject of the action in this case was different installments from those involved in the former action, the defense to recovery thereof was the same in both; hence, as said in Koehler v. Holt Manufacturing Co., 146 Cal. 335, 80 Pac. 73:

> "The case comes clearly within the principle that a judgment operates as an estoppel to preclude the parties and privies from contending to the contrary of that point or matter of fact, which, having been once distinctly put in issue by them, has been, on such issue joined, solemnly found against them."

Indeed, we know of no authority holding to the contrary, while the proposition is, among other cases, supported by Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 175 Cal. 657, 166 Pac. 1008; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Society, 82

Cal. 645, 23 Pac. 212, 7 L. R. A. 577, and Williams v. Hawkins, 34 Cal. App. 146, 166 Pac. 869.

[2] Respondent attempts to avoid the result by suggesting that plaintiff did not plead the former judgment as an estoppel. A sufficient answer to this is that he could not anticipate that defendant would, as a defense, plead facts which had been theretofore, on issue joined, adjudged against it; and hence, when defendant by answer tendered the same issue, he was entitled, without pleading the judgment, to offer evidence of the facts constituting the estoppel.

Our views render it unnecessary to notice other points.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 605

HYMAN v. KARL STERN CO. (Civ. 3135.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Corporations ⟸308(3) — Agreement between sole owners of corporation as to salaries, valid.

If two persons, who owned and controlled a corporation to all substantial effect, agreed on the salary to be paid to each, where the corporate form was adopted only as a convenient agency for the handling of the business, such an agreement was valid and binding.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Finding of the trial court based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1169(7) — Appellate court cannot direct an amendment of findings of fact, but must reverse.

Where judgment was too large by reason of an error in preparing findings of fact, a reversal was required in the appellate court, because such court cannot direct an amendment of findings of fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Almeda Bresee Hyman against the Karl Stern Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Benjamin W. Shipman and Henry O. Wackerbarth, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James E. Kelby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover on two counts for amounts of salary alleged to be unpaid to her by the defendant corporation. Judgment was in her favor, and defendant has appealed.

It was shown in evidence that, about the 1st of April, 1917, Karl Stern, who was then conducting a business similar to that which was and theretofore had been engaged in by the plaintiff, proposed to the plaintiff that she consolidate her business with that of Stern. The terms of consolidation were agreed upon, and the defendant corporation was formed and shares issued in the proportion of ten to Stern and one to plaintiff. Some few shares were placed in the hands of an employé for the purpose of making a third director. Stern characterized himself as the manager of the concern. By-laws were adopted, among which was one containing the provision that salaries of the officers and employés should be fixed by the board of directors. It does not appear that the directors formally acted under that provision. As a part of the arrangement between the plaintiff and Stern, the matter of salaries to be drawn by each of them was considered, and it was agreed that Stern should receive $50 per week and the plaintiff $25. However, according to the plaintiff's testimony, Stern said that as the business needed capital he and the plaintiff should not draw the full amount of their salary at the start, and, agreeing to that suggestion, plaintiff for the first year drew but $15 per week. At the end of the first year a meeting of the stockholders was held, and an advance of $2.50 per week was allowed on account of the salary to be paid to the plaintiff. Plaintiff, from April 1 to August 10, 1918, drew $17.50 per week. At the latter date she ceased to render any services, and later brought this action. In her complaint she claimed the right to recover the unpaid $10 per week for the first year's work and $12.50 per week for that period of time from April 1, 1918, to August 10th of the same year.

[1-3] The first contention of appellant is that the condition of the by-law, declaring that the directors should fix the salaries of officers and employés, was not complied with, and that any arrangement entered into between Stern and the plaintiff as to salaries to be paid was invalid. We think there is no merit in this contention. If the two persons who owned and controlled the corporation to all substantial effect agreed upon the salaries to be paid, where the corporate form was adopted only as a convenient agency for the handling of the business, such an agreement we think was valid and binding. Plaintiff testified that Stern and she "were the only ones concerned," and further, that when she suggested that some minutes be made on the books of the corporation, setting forth the amount of salaries, Stern replied that it was not necessary, and that his attorney had so advised him. The association of the two individuals constituted practically a partnership; the corporate organization being a mere agency to be used in conducting the business. As to whether the agreement to pay the added compensation had been made as alleged and testified to by the plaintiff, was for the trial court to determine, as the evidence was conflicting on that point. There was ample evidence to sustain the finding that such agreement had been made. However, the amount for which the court gave judgment is in excess of the amount shown by the evidence to be due the plaintiff. This condition, no doubt, arose through error in preparing the findings, but it necessitates a reversal of the judgment, as we cannot here direct an amendment of findings of fact. The court's findings followed the allegations of the complaint, particularly as to the second cause of action, which covered the period of service between April 1, 1918, and the 10th day of August, 1918. The complaint alleged that between those dates plaintiff received only $15 per week, when her own testimony showed that she received $17.50. Hence the findings are not sustained by the evidence, and the amount of the judgment, under the facts, should be reduced.

For the reason given, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

47 Cal. App. 646

PETERSON v. LIGHTFOOT. (Civ. 3373.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹80(3)—Judgment in accounting between partners held final and appealable.

A judgment in a suit for partnership accounting, providing that the assets of the partnership be sold by a commissioner and that upon the return of the commissioner and the equal division of the assets between the parties a final judgment should be entered dissolving the partnership or declaring it dissolved, was a final judgment from which an appeal could be taken.

2. Appeal and error ⟹1010(1)—Findings supported by evidence not disturbed.

Findings of the lower court when supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Partnership ⟹318—Suit for accounting addressed to equitable jurisdiction.

A suit for partnership accounting is one addressed to the equitable jurisdiction of the court.

4. Partnership ⟹310—Partner on dissolution held entitled to interest in name of business owned by another partner.

Where one partner was in business under a certain name prior to the creation of the partnership, the name at such time having no value, but being made valuable by the joint efforts of the partners, in an accounting on dissolution the name should be considered an asset of the corporation, the partnership not having any other asset.

5. Partnership ⟹310—Recordation of name of partnership by partner in own name is in interest of partnership.

The relationship between partners is confidential, and the recordation by one partner, in his own name, of the name under which the partnership had been doing business for six months, in contemplation of law, was in the interest of the partnership.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Gus A. Peterson against R. W. Lightfoot. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Halsey W. Allen, of Redlands, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment in a suit for partnership accounting. The judgment provided that the assets of the partnership be sold by a commissioner, and, upon the return of the commissioner and the equal division of the assets between the parties, a final judgment be entered dissolving the partnership or declaring it dissolved.

[1] The respondent contends that the judgment is a nonappealable interlocutory order. The findings and conclusions of law finally determined the rights of the parties, leaving only the transmutation of the assets into cash and their equal division to be done. The appellant claims that the court was in error in determining that the assets ordered to be sold belonged to the partnership and he claims ownership of them himself. If his contentions in this regard should be sustained by the appellate court after the sale of his property, he would be without remedy or find himself compelled to resort to a doubtful remedy against the purchaser at the commissioner's sale. For all practical purposes of disposing of the issues tried the judgment was final. "The question, as affecting the right of appeal is not what the form of the order may be but what is its legal effect." Estate of West, 162 Cal. 352, 122 Pac. 953; Byrne v. Hoag, 126 Cal. 283, 58 Pac. 688; People v. Bank of Mendocino County, 133 Cal. 107, 65 Pac. 124; Clark v. Dunnam, 46 Cal. 204.

[2] There was no written agreement by which the partnership was formed. From the oral testimony of the partners and others, the trial court found that the claim of the appellant that the partnership was one of profits only was not sustained. There was evidence to support this finding and it is controlling on this appeal. The appellant states that there is but one question to be determined, and that is whether the name "Redlands Auto Service" was a part of the assets of the partnership.

From the findings it appears that in May, 1914, the defendant purchased an automobile on which he caused to be painted the name in question. For about three weeks he operated the machine for hire under that name to designate the business in which he was engaged. In June he associated with himself, his brother, who owned another automobile, which was thereafter similarly used. The partnership business was operated under the firm name of "Redlands Auto Service." Shortly after, during the same month, the plaintiff became a member of the partnership, he contributing $640 to the common fund, that being the value of each of the machines then used in the business. In April, 1915, the defendant's brother sold his interest to the partnership, then composed of the parties to this suit. Thereafter the business was carried on under the same name it had been carried on from the time the first partnership was formed. In December, 1914, while the partnership was composed of the three men the defendant caused the name "Redlands Auto Service" to be registered in the office of the secretary of state in his own name. This was done without the knowledge of the plaintiff, who was not informed of the fact until after the dissolution of the partnership in July, 1918. During all the intervening time the business of the partnership was carried on under that name. It was further found, and the finding is supported by the evidence and by reasonable inferences therefrom, that at the time of the formation of the partnership the name had no value, but by the joint efforts of the partners in conducting the business from June, 1914, to July, 1918, when the partnership was dissolved, "the good will of the partnership business, including the right, title and interest of said partnership in said firm name, became, and at the time of the dissolution of said partnership was, and now is, of the value of $800."

[3] The appellant's contentions that the adoption and use of a trade-name immediately fixes its status as personal property, and that a single act of use with the intent to continue that use confers a right in the original user, may be conceded without affecting the propriety of the judgment. The suit for partnership accounting is one addressed to the equitable jurisdiction of the court. Andrade v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 459–463, 17 Pac. 531.

[4] Under the facts found, even though the name was originally owned by the appellant, the court, in adjusting the respective interests of the parties, properly considered all the circumstances. The name, which had been used for three weeks, was of no value. The respondent went into the business carried on by appellant at the request of the latter as a partner. It was agreed that the appellant's automobile, which had value, should be used in the business, but the ownership retained. It was also agreed that the money invested in the business by the respondent should be used for the purchase of a machine. Before the termination of the partnership each of the partners had in use in the business two automobiles owned by them separately. On dissolution each retained his own tangible property. The name which was worthless when the partnership was formed was an asset and apparently the only asset of the business at that time. It was made valuable by the joint efforts of the two partners. If it had been some other kind of tangible personal property so worthless as not to have been the subject of agreement, but a part of the business establishment when the partnership was formed, and had had bestowed upon it the work of both partners for a period of three years, in use constantly as partnership property and without claim by the original owner, until at the time of the dissolution it came to have a substantial value produced solely by their joint work, it would be manifestly inequitable that it should be given to only one of the two who had produced the value.

[5] It is said in the appellant's brief that the recordation of the name added nothing to his common-law rights. Neither could the secret recordation of the name by the appellant cause any diminution of the rights of his partner. The relationship was confidential and the recordation by one of the partners of the name under which the partnership had been doing business for six months, in contemplation of law, was in the interest of the partnership.

From an examination of the entire record it does not appear that incidental matters touched upon in the briefs require notice here.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

47 Cal. App. 666

IMPERIAL DEVELOPMENT CO. v. CITY OF CALEXICO et al. (Civ. 3356.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 22, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Commerce ⟸77—Imported cotton in storage in original bales not taxable.

Flat bales of cotton and bales of bollies imported into California by a Mexican corporation authorized to do business there, and stored by it in a warehouse, held not subject to taxation by the state, though flat bales were not suitable for transportation, though the cotton was not stored all in one portion of the warehouse, but was stored with home-grown cotton and at different dates, and though no import duties were paid on it to the United States, cotton being on the free list.

2. Taxation ⟸543(8)—Taxpayer asking general relief entitled to relief warranted by facts shown.

Where plaintiff, a Mexican corporation seeking to be relieved from taxes by the state on imported cotton in storage in the original bales, has asked for general relief, it is entitled to such relief as the facts shown on trial warrant, whether by way of return of the goods or refund of the amount of tax paid under protest.

3. Appeal and error ⟸883 — Respondent on account of stipulation and lack of objection not in possession to urge exceptions tendered late.

Where counsel stipulated that the judgment roll, notice of intention to move for new trial, order denying motion for a new trial, and plaintiff's bill of exceptions, should constitute the record on appeal, and no objection was made to the power of the trial court to allow and determine motion of new trial, or to settle bill of exceptions, respondent is not in position to urge on appeal, in objecting to consideration of the bill of exceptions containing the agreed statement of facts, that the bill was not tendered until too late because appellant relied on pendency of his motion for new trial to interrupt running of time allowed for presenting bill.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Development Company, against the City of Calexico and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions to render judgment for plaintiff.

Louis Lamy, of Calexico, for appellant.

M. C. Atchison, City Atty., of Calexico, for respondents.

J. W. Hocker, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it in an action to have certain taxes assessed against its property declared void, and for general relief. The trial was had upon an agreed statement of facts as follows:

"That at all times mentioned or referred to in plaintiff's amended complaint herein, the plaintiff was, and now is, a corporation duly formed and existing under the laws of the republic of Mexico, duly qualified and entitled to do business in the state of California, and having a branch office and place of business in the city of Calexico, in the county of Imperial and state of California.

"That the defendant city of Calexico is a municipal corporation of the sixth class in said state.

"That the defendant Paul B. Steintorf is, and at all times mentioned or referred to in said amended complaint was, the duly elected, qualified, and acting assessor of said city of Calexico.

"That the plaintiff at all said times and at noon of March 4, 1918, was the owner of, in the possession and entitled to the possession at and in said city of Calexico, county and state aforesaid, of 349 bales of cotton, and 14 bales of bollies; said cotton being of the value of, to wit, $63,000, and said bollies being of the value of, to wit, $2,000, at all the times mentioned or referred to in said amended complaint.

"That said cotton and bollies were owned and imported by plaintiff from said Republic of Mexico, and were duly entered through the port of Calexico aforesaid, after the payment by plaintiff of all the duties imposed by law. That said cotton and bollies were contained in unbroken original packages, to wit, in flat bales as same came from the gin; and, immediately after the entry of the same at said port, said merchandise was placed, for storage, in the Calexico Compress Company's yards at Calexico aforesaid, where it remained the property of plaintiff in the original forms and packages in which it was imported.

"That said cotton was not stored in any one place, or in one particular portion of said compress company's building or yards, but was scattered in different portions of said yards in different amounts in which it was brought in on different occasions. That although marked for identification, it was scattered here and there with the general mass of cotton stored in said yards. That said Calexico Compress Company had stored with it, and was storing thousands of bales of cotton owned by divers and many persons, much of which was produced in the United States. That plaintiff at different times since the said 4th day of March, 1918, and after payment by it under protest of the taxes levied and assessed against said cotton has sold and offered for sale portions of said cotton. That said cotton at the time of the assessment herein was not in transit, or in the possession of any railroad company for transit, but was being held indefinitely, subject to storage charges and sales. That there is no difference in the manner of storing and handling cotton of the plaintiff from the manner of storing and handling cotton of other producers storing cotton in said yards which last cotton has been raised and produced in the state of California.

"That said Calexico Compress Company is a public service corporation of the state of California, which offers, among other things, to the cotton growers, including this plaintiff, facilities for storing, compressing, exposing for sale, selling, transporting, shipping, and the general handling of cotton.

"That cotton as it comes from the gin in 'flat' bales is not in a suitable condition for shipping or transportation, except between points where the distances are very short, but, before said cotton is shipped any long distance, it is the custom to compress said bales into a more compact form by the Calexico Compress Company, before delivering same to the railroad for transportation.

"That while said imported property was so owned and possessed by plaintiff as aforesaid, and in the condition stated in this stipulation, on, to wit, March 4, 1918, the defendants levied an assessment and tax upon the same, of $1.12 per bale for said cotton, and of 90 cents per bale for said bollies.

"That plaintiff demanded of defendants the delivery of said imported property, but defendants always refused to deliver the same, and now refuse unless the taxes so levied and assessed against said property were and are first paid, which plaintiff refused and refuses to do."

[1] These facts, we think, make the present case closely analogous to the case of Low v. Austin, 13 Wall. 29, 20 L. Ed. 517. This was a California case which was carried to the United States Supreme Court on a writ of error, the contention there being the same as the contention here, i. e., that goods imported from a foreign country are not subject to state taxation while remaining in the original packages, unbroken and unsold in the hands of the importer, whether the tax be imposed upon the goods as imports, or upon the goods as part of the general property of the citizens of the state which is subject to an ad valorem tax.

In the present case, the respondent contends, as was done in the Low Case, that the goods have become a part of the general property of the state and are subject to ad valorem taxes; that they are stored with goods grown in the United States, and therefore have become mingled with such goods and are subject to the same taxes, etc. Almost precisely the same arguments appear in the decision of the state court in the Low Case, a considerable portion of which decision is set out in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, at pages 30 and 31 thereof. But these contentions were held to be unsound by the highest court in the land. In said case of Low v. Austin, supra, the plaintiff had imported wines from France, which he had placed in his warehouse at San Francisco in the original cases, and had offered them for sale. While in the warehouse the wines were assessed for state, city, and county taxes. Low refused to pay the tax, and the collector levied upon the wines and was about to sell them, when Low paid the charges under protest, and brought an action to recover the amount so paid. The opinion of Mr. Justice Field in that case seems to us to answer all the contentions of the respondent here. It is based upon the well-known case of Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, and reasserts the doctrine of that case that goods imported do not lose their character as imports and become incorporated into the mass of property of the state until they have passed out of the hands of the importer, or until they have been removed by said importer from the original packages in which they were imported.

It is admitted by the stipulation as to facts that the goods were in their original bales. Respondents seek to distinguish flat bales from other varieties of bales, and urge upon our attention that flat bales are not a suitable arrangement for long transportation. This seems to us quite immaterial. The pertinent fact is that the goods were in the bales in which they were imported. When the importer seeks to convey the goods any considerable distance, he will be obliged to change the original packages, and then become liable to state taxes.

Respondents seek aid from the admitted fact that the cotton was not all stored in one portion of the warehouse, and that it was stored in a warehouse in which homegrown cotton was also stored, and, further, that it was assembled and stored at different dates. The relevancy of these matters is not apparent to us. If the rule would be applicable to 349 bales of cotton considered as one lot, it would be applicable to one bale. Therefore, if each bale was stored in a different warehouse, or in a different part of the same warehouse, and if each bale had been brought to the warehouse at a different time, the principle would be none the less applicable, for it is admitted that the goods were marked for identification and were in the original bales. Under such circumstances, it could not become so mingled with the other goods stored in the warehouse as to lose its character as an import while it continued to be the property of the importer. In the case of Low v. Austin, supra, the state court assumed in its opinion that the imported wines might be stored with wines of home manufacture, which would be sold in the same kind of container, but the United States court held that, nevertheless, the goods, so long as contained in the original packages and remaining in the hands of the importer, were beyond the taxing power of the state. See, also, Brown v. Maryland, supra; Waring v. Mayor, 8 Wall. 110, 122, 19 L. Ed. 342.

The respondents ask us to take judicial notice that no duties were paid to the United States on the cotton, as it is one of the articles upon the "free list," and they argue that since no duties were exacted by the United States, the state has power to tax. We cannot agree with the respondents that this fact changes the principle involved. We have been cited to no case involving this particular point; but it would seem reasonable that if the permission of the United States to import articles into the country, granted upon the payment of a tax, means immunity from state taxation under certain conditions, that permission to import goods is equally as efficacious when it is given without the payment of a special tax or duty. The duties upon imported articles are fixed in larger or smaller amounts, or are removed entirely, according to the policy adopted by the government for the best interests of the country, and the fact that the policy may vary in the case of different articles and at different times should not affect the principle applied to imported goods. We think goods are no less imported goods when the government permits them to be imported without exacting a duty for that privilege, than when the government imposes a heavy charge upon the privilege of importation.

[2] This disposes of the only question raised by the briefs which goes to the merits. The respondents interpose numerous technical objections. They argue that because the statement of facts shows that the plaintiffs paid the taxes under protest, therefore the goods are no longer held by the collector, and the question of whether the tax is illegal or not has become a moot question in this action, and that the plaintiff must bring another action to recover its money. Plaintiff has asked for general relief. It is entitled to such relief as the facts shown at the trial will warrant. The court has power to do full justice between the parties in disposing of this litigation. The determination of the validity of the tax sought to be levied is but the determination of the foundation of plaintiff's relief. If the facts had shown that the tax had not been paid, the court should have declared the tax illegal and ordered a return of the cotton, or the portion of the cotton, if any, held by the assessor. The stipulation as to facts is not clear. It seems contradictory. It does not show whether all or part of the cotton is being held by the assessor, or whether it has all been released. At one place it is stipulated that—

"After payment by it under protest of the taxes levied and assessed against said cotton, plaintiff has sold, and offered for sale, portions of said cotton."

In the last paragraph of the stipulation, the fact appears as follows:

"That plaintiff demanded of defendants the delivery of said imported property, but defendants always refused to deliver the same, and now refuse unless the taxes so levied and assessed against said property were, and are first paid, which plaintiff refused and refuses to do."

Findings of fact were waived, and this stipulation as to facts takes the place of findings by the court, but, because of its uncertainty in regard to this important matter, we are unable to tell whether judgment should be directed for a return of the property, or for a return of the tax collected. Plaintiff is entitled to some relief, but the record is not sufficiently definite to enable us to make anything but an alternative order.

[3] Respondent objects to a consideration of the bill of exceptions, containing this agreed statement of facts because the judgment was rendered and notice of entry given on August 30, and the bill of exceptions was not tendered until October 2. Appellant relied upon the pendency of its motion for a new trial to interrupt the running of the time allowed for presenting the bill of exceptions, and respondent contends that, as the case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, plaintiff was not entitled to a new trial, and therefore the pendency of its motion would not serve to extend the time for appeal. The record contains a stipulation of counsel that the "judgment roll, notice of intention to move for a new trial, order denying motion for a new trial, and plaintiff's bill of exceptions shall constitute the record on appeal herein." No objection appears to have been made to the power of the trial court to hear and determine the motion for a new trial, or to settle the bill of exceptions. Under such circumstances, we do not think respondent is in a position to urge the point here, even though it were meritorious. Furthermore, even though we take respondent's position and consider only the judgment roll, we find that substantially all the facts set out in the stipulation of facts are admitted by the pleadings, and upon the judgment roll alone, with these admissions in the pleadings, we should reach the same conclusion.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to render judgment for the plaintiff declaring the tax illegal and void, and for a return of the property held, or of the money collected by the assessor, as the facts may warrant.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 704

IMPERIAL DEVELOPMENT CO. v. IMPERIAL COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3357.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 22, 1920.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Development Company against the County of Imperial and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions to render judgment for plaintiff.

Louis Lamy, of Calexico, for appellant.
E. R. Simon, Dist. Atty., of El Centro, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it in an action to have certain taxes assessed against its property by the assessor of the county of Imperial declared illegal and void, and for general relief. The facts are identical with the facts in the case of Imperial Development Co. v. City of Calexico (No. 3356) 191 Pac. 50, this day decided by this court, except that this action involves a county tax sought to be levied, while No. 3356 involves a city tax sought to be levied. The questions of law involved are identical, and, for the reasons set forth in the decision this day rendered in case No. 3356, the judgment herein is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to render judgment for the plaintiff declaring the tax illegal and void, and for a return of the property held, or of the money collected by the assessor, as the facts may warrant.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 599

SECURITY MORTGAGE CO. v. DELFS et al. (Civ. 3368.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1920. Rehearing Denied June 17, 1920. Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Appellate court is bound by a finding of trial court based on conflicting evidence.

2. Estoppel ⟸72—Loss from fraud of third person borne by party rendering injury possible.

As between two innocent parties who have both suffered from fraud of a third person, the loss must fall where the course of business has placed it, if no fraud or negligence is imputable to either party; but where the fraud or negligence of either has furnished the means whereby the third party has perpetrated the fraud and occasioned the loss, equity demands that the loss must be borne by the one who by his conduct has rendered the injury possible, under Civ. Code, § 3543.

3. Pledges ⟸23—Claim of assignee of collateral prior to rights under prior unrecorded assignment.

An assignee of a note and mortgage as collateral for a loan did all that was required of him in the ordinary course of business when he made inquiry of the mortgagors to ascertain if they had any equitable defenses, and his rights were prior to rights under a prior unrecorded assignment.

4. Pledges ⟸23—Prior assignee not injured by failure of subsequent innocent assignee to record assignment.

An assignee of a note and mortgage, which failed to record the same, cannot maintain that the equities between itself and a subsequent assignee are equal because the subsequent assignee did not record its assignment.

5. Estoppel ⟸72—Second assignee had rights superior to first assignee because he caused the loss.

When a mortgage on realty is fraudulently transferred to two innocent assignees under separate assignments prior to recordation, or other notice, of either assignment, as between the two innocent parties, the priority of transfer and of the recordation, or other notice, is important only when the equities are equal, but where the assignee second in point of time takes without notice and for a valuable consideration through the negligence of the other, and the equities are otherwise equal, he by whose negligence the fraud occurred must be the sufferer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by the Security Mortgage Company against John Delfs and others, in which the Continental National Bank of Los Angeles intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Swanwick & Donnelly and S. E. Vermilyea, both of Los Angeles (J. W. Swanwick, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Defendant and cross-complainant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff foreclosing a mortgage executed by the defendants John and Rosa Delfs to one Gore, in February, 1917, and assigned by him to appellant in March, 1917, and thereafter on July 26, 1917, assigned by Gore to respondent. The facts material to the case are that, after the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, Gore, the payee thereof, assigned both on a separate paper to appellant as security for the payment of an independent debt due from Gore to appellant; that thereafter, and on July 18, 1917, appellant, acting through its regularly employed note teller, delivered the note and mortgage to Gore, taking his receipt therefor; that on July 26, 1917, Gore assigned the note and mortgage to respondent as security for the payment of $10,000 borrowed by him from respondent at that time; that thereafter, and on the 21st day of September, 1917, appellant duly recorded its assignment of March, 1917, and four days later respondent's assignment of July 26th was recorded. The action was commenced by respondent to foreclose the mortgage so assigned to it, and appellant intervened, claiming to be the owner of the note and mortgage as a prior assignee.

The trial court found that respondent was the owner of the note and mortgage at the time of the trial, that appellant was estopped from claiming ownership, and that the note and mortgage had been voluntarily delivered to Gore by appellant. These findings are attacked by appellant, the first two as being insufficient to support the judgment, the last as not being supported by the evidence.

[1] First giving consideration to the attack upon the finding of voluntary delivery of the note and mortgage, it appears that the evidence was conflicting, a portion of it having been given by deposition, and this being contradicted by appellant's witnesses during the course of the trial. The evidence was that the documents were voluntarily delivered to Gore by the regularly employed note teller of the bank, who took Gore's receipt upon a printed form of receipt for collateral furnished him by the bank for the purpose. The teller testified that he had been specially authorized by the bank president to so deliver collateral to Gore whenever he wanted it, and that it was a customary and frequent thing to do if the particular form of receipt was signed. The only conflict in the evidence as to this point was in the testimony of one of the witnesses for appellant to the effect that the authority given the note teller was restricted, so that he should not permit Gore to take the documents away from the bank premises. Upon such conflict this court is bound by the finding of the trial court.

With this finding taken as conclusive, the evidence is that, on the 18th day of July, 1917, appellant, while then having possession of the note and mortgage as security for an indebtedness of Gore to appellant, voluntarily delivered them to Gore, indorsed in blank by Gore, the payee thereof, with nothing appearing upon either document to indicate that appellant, or any one other than Gore, had any interest in them; that appellant permitted the note and mortgage to remain in the possession of Gore without recordation of its assignment or notice to the mortgagors until some six months after its execution; that the loan of respondent to Gore was made in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without notice or knowledge that any one other than Gore claimed any interest in the note and mortgage; and that the loan would not have been made by respondent if appellant had not permitted Gore to assume possession of the documents free from any notice of adverse claims.

Upon this showing it is argued that appellant was negligent in failing to record its assignment prior to the transfer to respondent, in failing to give notice to the mortgagors, and in delivering the documents to Gore without some notation thereon showing its claim. From this it is argued that, as respondent was an innocent purchaser for value and without notice, appellant is estopped by its own negligence from asserting its claim, or that, the loss having occurred through appellant's negligence, it must be the one to suffer.

[2] As between two innocent parties who have both suffered from the fraud of a third, the loss must fall where the course of business has placed it, if no fault or negligence is imputable to either party. But where the fault or negligence of either has furnished the means whereby the third party has perpetrated the fraud and occasioned the loss, equity demands that the loss must be borne by the one who by his conduct has rendered the injury possible. 10 R. C. L. p. 695. This is in effect a restatement of the well-known maxim of jurisprudence found in section 3543 of our Civil Code that—

"Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer."

[3, 4] The doctrine so expressed is often referred to as estoppel by negligence, which is not strictly correct because some of the essential elements of estoppel are lacking in ordinary negligence. But it makes little difference by what term the rule is designated. If the facts found are sufficient to bring the conclusion of law within the rule, the judgment must be affirmed. Here the findings of fact amply support the conclusion that respondent was the innocent party, and that the loss occurred through the negligence of appellant. The note and mortgage were made payable to Gore, and bore every evidence of title and transferability in him. Respondent made inquiry of the mortgagors to ascertain if they had any equitable defenses against the apparent liability, and ascertained that they had none. This was all that prudence in the ordinary course of business required. If appellant had recorded its assignment or had given notice thereof to the mortgagors, its rights could have been protected. "The policy of the law is against upholding secret liens and charges to the injury of innocent subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers." Smitton v. McCullough (Sup.) 189 Pac. 686. But appellant argues that the equities are equal because respondent also was negligent. The only negligence ascribed to respondent in the briefs is its failure to record its assignment prior to recordation by appellant. But negligence without injury is of no avail to appellant. Upon its theory of the case, if respondent had so recorded its assignment, appellant would have been without any remedy whatsoever, while the failure to record did not injure appellant.

The facts of the case differ materially from those in Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 545, 9 Pac. 942, Kohn v. Sacramento Elec. Gas, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 1, 141 Pac. 626, and Crocker National Bank v. Byrne & McDonnell, 178 Cal. 329, 173 Pac. 752, because in each one of those cases the securities were taken from the true owner by fraud or theft, whereas in the case at bar the note and mortgage were assigned to appellant as security for the payment of another independent debt, and the pledgee voluntarily released its security to the pledgor without fraud on the part of any one acting for the pledgee. Furthermore, as Gore was the payee of the note, he was, so long as it remained in his possession at least, the apparent, if not the true, owner. Under such circumstances respondent was not required to make inquiry of all the world to see if others had some prior claim.

[5] There remains for consideration the question of the effect of the recordation acts upon the rights of the parties. Appellant contends that respondent's assignment must be held void because under section 1215, Civil Code, an assignment of a mortgage upon real property must be treated as a conveyance within the meaning of section 1214, Civil Code, which provides that every such conveyance is void "as against any subsequent purchaser * * * in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded." But assuming that the section includes an assignment of a mortgage, appellant was not a "subsequent purchaser" within the meaning of the section, the purpose of which is to protect the interests of the innocent purchaser as against the claim of the prior owner who has failed to avail himself of the protection afforded him by the statute of giving notice to the world by the recordation of the conveyance. But even so, these sections of the Code were enacted at the same time as section 2934 of the same Code, which provides that—

"An assignment of a mortgage may be recorded in like manner as a mortgage, and such record operates as notice to all persons subsequently deriving title to the mortgage from the assignor."

Here again is the evident purpose to make the recordation of the assignment notice to those subsequently deriving title. "There is no provision as to prior assignees, or that the recordation should have 'like effect' as recordations of grants." Adler v. Sargent, 109 Cal. 42, 49, 41 Pac. 799, 800. The effect of the recordation of a grant of real property is fixed by section 1107 of the Civil Code, which favors the one who in good faith and for a valuable consideration has acquired title by an instrument that is first duly recorded. There is no express provision in the Code to the effect that the recordation of an assignment of a mortgage on real property shall in itself operate to defeat the title of an innocent assignee for value who took without notice and prior to the recordation. Inasmuch as section 2934 relates specifically to assignments of mortgages and was adopted concurrently with sections 1214 and 1215, Civil Code, the effect of recordation of an assignment must be that prescribed therein, namely, notice to those subsequently deriving title. And such must be the rule in view of the decision in the Adler Case, which has been accepted as the judicial interpretation of that section. From this it follows as a rule of law that when a mortgage on realty is fraudulently transferred to two innocent assignees under separate assignments prior to recordation or other notice of either assignment, as between the two innocent parties the priority of the transfer and of the recordation or other notice is important only when the equities are equal. But where the assignee second in point of time takes without notice and for a valuable consideration through the negligence of the other, and the equities are otherwise equal, he by whose negligence the fraud occurred must be the sufferer.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRITTAIN, J.

(47 Cal. App. 197)

GOULD v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 3434; S. F. 9501.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 22, 1920. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing, June 21, 1920.)

1. Divorce ⟸156—Marital status not affected by interlocutory decree.

Under the provision of Civ. Code, § 132, the marital status of parties to a divorce action is not affected by the interlocutory decree, further than that it establishes conclusively, unless set aside on appeal or in some other manner expressly provided by statute, the right to divorce upon the expiration of the statutory period of one year.

2. Husband and wife ⟸266—May change character of community property by agreement.

Husband and wife may agree in regard to their real property rights, and may change community property to separate property.

3. Husband and wife ⟸266—Court may change community to separate property.

Court has the power to change community property to separate property in an action between husband and wife, where such disposition is essential to a proper determination of their relative rights.

4. Divorce ⟸156—Preliminary interlocutory order, when final.

Despite the old equity rules, under which preliminary interlocutory orders had none of the characteristics of a final decree, the statutory interlocutory decree in divorce suits is final, except as against such attack as is authorized by statute.

5. Divorce ⟸252 — Interlocutory decree of divorce a "contract" as to property rights.

An interlocutory decree of divorce, dividing the community property, constitutes a contract between the parties, especially where entered by consent, and settles the property rights of the parties for the time being, and until some proceeding is begun to change the status.

6. Divorce ⟸156—Death of husband after interlocutory decree terminated marital relations.

Death of husband after interlocutory decree of divorce terminated the marital relationship, and the entry of a final decree thereafter had no effect upon the personal status of the surviving wife.

7. Prohibition ⟸28—Legal effect of decree not reviewable.

On application for prohibition to prevent the setting aside of a final decree of divorce, it would not be proper to determine legal effect of contract evidenced by interlocutory decree upon property rights of the parties, if any, which vested in the wife on the death of the husband shortly after the entry of the interlocutory decree.

8. Prohibition ⟸27—Presumption in favor of action of trial court.

On application for prohibition to prevent setting aside of a final decree of divorce entered in accordance with the interlocutory decree, every presumption in favor of the action of the trial court in entering the final decree must be indulged.

9. Divorce ⟸156—Court may enter final decree after death of husband.

Where husband died shortly after entry of an interlocutory decree of divorce in his favor, the court, under Civ. Code, § 132, had jurisdiction thereafter to enter a final decree of divorce; the interlocutory decree having made a division of community property.

10. Divorce ⟸165(4)—No jurisdiction to set aside final decree of divorce after expiration of year.

One year having expired from entry of final decree of divorce, court had no jurisdiction to entertain a motion to set aside the decree under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

11. Husband and wife ⟸266—Contracts dividing property valid.

Contracts between husband and wife respecting the division of property are valid, under Civ. Code, § 159, even though made in an action for divorce, and the rights thereunder do not of necessity cease upon the death of either party after interlocutory decree of divorce, and before final decree.

Angellotti, C. J., and Wilbur, J., dissenting.

Application by E. B. Gould, as special administrator of the estate of Frank H. Gould, deceased, for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ granted in District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

See, also, 183 Pac. 146.

Walter E. Drobisch, of San Francisco, and Frank Freeman, of Willows, for petitioner.

Joseph A. Brown and Fabian D. Brown, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, as the special administrator of the estate of Frank H. Gould, deceased, seeks by prohibition to prevent the superior court, and Hon. E. P. Shortall, one of its judges, in San Francisco, from setting aside a final decree of divorce, entered after the death of petitioner's intestate.

In his lifetime Frank H. Gould was the husband of Nettie Gould. There was one child of the marriage, a daughter, who was between 16 and 17 years old in October, 1916, when the husband sued for divorce. After answer and cross-complaint, the trial resulted in an interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the wife. It was dated January 19, 1918. The court found there was community property, which, except as hereinafter stated, was not described in the findings. The divorce was granted on the ground of willful desertion by the husband. The decree recited that the parties had agreed in open court "to the division of the community property and the provision for alimony as hereinafter provided." The provisions referred to were that the husband pay the wife as permanent alimony and for her support the sum of $75 per month, commencing on January 21, 1918; that he should pay her immediately $2,500 in cash; that out of the community property and the homestead there be assigned and allotted to the wife a certain lot of land in San Francisco, together with the dwelling house and other improvements thereon, and all the furniture and personal property contained therein, "the same to be her sole and separate property and estate." It was ordered that the plaintiff pay and discharge a certain incumbrance upon said real property within three years, and in the interim that he should pay all interest and other charges secured by mortgage; "it being the true intent of this decree to award said real property to the defendant, Nettie Gould, free and clear of incumbrances, but to allow the said Frank H. Gould the said period of three years from and after date hereof within which to discharge the said lien or incumbrance." All other property of the community was expressly assigned and allotted to the plaintiff, free and clear of all claim of the defendant. It was further decreed that each of the parties respectively should immediately execute and deliver to the other quitclaim deeds conveying the respective property, and providing that, if either party should fail or omit to make the deed within a period of 10 days after the date of the decree, the clerk of the court execute the deed to carry the decree into effect. The last clause of the decree provided that upon the expiration of one year final judgment granting the defendant a divorce, "and providing for the permanent alimony and support of defendant and the division and allotment of the community property, and other relief, as hereinbefore in this interlocutory decree provided, be entered herein." The decree was recorded on January 21, 1918.

[1] Under the provisions of section 132 of the Civil Code, the marital status of the parties was not affected by the interlocutory decree, further than that it established conclusively, unless set aside on appeal or in some other manner expressly provided by statute, the defendant's right to divorce upon the expiration of the statutory period of one year, which must elapse between the entry of the interlocutory decree and the final judgment dissolving the marriage. In re Seiler's Estate, 164 Cal. 181, 128 Pac. 334, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1093; Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 9, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Estate of Walker, 169 Cal. 400, 146 Pac. 868; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 Pac. 1168; London Guaranty & Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Pac. 864.

[2-4] In so far as the interlocutory decree affected the property rights of the parties, it appears from the facts in the record that they agreed to the division of the community property in accordance with the terms of the decree. Husband and wife may agree in regard to their real property rights, and may change the character of community property to separate property. A court has the power to do so in an action between them, where such disposition is essential to a proper determination of their relative rights. Fay v. Fay, 165 Cal. 469–472, 132 Pac. 1040. Despite the old equity rules, under which preliminary interlocutory orders had none of the characteristics of final decrees, the statutory interlocutory decree in divorce suits in this state is final, except as against such attack as is authorized by statute. Suttman v. Superior Court, 174 Cal. 243, 162 Pac. 1032; Bancroft v. Bancroft, 178 Cal. 367, 173 Pac. 582.

[5] The interlocutory decree constituted a contract between the parties, both because the provisions for division of the community property were by consent and because "a judgment is a contract, in the highest sense of the term." Wallace v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 498; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372, 76 Am. Dec. 538; Bean v. Loryea, 81 Cal. 151, 22 Pac. 513; Dore v. Thornburgh, 90 Cal. 64, 27 Pac. 30, 25 Am. St. Rep. 100; Weaver v. San Francisco, 146 Cal. 728, 81 Pac. 119. The interlocutory decree, so far as it determined the rights of the parties, is a contract between them, temporary and provisional in its nature; but it settled the rights of the parties for the time being, "and until some action, proceeding, or motion is begun to change the status, and some order is made thereon which has that effect, or until they become reconciled and resume marital relations, in which event their mutual obligations are, for the time being, at least, restored." London Guaranty & Accident Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra; Olson v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 250, 165 Pac. 706, 1 A. L. R. 1589.

Frank H. Gould died after the entry of the interlocutory decree, and within one month after its date, on February 14, 1918, an order was made in the superior court reciting the fact that an affidavit and consent of Nettie Gould, special administratrix of the estate of Frank H. Gould, deceased, had been filed, and E. B. Gould, special administrator of the estate, was substituted and made a party plaintiff in the divorce action. On January 23, 1919, two days after the expiration of the year following the entry of the interlocutory decree, on the court's own motion, the final decree of divorce was entered. It embodied all the provisions of the interlocutory decree. On January 4, 1920, Nettie Gould moved in said court for an order setting aside the final decree of divorce, which motion remained under submission until the application for writ of prohibition was filed in this court and the alternative writ issued on March 13, 1920, more than one year after the entry of the final decree.

[6, 7] The death of the husband terminated the marital relationship. The entry of the final decree thereafter had no effect upon the personal status of the surviving wife. Estate of Seiler, supra; Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 Pac. 320. Upon the death of the husband, the rights of the wife under the laws of succession, if he died intestate, were fixed, unless those rights had theretofore been changed by contract with the husband. Since no appeal was taken from the interlocutory decree, and it was not set aside under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it became final and conclusive at the expiration of six months from its entry. It was a contract in regard to the community property. It is not necessary, nor would it be proper on this proceeding, to determine the legal effect of the contract evidenced by the interlocutory decree upon the property rights, if any, which vested in the wife on the death of the husband. It may be in a proper proceeding that it will be necessary for a court, called upon to construe the interlocutory decree, to determine whether the transfer of the property to the wife and her waiver of claim against other property of the husband barred her from claiming in his estate any property under the laws of succession, or whether the legal effect of the decree was simply to convert the portion of what had theretofore been community property into separate property of the husband, in which, if he died intestate, it may appear that she has a heritable right. These statements are not to be understood as conveying any expression of opinion on the part of this court upon these matters, but as a basis for the conclusions reached in regard to the power of the trial court to enter the final decree or to set it aside.

[8, 9] Because this court on this proceeding cannot determine the legal effect of the interlocutory decree, it must, under well-established rules, indulge in every presumption in favor of the action of the trial court in entering the final decree, if, indeed, that action requires support by presumption. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it must be presumed that the deeds, required to be executed within ten days after the interlocutory decree was made, were in fact executed, and that to forestall any doubt which might arise as to the vesting of title under such deeds, or pursuant to the interlocutory decree, the final decree was entered. It does not seem necessary either to indulge in presumption upon this subject or to consider the reason which may have actuated the trial court to enter the final decree. The last clause of section 132 of the Civil Code expressly provides that "the death of either party after the entry of the interlocutory judgment does not impair the power of the court to enter final judgment as hereinbefore provided." Since the marriage was not dissolved by the entry of the final decree, but by the death of the husband, and since the interlocutory decree established the property rights to the extent above indicated, it would appear, on the one hand, that the entry of the final decree accomplished nothing; on the other, that it injured nobody. While the law neither does nor requires idle things, it cannot be said that, when the Legislature expressly reserved the power in the court to make the final decree, it was an idle act. Under the Code section, it is concluded that the court had jurisdiction to enter the final judgment.

[10] The decree not having been set aside until more than one year had elapsed, the application for the writ of prohibition is based on the ground that to grant the pending motion is beyond the jurisdiction of the trial court. The respondents resist the granting of the writ solely on the ground that a judgment, which appears on its face to have been made without jurisdiction, is void, and may be attacked at any time. The conclusion that the trial court had jurisdiction to make the final decree disposes of the respondents' contention. The time having expired within which the trial court might have set aside the final decree under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on motion, it has lost jurisdiction to entertain such a motion. Byrne v. Hoag, 116 Cal. 1, 47 Pac. 775.

Let the peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed for by the petitioner.

All three Justices concur.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied. The opinion of the District Court of Appeal does not mention the decision given by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, filed on October 30, 1919, in Gloyd v. Superior Court, 185 Pac. 995. In that case a petition for a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court. It is claimed in the present petition for rehearing that the opinion in this case is directly contrary to that in the Gloyd Case. We think there is a clear distinction between them, and one which takes away any apparent conflict. In the Gloyd Case the interlocutory decree of divorce was a simple declaration that the husband, who was plaintiff, was entitled to a divorce. It did not purport to adjudicate property rights of any character. It was there held that in such a case, upon the death of the plaintiff during the ensuing year, the superior court lost jurisdiction to proceed further in the case, because the death dissolved the marriage, and extinguished the pre-existing marriage status which formed the subject-matter of the action, leaving nothing upon which the only final decree that could be made could operate.

[11] In the present case the interlocutory decree not only declared that the wife, who was cross-complainant, was entitled to a divorce, but also purported to confirm and provide for the performance of an agreement made by the husband and wife in open court dividing the community property between them and providing for the payment to the wife by the husband of a permanent monthly sum for her support. It was held that, although the court may have lost jurisdiction to make a final decree, after the death of the husband, dissolving the marriage status, the property rights fixed by the agreement and confirmed by the interlocutory decree still remained in existence, and that as to them the court retained jurisdiction to enter the final decree in the manner specified in the interlocutory decree. Inasmuch as a husband and wife may, even if no divorce action is pending, make such contracts as they may choose respecting property (Civ. Code, § 159), such contracts, whether made in an action for divorce or otherwise, are valid, and the rights thereunder do not of necessity cease upon the death of either party. Consequently the subject-matter of the interlocutory decree, so far as such rights are concerned, was not extinguished by the death of Gould during the year succeeding the interlocutory decree, and the court to that extent retained jurisdiction. This distinction is clearly indicated in the opinion of the District Court, and it was also intimated in the Gloyd Case, although in that case it was not necessary to say what the result would be as to the property relations inasmuch as none had been adjudicated by the interlocutory decree.

SHAW, OLNEY, SLOANE, LAWLOR, and LENNON, JJ., concur.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and WILBUR, J., dissent from order denying rehearing.

47 Cal. App. 742

MALOOF v. DAVIS et al. (Civ. 2134.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 26, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⇐86(4)—Evidence held to show broker the procuring cause of sale.

In real estate broker's action for commission, evidence held to sustain finding that broker was the procuring cause of the sale.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)—Court's finding conclusive where rational inference from evidence.

Questions of fact must be resolved in favor of court's finding if the finding is a rational inference from the showing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by A. Maloof against Ona M. Davis and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Kellogg & Kyle, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for compensation for securing a purchaser of real estate belonging to defendants. The written contract, executed by the parties, upon which the action was brought, as far as necessary to quote, was in the following language:

"I hereby authorize A. Maloof, as my agent, for a term of ——— days from this date, and hereafter until notified by me in writing that the same is withdrawn (this is not exclusive), to offer for sale and sell for me for the sum of $35,000, my real property (describing it). And I further agree that if my said agent shall procure a buyer for said property, or if a sale or exchange is made by, or upon any information received through such agency, whether such sale or exchange be made before or after the expiration of this agreement, at the above or any other amount named or accepted by me, I will pay to said agents five per cent. of such selling price, as a commission and compensation for such services."

The court found that—

"The plaintiff interested one John Greott in the purchase of said property * * * and thereafter, the said defendants sold said ranch property to said John Greott and accepted and received from him, in payment thereof, the sum of thirty thousand dollars * * * That the said buyer of property, to wit, John Greott, was procured by plaintiff, and said sale to said John Greott was made by and upon information received by said defendants from plaintiff."

The foregoing findings present the only questions that are in controversy between the parties. In fact, during the progress of the trial the learned counsel for appellants declared, "I suppose the only question in this case is, was Mr. Gray or Mr. Greott the purchaser," and subsequently he said:

"Of course, the real issue in this case is what was the procuring cause of the sale; that is the real question in this case."

The record contains evidence of these facts as substantially stated by respondent: After the execution of this contract, and before any written notice of its withdrawal, plaintiff took several persons out to look at the property in an endeavor to interest them as buyers. Finally he did interest one John Greott, took him and his wife out to inspect the property in person, introduced them to the defendants as being possible purchasers, and spent with them some two or three hours while they examined and talked with the defendants about the entire property. Greott liked the place and was very much interested in it, but, having already an offer outstanding for another place, said he would make no offer until he heard from that, when he would talk business, would let them know and would make them an offer. Within a short time afterward plaintiff saw Greott twice, and each time was advised that Greott had not yet found out about his offer for the other place, and was not ready to talk business concerning the purchase of this. While plaintiff was still waiting for Greott to answer, he evidently learned that he was not to get the other place, and the transaction occurred by which the defendants conveyed their property to Greott by deed dated April 19, 1919, and on the same day taken by Greott himself to the recorder's office, and there recorded. Thereupon plaintiff sought out Greott and inquired why he had bought defendants' place from other agents, and he replied that it was because he could get it cheaper from Gray, the real estate agent with whom the property had been listed by defendants. Respondent thereupon went to one of the defendants, and demanded his commission on account of the sale to his customer, and was informed that appellants had obtained a contract from Gray that they should have no commission to pay, and if any was paid it was up to Gray. Greott paid the entire purchase price of $30,000, which was accepted by defendants, in the form of three personal checks, one April 12, 1919, for $5,000; two on April 19, 1919, the date of the execution and delivery of the deed, one for $12,640, and one for $12,360.

[1] Of course, we are not concerned with the fact that evidence was introduced on behalf of appellants to the effect that one Gray was the real purchaser of the property, and that the deed was taken in the name of Greott to secure him for the purchase price, which he advanced. It is sufficient for us to say that the court's conclusion to the contrary finds in the record sufficient legal support. Moreover, according to the testimony of Mr. Gray, he and Mr. Greott were partners in the transaction; in other words, the purchase was made by and for the benefit equally of both of them. Upon this theory the participation of Greott in the purchase is sufficient, in a legal sense, to satisfy the requirement that the purchaser must be one secured by the agent.

[2] The question whether the efforts of the agent were the procuring cause of the sale must be resolved in favor of the finding of the court, since such is a rational inference from the showing made. When an agent takes a prospective purchaser upon the land, introduces him to the owner, and succeeds in awakening his interest in the property, and the purchaser expresses a tentative or conditional purpose to buy the land, and a short time thereafter he does purchase it, no surprise should be occasioned if a court concludes that the agent's efforts were the procuring cause of the sale, or at least that the sale "was made by, through or upon information received through such agent."

Appellants have treated us to an interesting and instructive discussion of the principles governing brokers' commissions, but they are familiar to the profession and have been often considered by this and other appellate courts of the state, and we deem further consideration of them unnecessary.

The question here is one of evidence, and, since there is no legal objection to the validity of the contract made by the parties, and we are satisfied that there is support for the conclusion of the trial judge that plaintiff fully executed the terms and conditions of said contract entitling him to the compensation therein provided, we need to go no further.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

47 Cal. App. 650

SMITH v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3374.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)—Finding of trial court on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Where the testimony of plaintiff husband that an assignment was not made as a gift to his wife, a defendant, merely created a conflict of evidence on the point, the finding of trial court that it was a gift is conclusive as to the fact.

2. Husband and wife ⇐259, 266—Earnings of wife during marriage may be relinquished to her.

Though the earnings of a wife from her labor or business during marriage are as a rule community property, the husband may relinquish to the wife the right to such earnings without any consideration other than their mutual consent, and they then become her separate property.

3. Husband and wife ⇐266—Husband's agreement to relinquish wife's earnings to her may be inferred.

Agreement of a husband to relinquish to his wife her separate earnings may be proved by evidence as to the acts and conduct of the husband, with relation to the earnings of the wife or business conducted by her as community property, indicating that he did not regard them as community property.

4. Husband and wife ⊂=266—Wife's earnings relinquished to her became separate property.

Wife's millinery business and earnings derived therefrom relinquished to her by her husband held to have become her separate property.

5. Husband and wife ⊂=258—Expenditure of community funds on wife's separate realty does not change title.

The expenditure by a husband of either his separate funds or the community funds of himself and wife in improving his wife's separate property does not change title to the realty as between them, in the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary; title to improvements following land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by James E. Smith against Phelia L. P. Smith and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Laughlin and Muhleman & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Action to quiet title. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant on her cross-complaint, from which plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff and defendant Phelia L. P. Smith are husband and wife. The property which is the subject of this litigation consists of a lot, with dwelling house thereon, situate in Long Beach, Cal. The complaint alleged that at the time of the commencement of this action plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the lot in question; that said lot was purchased and improved subsequent to the marriage of plaintiff and defendant Smith with the separate funds of plaintiff and the community funds of plaintiff and defendant Smith, and the deed for convenience was taken in the name of defendant Smith; that defendant Smith had incumbered the same by giving a trust deed to defendant the Title Insurance & Trust Company to secure the repayment of money had from defendant Long Beach Savings Bank & Trust Company, and had used the money thus acquired without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff to the detriment of plaintiff and his interests in said property. Defendant Smith answered and cross-complained, denying the allegations of the complaint and setting up title in herself as her separate property and estate. The trial court found that the property was neither purchased with the separate funds of plaintiff and the community funds of plaintiff and defendant Smith nor the separate funds of plaintiff. On the contrary, the court found that defendant Smith acquired, by assignment from her sister, as a gift, her equity in a contract for the purchase of lot 8, on which the sister had paid the sum of $335, leaving an unpaid balance of $165, which defendant Smith thereafter paid out of her separate funds.

[1] Appellant contends that the property in question is community property because it was acquired subsequent to marriage and with community funds. This contention is based upon the testimony of appellant that the assignment was not made as a gift to his wife, but that she purchased her sister's equity in the lot for $50 which he furnished for that purpose. This merely created a conflict in the evidence, and the finding of the court that it was a gift is conclusive as to that fact. Appellant further argues that the $165 balance paid by defendant Smith on the purchase price of the lot was money derived from a millinery business conducted by Mrs. Smith subsequent to their marriage and hence was community property.

[2, 3] Although the earnings of the wife during marriage are, as a rule, community property, the husband may relinquish to the wife the right to such earnings without any consideration other than their mutual consent, and they then become her separate property. Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 276, 279, 34 Pac. 775, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287; Larson v. Larson, 15 Cal. App. 531, 535, 115 Pac. 340. Such an agreement may be proved by evidence as to the acts and conduct of the husband with relation to the earnings of the wife or business conducted by her as community property indicating that he did not regard them as community property. Larson v. Larson, supra; Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 593, 599, 79 Pac. 272. Respondent Smith testified that she started the millinery business with $200 received from the sale of property concededly her separate estate. This was denied by appellant, who claimed that he advanced the $200 to help her start the business. But, as significant of his attitude with relation to that business, he testified:

"The proceeds from that store were kept in her personal bank account. I had no access to that bank account. I knew when she started the business and ran the bank account along that way. * * * I knew that she started her bank account. The bank account was in her own name. * * * I had a bank account and she had hers, and I do not think either had access to the other's account. She paid the bills for that millinery business out of her account except the first one; that was the money I let her have to start it with, that is, the big bill, $200 or $250; except for that she paid the bills out of her own account and she ordered the goods, selected them and determined what they should be. That was the way it always was from the beginning."

[4] It is apparent from an examination of the entire evidence that plaintiff made no claim to the business, but treated it as his wife's separate property. The right to the millinery business and the earnings derived therefrom having been thus relinquished by plaintiff to his wife, they did, in fact, become her separate property.

The only other question for determination is whether the original character of the lot was changed by the improvements erected thereon, which consisted of a dwelling house costing in the neighborhood of $3,000. The trial court found on conflicting evidence that all improvements were made by respondent Smith out of her separate estate and property, that appellant from time to time advanced some moneys and funds out of his own separate estate and out of the community property, which were used in the improvements, that all such advancements were made by appellant as a gift to respondent Smith as and for her own separate estate and property; and that all improvements now on the real property are the sole and separate property and estate of respondent Smith, and that appellant has no interest in either the land or improvements thereon. The findings on the facts are conclusive. The conclusions of law drawn therefrom are supported by the authorities.

[5] The expenditure by a husband of either his separate funds or the community funds of himself and wife in improving his wife's separate property does not operate to change the title. As between them, in the absence of any specific agreement to the contrary, the title to the improvements follows the land. Carlson v. Carlson, 10 Cal. App. 300, 303, 101 Pac. 923; Shaw v. Bernal, 163 Cal. 262, 267, 268, 124 Pac. 1012. Appellant does not claim that there was any agreement that the property should become community property. Where no agreement has been made, "it must rather be presumed that it was the intention of the husband to advance the money paid for the benefit of the wife's estate and that it was intended to accrue to her interest." Carlson v. Carlson, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 571

GORDON et al. v. HILLMAN et ux.

(Civ. 3375.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 19, 1920.)

1. Judgment ⇐925—Suit maintainable on foreign judgment under full faith clause.

Under Fed. Const. art. 4, § 1, suit on a final judgment affirmed by the Supreme Court of the state of Washington can be maintained in California.

2. Judgment ⇐818(1)—Full faith clause applies only to records of courts having jurisdiction.

Federal Const. art. 4, § 1, requiring courts of one state to give full faith and credit to the judgments of a sister state, applies to records and proceedings of courts only in so far as they have jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of the court rendering judgment sued on in another state is always open to inquiry under proper averments questioning its conclusiveness.

3. Judgment ⇐820—Judgment of other state now sued on may be resisted for fraud going to jurisdiction.

Since a fraud may go to the question of jurisdiction, judgment rendered in another state may be resisted for fraud going to the jurisdiction of the court of such other state, either with respect to the subject-matter or the person, or which constitutes a fraud on the law of the forum, or which operates to deprive a party against whom judgment was rendered of opportunity to present a meritorious defense.

4. Judgment ⇐946—Default in suit on judgment of other state reversed, where original judgment set aside.

If original judgment of the state of Washington sued on in California had been set aside prior to defendants' motion to vacate default judgment against them rendered in California, the default judgment would have been reversed as a matter of right, and restitution awarded defendants.

5. Judgment ⇐922 — Setting aside former judgment sued on has same effect as where suit brought on judgment subsequently reversed.

The effect of setting aside former judgment sued on is the same as where suit is brought on a judgment which is thereafter reversed on appeal, when the judgment debtor is entitled to have the second judgment set aside as of record and as of right.

6. Judgment ⇐946—Motion to vacate default judgment on judgment of other state sought to be vacated for fraud should have been granted.

While motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to vacate a default judgment is addressed to the discretion of the court, and its action will not be disturbed on appeal except for clear showing of abuse under particular circumstances shown, held that defendants' motion, made within the six months limited by the Code section to vacate default judgment against them on a judgment of the state of Washington, which they had instituted proceedings to set aside for fraud, should have been granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by E. M. Gordon, individually and as administrator of the estate of Eva P. Gordon, deceased, against C. D. Hillman and Bessie Olive Hillman, his wife. From an order denying defendants' motion to vacate default judgment against them, they appeal. Reversed.

Arthur C. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. B. Turnbull and Harold E. Thomas, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants appeal from an order denying motion to vacate a default judgment in the superior court in Los Angeles in a suit to recover some $40,000 upon a judgment alleged to have been rendered in the superior court of King county, in the state of Washington, on January 5, 1918.

Judgment was entered on June 4, 1918. Notice of motion to vacate the default judgment was given on November 9, 1918. It was accompanied by an affidavit of the defendant and a copy of the proposed answer. The judgment of the Washington court was attacked on the ground of fraud. It is stated in the affidavit that the defendant, Hillman, was not aware of the fact that he and his codefendant had a good and substantial defense to the action in Los Angeles until May 20, 1918. It further appears that on May 25, 1918, proceedings were commenced in the Washington court to vacate and set aside the original judgment. The defendants advised their attorney that they had done so, and instructed him to file an answer on their behalf in the Los Angeles suit, setting up the alleged fraud upon them as a defense therein. It is alleged they relied entirely upon their attorney to protect their interests in this connection, and to prepare and file all necessary papers and pleadings, and that they believed he had taken and would take such steps as were necessary and proper to protect their interests; that they did not know of the entry of the default or of the judgment by default until June 20, 1918, when they were advised by their attorney that they might move at any time within six months to vacate the judgment; that this statement was coupled with the advice that the defendants should delay making their motion in the Los Angeles court, so that the Washington court might have an opportunity to pass upon the proceedings instituted there prior to the hearing of the motion in Los Angeles. It appears, inferentially, at least, that the proceedings to vacate the judgment were pending in the Washington court at the time of the hearing of the motion, which was denied on November 20, 1918. Reference is made in the appellants' brief to a decision rendered by the Supreme Court in the state of Washington on December 30, 1919, the effect of which was to cause the vacation of the judgment on which the suit in the Los Angeles court was based. Gordon v. Hillman (Wash.) 186 Pac. 651. Considered as a matter of fact, the action of the Washington court, after the determination of the motion in the Los Angeles court, can be given no consideration. When the motion was made, however, within the six months limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it appeared that the proceedings to vacate the Washington judgment were pending.

[1-3] From the showing made on behalf of the defendants, it appeared that the judgment on which the suit was brought was a final judgment, having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of Washington. Suit on such a judgment may be maintained under constitutional provisions requiring courts of one state to give full faith and credit to the judgments of a sister state. Const. art. 4, § 1. That clause of the Constitution applies to records and proceedings of courts only so far as they have jurisdiction. Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 521, 21 L. Ed. 687; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; Renaud v. Abbott, 116 U. S. 277, 6 Sup. Ct. 1194, 29 L. Ed. 629. The jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment is always open to inquiry under proper averments, where its conclusiveness is questioned in another state. Knowles v. Logansport, etc., 19 Wall. (U. S.) 58, 22 L. Ed. 70; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 11 Sup. Ct. 369, 34 L. Ed. 1054; Brown v. Fletcher, 210 U. S. 82, 28 Sup. Ct. 702, 52 L. Ed. 966; Hancock's Estate, 156 Cal. 804, 106 Pac. 58, 134 Am. St. Rep. 177. Since fraud may go to the very question of jurisdiction, a judgment rendered in another state may be resisted on the ground of fraud which goes to the jurisdiction of the court to render the questioned judgment either with respect to the subject-matter or of the person, or which constitutes a fraud upon the law of the forum, or which operates to deprive the party against whom the judgment was rendered of an opportunity to defend the suit when he had a meritorious defense to it. 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) p. 939, note.

[4] Enough facts to resist a general demurrer appear in the answer proposed to be filed at the time of the hearing of the motion to vacate the default to show fraud in obtaining the judgment on which the suit was brought in a matter affecting the jurisdiction of the court. If the original judgment had been set aside prior to the motion, the default judgment rendered in this state would have been reversed as a matter of right, and restitution would have been awarded to the defendant. Merchants' Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 33 Pa. 45, 75 Am. Dec. 577; Davidson v. Smith, 1 Bissel (U. S.) 352; Faber v. Hovey, 117 Mass. 108, 19 Am. Rep. 398.

[5] The effect of setting aside a former judgment is the same as where suit is brought on a judgment which is thereafter reversed on appeal, when the judgment debtor is entitled to have the second judgment set aside as of record and as of right. Heckling v. Allen (C. C.) 15 Fed. 196; Banning v. Taylor, 24 Pa. 297; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Aldrich, 38 Wis. 107; Mann v. Ætna Ins. Co., 38 Wis. 114; Ward v. Marshall, 96 Cal. 155, 30 Pac. 1113, 31 Am. St. Rep. 198; Dissenting Opinion, Justice Olney, in Re Vincent Riccardi (April 16, 1920) 59 Cal. Dec. 478, 484–485.

If within six months after the entry of the default judgment the Supreme Court of Washington had vacated the original judgment, that fact would have been a sufficient reason for vacating the default judgment. If the default judgment should be held good, the subsequent action of the Supreme Court of Washington would have required its vacation under the rules announced in the cases which have been last cited. If the Washington judgment had been set aside before the default was entered, that fact, properly pleaded, would have constituted a bar to the prosecution of the California suit. It is not the purpose of the law to deprive litigants of the right to have their cases determined upon their merits, nor to invite new litigation to overturn judgments. While the affirmative allegations of the proposed answer were denied in counter affidavits, the trial court was in no position to determine the merits of the case, nor to adjudge finally, in the absence of evidence, upon the truth of the formal allegations and denials. It clearly appeared both that proceedings were pending in Washington to set aside the judgment, which was the basis of the California suit, and that the issue of fraud was tendered by the proposed answer. The application amounted to a plea in abatement in a case where, but for the pendency of the Washington proceedings, a plea in bar must have been held good.

[6] While a motion made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is addressed to the discretion of the court, and its action will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it shall be made clearly to appear that such discretion has been abused, under the circumstances shown by the record, the motion to vacate the default judgment, made within the six months limited by the Code section, should have been granted.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

47 Cal. App. 660

JIMENO v. COMMONWEALTH HOME BUILDERS et al. (Civ. 3187.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920.)

1. Libel and slander ⟸89(1)—Allegation of special damages unnecessary.

If an alleged defamatory publication is libelous per se, no allegation of special damages is necessary.

2. Libel and slander ⟸16—Written or printed words, when "libelous per se."

Words written or printed may be libelous and actionable per se if they tend to expose the plaintiff to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, aversion, or disgrace, and to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of right-thinking persons and deprive him of friendly intercourse and society, even though the same words, if spoken, would not have been actionable, and such is true where the publication is of a character that usually, ordinarily, and naturally detracts from the reputation and standing of the defamed person.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Libel.]

3. Libel and slander ⟸100(1)—Allegation sufficient to permit proof that words applied to plaintiff.

A broad allegation that the matter in articles was published of and concerning plaintiff was sufficient to permit proof that the readers, who knew the extrinsic circumstances, understood that the words referred to plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 460.

4. Libel and slander ⟸18—Charging stockholder with intent to wreck corporation libelous per se.

An article charging that a stockholder, who was chairman of a committee of stockholders organized to investigate the affairs of a corporation and protect the rights and interests of its stockholders, intended to wreck it and to do some coarse financiering, held libelous and actionable per se, under Civ. Code, § 45.

5. Libel and slander ⟸19—Article must be considered as a whole.

To test its libelous quality, a publication must be considered as a whole.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by F. D. Jimeno against the Commonwealth Home Builders, a corporation, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. C. Folsom, and Jesse A. Gyger, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred W. Heatherly, N. Blackstock, and Alfred W. Allen, all of Los Angeles, for repondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action for libel. Defendants demurred to plaintiff's second amended complaint upon the grounds that it does not state a cause of action and that, in certain particulars, it is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible. The demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff declined further to amend, and judgment for defendants was entered accordingly. From that judgment plaintiff appeals.

The extrinsic circumstances alleged in the complaint by way of inducement, and to be considered in connection with the alleged libel, are these: Plaintiff, an investment broker, dealing in real estate and mining investments, was, at all times mentioned in the complaint, a stockholder in the defendant corporation, Commonwealth Home Builders, and chairman of a committee of stockholders organized to investigate the affairs of that corporation and protect the rights and interests of all its stockholders. The investigating committee was organized at the instance of plaintiff, with the advice and assistance of one C. E. Norton, a reputable auditor. Prior to the publication complained of, plaintiff was a stockholder in, and had been active in the promotion of, the Stone Chief Mining Company, a corporation.

The complaint alleges that, for the purpose of exposing plaintiff to contempt, hatred, ridicule, and obloquy, defendants maliciously published and circulated, in the American Globe, a magazine, among the stockholders of the defendant corporation, of and concerning plaintiff, the following false and defamatory articles:

"Norton's Filibuster Expedition on Commonwealth Home Builders—A Fizzle.

"C. E. Norton, president of Original Home Builders of Los Angeles, as well as trustee for a little more than half of the stock, also a director of the Southern California Home Builders, in conjunction with Mr. Jimeno, an official and promoter of the Stone Chief Mining Co., and a stockholder of Commonwealth Home Builders, entertained some twenty-five stockholders of Commonwealth Home Builders, in the office of the Stone Chief Mining Co. on the evening of December 1, 1916. The editor of the American Globe received no notice of this happening, but did manage to secure just the information desired by stockholders who do not desire their wealthy corporation wrecked. * * * The little gathering seemed to be a cooked and dried affair. * * * As usual money was desired. It seems that the 4,000 stockholders are to contribute on the assessment basis of so much per share (to these men) which has not the sanction of the present sane and responsible administration, and no statement rendered—no questions asked. An unauthorized bill for $150 was presented by Mr. Jimeno, of the Stone Chief Mining Co. * * *"

"Protective System of Ruining Stockholders.

"Money greed will cause some people to do anything as long as they are able to keep out of jail. * * * The stockholder calls on a so-called auditor about whose antecedents no one knows anything, and whose record in corporation activities has never shown a clean winding up of affairs for stockholders of the other corporations concerned. The master brain (?) so steeped with greed for gold as to care nothing for the majority of stockholders' interests, whom he terms 'boobs' autocratically rises to the occasion. He maps out the campaign in such a manner as to prevent himself from being caught on conspiracy-to-wreck-corporation charges. 'This will cost you nothing. I will get you in control of that corporation and between you and me we ought to milk it for a long time.' 'But I do not understand the building and investment company business,' replies the stockholder. 'I have had some experience in oil, mining and wildcat schemes, though, if that would do any good.' Any office boy can do what you are to do, replied the self-styled auditor. * * * I will have another man look for certain information which we twist into such shape as to put the management of that building and investment company on the defensive. Anything to arouse suspicion and shatter confidence and the credit of the company. We don't care how many business deals we knock out, thereby depriving the stockholders of future profits, neither do we care how much damage we may cause the company otherwise, or how much expense we put it to, all of which affects the assets of stockholders. * * * Stockholders who satisfy themselves about the character and former business records of such 'Money Greed Meddlers' and corporation wreckers * * * would hardly be inclined to give these 'Intolerance Individuals' their support, proxies or votes. They have nothing at stake. * * * Protective Committee (?) composed of so-called auditor and stockholder receive: (1) Contributions from stockholders to carry on campaign of wrecking their own company, of which no account is given and which could run into some thousands of dollars. * * * Fine business for the auditor and stockholder but rather coarse financiering."

[1, 2] Respondents have not favored us with any printed points or authorities, and we are, therefore, somewhat in the dark as to the precise reasons for their attack upon the complaint. At the oral argument, their counsel contented themselves with the bare statement that nowhere in the complaint has plaintiff alleged any special damages. From this we infer that the chief, if not the only, ground relied upon by respondents, is the absence of an allegation of special damages. If, as we believe, the alleged defamatory publication is libelous per se, then no allegation of special damages is necessary. The courts have long recognized a distinction between written and oral defamation. While whatever charge will sustain a suit for slander when the words are merely spoken will sustain a suit for libel if they are written or printed and published, yet many charges which if merely spoken of another would not be actionable without proof of special damages, will be libelous per se when written or printed and published. Accordingly, it may be stated as a general proposition that words written or printed may be libelous and actionable per se, that is, actionable without any allegations of special damages, if they tend to expose the plaintiff to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, aversion, or disgrace, and to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of right-thinking persons and deprive him of their friendly intercourse and society, even though the same words, if spoken, would not have been actionable. 25 Cyc. 250. If, on its face, the publication is of a character that usually, ordinarily, and naturally detracts from the reputation and standing of the plaintiff, and tends proximately and naturally

to deprive him of the confidence and esteem of others, thus causing him to be shunned or avoided, it is libelous per se, and special damages need not be alleged or proved. From such a publication the law presumes general damages as a natural and probable consequence.

[3] Some of the defamatory language in the libelous articles published by defendants manifestly refers solely to the auditor, C. E. Norton. Other defamatory portions of the articles seem to be aimed at both plaintiff and Norton, as, for example, the reference to "money greed meddlers." Still other portions leave the reader, ignorant of the extrinsic facts, in doubt as to whether Norton or plaintiff is the one referred to. By no colloquium could the pleader make applicable to plaintiff those words that obviously apply to Norton only. As to all the other defamatory charges, the broad allegation that the matter in the articles was published of and concerning plaintiff is sufficient to permit proof that the readers who knew the extrinsic circumstances understood that the words referred to plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 460; Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 845.

[4] We think the article is libelous and is actionable per se. Our Code defines libel as follows:

"Libel is a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." Civ. Code, § 45.

As said in Tonini v. Cevasco, 114 Cal. 272, 46 Pac. 105, this definition "is very broad, and includes almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation either generally or with respect to his occupation."

If, as alleged, the defamatory matters were printed and published of and concerning plaintiff, no unprejudicial person of ordinary intelligence, reading the publication, could avoid the conclusion that it imputed to him grave and reprehensible misconduct—dishonest practices which, if established, would justly bring him into general contempt and disgrace. Upon its face, the language charged, if published of and concerning plaintiff, tended naturally, necessarily and proximately to produce some, at least, of the results mentioned in section 45 of the Civil Code.

[5] To test its libelous quality a publication must be considered as a whole. "The construction which it behooves a court of jutsice to put on a publication which is alleged to be libelous is to be derived as well from the expressions used as from the whole scope and apparent object of the writer." Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 358. Thus in the case cited, the charge was not "made in an open and direct manner," "but," it was said by the court, "an imputation made in that form is not the less actionable." In our opinion the innuendoes, as alleged in the complaint in this case, affix to the words their true meaning. It is alleged, by way of innuendo, that the language of the publication was intended to mean, and that the persons who read it understood it to mean, that "plaintiff had been connected with wildcat or fraudulent schemes in the past, and that plaintiff would 'do anything' so long as he should be 'able to keep out of jail'; that he had conspired with another to obtain information concerning the corporation Commonwealth Home Builders, and 'twist' such information into such shape as to rouse suspicion and shatter confidence and the credit of the company and to decrease the assets thereof for the purpose of obtaining a profit for himself, and that said plaintiff and one other are 'money greed meddlers and corporation wreckers'; that the plaintiff was attempting to get on a 'big pay roll,' and that the plaintiff was attempting unconscientious and 'coarse financiering.'" We think the language of the articles warrants the construction thus put upon it by plaintiff, and that the effect of the publication was to expose plaintiff to "obloquy," which is defined by Webster as "blame; reprehension." Surely no intelligent person could read this publication without understanding that it was meant to charge that plaintiff is not an honorable man—that he is a person who had been guilty of such reprehensible misconduct as should deter others from trusting him. As chairman of a stockholders' investigating committee, organized for the purpose of protecting the rights and interests of the stockholders of the defendant corporation, plaintiff held an important position of trust and confidence that demanded of him the exercise of the utmost good faith. And yet, if the charges be true, he has grossly violated that trust and treacherously betrayed the confidence of of those whose interests it was his duty to protect. Such an implication of lack of integrity is unquestionably actionable per se. A writing that charges another with violating a confidence that has been reposed in him or with treachery to his associates is actionable per se. 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 912.

In our opinion the complaint states a cause of action; and, as we see nothing in it that is ambiguous, uncertain, or unintelligible, we think it was not demurrable upon any of the grounds set forth in the special demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

(47 Cal. App. 683)

GLOS v. McBRIDE. (Civ. 3309.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜907(5)—Presumed that lease absent from record, which plaintiff sought to set aside for illegality, did not show same on face.

Where a complaint seeking to set aside a lease, part of the consideration of which was that plaintiff and defendant though unmarried should cohabit as husband and wife, it will be presumed, the lease not being set forth, that the same did not on its face show the illegal consideration so as to be void under Civ. Code, § 1608, declaring that, if any part of a single consideration or of several considerations for a single object is unlawful, the entire contract is void.

2. Evidence ⊜60 — Parties presumed not to have entered into immoral relation.

In a suit to set aside as illegal a lease on the ground that part of the consideration was that the parties, though unmarried, should cohabit, it will not, in the absence of evidence or allegation to that effect, be presumed that the parties had entered into the immoral relation.

3. Landlord and tenant ⊜34(2)—Lessor may repudiate lease made in consideration of immoral relations, and have title quieted to remainder of term.

Where the parties to a lease agreed as one of the considerations that they should, though unmarried, cohabit, the owner of the land may, though she had begun the immoral relation, repudiate the lease and have her title quieted as to the remainder of the term, notwithstanding parties to an executed contract which is illegal will be left as the court finds them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Amelia Glos against J. A. McBride. From a judgment for defendant after the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Benjamin P. Oakford, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title. In addition to an allegation that plaintiff is owner of the land in fee simple and in possession thereof, it is alleged in the complaint that defendant, basing his right thereto upon a lease thereof made by plaintiff to defendant, the consideration of which "was in part that said plaintiff and said defendant (though not husband and wife) should live together on said parcel of land and should cohabit as man and wife," unjustly and without right claims an interest in the land adverse to plaintiff; followed by the usual prayer for relief. To this complaint the court sustained a general demurrer without leave to amend and gave judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] The ground of this ruling, as stated by the trial court, is that section 1608 of the Civil Code provides that "if any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the entire contract is void"; and that, since it appeared from the complaint that a part of the consideration for the lease was unlawful, its existence did not cast a cloud upon plaintiff's title. Conceding that no cloud is cast upon a plaintiff's title to land by an instrument which on its face discloses that it is void, we cannot in this case, since the lease is not exhibited by the record, assume the existence of such fact. On the contrary, upon the allegations of the complaint, the presumption is that on its face nothing appears affecting the validity of the instrument. It is the extrinsic facts alleged which render the lease void.

[2, 3] The chief ground upon which counsel for respondent insists upon the correctness of the ruling is that, as shown by the complaint, the contract had for its object the creation and continuance during the term of the lease, of an illicit relation between plaintiff and defendant, thus exhibiting her own turpitude, which constituted the consideration for the transfer of the leasehold. In other words, the complaint presents a case where the doors of the court are, as to both parties to the contract, closed; it will neither aid the one in the enforcement of the contract, nor give aid to the other in avoiding it. Abee v. Marr, 14 Cal. 210; Schmitt v. Gibson, 12 Cal. App. 407, 107 Pac. 571. While as to executed contracts of such nature, this is a rule of almost universal application, it is equally true that as to like contracts, which are executory, the law recognizes what is termed a locus penitentiæ accorded to a plaintiff, which, as applied to the facts here presented, is an opportunity to repudiate the agreement and refuse to be a party to the acts contemplated thereby. 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, p. 2043. Thus, it is generally held that a party to a wager, where the money is deposited with a stakeholder, may at any time before the event is determined repudiate the wager and demand the return of his money. Falkenburg v. Allen, 18 Okl. 210, 90 Pac. 415, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494; Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 670; Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 79, 80 Am. Rep. 110; Wright v. Stewart (C. C.) 130 Fed. 905.

Plaintiff, no doubt, intended to enter into the immoral relation and continue therein for the duration of the term of the lease, but persons may not be punished, either criminally or civilly, for wrongful intentions. It is the consummation of such intentions that subjects them to the effects of the law. As to whether plaintiff and defendant lived together or cohabited as man and wife in accordance with the agreement made is not disclosed by the complaint, and, since the doing so would be contra bonos mores, we cannot, in the absence of allegation to that effect, assume they did. Indeed, the presumption is to the contrary. Conceding, however, that she did enter upon the life with defendant, as contemplated in the agreement, we do not think it can be said her day of repentance was past. The contract contemplated a continuing immoral relation, which, in our opinion, even though entered upon, plaintiff, in the locus penitentiæ accorded to her, might at any time repudiate and discontinue; and while the law would afford her no relief for the use of the leasehold estate covering the expired portion thereof, it should, as to the unexpired term thereof, and upon a showing of repentance, abandonment, and discontinuance of the shameful relation, grant her redress. In our opinion, the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 685

WRIGHT-CALLENDER-ANDREWS CO. v. EATON. (Civ. 2935.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 22, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⟸64(2)—Automobile not furnishing of house placed with broker for sale; "completely furnished."

An automobile held not included as part of the property to be sold under an agreement with a broker to furnish a buyer for a house "completely furnished," except certain articles named, and the broker was not entitled to compensation where the purchaser furnished refused to buy where the automobile was not included.

2. Evidence ⟸460(5)—Parol evidence inadmissible to vary broker's contract.

In an action by a broker for compensation for furnishing a purchaser under a contract, whereby he was to furnish a purchaser for "property completely furnished," parol evidence was inadmissible to show that an automobile was to be included in the furnishings, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1858.

3. Evidence ⟸442(1) — Contracts importing whole agreement not added to by parol.

Where parties deliberately and solemnly put their agreement in writing, using language which imports a complete expression of the agreement, the law presumes that they have introduced into it every material item and term intended to be inserted therein, and parol evidence cannot be admitted for the purpose of adding other terms or items thereto, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1858.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by the Wright-Callender-Andrews Company against Marie S. Eaton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leonard B. Slosson and Slosson & Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action the trial court gave plaintiff judgment for services rendered in procuring a purchaser of certain real and personal property pursuant to the terms of a written contract executed by defendant, who appeals from the judgment.

The property is described in the contract as "3828 Wilshire Boulevard (city of Los Angeles), being lot 20 Western Wilshire Heights Tract. Property as is completely furnished except piano player, music, cuckoo clock, sewing machine and (picture) boat. Old silver, family pictures, pier glass and books." Within the time fixed therefor in said contract, plaintiff, claiming to have acted in pursuance of authority conferred thereby, and representing to him that the personal property included an automobile owned by defendant, presented a party ready, able, and willing to purchase the property, if the automobile was included, at the price specified. Defendant refused to transfer the automobile, by reason of which fact the proposed sale was not consummated. The question is whether the contract covered the automobile. The error of the court upon which appellant argues for a reversal occurred in the trial of this issue, as to which the court found adversely to defendant.

[1, 2] No mention of the automobile is made in the contract. Nevertheless, counsel for respondent argue that, since the property was located in the "fashionable Wilshire residence district," an automobile might very well be deemed a part of the furnishing of "property completely furnished." With equal propriety, as said by counsel for appellant, they might insist that an areoplane or pair of horses and carriage should be deemed a part thereof. We cannot believe the trial judge in making the findings was influenced in so doing by such argument; but that, deeming the case a proper one therefor, the court, over defendant's objection, and not for the purpose of reforming the contract, permitted the introduction of parol testimony, upon which, since the contract by its terms did not include the automobile, it is clear the court based its decision. In so doing we think it erred. Section 1856, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that—

"When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest, no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing, except in the following cases: (1) Where a mistake or imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings."

As stated, no such question is in issue here. This section further provides that, in ascertaining the proper construction of an instrument, other evidence as to the circumstances under which it was made may be received for the purpose of placing the judge in the position of those whose language he is to interpret; and further provides that where the contract is of doubtful meaning, or it is necessary to explain an extrinsic ambiguity, other evidence may be received.

[3] To our minds, the terms of the contract are perfectly clear, and it should be construed in accordance with the plain import of the language used therein. No reason was presented for the reception of parol evidence other than to add thereto terms which it did not, as written, include; and, as provided by section 1858, Code of Civil Procedure, when construing contracts of such character, "the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted." Including the automobile was clearly doing that which the judge is prohibited from doing by the provisions of the statute. Upon like evidence, since a written contract, however carefully drawn, would afford a party no protection, he could be completely divested of his substance. Authorities in support of the proposition would seem unnecessary. Suffice it to say that where parties deliberately and solemnly put their agreement in writing, using language which imports a complete expression of the whole agreement, the law presumes that they have introduced into it every material item and term intended to be inserted therein, and parol evidence cannot be admitted for the purpose of adding other terms or items thereto. Thompson v. Libby, 34 Minn. 374, 26 N. W. 1; Greenleaf on Ev., § 275; Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 26 Pac. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469. In our opinion, the court erred in admitting parol evidence upon which it based the finding that, under the terms of the contract, plaintiff was authorized to include in the sale of the property described in the contract the automobile, which was not specified therein.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 637

FEDERAL CONST. CO. v. RYAN, Superintendent of Streets. (Civ. 3325.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸306—Resolution as to street work sufficient as to bonds.

Resolution of intention to order street work done under Improvement Act of 1911, and Improvement Bond Act of 1915, stating that bonds would be issued as provided by the act, and reciting that "a" serial "bond," to represent unpaid "assessment" and bear interest, would be issued, held sufficient as incorporating the provisions of the act and therefore preventing property owner from being misled into belief one bond was to be issued for entire improvement.

2. Municipal corporations ⟸336(1) — Reference to bonds in prior proceedings confers jurisdiction on council to award contract.

Under Improvement Act 1911, § 61, as amended in 1915, requiring the first specific mention of amount of street improvement bonds to be included in the warrant, a general reference in prior proceedings adopting the provisions of the act is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the city council for the purpose of a resolution awarding contract to lowest bidder.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸336(1)—Council had jurisdiction to pass amended resolution of award of street work correcting prior reference to bonds.

Under Improvement Act 1911, § 16, as amended in 1915, city council had jurisdiction to pass amended resolution of an award of street work correcting reference to bonds in original resolution of intention to order work.

4. Municipal corporations ⟸336(1)—Resolution and notice of award of street work sufficient in recital of award to lowest bidder.

City council's resolution and notice of award of street improvement work under Improvement Act 1911, as amended in 1915, reciting respectively that contract was awarded to a company at prices named in its bid, and that the board of trustees awarded the contract to the lowest regular responsible bidder, the particular company, at the prices named for the work in its bid, held in substantial compliance with the law, in view of section 10.

Application for writ of mandate by the Federal Construction Company against William Ryan, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Paso Robles. Peremptory writ directed to issue.

Frank H. Powers and Heller, Powers & Ehrman, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Paul S. Honberger, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WELLER, J. Mandate to compel the respondent as street superintendent to execute a contract for the improvement of certain streets in the city of Paso Robles.

The petition recites that on January 19, 1920, the board of trustees of the city of Paso Robles passed a resolution of intention to order certain work done, under the provisions of the "Improvement Act of 1911" (St. 1911, p. 730), and "Improvement Bond Act of 1915" (St. 1915, p. 1464), and amendments thereto, and caused notice of the passage of the resolution to be published and posted according to law. No protests having been received, on the 4th day of February, 1920, the board adopted a resolution ordering the work to be done, and caused a notice inviting proposals for doing the work to be given, in accordance with the provisions of the acts above mentioned. Pursuant to that notice, petitioner presented its bid, and was found to be the lowest responsible bidder, whereupon the board, on February 24, 1920, passed a resolution awarding to petitioner the contract for doing the work.

By its resolution of intention, the board declared that serial bonds should be issued to represent the expenses of the improvement, specifying the rate of interest the bonds should bear, and also caused a similar description to be inserted in the resolution ordering the work to be done, as well as in all notices posted and published in connection with the prior proceedings; but no reference to bonds was contained in the resolution of award. On March 9, 1920, the city clerk posted a notice of award, which referred to the issuance of bonds substantially as did the resolution of intention. The owners of three-fourths of the frontage liable to be assessed for the improvement did not elect to take the work, and no person interested in the lands filed with the clerk a notice specifying any irregularity in the previous proceedings.

On April 5, 1920, the board adopted an amended resolution of award, including notice of the proposed issuance of bonds, and ordered the notice of award to be reposted and republished. In accordance with this order, the clerk posted notice of award on the 7th day of April, 1920, and caused it to be published.

On April 17, 1920, the petitioner presented to the street superintendent a contract for his signature, and tendered bonds duly approved, together with the necessary costs, all in accordance with the provisions of the act. Respondent declined to execute the contract, basing his refusal on the ground that the proceedings theretofore taken were void, and sets forth in his answer filed herein the reasons for his claim, which we will consider in their order.

1. That portion of the resolution of intention which declares that bonds shall issue, contains the recital:

"Notice is hereby given that a serial bond to represent unpaid assessment and bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum will be issued hereunder in the manner provided by the Improvement Bond Act of 1915."

[1] Respondent contends that reference to bonds in the singular vitiates the resolution, arguing that the property owner might be misled into the belief that one bond was to be issued to represent the cost of the entire improvement, and thus be unable to determine or segregate his individual liability. In answer to this it is sufficient to say that the resolution states that the bonds will be issued in the manner provided by the act, and thereby incorporates the provisions of the statute into the resolution.

Section 61 of the Improvement Act of 1911, as amended in 1915 (page 1464), reads as follows:

"When said city council shall determine that serial bonds shall be issued to represent the expenses of any proposed work or improvement under this act, it shall so declare in the resolution of intention to do said work, and shall specify the rate of interest which they shall bear. The like description of said bonds shall be inserted in the resolution ordering the work, in the resolution of award, and in all notices of said proceedings required by this act to be either posted or published; and also a notice that a bond will issue to represent each assessment of twenty-five dollars or more remaining unpaid for thirty days after the date of the warrant, or five days after the decision of said council upon an appeal, shall be included in the warrant provided for in section twenty-two of this act."

[2] The first specific mention of the amount of the bonds is to be included in the warrant; hence, a general reference in prior proceedings adopting the provisions of the act is sufficient to confer jurisdiction. In proceedings under the Vrooman Act,[1] which contains provisions similar in effect to the Improvement Act of 1911, it has been held that the city council may fix the term the bonds are to run at any time prior to the issuance of the warrant. Cohn v. Federal Construction Co., 171 Cal. 547, 153 Pac. 916.

[3] 2. It is claimed that the council had no jurisdiction to pass the amended resolution of award on the 5th of April, 1920, on the theory that it had exhausted its powers by the adoption of the original resolution of February 24, 1920. No authority is cited in support of this proposition, and we have found none. On the contrary, in our opinion, the act itself contemplates such a procedure as that taken by the board. Section 16 provides:

"At any time within ten days from the date of the first publication of the notice of award of contract, any owner of, or other person having any interest in any lot or land liable to assessment, who claims that any of the previous acts or proceedings, relating to said improvement are irregular, defective, erroneous or faulty, may file with the clerk of the city council a written notice specifying in what respect said acts and proceedings are irregular, defective, erroneous or faulty. Said notice shall state that it is made in pursuance of this section. All objections to any act or proceeding occurring prior to the date of the first publication of the aforesaid notice of award, in relation to said improvement, not made in writing and in the manner and at the time aforesaid, shall be waived; provided, the resolution of intention to do the work has been actually published and the notices of improvement posted as provided in this act."

[1] St. 1885, p. 147.

While there is no express authorization in the act for the correction of errors in the proceedings, the natural inference must necessarily be that it was intended that the council should have power to remedy defects occurring after it had acquired jurisdiction to order the work done, when its attention was directed to them. Any other conclusion would render the section nugatory; and we deem it our duty to construe the statute so as to carry into effect the intention of the Legislature as therein expressed.

At the time of the adoption of the amended resolution of award no rights of third persons had vested. It is as much to the interest of the property owner as of the contractor that the proper reference to the bonds be made in the proceedings wherever required, in order that he may legally avail himself of the election to pay his assessment in cash or to permit bonds to issue against his property. The effect of reposting the notice of award would be to extend the time within which the property owners might enter into the contract, and no possible injury could result therefrom.

[4] 3. It is urged that the resolution and notice of award are insufficient in that neither the resolution nor the notice contains a statement of the amount of the bid or the contract price. The resolution of award recited that the contract for doing the work was awarded to the Federal Construction Company "at the prices named in its bid." The notice of award as posted and published declared that the board of trustees "awarded the contract for said work to the lowest regular responsible bidder, to wit, Federal Construction Company, at the prices named for said work in said proposal or bid on file." This, we think, is a substantial compliance with the law. Section 10 of the act provides that the city council "may award the contract for said work or improvement to the lowest responsible bidder at the prices named in his bid." This was done, and nothing more was required. Any person interested could readily ascertain the contents of the bid by an inspection of the document on file in the clerk's office to which the notice of award refers.

No other points are made by respondent, and we believe the objections we have discussed are without merit.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; THOMAS, J.

47 Cal. App. 750

MITCHELL v. MERCHANTS' FIRE ASSUR. CORPORATION OF NEW YORK.

(Civ. 3283.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 27, 1920.)

Insurance ⟸621—Action on fire policy prematurely brought.

Where, under a fire policy, insurer was entitled to 20 days within which to accept or object to amount of loss claimed, and, in absence of objection, was deemed to have assented to amount claimed in preliminary proof, and such loss became payable 30 days from expiration of the 20 days, action instituted 48 days after furnishing a preliminary proof of loss was prematurely brought.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Rose D. Mitchell against the Merchants' Fire Assurance Corporation of New York, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. W. Hindman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover for loss incurred by fire and covered by a fire insurance policy issued to the plaintiff by the defendant. Judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

It was provided in the policy that—

"This company shall be deemed to have assented to the amount of loss claimed by the insured in his preliminary proof of loss, unless within twenty days after the receipt thereof, * * * the company shall notify the insured in writing of its partial or total disagreement with the amount of loss claimed by him. * * *"

Further provision was made for appraisal in case of disagreement of the parties as to the amount of loss. It was further provided:

"Loss when Payable. A loss hereunder shall be payable in thirty days after the amount thereof has been ascertained either by agreement or by appraisement; but if such ascertainment is not had or made within sixty days after the receipt by the company of the preliminary proof of loss, then the loss shall be payable in ninety days after such receipt."

The complaint alleged that on or about March 19, 1919, the plaintiff furnished the defendant with her proof of loss, and that the defendant refuses to pay the same, and has not paid the same or any part thereof. The complaint is silent as to any notice of disagreement as to the amount of loss, or any appraisal or attempt to obtain an appraisal.

The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and that demurrer was overruled. Thereafter the defendant filed its answer, in which it was denied "that any sum or sums of money were due, owing, or unpaid by the defendant to the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of this action, or at any other time or at all." The court found that—

"On March 19, 1919, and within the time and terms provided by said policy, plaintiff furnished the defendant with her proof of loss, but that defendant has at all times refused to pay the plaintiff any sum whatever under said policy, and that in truth and in fact by reason of said loss that the defendant became liable to pay the plaintiff the said sum of $350, being the reasonable value of the furniture and personal effects so destroyed."

On the record thus produced, consisting of the judgment roll alone, it appears that the action was instituted prematurely. The complaint was filed on May 5, 1919, which was only 48 days after the preliminary proof had been furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant was entitled to a period of 20 days within which to accept or object to the amount of the loss as claimed by the plaintiff. In the absence of any objection made, the company was "deemed to have assented to the amount of loss claimed by the insured in his preliminary proof of loss"; in other words, the amount was thus ascertained by agreement. Under those circumstances, the loss became payable in 30 days from the expiration of the 20 days. No right of action could accrue until the expiration of that period of 30 days. In Borger v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 24 Cal. App. 696, 142 Pac. 115, the action appears to have been based upon the same form of policy as that before the court in the case at bar; the complaint was subject to similar defects, and it was held that, the action having been commenced within less than 30 days after the expiration of 20 days from the presentation of the proofs of loss, the action was prematurely brought. On that ground the judgment was reversed. On the authority of that decision, and without discussing the other ground of appeal relied upon by appellant, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 781

LEWIS v. CRENSHAW et al. (Civ. 2946.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 28, 1920.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⟸212—Grantee and assignee of sellers' contract as security did not assume obligation of sellers.

Where the transactions between the sellers of land and a party obligated for them, whereby deed was made and delivered to such party, and assignment of the sellers' contract with a purchaser was made, were as security only, such party did not assume the obligation of the sellers toward the buyer.

2. Trial ⟸29(4)—Court's manner in making rulings did not deny plaintiff fair trial.

The trial court's manner in making proper rulings adverse to plaintiff laconically, decisively, and with great brevity did not prevent plaintiff from having full and fair consideration of his action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by E. P. Lewis against G. L. Crenshaw, the Brent Investment Company, a corporation, and the Crenshaw Security Company, a corporation. From judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. O. Graves, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. In this case, at the conclusion of the hearing of the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff, the court granted a motion for judgment of nonsuit as to Crenshaw Security Company. At the conclusion of all the evidence, the court directed the jury to find a verdict in favor of the defendant G. L. Crenshaw. The cause was not tried as to the defendant Brent Investment Company; that defendant apparently not having been required to answer the complaint of the plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment. Originally there were several suits brought against the same defendants by different individuals, all the claims being based upon similar facts and, by stipulation, all of said causes were agreed to be considered and determined at the trial had under the title first above given. As no useful purpose will be served in treating the matter otherwise, we will refer to the case in general as though there were but the one plaintiff interested herein.

In May, 1914, the plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant Brent Investment Company, a corporation, by which contract, in consideration of the initial payment of a certain sum of money and monthly payments thereafter to be made until the whole sum mentioned in the contract was discharged, the Brent Investment Company agreed to convey to the plaintiff a certain parcel of land.

Plaintiff made payment for a time of the various installments required, to the Brent Investment Company. A notice was then received by him, which was in part as follows:

"Your contract with the Brent Investment Company for the purchase of lot No. 52, in tract 909, has been turned over to us. * * * Your future payments must be made to us, and we wish you to be prompt according to the terms of your agreement. We wish you would bring your contract with you when you make next payment, so that we may compare amounts paid and see if the duplicate and original contracts agree. This will be a convenience to us as well as yourself. Yours truly, G. L. Crenshaw."

That notice was dated May 30, 1916, and for a number of months thereafter plaintiff made payments to Crenshaw, and received receipts for the account. After having so made payments to Crenshaw, plaintiff was notified by Crenshaw at his office that no more payments would be received, as there was some question about the title of the land. It appeared that on the 12th of October, 1911, Brent and his wife, who were evidently the owners of the entire tract, a parcel of which plaintiff had later contracted to buy, had created a lien by mortgage against the same to secure a promissory note in the sum of $29,507; that at about the time Crenshaw notified plaintiff that he would no longer receive payments on account of the contract referred to, foreclosure proceedings had been instituted on this mortgage. Having tendered payment of an installment, and meeting with Crenshaw's refusal to accept the same, plaintiff brought this action to recover back the money theretofore paid to Brent Investment Company and to Crenshaw. It was shown in evidence that Crenshaw had become surety on a bond for a large amount for the benefit of the Brents in connection with the leasing of property in the city of Los Angeles by the Brents; the lease transaction being wholly disconnected from the property affected by the contract of plaintiff. Crenshaw had been required to pay out a large amount of money—a sum in excess of $10,000—on account of his surety liability, and in order to protect him the Brents, at Crenshaw's suggestion and as security for the repayment of the amounts which Crenshaw had paid out under the bond referred to, executed their deed to the tract of land affected by the contract of plaintiff, conveying the same to Crenshaw, and also for the same purpose made assignment of the contracts of plaintiff and other similar holders. Crenshaw did not become a party to the contract of plaintiff, unless the effect of the assignment imposed that relation upon him. The evidence as heard by the court, however, was uncontradicted to the point that the transaction between the Brents and Crenshaw, whereby the deed was made and delivered and the assignment of the contract made, were as security only.

[1] It was upon this state of the evidence that the court held as a matter of law that Crenshaw did not assume the obligation of the Brents toward the plaintiff; and upon that evidence we cannot perceive why any different conclusion should be contended for. The plaintiff and the other contract holders made their contracts with the Brent Investment Company, relying upon the ability of that company to perform its obligations, with full knowledge or means by which knowledge might be obtained as to the condition of the title to the property contemplated to be conveyed. They made no new contract with Crenshaw; Crenshaw did not indorse his name upon the contracts as assuming the obligations imposed upon the vendors thereunder. The Brent Investment Company at all times remained liable as the contracting party and the only contracting party against whom the plaintiff was entitled to seek redress. If the plaintiff at the time of the transfer of the contract so made by the Brent Investment Company to Crenshaw had ascertained that the Brent Investment Company would be unable to comply with its contract, and had been persuaded and induced fraudulently by Crenshaw to continue to make payments, it is possible some cause of action might have arisen in plaintiff's favor. No such cause of action is claimed or pleaded. Nor was there anything in the evidence to show that plaintiff no longer placed reliance upon the Brent Investment Company because of any reputed insolvency, or that he had any knowledge which gave him reason to believe that Crenshaw was financially responsible, and his grantor was not. There was some testimony given on the part of the plaintiff and other contract holders to the effect that Crenshaw had stated that they would get their deed or their money back; but this was neither predicated upon any pleading proposing the issue suggested, nor upon any further evidence showing that the plaintiff was induced because of such representation to continue making payments which he would otherwse not have made or been legally bound to make. On the statement of the case as the record shows it and as we have epitomized it in the foregoing, it must at once be clear that no right of recovery in the plaintiff existed as against Crenshaw or the Crenshaw Security Company; hence the court was entirely justified in the action taken.

[2] An objection is made that the court erred in admitting certain testimony and excluding other evidence offered; further, that the peremptory manner of the trial judge prevented plaintiff from having full and fair consideration in the presentation of his case. The trial judge, it may be stated, in expressing his rulings, spoke laconically, decisively, and with great brevity. However much the abrupt manner of the judge may have been disconcerting to plaintiff's counsel, there is nothing to show that the disposition of the court was other than usual, or that any prejudice resulted to the plaintiff which prevented him from showing that the facts were different from those as we have stated them. The trial judge was headed in the right direction, and if he reached a legally logical conclusion, it makes little difference whether this end was arrived at by a short cut or otherwise.

We have examined all of the assignments for error, and are satisfied that no miscarriage of justice is expressed in the judgment as rendered.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(47 Cal. App. 785)

KROGH MFG. CO. v. CHURCHILL et al. (Civ. 3409.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 28, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂⊃992—Determination of qualifications of expert for court.

Whether a witness was qualified to testify as an expert as to the reasonable value of the mechanical labor expended on a pump, installation of which was sued for, was a matter for the determination of the trial court.

2. Evidence ⊂⊃543(2)—Witness qualified as expert on value of labor on pump.

In an action for installation of a pump, the trial court properly determined to be qualified as an expert on the reasonable value of the mechanical labor expended on the pump plaintiff's manager, shown to have been engaged in the pump and engine business for many years, and as designer and chief engineer of an iron works.

3. Evidence ⊂⊃558(1)—Question to expert relative to speed of pump in operation proper.

In an action for installation of a pump, question propounded to expert witness for defendants on cross-examination regarding the speed of the pump in operation in relation to the amount of water in the well held proper.

4. Appeal and error ⊂⊃1011(1)—Conflicting evidence for trial court.

In an action for installation of a pump, where there was competent evidence on each side as to whether the pump had been properly installed, the contradictions in the testimony, and the weight to be given each witness, were matters addressed to the discretionary consideration of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by the Krogh Manufacturing Company, a corporation, against H. C. Churchill and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants and cross-complainants appeal. Affirmed.

E. O. Leake and Goudge, Williams, Chandler & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Seth B. Smith, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,384, the value of a pump, installed on the defendants' ranch, pursuant to a contract for the purchase of the same, and for services and accessories in connection with its operation.

The defendants denied any indebtedness to the plaintiff, and alleged that, by reason of the poor quality of the materials used in it, the bad workmanship thereon, and the improper, negligent, and careless manner of installing the machinery which was the basis of the second and third counts of the complaint, the pump broke down, never at any time ran in a satisfactory manner or reasonably well, and was absolutely worthless to the defendants. By reason of these facts, defendants claimed to have suffered a loss of their lemon crop for the year 1913, amounting to the sum of $2,500; their orange and lemon groves being also damaged to the extent of $720, by reason of their being unable to secure water to irrigate the same. To these amounts defendants added the amounts of various repair bills, and by way of cross-complaint prayed for judgment against the plaintiff in the sum of $3,701.16.

The lower court found that the plaintiff installed the pump and machinery on the defendants' ranch in a first-class and workmanlike condition, and duly performed all the conditions of its contract, with the exception that the 8-inch cylinder, which the plaintiff first placed in the well, became broken, by reason of inevitable accident, whereupon plaintiff replaced it with a 7-inch cylinder; that the pump thus equipped was accepted by the defendants, and was, at the time of its installation and at the time of the trial, capable of pumping all the water in defendants' well, and of pumping 20 inches of water per minute, when pumping against a total head of 250 feet, as specified in the contract. It further found that the alleged breakdown, and interruptions in the operation of the pump, subsequent to its installation, were not due to any defects in materials used by plaintiff in the construction of the pump, and were not due to, and did not result from, the manner in which the pump was constructed or installed, but, on the contrary, were due to the negligent and careless manner in which the defendants operated the pump, and to the negligence of the defendants' employés in overhauling same, and were further aggravated by lack of water in the defendants' well. The further findings were against the allegations of the cross-complaint, and the plaintiff was awarded judgment for the price of the pump as installed, together with $74 for certain services, material, and pump accessories.

In seeking a reversal of the judgment, the appellants specify certain errors in the admission of testimony, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, and that the decision was against law.

[1-3] Whether or not the witness F. L. Emerson, manager of the plaintiff, was sufficiently qualified to testify as an expert as to the reasonable value of the mechanical labor expended on the pump, was a matter for the determination of the trial court, and in the instant case its determination of the question was undoubtedly correct. Before becoming manager for the plaintiff the witness had for many years been engaged in the pumping and engine business, and as a designer and chief engineer of an iron works. The question propounded to Joseph Darracq, a witness for the defendants on cross-examination, regarding the speed of the pump in operation in relation to the amount of water in the well, was proper. He was called by the defendants to testify to certain work he had done on the pump after its installation, and gave his expert opinion as to its construction. He also testified that in installing a pump it was necessary to regulate its capacity in accordance with the volume of water in the well. While, as argued by the appellants, the question of exhausting the water in the well was not an issue, the successful method of the installation and operation of the pump under varying conditions was testified to by the witness on his direct examination.

[4] As to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence, a careful reading of the testimony of the various witnesses, experts and others, called to testify as to the manner in which the pump was installed, and its working when in operation, develops only a marked conflict of testimony, which it was the province of the trial judge to consider and determine. There was competent evidence, on the one side, that the pump was workmanlike in its construction and properly installed in a first-class manner, and that if properly handled it would give satisfaction. On the other hand, witnesses for defendants testified to the contrary. The contradictions in the testimony and the weight to be given each of the witnesses was a matter addressed to the discretionary consideration of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; WELCH, Judge pro tem.

47 Cal. App. 768

MILLER v. HUNT, HATCH & CO.

(Civ. 2958.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 27, 1920.)

1. Sales ⟸214—Contract held a sale, and not mere agreement to sell oranges, to be gathered by buyer.

A contract for the sale of an entire crop of oranges on the trees, fruit to be picked by the buyer and removed before December 25th, is a sale, and not a mere agreement to sell; and, where the fruit matured before the final date fixed for removal, and it was necessary to gather the same to insure good condition of the oranges, the buyer must bear the loss, where it failed to gather the fruit.

2. Sales ⟸359(1)—Findings that orange crop had matured before frost, and that injured oranges could be separated warranted.

In an action by seller of a crop of oranges to recover unpaid balance of purchase price, evidence held to warrant finding that the good oranges, the crop having been previously damaged, could have been separated, and that, before the killing frost, the oranges were in a fit condition to gather.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by S. T. Miller against Hunt, Hatch & Co. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Farnsworth, McClure & Burke, of Visalia, for appellant.

Charles W. Braswell, of Lindsay, and Middlecoff, Scott & Ham, of Visalia, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover an unpaid balance alleged to be due on the sale by plaintiff to the defendant of a crop of oranges. Judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

In a written agreement, of date April 20, 1916, it was stated that the plaintiff "has this day sold" to the defendant his entire crop of oranges, now on the trees growing on his ranch at Lindsay, Cal., at a stated price per hundredweight. "All fruit is to be weighed at the Hunt, Hatch & Co.'s Packing house and paid for upon the delivery of duplicate weight receipts at their office at the said packing house at Lindsay. Hunt, Hatch & Co. are to furnish all boxes to put the said fruit in and agree to pick and haul the said fruit free of all costs to the said S. T. Miller. Fruit is to be of merchantable quality and picked at the option of the said Hunt, Hatch & Co., provided same is removed on or before December 25, 1916." The court found that on the 13th day of December 1916, there remained in plaintiff's orchard 380 trees which were unpicked; the amount of unpicked oranges thereon being 85,500 pounds. Finding 5 reads as follows:

"That on November 16, 1916, some of said oranges were injured by frost but at least 80 per cent. of said oranges were from November 16, 1916, to December 13, 1916, uninjured, and were ripe, in good condition, ready for harvest, and merchantable; that between said November 16, 1916, and December 13, 1916, defendant had sufficient time to pick and haul said ripe and merchantable oranges, and could and should have done so, but defendant failed and neglected to pick or haul or pay plaintiff for said merchantable portion of said fruit within said time or at all; that said merchantable oranges were readily and easily separable from the injured oranges; that on the night of December 13, 1916, said merchantable oranges were injured by frost, and later about January 6, 1917, were totally destroyed by frost, and the amount of merchantable fruit which the defendant so left on said trees unpicked and unharvested in a ripened and merchantable condition and quality, which defendant should and could have picked in such merchantable condition, was 68,400 pounds."

Finding 7 is as follows:

"That from November 16 to the 13th day of December, 1916, all of said 68,400 pounds of fruit above mentioned came up to the test of an ordinance of the board of supervisors of the county of Tulare, mentioned in the answer of defendant, and none of said 68,400 pounds had been frozen prior to December 13, 1916, to such an extent as to render the same wholly unfit or unfit at all for consumption or merchantable."

[1] Appellant contends that there was only an agreement for sale, and not an actual sale of the crop; and that under the contract the purchaser had the right, at his own option, to defer the time of picking the fruit until the 25th day of December, 1916, provided only that it was all picked not later than that date. The effect of this contention, if allowed as appellant insists upon it, would be that, even if the fruit was mature and ready for the market on and after November 16th, the loss caused by its destruction by frost at any time prior to December 25th would have to be suffered by the plaintiff. With this contention and its claimed effect we do not agree. In Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, the contract was for the sale of a crop of oranges not yet matured, and it was provided therein that the vendee "has this day bought" a described crop of oranges. It was provided that all of the oranges were to be taken by the purchaser on or before a stated date, and the vendor was to deliver at a certain station when wanted by the purchaser. Of this contract the Supreme Court said:

"Nor do we wish to be understood as holding that the title to the crop did not pass as soon as the contract was executed. The agreement in form imports a present sale, the thing sold was in existence and was identified and separate from other things."

The contract in that case limited the time of delivery in a similar manner as in the case at bar; the language used being, "all oranges to be taken by H. Fuller on or before April 1st, 1901." The court found that the oranges became ripe and ready for market in January, 1901, but the defendant refused to receive them until March, at which time, without fault of the vendor, some of the fruit had become unmerchantable by becoming too ripe and puffy for the market. Under these circumstances it was held by the Supreme Court that the contract should not be construed to give Fuller the absolute right to defer the delivery of the oranges to the injury of the plaintiff; that it must be construed to mean that the oranges were to be taken by Fuller on or before April 1, 1901, and at such reasonable time as should be necessary to insure their good condition with respect to maturity and fitness for the market. "The merchantability which was warranted by the contract, if there was any such warranty, was nothing more than a warranty that the fruit should be merchantable on the tree, and that when gathered in due season it should be handled and delivered with proper care. This being the case, under the findings we think the defendant was not justified in refusing to accept the oranges which he culled from the crop because of his claim that they were too ripe and puffy for the market." So here, assuming the facts to be as found by the court, the appellant was obligated to take the oranges on or before the 25th day of December, 1916, and at such reasonable time as should be necessary to insure their good condition.

[2] Appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to support the finding that the portion of the fruit which was marketable on November 16th was easily and readily separable from that which had been frozen, and that the evidence is not sufficient to support the finding that the fruit for which compensation has been allowed was merchantable from November 16 to December 13, 1916. From the testimony of defendant's manager, Mr. Sparks, it appears that in November or December, 1916, the defendant procured for use in its packing house a machine called a separator, which was used for the purpose of separating frozen fruit from the better fruit. This machine was first put in operation by the defendant on the 13th day of December. It does not clearly appear from his testimony that the oranges which were run through the separator at that time were from the Miller orchard, nor was the time stated at which such fruit had been picked. He states that the result of the operation was that the fruit was so badly frozen that it was hard to separate the best from the worst of it; it was so badly frozen that they could not separate the fruit properly. Mr. Sparks states that the first frost occurred on November 16th, and the second, which was the disastrous frost, occurred on December 13th. There is no evidence that fruit picked from the Miller orchard prior to December 13th could not have been successfully graded by means of this separator so as to pick out the frosted fruit from that which was not frosted. Frank Brann, horticultural commissioner, a county officer, who, in co-operation with an officer of the United States government, appears to have made examinations of the fruit in this packing house and exercised some authority over shipments, testified that all of the fruit from the Miller orchard that came into the defendant's packing house (although some of it was held up temporarily) was passed and certified as marketable before the 1st day of January. There was introduced in evidence an ordinance of the county of Tulare which prescribes a test of maturity of oranges, which is commonly known as the 8 to 1 test, and refers to the quantity of soluble solids in the orange as compared with the quantity of acid contained in the juice. The plaintiff testified that, on December 10th or 12th, he took from the orchard samples for testing, and had them tested by S. Kohner, a tester employed in the packing house of the Randolph-Martin Fruit Company. Mr. Kohner testified that the tests which he made of these samples were, on December 14th, 8.2 to 1, and on December 21st, 7.5 to 1. Mr. Sparks testified that the defendant caused some tests to be made by one E. G. Rooke about November 20th. The actual results of those tests were not given in evidence. Sparks says that they were "not satisfactory." Referring again to the same matter, he said:

"There was a difference in the fruit; some of the fruit on the outer side of the orchard gave a different test from trees inside the orchard."

In another place Mr. Sparks testified that none of it tested 8 to 1. It is to be observed here that there was a sharp contradiction between the testimony of plaintiff and the testimony of Sparks concerning certain conversations between them. It may be that the court, as was its right, placed the greater confidence in the testimony of the plaintiff as to those conversations, and for that reason discounted the testimony of Sparks on the subject of the 8 to 1 test and the other conditions of the fruit. The plaintiff testified that the fruit was, on the 20th of November, of fair size and color, and in good condition; that beginning on November 20th the defendant picked the fruit from the northern part of the grove, and all of that fruit was paid for; that the fruit was merchantable from November 20th to January 6th; that Mr. Sparks did not tell him at any time prior to December 25th that the fruit was frozen; that after December 25th, at a time when defendant had stopped picking from this orchard, plaintiff asked Mr. Sparks when he expected to finish packing the fruit, and Sparks replied that he would pack it as fast as he could get to it—as fast as he could handle it he would take it; that the plaintiff used fruit daily from this orchard at his house from the time they commenced picking on November 20th until after January 1st, and it was in good condition. Answering the question, "Was it frozen?" he replied, "Not that I could tell." Plaintiff further testified that the fruit on the south portion of the orchard which was not picked was as good as that on the northern portion which was picked by the defendant; that it was practically the same.

From the foregoing summary of a part of the evidence our conclusion is that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings of fact to which we have referred and which are challenged by appellant. There is on several of these points evidence to the contrary of that which has been stated, but this is no more than sufficient to produce a conflict in the evidence. On such state of the record, under the well-established rule, the findings must be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

47 Cal. App. 678

Ex parte PHILBROOK. (Cr. 906.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 22, 1920.)

1. Habeas corpus ⟸30(1)—Error in exercising jurisdiction not considered.

On habeas corpus, error in the exercise of jurisdiction cannot be considered.

2. Contempt ⟸34—Superior court may punish for contempt.

The superior court has power to punish for contempt under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209.

3. Contempt ⟸20—Refusal to obey lawful order of court in the court's presence.

A warrant of commitment, reciting that petitioner for habeas corpus in the presence of the court while in session refused to obey a court order to render a final account, that petitioner was by its order adjudged guilty of contempt therefore must be sustained, if at all, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, subd. 5, relating to disobedience of lawful judgment, order, or process of court.

4. Habeas corpus ⟸85(3)—Presumption that order was lawful in absence of counter showing.

Where petitioner for habeas corpus does not set forth the nature of his answer, nor state that in the answer there was any attempt either to render the account ordered or to show excusing facts or circumstances, it must be presumed that the court's order of commitment for contempt was in the lawful and proper exercise of the judicial functions (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 15 and 16).

5. Habeas corpus ⟸29—Record held to show ample grounds for commitment for contempt.

On petition for habeas corpus by one committed for contempt of court for refusal to obey an order to render an accounting and as administrator of petitioner's deceased wife's estate in another state for which the deceased wife was administratrix, record held to show ample grounds for the issuance of the attachment and commitment, unless the court was without jurisdiction.

6. Habeas corpus ⟸53—Every essential fact must be pleaded.

Every essential fact must be pleaded in a habeas corpus proceeding, as the allegation to the petition cannot be strengthened in opposition to the general presumption attaching to the regularity of judgments and orders of court.

7. Executors and administrators ⟸224—Right to accounting not barred by failure to demand within time.

Proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, take the place of a suit for an accounting in equity to compel an executrix's administrator to account in the former estate, and such are alternate remedies, and the statutory remedy is not barred by the expiration of time without a claim having been presented in the former estate.

8. Habeas corpus ⟸96—Proceeding held not appeal or error, and investigation confined to jurisdiction.

A proceeding in habeas corpus by petitioner committed for contempt is not in the nature of an appeal or writ of error, and inquiry must be confined wholly to the jurisdiction.

9. Executors and administrators ⟸464—Where removed executrix died before accounting, her administrator must account.

Where the letters of an executrix had been revoked during her lifetime, but she had made no accounting, her husband, as administrator of her estate, may be required to make the accounting, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1629, 1639.

Application by Horace W. Philbrook for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Alameda County to secure release of petitioner from custody under a commitment for contempt of court. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Horace W. Philbrook, of San Franciso, in pro. per.

Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., and Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, all of Oakland, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. A writ of habeas corpus was granted by Mr. Justice Lawlor of the Supreme Court returnable to this court, the petitioner claiming that he was restrained of his liberty under an order of the superior court in Alameda county adjudging him guilty of contempt upon his refusal to account as the administrator of the estate of his deceased wife, Florence E. Philbrook, who had formerly been the administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Humphrey A. Randall, ancillary administration of whose estate is pending in the superior court, the main estate having been administered, or being in the course of administration, in the state of Maine at the place of death of Randall.

In 1917 the letters of Florence E. Philbrook were revoked, and she was succeeded in her administration by Anne Bates Randall, the widow of Humphrey A. Randall. During her administration Mrs. Philbrook filed her first account, but did not file the final account of her administration. She died in November, 1918, and the petitioner herein was appointed and now is the administrator of her estate.

In December, 1919, Anne Bates Randall, the executrix of the Randall will, instituted proceedings under section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to compel the administrator of the estate of Florence E. Philbrook to render a final account of this intestate's administration of the Randall estate. He was cited to account, and his motion to dismiss the petition of the executrix and to quash the order of the court directing the issuance of the citation and the citation itself was denied. His demurrer to the petition for the citation was overruled, and he was granted leave to answer. The citation to account was continued from time to time until February 24, 1920. The court thereupon ordered the writ of attachment to issue, and Mr. Philbrook was arrested and brought into court on March 12, 1920. Upon his promise that he would appear in open court on March 22, 1920, and file a final account he was released upon his own recognizance. He failed to appear on March 22d and failed to file any final account. New attachment proceedings were instituted; Mr. Philbrook was again brought into court and directed to file his final account pursuant to the court's order, and upon his refusal so to do he was committed to the county jail until he should comply with the court's order.

The petitioner, in his lengthy briefs, set forth a great number of grounds to show that the commitment was without warrant of law.

[1] It is fundamental that on habeas corpus error in the exercise of jurisdiction cannot be considered. Ex parte Perkins, 18 Cal. 60; Ex parte Gibson, 31 Cal. 619, 91 Am. Dec. 546; Ex parte McCullough, 35 Cal. 97; Ex parte Cottrell, 59 Cal. 421; Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 156, 19 Pac. 275, 11 Am. St. Rep. 251; Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 19 Pac. 380, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263; Ex parte Joutsen, 154 Cal. 540, 98 Pac. 391; Matter of the Application of La Duc, 161 Cal. 663, 120 Pac. 13. While the writ was issued during the time the petitioner was under arrest under a writ of attachment, when it was served and he was released he was in custody not under the attachment but under a warrant of commitment. The return, however, shows that the order for the warrant of commitment and the warrant of commitment were but further steps in the same proceedings and upon the same facts as the arrest under the attachment under which the writ of habeas corpus was issued.

[2, 3] The superior court has power to punish for contempt. Code Civ. Proc. § 1209. The warrant of commitment recites that the petitioner in the immediate view, presence, and hearing of the court and while the court was in session, refused to obey the "order of the court that he render the said final account," and that the court at the same time by its order adjudged and declared the petitioner "had been guilty of a contempt of said court by his refusal to obey the said order of said court that he render said final account," so that the commitment must be sustained, if at all, under subdivision 5 of section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to disobedience of a lawful judgment, order, or process of the court.

[4] The particular contentions of the petitioner are three: (1) That the court was without general jurisdiction to require him to account as the administrator of his deceased wife's estate; (2) that if it ever had such jurisdiction, the right of Mrs. Randall to invoke it had been lost by her failure to present a claim against Mrs. Philbrook's estate and the lapse of time; and (3) that upon his answer to the citation the court was not empowered to make the order for the disobedience of which the commitment was made. These contentions will be considered in their inverse order.

If the court had jurisdiction of the proceeding and the right of the executrix of the Randall will had not been lost, there could be no question in regard to the propriety of the commitment. The original citation addressed to the petitioner was dated December 12, 1919. From the petition for the writ of habeas corpus it appears that the present petitioner appeared specially on December 30, 1919, and moved the court to dismiss the petition, and on January 9, 1920, he filed a demurrer to the original petition, which demurrer was overruled on January 20, 1920, time being granted to the petitioner here to answer, which was extended by seccessive orders until February 24, 1920, at which time the present petitioner filed his answer to the petition. The petitioner does not in any way set forth the nature of his answer, nor does he state that in the answer there was any attempt on his part either to render the account he was ordered to render or facts or circumstances shown to explain why the account was not rendered.

It is then alleged that on February 26, 1920, in his absence and without notice the superior court ordered the petitioner to be arrested on the ground that he had refused to obey the citation. The allegations of fact are interspersed with statements such as that the order was made "upon the utterly false and insolently impertinent ground that I have refused to obey the said citation." Such statements add nothing to the fact that the order of February 26, 1920, was made. In the absence of a showing of any facts concerning the contents of the answer filed by the petitioner, it must be presumed that the order of February 26th was in the lawful and proper exercise of the judicial function. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 16; People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 67.

[5] Attachment was issued on February 26, 1920, and the petitioner was arrested under the attachment and brought before the court on March 12, 1920. It appears from the copy of the order made on the last-mentioned day that it was ordered that Mr. Philbrook render and file the final account of the sums of money and other property of the Randall estate for which Florence E. Philbrook, deceased, as such administratrix, was chargeable and accountable to said estate. The order recites that "upon the stipulation and promise of the said Horace W. Philbrook, the said administrator appearing in propria persona, and upon the stipulation and promise of the said Lloyd M. Robbins, Esq., his said attorney, made in open court, that the said Horace W. Philbrook will, upon the 22d day of March, 1920, at 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, personally file said final account in open court, in department 4, by delivering the same to the clerk thereof, and the said Lloyd M. Robbins, Esq., his said attorney then and there waiving any irregularities growing out of said continuance and at the request of the said Horace W. Philbrook, said administrator, and of his said attorney said Lloyd M. Robbins, Esq.," it was ordered that the petitioner here be released on his own recognizance until March 22, 1920, at which time he was ordered to appear before the court to render and file the final account. It is contended by the petitioner here that the promise which he admits was made under the conditions stated was made under duress, because he claims he was illegally under arrest. The claimed illegality of that arrest will be considered under the other two contentions of the petitioner. He did not appear on March 22d in accordance with his promise, and did not render the account he was then ordered to render. The attachment under which the petitioner was arrested for disobedience of the order of March 12, 1920, was issued on March 26, 1920, and the petitioner was arrested. The writ of habeas corpus was issued on March 24, 1920. The petitioner was arrested on that day, and was taken before the court, and the order of commitment was made. The entire record shows ample ground for the issuance of the attachment and the commitment if the petitioner's contentions in regard to the two jurisdictional questions are not well taken.

[6] The petitioner alleges that Florence E. Philbrook died on November 17, 1918, and that the petitioner was duly appointed administrator of her estate and qualified as such administrator on Janpary 9, 1919. There is no allegation that he ever published notice to creditors in said estate, but it is argued that it must be presumed that he did what he should have done, and therefore that the time for presentation of a claim on the part of the estate of Randall must have expired between the time of his qualification as administrator of the estate of Florence E. Philbrook and the issuance of the citation on December 12, 1919. It is a fundamental rule of law that every essential fact must be stated in a pleading, and this is true even in a habeas corpus proceeding. The allegations of the petition cannot be strengthened by this contention in opposition to the general presumption attaching to the regularity of judgments and orders of courts.

[7, 8] Even though it appeared that notice to creditors had been given in all respects as required by law in the estate of Philbrook, the petitioner would be in no better position on this branch of the case. He relies on In re Smith, 108 Cal. 115, 40 Pac. 1037, to support his proposition that if the time for presentation of claims expired without a claim having been presented on the part of the Randall estate, it is barred forever. Without making lengthy analysis of the opinion in Re Smith, it is sufficient to show that it does not sustain the petitioner's contention. In that opinion it was said that it was the duty of the surviving executor "to have presented a claim in his brother's estate, or to have compelled an accounting of his brother's trust in equity." In re Smith, 108 Cal. 121, 40 Pac. 1039. At that time section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure had not been adopted, but as was determined in King v. Chase, 159 Cal. 420, 115 Pac. 207, proceedings under that section take the place of the suit for accounting in equity. Under the decision in Re Smith, the executrix of the will in the Randall estate had open to her alternative remedies, and she is pursuing one of those remedies. Furthermore, the present proceeding in this court is not in the nature of an appeal or writ of error, but the investigation is confined solely to the question of jurisdiction.

[9] The principal contention of the petitioner is that because the letters of administration originally granted to Mrs. Philbrook in the estate of Randall were revoked before her death, there is no jurisdiction in the superior court in the estate of Randall to require the personal representative of Mrs. Philbrook to account. Prior to 1905, the statutes of this state contained no provision authorizing the superior court sitting in probate to require or settle accounts. King v. Chase, supra. Under that case, the sole method of requiring such an account is under the provisions of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It provides that if any executor, administrator, or guardian dies, upon petition of the successor of such deceased executor, administrator, or guardian, the court may compel the personal representative of the deceased executor, administrator, or guardian to render an account of the administration of their testator or intestate, and must settle such account as in other cases. Section 1629 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that where the authority of the executor or administrator ceases or is revoked for any reason, he may be cited to account. After the revocation of the letters of Mrs. Philbrook, proceedings were instituted to require her to file her final account. These proceedings terminated by her death. The present proceedings are under section 1639, Code of Civil Procedure. The contention of the petitioner is that he is not the personal representative of a deceased administrator, for the reason that Mrs. Philbrook had ceased to be the administratrix of the estate of Randall prior to her death. While her letters had been revoked in her lifetime, and she had no further authority to act as administratrix, she had not rendered her final account, and had not been discharged as administratrix. The liability of Mrs. Philbrook was her liability as administratrix. It appears to this court that to construe section 1639, Code of Civil Procedure, in accordance with the petitioner's contentions would be extremely narrow, and the facts of this case as disclosed by the record support the construction placed upon the section by the superior court of Alameda county.

The multiplicity of other contentions made by the petitioner do not appear to require mention. They have been examined, and in the opinion of the court, none of them warrants the release of the petitioner on this proceeding.

It is ordered that the writ be discharged, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Alameda county.

We concur: BRITTAIN, J.; NOURSE, J.

47 Cal. App. 575

KIBBE et al. v. GRAVES et al.

GRAVES v. McMAHAN et al.

(Civ. 3369.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=612(2)—Judge's certificate must be attached to transcript.

Where the judge's certificate is not attached to transcript in accordance with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, only the certificate of the clerk being attached, the appeal must be considered merely as an appeal upon the judgment roll alone.

2. Judgment ⊂=585(5)—Not res adjudicata under changed conditions.

A judgment, in an action by one holding land in trust for benefit of certain creditors to enjoin sale of land under an execution issued on a judgment in an action against the debtor, denying such trustee an injunction, and stating that the sheriff could sell the debtor's beneficial interest therein, was not res adjudicata in an action by a purchaser for value from the trustee to quiet title and to restrain the sheriff from executing a deed to purchaser at the execution sale, for at the time of the first injunction suit, the debtor had a contingent beneficial interest, contingent upon the possibility that it would not be necessary for the trustee to sell all of the land to satisfy the debts set out in the trust agreement, and, by the trustee's sale of all the land, the debtor's beneficial interest in the land was wiped out.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Susie M. Kibbe and others against Amy Graves and another in which the named defendant filed a cross-complaint against Thomas T. McMahan and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and orders denying new trial and refusing to vacate judgment, defendants and cross-complainant appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. M. Ackerman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

C. Franklin Baxter and A. J. Mitchell, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in an action to quiet title to certain real estate in the county of Los Angeles, and also from orders denying a new trial and refusing to vacate the judgment.

[1] The respondent, at the outset, objects to a consideration of the reporter's transcript for the reason that the judge's certificate is not attached thereto, in accordance with the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended that as only the certificate of the clerk is attached to the transcript, and as the clerk is only qualified to certify to the judgment roll, therefore this appeal must be considered by this court merely as an appeal upon the judgment roll alone. We think this objection is well taken, and that the appeal can be considered only upon the judgment roll. Christenson Lumber Co. v. Seawall, 157 Cal. 405, 108 Pac. 276; Knoch v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 20, 124 Pac. 997; Lane v. Tanner, 156 Cal. 135, 103 Pac. 846. However, in the present case, as pointed out by the appellant, the consideration of the judgment roll involves a consideration of practically all the material evidence contained in the reporter's transcript. The transcript contains the judgment roll in the present action, and also a grant deed, judgment rolls in two prior actions, and a sheriff's return upon execution in yet another action between the parties. These documents are substantially set out, in their legal effect, in the pleadings, and the facts with reference to them were found by the court. The effect of judgments in cases Nos. B-38190 and B-40999 are pleaded, the grant deed from McMahan, trustee, to the plaintiffs is referred to in the pleadings, and is described therein, except as to the consideration stated in said deed. The recital of a consideration of $36,641.85 in said deed (which deed is set out in the transcript) is the one point excluded from our consideration upon this appeal by the absence of the judge's certificate, which the appellant contends is material to her case. It may not be inappropriate for us to say, in passing, that we think a consideration even of this matter would not change our determination in any way for the reasons which shall appear hereinafter.

The facts of the case are complex. Many matters are set up in the pleadings which occurred in actions between the same parties previous to this action, and in the interest of clarity, we shall discuss the events as found by the court, in the order of their occurrence, and without regard to the order in which they are pleaded.

On August 21, 1915, one Florence E. Rickershauser was the owner of the real property involved in the present action. At that time she was insolvent, and executed a deed to one McMahan covering said property, which conveyance was duly recorded on December 3, 1915. On August 27, 1915, McMahan executed a declaration of trust with reference to said property, declaring that he held the same, not in his own right, but as trustee for certain creditors of the grantor, the names of the creditors and the amounts of their claims being set out in the declaration of trust; that he held the same for the benefit of said creditors with power to manage and sell said property and to apply the proceeds to the payment of said debts, and to pay the balance, if any, over to the grantor, Florence E. Rickershauser.

On May 18, 1916, defendant Amy Graves instituted an action (No. B–38190) against E. E. Denton and Florence E. Rickershauser, and recovered a judgment therein for $3,474.24. On July 11, 1916, a writ of execution was issued upon said judgment, and the sheriff levied upon the property involved herein, as the property of Florence E. Rickershauser, and published a notice of sale to be held on August 31, 1916. On August 8, 1916, McMahan instituted an action (No. B–40999) against the sheriff to restrain him from selling said property, and alleged that the property was held by him in trust for the benefit of certain creditors of Florence E. Rickershauser, and that Florence E. Rickershauser had no right, title, or interest therein. In this action Amy Graves intervened, and by her complaint in intervention and the answer thereto there was put in issue the questions of the validity of the deed from Florence E. Rickershauser to McMahan, and the validity and purposes of the trust declared by him to attach to said property. It was adjudicated in that action that the conveyance from Rickershauser to McMahan was bona fide and not in fraud of creditors; that it was impressed with a trust in accordance with the trust declaration hereinbefore referred to; that Florence E. Rickershauser was entitled to whatever beneficial interest remained in the trust property after the payment of the claims enumerated in the trust declarations, and that McMahan was therefore not entitled to a permanent injunction against the sheriff to restrain him from selling whatever beneficial interest Florence E. Rickershauser had in the property.

Thereafter, in pursuance of the trust agreement, the property was sold by the trustee, McMahan, on July 30, 1917, and the sale confirmed by the court, and the purposes of the trust accomplished by the payment of the debts. On August 30, 1917, the sheriff proceeded with the execution sale to satisfy the judgment in said action No. B–38190, in accordance with the judgment in case No. B–40999. Amy Graves purchased at said sale, all the right, title, and interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in and to said property. A certificate evidencing said sale was issued to the purchaser by the sheriff, but a deed has not yet been executed by the sheriff conveying said interest so purchased. It will be observed from this statement of facts that before Amy Graves made her purchase at the sheriff's sale, the property had already been sold to the plaintiffs under the power given in the trust agreement, and the proceeds from said sale had been used in the extinguishment of the debts of Florence E. Rickershauser, the said sale under the trust deed had been confirmed by the court, and the trustee discharged, according to the allegations of the pleadings and the findings of the court. At the time Amy Graves purchased the beneficial interest of Florence E. Rickershauser she had notice of the conveyance to plaintiffs made under the power contained in the trust agreement, as said conveyance to plaintiffs was duly recorded.

All of the above facts are preliminary to a discussion of the present suit, but they all appear from the pleadings and findings in the present action. In the present action the plaintiffs, who are the grantees of McMahan under the power given him in the trust agreement, seek to quiet title to the land against the defendant, and they also set out in their complaint the facts regarding the execution sale under which the right, title, and interest of Florence E. Rickershauser was sold to Amy Graves, and allege that the sheriff will execute a deed to said Amy Graves on August 30, 1918, in consummation of said sale, unless restrained by the court, and that such deed, if executed, will cloud the title of the plaintiffs to their property, and they ask that the sheriff be restrained from executing this deed. In other words, the plaintiffs seek to litigate the question of whether or not Florence E. Rickershauser had any beneficial interest in the land in controversy at the time of defendant's purchase, and to restrain the sheriff from executing the deed to defendant until such matter may be determined, so as to keep unclouded the title of the plaintiffs to the land. It is also alleged that the value of the property is something over $30,000, and that the interest of Florence E. Rickershauser was sold at sheriff's sale for about $2,600, and plaintiffs offer to redeem from said sale if it be adjudged that Florence E. Rickershauser had any beneficial interest in said property at the time of the purported sale to Amy Graves. It is also alleged that the plaintiffs purchased the property in good faith from Thomas T. McMahan, trustee, and paid therefor $33,641.85. Amy Graves filed an answer, denying the title of plaintiff and setting up title in herself by virtue of the execution sale. She also makes various allegations in her answer and cross-complaint, as to matters decided in action B–40999 with reference to the fraud of Florence E. Rickershauser in conveying to McMahan, and the validity of McMahan's conveyance to plaintiffs, all of which we need not discuss here, as these questions were decided adversely to the defendant Amy Graves in said action No. B–40999, and such matters are res adjudicata as between these parties.

The trial court in the present action issued a permanent injunction restraining the sheriff from clouding the title of the plaintiffs by issuing the deed to the defendant.

[2] One of the main contentions of the appellant is that the injunction should not have been issued, because she asserts that it was decided in said action B–40999 that the sheriff might proceed with the sale and sell the beneficial interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in the property. The facts bearing upon this question as they existed at the time of the determination in action B–40999 and as they exist in the present action are materially different, and therefore the question is not res adjudicata here. In action B–40999, McMahan was the plaintiff. He held the legal title then to the property in controversy, holding the same under specific trusts as found by the court, and Florence E. Rickershauser was a possible beneficiary under the trust. She had a contingent interest in the property, for at that time it had not yet been sold under the power given to the trustee. This possible beneficial interest of Florence E. Rickershauser was an asset, upon which it was proper for Amy Graves to levy at that time, and she could not be restrained from doing this. If it had been necessary to sell only a part of the property to satisfy the debts set out in the trust agreement, then the residue would have belonged to Florence E. Rickershauser under the terms of the trust agreement, and her contingent interest would have become vested. This contingent interest was something which could have been reached by the judgment creditor of said Florence E. Rickershauser. In the present action, however, the situation has changed. McMahan no longer holds the property under a trust in which Florence E. Rickershauser has any possible interest. The property has been sold. Plaintiffs have purchased the property at the trustee's sale. They allege and the court found that they paid value for it. There is no longer in existence any interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in the property, for it was necessary to sell all of the property to pay the debts. The error of the appellant is in assuming that, when McMahan sold under the trust deed to the plaintiffs in execution of the trust, the plaintiffs took only the legal title, subject to the beneficial interest of Florence E. Rickershauser. The plaintiffs took both the legal and equitable title—the full and complete title, discharged of all trusts. This being true, the interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in the property, became changed into an interest in the proceeds of the sale, provided any surplus existed after the purposes of the trust had been fulfilled. Whether there is such a surplus, and, if so, who is holding it, and whether or not Amy Graves may levy upon it, are questions not in issue here. We are dealing merely with the title to this real property. As it has been found that it was regularly and properly sold to the plaintiffs for value in execution of a valid instrument of trust, the interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in said property is forever wiped out, and there was nothing, at the time of the purported sale by the sheriff, to convey to the defendant Amy Graves. In other words, the issuance of the deed by the sheriff would be a meaningless proceeding, conveying nothing, and merely involving the plaintiffs in lawsuits to clear the record. Whatever interest Florence E. Rickershauser may have had in the property was converted into an interest in the proceeds of the sale, if such proceeds were more than the amount necessary for the payment of the debts. Appellant, however, does not attempt to pursue this possible interest in the proceeds of the sale, but insists upon having the property. It is for this reason that it becomes immaterial to the appellant that we may not consider upon this appeal the recital in the deed from McMahan to plaintiffs of the consideration of $36,641.85—$3,000 more than the amount of the debts specified in the trust declaration. Even though it be conceded that the trustee received for the property more than the amount of the claims specified in the declaration of trust, and that, therefore, there was a balance due Florence E. Rickershauser, yet we are not concerned with that balance here, and we do not see how the injunction granted in the present case interferes in any way with defendant's right to pursue said money if it exists. The injunction restrains the sheriff "from executing a deed in favor of the said Amy Graves which if executed would purport to convey to her any beneficial interest of Florence E. Rickershauser in and to the land or any part thereof involved in this action."

One further point is argued by the appellant, which has reference to the descriptions of the property contained in the various instruments involved in this action. The point is made merely with reference to the last parcel of real property set out in the complaint, parcel G. This parcel of land when it was conveyed by Florence E. Rickershauser to McMahan, trustee, was described as follows:

"An undivided one-half interest in lots 1, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16 and 24 in block 15 of the Breen tract, Wilmington."

This same description was used in the deed from McMahan to plaintiffs; it was also used in the complaint to quiet title herein. It was the description found by the court to cover the land in controversy, in its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and in its judgment herein. It is the description contained in the injunction against the sheriff, and he is enjoined from executing a deed to defendant Graves of land described in that manner.

However, in the cross-complaint of Amy Graves filed herein, in which she sought to quiet title to this land to have the deeds from Rickershauser to McMahan, and from McMahan to plaintiffs, declared void, this particular parcel of land is described as follows:

"An undivided one-half interest in lots 1, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16 and 24 of the Breen tract as per book fifteen, page forty-two of maps."

The execution in action No. B–38190 had been issued against this parcel described in this manner, and the sale by the sheriff was made to the defendant Graves under this description.

Because of this variation in the descriptions of the 10 lots in the Breen tract, appellant is taking the position that the property to which the plaintiffs are entitled under the deed from McMahan, and under the decree of the court quieting title, is not the same property under which execution was issued in action B–38190, and not the same property which defendant Graves purchased at the sheriff's sale. Therefore they contend that, regardless of the judgment quieting title according to the prayer of plaintiffs' complaint, defendant Graves is entitled to a deed to 10 lots in the Breen tract. There is nothing in the record from which this court can determine whether these certain 10 lots "in the Breen tract" and the 10 lots numbered the same "in block 15 of the Breen tract" are the same lots. If they are not, then obviously defendant may have her deed to the lots "in the Breen tract," while the plaintiffs have their title quieted to the lots "in block 15 of the Breen tract." But it requires no modification of the judgment to bring about such a result, because the injunction merely restrains the sheriff from executing a deed to these certain lots "in block 15 of the Breen tract." It in no way interferes with his action in executing to the defendant Graves a deed to any different lots "in the Breen tract," which she may have purchased.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; BRITTAIN, J.

47 Cal. App. 583

BUXTON v. INTERNATIONAL INDEMNITY CO. (Civ. 3366.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1920.)

1. Insurance ⟸151(1) — Letters written by insurer held part of insurance contract.

An agreement contained in a letter written by an insurance company as to what a policy against theft, robbery, or pilferage should cover, which was relied on by insured, held to become a part of each and every contract of insurance entered into between the parties after its date, unless expressly excluded.

2. Contracts ⟸9(1)—Technical terms not required.

It is not necessary that parties to a contract should express themselves in the most technical and precise terms; it being sufficient if their meaning clearly appears, in view of Civ. Code, § 3401.

3. Insurance ⟸425—Word "steal," in agreement as to theft policy, included conversion by conditional vendee.

An insurance company's agreement that its policy should cover theft of automobile by vendee in possession under conditional sale held to include embezzlement or unlawful conversion by such a vendee; "stealing" being a larger term than robbery, and including unlawful appropriation of things which are not technically a subject of larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Steal.]

4. Action ⟸38(2)—Complaint seeking to reform and to recover on contract states one cause of action.

A complaint seeking to revise or reform a contract, and also to recover on or enforce the same, states but one cause of action.

5. Insurance ⟸635—In action on theft policy, allegation as to embezzlement sufficient.

An allegation in an action on a theft policy that conditional vendee of an insured automobile removed the same from the state, and ever since has and does now conceal the same, with the intent to injure and defraud the plaintiff, was an allegation of sufficient facts to constitute embezzlement, under Pen. Code, § 504a.

6. Pleading ⟸68—Allegation on information or belief sufficient.

An allegation of material facts on information or belief is a sufficient allegation, under Code Civ. Proc. § 446.

7. Pleading ⟸205(2)—Allegation on information or belief sufficient as against general demurrer.

In a vendor's action on an insurance policy protecting his equity in an automobile, allegations that the purchaser without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, removed the automobile from the state, and conceals the same with the intent to injure and defraud plaintiff, and that the purchaser had converted the automobile, though made on information and belief, were sufficient, where objection was by general demurrer.

8. Insurance ⟸559(1)—Insurer waived proof of loss by denying liability.

Where insured notified insurer in writing of the loss or disappearance of an automobile, and within 60 days from the date of the loss the insurer denied liability on the policy on the ground that it did not cover embezzlement or wrongful conversion, proof of loss was waived, although insurer did not have in contemplation a letter of the company which modified the policy, so as to include conversion by a conditional vendee; the two instruments constituting one contract.

9. Trial ⟸396(3)—Finding as to intent of parties to contract held not outside issues.

In an action under a policy against theft, etc., a finding of the trial court with relation to the intention of the parties to the contract in using the word "steal" in a letter modifying the policy was not outside the issues, where the plaintiff alleged that defendant delivered a policy of insurance against all direct loss or damage which he might sustain, caused by the wrongful conversion of an automobile by a vendee under an executory contract; the court necessarily determining the meaning of such word when construing the contract.

10. Insurance ⟸665(4)—Evidence justifying finding that third party embezzled automobile.

In action against an insurance company to recover under a policy by reason of embezzlement of an automobile by a conditional vendee, evidence held to justify a finding that the conditional vendee converted the automobile to his own use, and removed it from the state, and retained and concealed the same, with intent to injure and defraud the plaintiff.

11. Insurance ⟸665(1)—Insured required to prove case only by preponderance of evidence.

An action to recover under a policy against theft is a civil action, and plaintiff is required to prove his case only by a preponderance of the evidence; the rule being the same as it is in civil cases generally.

12. Insurance ⟸506—Insured may recover expenses of attempting to recover stolen property.

In an action under a policy of insurance against conversion of an automobile by a conditional vendee, plaintiff was entitled to recover money paid to a detective agency in attempting to recover the automobile, where the policy provided that any act of the assured in recovering, saving, and preserving the property should be considered as done for the benefit of all concerned, and all reasonable expenses should constitute a claim, etc.

13. Insurance ⟸503—Policy insuring dealer's equity in conditionally sold automobile entitled insured to interest on payments due.

Under a policy of insurance undertaking to protect a dealer's equity in automobiles sold under conditional contract and embezzled by conditional vendees, insured was entitled, on conversion of a car by a vendee, to recover the unpaid installments, plus interest thereon, where the terms of the conditional contract of sale provided for the payment of interest on all deferred payments from the date of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Lynn C. Buxton against the International Indemnity Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. Blackstock, Edward M. Selby, and W. I. Gilbert, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John B. Yakey, of Los Angeles, Jack M. Hendrick, of Trinidad, Colo., for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to recover upon a contract of insurance. The court found that the contract of insurance entered into between the parties to this action consisted of a written agreement in the form of a letter, dated June 8, 1916, signed by the secretary of the defendant company, and addressed to the plaintiff, and of a policy of insurance set out in the complaint.

Plaintiff was a dealer in automobiles, and entered into a contract with one Suttle, by which Suttle was to purchase a Stearns-Knight automobile for $2,250; the purchase price to be paid in installments as provided in the contract, and the automobile to remain the property of the vendor until all payments had been made. Plaintiff applied to the defendant for insurance upon this automobile so contracted to be sold, and a policy was issued by the defendant on June 12, 1917. The insured named in the policy was "W. A. Suttle and/or N. R. Vail." According to the testimony and the findings, at the time of the issuance of the policy, the automobile covered thereby was the property of the plaintiff, and said N. R. Vail had no interest whatever therein; but his name was inserted in the policy at the suggestion of the defendant's agent, because plaintiff stated to said agent of the defendant that Vail would advance money upon this purchase contract. The premium upon the policy was paid by the plaintiff, and the policy was delivered to him. Vail for some reason did not advance money upon the contract, and on June 26, 1916, an indorsement was made on said policy by the defendant company that it had received notice that the interest of Vail in the policy had been assigned to plaintiff, and loss, if any, was payable to W. A. Suttle and/or Lynn C. Buxton, as their interests may appear. Later the policy was assigned by plaintiff to T. E. Newlin as collateral security, and this assignment was approved by the insurance company. After the loss of the automobile, Newlin assigned his interest in said policy to plaintiff.

The testimony upon which the findings of the trial court are based shows that prior to June 8, 1916, Mr. Hallenbeck, who was soliciting business for the defendant, had a conversation with the plaintiff regarding his insurance business. Hallenbeck was seeking plaintiff's business, and plaintiff complained to him about the technical defenses raised by insurance companies and the inadequate protection given by their policies, and told him that he desired to be fully protected in all cases of lease contracts. Hallenbeck promised that his company would fully protect the plaintiff if he would insure his automobiles with it, and stated, according to the plaintiff's testimony, that the policies of his company would be protection against "fire, theft, and wrongful conversion," and that he would have the company write to plaintiff to this effect. In accordance with this understanding, on June 8, 1916, H. Perk, Jr., secretary of defendant company, wrote to the plaintiff as follows:

"I wish to advise you that the International Indemnity Company will from this date extend policies on all cars in which you may have an equity to cover any claims arising under the following conditions: * * * Third. If the conditional buyer of an automobile, or any member of his immediate family, should steal any automobile insured under our policies, and thereby commit a felony, upon warrant being secured for the arrest of such party or parties, the company hereby agrees that your equity in any automobile insured by this company will be fully protected."

Plaintiff's secretary testified that reliance was placed upon this letter, and policies of insurance were ordered from the defendant company with this understanding. This instrument was never recalled, and plaintiff had received no notice, at the time the policy in suit here was issued, nor thereafter, that this communication was not in full force and effect.

[1] On or about September 15, 1917, Suttle, the vendee of the car, disappeared from Los Angeles, taking the car with him. The evidence regarding his alleged misconduct we shall discuss later. Our first consideration is the contention of the appellant that the evidence does not support the finding of the trial court that the two documents mentioned here—the letter of June 8, 1916, and the policy issued June 12, 1917—constitute one contract. We think it clearly appears from the testimony of the plaintiff and his secretary that the policy was taken out in reliance upon and in consideration of the agreement made in the letter of June 8, and that said letter became a part of each and every contract of insurance entered into between the parties after its date, unless expressly excluded from said contracts. The policy of insurance itself provides, among other things, insurance against—

"theft, robbery, or pilferage, excepting by any person or persons in the assured's household or in the assured's service or employment whether the theft, robbery, or pilferage occur during the hours of such service or employment or not, and excepting also the wrongful conversion or secretion by a mortgagor or vendee in possession under mortgage, conditional sale, or lease agreement. * * *"

[2] It was the contention of the plaintiff upon the trial that the language hereinbefore quoted from the letter of June 8 was intended to obviate the exception italicized above with reference to wrongful conversion or secretion by vendee in possession under conditional sale; and that the language of said letter, "If the conditional buyer * * * should steal any automobile insured under our policies, * * * your equity will be fully protected," was intended by the parties and understood by them to cover wrongful conversion by said conditional buyer; that the word "steal" is used in its broad, general sense, and not in the technical sense of larceny. Plaintiff asked that the portion of the contract of insurance appearing in the letter be reformed to express the true intent and understanding of the parties. The court found that the word "steal" was used by the parties to express the idea of wrongful conversion, and reformed the contract accordingly.

The matter could have been disposed of, as pointed out by respondent, under the power of the court to interpret contracts, for it appears from the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses that the word "steal" must have been used by the parties in its broad and colloquial sense. It is unlikely that the plaintiff would have cared for an extension of insurance to cover a contingency which is almost impossible of occurrence. If appellant's view be taken, the defendant assumed practically no risk at all in guaranteeing the plaintiff against larceny by a conditional vendee of an automobile covered by his contract of purchase. The conditional vendee would have lawful possession of the car, and his misappropriation thereof would be embezzlement or wrongful conversion. It is difficult to imagine how he could commit larceny in connection therewith, for this offense involves unlawfulness in taking possession. Appellant enlightens us upon this point by arguing that, if the contract of purchase was entered into for the purpose of stealing the car, then the original possession would be unlawful, and the act would be larceny. It seems unlikely that the plaintiff desired insurance against a situation such as this. The necessary elements of such an offense, to bring it within the terms of such a policy, would be most difficult of proof. Furthermore, the direct testimony of the plaintiff is that he desired, and was assured that he would receive, protection against wrongful conversion by his vendee. It is not surprising that a layman, upon reading the letter of June 8, would think its language covered this situation. It is also not necessary that parties to a contract should express themselves in the most technical and precise terms; it is sufficient if their meaning clearly appears.

[3] Section 3401, Civil Code, provides that in revising a written instrument the court may inquire what the instrument was intended to mean, and what were intended to be its legal consequences, and is not confined to the inquiry what the language of the instrument was intended to be. Section 504a, Penal Code, provides that every person who shall fraudulently remove, conceal, or dispose of any personal property or effects of another, in his possession under a contract of purchase not yet fulfilled, is guilty of embezzlement. Although the word "steal" ordinarily imports larceny, it may be shown to import a charge of embezzlement. Taylor v. Short, 40 Ind. 511. The word "steal" can be shown, in the connection in which it is used, not to import larceny. 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d. Ed.) 770; Dunnell v. Fiske, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 551, 554.

"The term 'steal' is commonly used in indictments for larceny, and denotes a commission of theft; but, in a popular usage, 'stealing' is a wider term than larceny, inasmuch as it may include unlawful appropriation of things which are not technically a subject of larceny." Black's Law Dictionary.

It is said in Darling v. Clement, 69 Vt. 292, 297, 37 Atl. 779, that the natural and obvious meaning of the word "steal" is a felonious taking of property by larceny, but it may be qualified by accompanying words, so as to show that such was not the meaning. In the present case, we think that, when the word "steal" was accompanied by the qualifying words, "by a conditional buyer," these qualifying words clearly extended the word "steal," so as to make it include embezzlement, a crime which is consistent with the legal right of possession in the vendee under a conditional contract of purchase.

Furthermore, if the contract contained in said letter be construed as appellant desires, merely to cover a technical theft by a conditional purchaser, or, as stated by the appellant, "only to cover a case where there was a felonious intent at the time that the automobile purchaser acquired possession," then the owner was already protected against such a situation by the policy proper, and without the addition of the letter of June 8, and therefore the portion of the contract contained in the letter is meaningless and useless; for the policy itself provides against theft by any and every one, excepting only persons in the assured's household or employment. There is no exception made as to theft by one having a conditional contract of purchase, and, if we concede the possibility of such an offense, then no exception is made of it in the policy. The only thing that is excepted with regard to the conditional purchaser is "wrongful conversion." Therefore it appears that, if the letter of June 8 added any protection against the actions of the conditional purchaser, it must have been by making inoperative this exception against wrongful conversion. We therefore agree with the trial court in its holding that the contract was intended by the parties to cover unlawful conversion by the vendee.

It may be appropriate to point out here, in answer to certain arguments made by appellant, that the finding of the trial court is that, in drawing the contract between the parties to this action, it was the intention of the parties that this contract should cover and fully protect the plaintiff against the embezzlement or wrongful conversion of any automobile covered by any insurance policy issued by the defendant, and that said letter or contract of June 8, 1916, was given by defendant company to the plaintiff for the purpose and with the intention to protect the said plaintiff against wrongful conversion or embezzlement of any automobile so sold by plaintiff under conditional sales contract. This finding is sufficient to sustain the judgment, and it is immaterial whether or not the other portion of the finding, to the effect that by inadvertence and mistake the word "steal" was used, instead of the words "wrongful conversion and embezzlement," is technically sustained by the evidence or not. If the parties intended that the word "steal" should be used in its broad and coloquial sense, and cover certain risks out of which this loss grew, that is sufficient, and it is unnecessary that the record show the parties actually intended to use the express words "wrongful conversion," but by mistake used the word "steal."

[4] Many of the other objections of the appellant are technical ones, and we shall discuss them briefly. Appellant contends that its demurrer should have been sustained, because the complaint contains two causes of action, which were not separately stated. The court found, contrary to appellant's premise upon this argument, that the letter and contract constituted one and the same contract. As before stated, we are in accord with this conclusion. A complaint seeking to revise or reform a contract, and also to recover upon or enforce the same, states but one cause of action. Messer v. Hibernian Savings & Loan Society, 149 Cal. 122, 84 Pac. 835.

[5-7] Appellant also contends that the complaint does not sufficiently allege the conversion of the automobile by Suttle, and therefore fails to allege loss. The complaint alleges:

"As this plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges the fact to be, the said W. A. Suttle, without the knowledge or consent of this plaintiff, removed from Los Angeles, and the state of California, the said automobile, and ever since has and does now conceal the same, with the intent to injure and defraud this plaintiff."

This is an allegation upon information and belief of sufficient facts to constitute embezzlement under our code. And it is further alleged in the complaint, upon information and belief, that the said Suttle "embezzled said automobile and wrongfully converted the same to his own use." An allegation of material facts upon information or belief is a sufficient allegation. Section 446, Code Civ. Proc.; McDermont v. Anaheim, etc., Water Co., 124 Cal. 112, 115, 56 Pac. 779. The objection to this allegation was taken by general demurrer, and the allegations of the complaint, we think, are sufficient against such attack.

[8] Appellant also contends that the complaint is insufficient because no proof of loss is pleaded. Plaintiff pleaded facts which constitute a waiver of proof of loss, and these facts were not denied by the defendant. Plaintiff alleged that on September 24, 1917, he notified the defendant in writing of the loss or disappearance of the automobile, and that within 60 days from the date of the loss the defendant denied liability upon the policy, upon the ground that the policy did not cover embezzlement or wrongful conversion. Appellant seeks to avoid the effect of this waiver by asserting that its denial of liability was under the policy alone, and it did not have in contemplation the letter of June 8, 1916, which was held by the trial court to be a part of the policy; that therefore they never denied liability under the contract recovered upon here, and therefore never waived proof of loss. The answer to this contention is that the defendant was aware of all the facts and is presumed to know the law. Since the court has held that the two instruments constituted one contract, defendant's denial of liability under the contract was a denial of liability under both instruments.

[9] Another objection of appellant is that the finding of the trial court with relation to the intention of the parties to the contract in using the word "steal" is outside of the issues made by the pleadings. This argument is made because the complaint alleged, among other things, that the defendant had contracted and agreed with the plaintiff, in consideration of the plaintiff purchasing insurance from the defendant, to attach to each and every policy then in existence held by plaintiff, or that might thereafter be issued, a rider or agreement protecting the plaintiff against wrongful conversion by purchasers under conditional contracts of sale. It is true that the trial court found against this allegation of the complaint, and plaintiff did not recover upon this theory of the case. But it is not true that the complaint contained no allegations sufficient to place in issue the question of the meaning of the word "steal" as contained in the letter of June 8, 1916. Upon examination of the complaint, we find an allegation that the defendant, in consideration of the payment of a certain premium, "executed and delivered to the plaintiff a policy of insurance * * * against all direct loss or damage which he might sustain caused by the wrongful conversion of said automobile by the vendee under said executory contract." This is pleading the contract according to its legal effect, and these allegations were denied by the defendant. In determining the legal effect of this contract, which was found to be made up of the policy and letter of June 8, 1916, the court necessarily determined the meaning of the language used in the light of the intention of the parties to the contract. This portion of finding 4 was therefore in issue, and it is the basis of the judgment.

[10, 11] The only other objection of the appellant which we find it necessary to discuss here is that the evidence does not justify the finding that Suttle converted the automobile to his own use, and removed the same from the state of California, and does now retain and conceal the same, with intent to injure and defraud the plaintiff. The evidence in the case shows (and there is no evidence to the contrary) that Suttle took the automobile out of this state without the consent or knowledge of the plaintiff; that he concealed the same, so that the plaintiff is unable to locate it, although he employed detectives, who followed Suttle about to several cities and endeavored to locate the car; that plaintiff demanded of Suttle either payment of the installments due or possession of the car, and this demand has not been complied with; that the payment due on September 15, 1917, the day when the automobile was taken from the state, has not been made, and no subsequent payment has been made, although several months elapsed between the time of its disappearance and the institution of this action. It is apparent from this testimony that Suttle exercised dominion over the automobile which was inconsistent with the rights of the true owner. Fitzgerald v. State, 50 N. J. Law, 475, 477, 14 Atl. 746; People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 220, 75 Pac. 796. An action to recover under a policy of automobile insurance against theft is a civil action, and plaintiff is required to prove his case only by a preponderance of the evidence; the rule being the same as it is in civil cases generally.

[12, 13] The objection that the plaintiff should not have recovered the $126.26 paid to the detective agency in attempting to recover the automobile is met by the express terms of the policy that any act of the assured in recovering, saving, and preserving the property, in case of loss or damage, shall be "considered as done for the benefit of all concerned, * * * and all reasonable expenses thus incurred shall constitute a claim under this policy." The portion of the contract contained in the letter of June 8 provides for the protection of plaintiff's equity in the car. Plaintiff's equity in the car was the amount of the unpaid installments, plus interest thereon, for the terms of the conditional contract of sale provided for the payment of interest upon all deferred payments from the date of the contract. Appellant may not, therefore, object to the allowance of such interest in the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BRITTAIN, J.; NOURSE, J.

47 Cal. App. 717

McCORD et al. v. MARTIN et al. (Civ. 2159.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 24, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 23, 1920.)

1. Corporations ⊜187—Stockholder pooling stock could not fraudulently sell pool above agreed price and retain difference.

If a stockholder falsely represented to other stockholders that if they would pool their stock they could sell to a certain purchaser for $5 a share, and such stockholders acted upon such representation, whereas the former knew that the stock would be sold for $8, and had an agreement to that effect, and did actually consummate the sale for that price and retained the difference of $3, which the purchaser paid direct to him, the other stockholders could recover from him the $3 per share which he fraudulently obtained.

2. Pleading ⊜387—Plaintiff must recover on case made by pleadings.

The plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the case made by the pleadings, and not upon the case which may be developed by the proofs.

3. Pleading ⊜430(2)—No complaint that fact was not in issue after judgment.

Where a cause is tried on the theory that a certain fact is in issue, and evidence is received thereon without objections, it is too late after judgment to complain that no such issue was presented by the pleadings.

4. Appeal and error ⊜907(2)—Presumption in favor of regularity of proceedings below.

On appeal, in the absence of the evidence, it must be presumed that a finding of fact not within the issues made by the pleadings was treated as a fact in issue; the presumption being in favor of the regularity of the proceedings below.

5. Corporations ⊜187—Secretary receiving more than other stockholders for stock in pool not liable to other stockholders.

Where secretary of a corporation was offered $15 per share for his stock if other stockholders would sell at $5, to the extent that the purchaser might secure 20,000 shares, and the other stockholders, uninfluenced by the secretary, were willing and agreed to sell at the lower price, and the sale was carried out, such other stockholders have no claim upon the additional price or bonus thereafter received by the secretary, the secretary not sustaining to the others any relation of confidence which made it his duty to disclose his prospect of a larger price, under Civ. Code, § 1710, subd. 3.

6. Joint adventures ⊜1—Stockholders selling stock in pool not joint adventurers.

Stockholders of a corporation pooling their shares to sell them to a purchaser at a certain price were not joint adventurers; the reason for the pool being that the purchaser did not care to purchase unless he obtained a certain number of shares.

7. Judgment ⊜570(6)—Dismissal by stipulation bar to another suit.

Where the parties to an action stipulate in open court for the dismissal of the action and the payment of their respective costs, a judgment of dismissal entered thereon is a bar to another suit upon the same cause of action.

8. Judgment ⊜525—Recitals conclusive in absence of other evidence.

Recitals in a judgment of dismissal of a prior action, that it was entered upon stipulation of the parties for the dismissal and the payment of their respective costs is conclusive upon the parties, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

9. Courts ⊜97(6)—Interpretation of state statute by federal court not binding.

The interpretation by the federal courts of a state statute is not binding upon the state courts.

10. Judgment ⊜570(6)—Dismissal upon stipulation when judgment on merits.

Where the parties appear in open court and stipulate for a dismissal, the situation is not covered by Code Civ. Proc. § 581, but a judgment entered thereon is a judgment on the merits as contemplated by section 582.

11. Appeal and error ⊜1175(7)—On reversal, judgment directed for defendant where facts require it.

On appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs, where the findings do not support a finding for plaintiff, but require a conclusion in favor of defendant, the proper proceeding is to direct a judgment for the defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 53.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Sarah McCord, administratrix, etc., against J. D. Martin and William Lindemann. From an adverse judgment the last-named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Lamberson & Lamberson, of Visalia, for appellant.

Bradley & Bradley and W. B. Wallace, all of Visalia, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was begun in the superior court of the county of Santa Clara on the 22d of December, 1913. On the 8th day of October, 1914, an amendment to the complaint was filed, to which the defendant, William Lindemann, filed a demurrer. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend on the 28th day of December, 1914, and thereafter, on the 18th day of January, 1915, judgment was entered in favor of defendant Lindemann. An appeal from such judgment was thereafter taken by the plaintiffs, and the judgment was reversed by the District Court of Appeal of the First District. McCord v. Martin, 34 Cal. App. 129, 166 Pac. 1014. The remittitur was filed in the court below on the 6th day of August, 1917, and thereafter an order was made by said superior court that the defendant answer within 10 days after notice of said order. Within time the answer was filed, and thereafter, on motion of plaintiffs, the action was transferred for trial to the superior court of Kings county. On January 15, 1918, the plaintiffs gave notice of a motion to strike out portions of the answer of defendant Lindemann, including paragraph 16 thereof, which set up as res judicata a judgment of dismissal in an action between the same parties, entered by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco on the 16th day of May, 1913, as follows:

"It appearing to the court from the stipulation filed herein on the 12th day of May, 1913, signed by the attorneys of record of all of the respective parties in interest, that plaintiffs (naming them), through their attorneys, Messrs. Bradley & Bradley and F. H. Gould, and that defendant and cross-complainant J. D. Martin, through his attorneys, Messrs. Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, and that defendant William Lindemann, through his attorney Alfred Daggett, and that cross-defendants (naming them), through their attorneys, Messrs. Bradley & Bradley and F. H. Gould, have, and each of them has, stipulated that the above-entitled action and every part thereof shall be dismissed as against each and all of the parties to the above-entitled action, and that all of said parties have further stipulated that each and all of the parties to said action shall pay their costs of suit incurred by them respectively; and each and all of the above-named parties, through their said respective attorneys having stipulated in open court on the 12th day of May, 1913, that said action and every part thereof shall be dismissed pursuant to the terms of the aforesaid stipulation on file herein, and good cause appearing therefor.

"Now therefore, it is ordered that the above-entitled action and every part thereof be, and the same is hereby, dismissed as to all the parties to said action.

"It is further ordered that each and all of the above-named plaintiffs, and each of said defendants and said cross-complainant and each and all of said cross-defendants pay his or their own costs incurred by him or them respectively in said action.

"It is further ordered that this judgment of dismissal be duly entered by the clerk."

Paragraph 17 of said answer, to the effect that said judgment has never been reversed, modified, or appealed from, and has become final, and that the cause of action therein was the same as the action admitted to be set up by the complaint herein, was also stricken out.

The plaintiff J. W. McCord having died, his administratrix was substituted by order of said court. The cause was tried without a jury, and on the 1st day of March, 1919, the court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and judgment was entered thereon in favor of plaintiffs as against William Lindemann on the 11th day of March, 1919. Two days later the defendant Lindemann gave notice of a motion to enter a different judgment, which motion was denied on the 24th day of March, 1919. The proceedings upon this motion have been preserved in a bill of exceptions. Defendant Lindemann has appealed from said judgment and said order denying his said motion.

The first point made by appellant worthy of serious consideration is stated as follows:

"The findings of fact are not responsive to the issues made by the complaint and answer, and are outside the pleadings, and if the findings justify any judgment at all against appellant it is for a cause of action wholly different from that stated in the complaint."

The theory of the complaint is that defendant Martin knew that one George T. Cameron, of San Francisco, desired to purchase at least 20,000 shares of the stock of the Lost Hills Mining Company, belonging to the assignors of plaintiffs, and was willing to pay therefor "a large sum of money in excess of $5 per share"; that thereafter said Martin devised a scheme to induce said stockholders to pool their stock to sell in one block to an undisclosed purchaser for $5 per share; that to enable Martin to carry out said scheme he sought the aid of Lindemann, and paid the latter a large sum of money for his assistance; that thereafter defendants represented to said joint stockholders that they knew a man, whose name they did not disclose, who would buy all of the stock of said Lost Hills Mining Company, but not less than 20,000 shares, for $5 per share, and no more; that it was worth no more than $5 per share, and could not be sold for more; "that it would be necessary to pool said stock and place it in escrow in a bank to the amount of at least 20,000 shares, in order to induce said proposed purchaser to come to Hanford and buy the same; that defendants and said E. L. Lindemann would join with said joint stockholders in pooling their said shares and placing them in escrow to be sold in one lot at the price of $5 per share"; that said representations were false, but were believed and relied upon by said joint stockholders, and they did thereupon so pool their stock and placed it in escrow with the First National Bank of Hanford to be delivered in one block to a purchaser to be produced by defendant Martin, upon the payment of $5 per share therefor; "that thereafter said proposed purchaser, who was said Cameron, upon being notified by defendants that said stock had been placed in escrow as alleged, went to Hanford, and in accordance with a secret agreement with defendants bought all the said stock so placed in escrow, for $8 per share, of which he placed $5 per share in said bank for all thereof, and paid the balance of the aggregate value thereof at $8 per share to defendants; that the value of said stock as so pooled to be sold in one block, was, at the time it was so pooled and sold, $8 per share."

[1] Being stated concisely, then, the only cause of action appearing in the complaint rested upon these facts: Both defendants

Martin and Lindemann, falsely represented to other stockholders that if they would pool their shares of stock they could sell to a certain purchaser for $5 per share; said stockholders believed and acted upon said representations; whereas, said Martin and Lindemann knew that the stock could be sold for $8 per share, and had an agreement to that effect, and did actually consummate the sale for that price, but the other stockholders in accordance with the terms of said pooling arrangement received only the sum of $5 per share, said Martin and Lindemann appropriating to their own use the balance of some $91,000. If these facts had been shown and found, it could hardly be seriously argued that plaintiffs were not entitled to a judgment against defendants. The proper legal characterization of the transaction might be in some doubt, but at any rate the principles of equity as formulated in the Code and administered by the courts are ample to reach and defeat such iniquitous conduct. But the trouble is, the trial court found that Cameron agreed with Martin "to purchase not less than 20,000 shares for a price not exceeding $5 per share; that Martin then communicated to a few of plaintiff's assignors the information, and they in turn conveyed it to the other stockholders; that defendants did not devise any scheme for effecting a sale of the interest of said Martin & Dudley in said mining claims and said Lake Shore Oil Company stock and the stock of Lost Hills Mining Company to Cameron, and Lindemann at no time knew of the plans or expectations of the firm of Martin & Dudley to sell the interest of said Martin & Dudley in said claims to Cameron." It is further found in reference to a certain sum of money that was paid by Martin to Lindemann that it "was paid to Lindemann not in pursuance of the scheme alleged in paragraph 7 of the complaint, but was paid to Lindemann in order to remove Lindemann's opposition to the sale by him of his stock and that of his wife in the Lost Hills Mining Company, and that said Lindemann might not oppose the sale by plaintiff's assignors of their stock owned by them respectively in said Lost Hills Mining Company. * * * Lindemann did not have any agreement wth defendant Martin or with the firm of Martin & Dudley for a share, nor did Lindemann receive from defendant Martin or from the firm of Martin & Dudley any share in any profits which were made by defendant Martin or by the firm of Martin & Dudley in the sale to Cameron, * * * nor did Lindemann agree with defendant Martin to aid and abet, or aid or abet, nor did he in fact aid and abet, or aid or abet, defendant Martin in carrying into effect the scheme alleged in paragraph 7 of the complaint," said scheme contemplating, as we have seen, the fraudulent claim and sale of the stock for $5 per share. It is thus apparent that the findings negative every material allegation of the complaint upon which a judgment against Lindemann could possibly be justified. In fact, he is expressly acquitted of any improper or reprehensible conduct within the scope and intent of the attempted cause of action. The judgment would necessarily, therefore, have been in favor of Lindemann (as it was actually in favor of Martin), had not the trial court gone outside the pleadings and determined certain facts to which the issues were not addressed. Appellant states the gist of these findings substantially as follows: About a week prior to March 20, 1911 (the latter date being the time when the so-called escrow agreement was signed), appellant received a letter from the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, representing that if a certain client whom they represented purchased at least a majority of the stock of the Lost Hills Mining Company at the price of $5 per share, their client would pay Mr. Lindemann $15 per share for his stock. On March 20th following the said escrow agreement was signed and delivered, authorizing said First National Bank of Hanford to deliver the stock to the purchaser for $5 per share. Up to this time appellant did not know who the purchaser was, or whether said offer was genuine. After said escrow agreement was made appellant ascertained who was the prospective purchaser. Subsequently on March 30 Mr. Cameron came to Hanford and bought at $5 per share the stock of several of plaintiffs' assignors who had signed the escrow agreement; also appellant's stock at $15 per share; and also the stock at $5 per share of several others of plaintiffs' assignors, who brought their stock to the bank. Lindemann was secretary of the company, and the court's reason for imposing upon him this liability is disclosed in the finding that he "owed a duty to the other stockholders of said corporation to inform them as to the reception of said letter, and of his interview with the said Cameron, and of his reception of $15 per share for said stock, and that it was fraudulent on his part to sign the said escrow agreement, whereby he had promised to sell his stock for $5 per share, when, in fact, he had received said letter, and expected to receive $15 per share for said stock, and it was fraudulent on his part to conceal the fact that he had received said letter."

[2] It is quite apparent that thus is presented an entirely different story from that set forth in the complaint. It is sufficient to say that the so-called fraud herein does not at all involve any fraudulent representation to induce the other stockholders to pool their stock, nor the actual sale of said stock, for a price in excess of $5 per share—the two essential elements that characterized the cause of action as set forth. But it is well settled by a long line of decisions in this state that—

"The plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the case made by the pleadings, and not upon a case which may be developed by the proofs." Kredo v. Phelps, 145 Cal. 526, 78 Pac. 1044.

[3] This principle would be fatal to the judgment were it not for the well-recognized rule of practice that, where a cause is tried upon the theory that a certain fact is in issue, and evidence thereon is received without objection, it is too late thereafter to complain that no such issue was presented. Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90; Howard v. Hobson Co., 38 Cal. App. 445, 176 Pac. 715.

[4] In the absence of the evidence at the trial and in view of said finding of the court, the presumption being in favor of the regularity of the proceedings, we must assume that such was the action of the parties.

[5] The question then occurs whether sufficient facts are found to justify a judgment against appellant for fraud. In relation thereto the first thing that challenges attention is that the other stockholders in their agreement to sell their stock were not influenced by any representations of appellant. He did not deceive them in any way, and he made no effort to persuade or induce them to pool their stock for the purpose of sale at the price of $5 per share. The proposition was presented to them by Martin, who was interested in the transaction primarily for the reason that he hoped to sell to said vendee other interests closely connected with the property of the Lost Hills Mining Company. The court finds specifically that Lindemann did not know of the plans or expectations of Martin, and did not aid or abet any scheme that the latter may have had in view. The situation then is simply this: L. is offered $15 per share for his stock in a certain corporation if other stockholders will sell at $5 to the extent that the purchaser may secure 20,000 shares. The other stockholders, uninfluenced by L., are willing and agree to sell at the lower price. The question is whether they have any claim upon the additional price or bonus thereafter received by L. The answer to this question depends, of course, upon the consideration whether L. sustained to the others any relation of confidence which made it his duty to disclose his prospect of a larger price. Since any active or positive fraud is negatived by the findings of the court, there remains only the possible operation of the principle of fraudulent deceit consisting of "the suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it." Section 1710, subd. 3, Civ. Code. But we have not been cited to any authority to the effect that, either as stockholder or secretary, Lindemann was under any legal obligation to disclose to the others the fact that he had received such letter from the Mercantile Trust Company, or that he afterward obtained $15 per share for his stock. It may be admitted that some men of a fine sense of honor would have done such a gracious and altruistic act, but we are simply to inquire what the law demands in a situation of this kind.

In Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 158 Pac. 753, it was held that even "directors and officers of a corporation have the right to purchase the shares of the stock of other stockholders, where the transaction is free from fraud; and they are not bound to acquaint a stockholder willing to sell his stock with facts which would enhance the price of the stock, as they are only trustees for the stockholders as to the management of the corporation, and not in their private dealings." Manifestly, there is less reason for holding that the secretary, who is a mere ministerial officer of the corporation, holds such relation of trust and confidence to the other stockholders as to require a disclosure of any information that he may have received in his individual capacity as stockholder.

Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., 177 Cal. 600, 171 Pac. 431, involved an action "to compel an accounting of dividends and other proceeds realized by the purchaser, on the ground that the sale had been induced by fraudulent misrepresentations made by Enginger to Hallidie, who was acting in the transaction for California Wire Works." It was contended by appellant that, even if there was no active misrepresentation by Enginger, he was chargeable with constructive fraud because of his failure to disclose all the facts within his knowledge. The Supreme Court, however, said:

"But the evidence did not show any such relation between the parties as to impose upon Enginger the stringent obligations of a trustee. While Enginger was a director and general manager of the Wire Cloth Company, it must be remembered that Hallidie himself was not only a director, but the president of the corporation. In negotiating for the stock, the two stood on equal terms, and neither owed the other any special duty of a fiduciary nature. This being the relation between the parties, the fact, if it be a fact, that the stock was, at the time of the purchase, worth very much more than the price paid, does not furnish a ground for setting the transaction aside."

Other cases cited announcing a similar doctrine are Bacon v. Soule, 19 Cal. App. 428, 126 Pac. 384; Hooker v. Midland Steel Co., 74 N. E. 445, 106 Am. St. Rep. 170; Tippecanoe County Commissioners v. Reynolds, 44 Ind. 509, 15 Am. Rep. 245; Walsh v. Goulden, 130 Mich. 531, 90 N. W. 406.

[6] Nor do we think that appellant is liable upon the theory that all signing the escrow agreement were joint adventurers. In 23 Cyc. 453, it is said:

"A joint adventure does not exist where property is pooled by the several owners to be sold at a particular price, and each contributor is to receive the proceeds of the property contributed by him."

The stockholders at all times owned their respective shares of stock severally and individually, and at no time was there a joint interest either in the stock or the proceeds thereof.

The cases cited by respondents in view of their respective facts do not, in our judgment, satisfactorily meet the situation. Detailed consideration of only one of these, Cole v. Bacon, 63 Cal. 571, is invited by respondents as they seem to think it is "very similar to the case at bar"; but appellant aptly calls attention to the fact that therein Bacon was the avowed agent of the plaintiffs, who were stockholders in a certain corporation, and as such agent he undertook to sell the stock of plaintiffs for the highest price obtainable. He did sell said stock for $250,000, of which he secretly retained all except $47,700, and he falsely represented to plaintiffs that this sum was the price actually paid. The action was brought to recover the balance, and a judgment in favor of plaintiffs was sustained by the Supreme Court. That an agent could thus defraud his principal without rendering himself legally liable to an accounting would, of course, not be urged by any one familiar with the law. It may be added that the case here as presented by the complaint is "very similar" to Cole v. Bacon, supra, but the case as presented by the findings is quite dissimilar.

[7, 8] We think, also, that the court erred in striking out the defense of res judicata. It is stated by appellant that at the trial the facts were stipulated to be as alleged in said defense.

In Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542, it was held that—

"A judgment of dismissal, rendered upon the oral agreement of the parties in open court, with a stipulation that each party pay his own costs, is a bar to another suit, afterward brought upon the same cause of action."

Such dismissal was declared to be equivalent to retraxit as known at common law, which, being "an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit in court," the plaintiff was not at liberty to renew. Respondents, however, claim that said decision is not controlling, because therein "the parties appeared in court by their attorneys, and orally agreed to a dismissal, each party to pay his own costs." Appellant rejoins:

"Respondents evidently overlook the fact that in the case at bar the parties did stipulate in open court for the dismissal of the action and the payment of their respective costs, the same as was done in Merritt v. Campbell."

The terms of said judgment do, indeed, accord with appellant's statement, and, of course, the recitals in said judgment in the absence of evidence to the contrary are conclusive upon the parties. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 Pac. 38.

[9] As to Rincon, etc., Co. v. Anaheim Union Water Co. (C. C.) 115 Fed. 543, cited by respondents, appellant is justified in his comment that: First, the interpretation by a federal court of a state statute is not binding upon the state courts (People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 Pac. 86); and, second, that the dismissal therein was not made in open court by stipulation of the attorneys of both parties, but only on motion of defendant's counsel, and the court based its ruling upon subdivision 2 of section 581, and not upon section 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as was done in the Merritt Case.

[10] Where the parties appear in open court and stipulate for a dismissal the situation is not covered by said section 581, but a judgment entered thereon is a judgment on the merits as contemplated by said section 582.

[11] Some other questions are discussed by counsel, but we deem it unnecessary to notice them specifically. As we view the matter, the findings do not support a judgment for plaintiffs, but require a conclusion in favor of defendant Lindemann. When such is the case, the proper proceeding is to direct judgment for the defendant. Dargie v. Patterson, 176 Cal. 714, 169 Pac. 360; section 53, Code Civ. Proc.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to enter judgment upon the findings for defendant Lindemann for his costs.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge, pro tem.; HART, J.

183 Cal. 292

STURTEVANT v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 9531.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1920.)

1. Courts ⟹106 — Oral opinion by Supreme Court may be given, to be followed by written opinion.

Where a decision as to ballots in an election to be held soon necessitates prompt decision, the Supreme Court may render an oral opinion, and later file a written opinion to place the court's views on record.

2. Elections ⟹126(5)—Primary election ballot for associate justices of a District Court of Appeal should show office as single office for which two are to be selected.

In the first election of associate justices of a division of the District Court of Appeal under Const. art. 6, § 4, as amended in 1918, the primary election ballot should show the office of associate justice as a single office for which two or more persons are to be selected with all candidates appearing as for that office and not specially for either of the two associate justiceships to be filled at the election.

In Bank.

Application by George A. Sturtevant against Frank C. Jordan, Secretary of State of the State of California, for mandamus. Prayer of the petition for peremptory writ of mandate granted.

Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The question involved in this proceeding for a writ of mandate was whether in the matter of the primary election to be held August 31, 1920, for the two associate justices of Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, the ballot should be in such form as to show each associate justiceship as a separate and distinct office, each distinguished from the other by giving the name of the present incumbent by appointment, and to be voted upon separately; or in such form as to show the office of associate justice as a single office for which two persons are to be selected, with all candidates for the office appearing as candidates for "that office," and not "specially" for either of the two positions to be filled at the election.

[1, 2] Owing to the necessity for a prompt decision, an oral decision was rendered from the bench at the close of the argument, sustaining the view last stated, viz.: That the ballot for the purposes of nomination and election should show the office of associate justice of Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District as a "single office," for which two persons are to be selected, with all candidates for the office appearing as candidates for that "office," and not "specially" for "either" of the two associate justiceships to be filled at the election. A peremptory writ of mandate in accord with the prayer of the petition was thereupon ordered issued. This opinion is filed in order that the views of the court on the question may be of record.

The conclusion of the court is in accord with the well-settled rule and practice in this state with regard to the nomination and election of persons to public office where more than one person is to be selected for the same office, such as associate justice of the Supreme Court, judge of the superior court of counties having more than one such judge, etc., except in the matter of selection of some one to fill an unexpired term by reason of vacancy. The claim of respondent is that the situation here is different by reason of the language of a provision of section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution with relation to the first election for associate justices of the new divisions of the District Courts of Appeal of the first and second appellate districts created by amendment of that section in 1918 (see St. 1919, p. xxxii). By that provision it was decreed that upon the adoption of the amendment "the Governor shall appoint six persons to serve as justices of the district courts of appeal—three as justices of division two of the first appellate district, and three as justices of division two of the second appellate district—from and after their qualification and until the next general election and qualification of their successors." It was further provided therein that the justices so elected in each division shall so classify themselves by lot that one shall go out of office at the end of four years, one at the end of eight years, and one at the end of twelve years. Another provision of the section is substantially to the effect that one of these justices in each division shall be the presiding justice thereof "and as such shall be appointed or elected, as the case may be," which explains why only two persons are to be selected as associate justices. Another provision of the section is that—

"The justices of the District Courts of Appeal shall be elected by the qualified electors within their respective districts at the general state election, and the term of office of said justices shall be twelve years from and after the first day of January next succeeding their election."

Taking the section as a whole, it seems to us that fairly construed it means that at the general election of 1920 selection must be made to fill all of these new judgeships precisely as if no appointment by the Governor had been provided for or made, the term of office of the persons selected to commence as provided in the general provision quoted above, on the first day of January next succeeding the election, and to continue, as determined by lot, four, eight, and twelve years therefrom, while the appointees of the Governor are to hold until the commencement of the term of the judges so elected. If this be the proper construction, as we think is true, the general rule to which we have referred is clearly applicable.

It should be noted that there is a plain distinction between the situation presented by this case, and the situation where a vacancy in judicial office occurs and is filled by appointment to hold until the next general election, when the vacancy must be filled by the election of a justice or judge who shall hold the office "for the remainder of the unexpired term." In such a case, for all the purposes of election, every unexpired term is a separate and distinct office, to be separately designated on the ballot.

In view of our conclusion on the question presented, the prayer of the petition for a peremptory writ of mandate was granted.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and SHAW, LAWLOR, and LENNON, JJ., being all the Justices who heard the argument, concur.

OLNEY and SLOANE, JJ., deeming themselves disqualified, do not participate.

(183 Cal. 304)

TRABER et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION. (S. F. 9280.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 9, 1920.)

1. Public service commissions ⟸32—Scope of review of facts found.

Notwithstanding the declaration of Public Utilities Act, § 67, that the Railroad Commissions determination of matters of fact are not subject to review, its determination on the question whether or not the facts existing are sufficient to bring the case within the scope of its power must be subject of review, so far as they present a question of law bearing on that subject, and the provision that "conclusions" of the commission on the facts are final does not apply to facts necessary to the existence of the jurisdiction of the commission to act; but where the evidence in proof of such facts is substantial in character, and justifies the inference or conclusion that the facts did exist, then such findings are binding and conclusive.

2. Waters and water courses ⟸257 — Contracts of Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company of 1875 subject to regulation.

The Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, incorporated on February 16, 1871, under St. 1853, p. 87 (Garfielde & Snyder, p. 273), St. 1861, pp. 618–622, §§ 22–39, and St. 1869–70, p. 660, had the power to act as a public service corporation for the supply of water for irrigation, and, having acted as such, its contracts of 1875, entered into for furnishing water, are subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission, as provided in the Public Utilities Act.

3. Waters and water courses ⟸216—Statute concerning organization of corporation not repealed by implication.

Act April 2, 1870 (St. 1869–70, p. 660), relating to the organization of corporations, did not operate as a repeal by implication of Act May 14, 1862 (St. 1862, p. 540), relating to the organization of corporations for the construction of canals and supplying of water.

4. Statutes ⊂⊃161(1)—Repeal by implication not favored.

The repeal of statutes by implication is not favored, and where there are two laws upon the same subject they must be so construed as to maintain both, if it can be done without destroying the evident intent and meaning of the later act.

5. Corporations ⊂⊃382½, New, vol. 16 Key-No. Series—Property taken by condemnation necessarily dedicated to public use; "public utility administering a public service."

Of necessity, property taken under power of eminent domain is dedicated to public use, and to that extent a corporation exercising such power is a "public utility administering a public service," in view of Const. 1849, art. 1, § 8.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Public Utility.]

6. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃254—No presumption of public use arose from diversion and sale of water.

Prior to the adoption of Const. 1879, art. 14, § 1, no presumption of a public use arose from the mere fact that a corporation diverted waters and agreed to sell it to certain persons.

7. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃254—Finding that corporation dedicated water to public use sustained by evidence.

A finding by the Railroad Commission that Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, organized under St. 1853, p. 87 (Garfielde & Snyder, p. 273), St. 1862, p. 540, St. 1861, pp. 618–622, §§ 22–39, and St. 1869–70, p. 660, dedicated certain water in 1875 to a public use and became a public utility, held supported by the evidence.

8. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃254—Contracts to supply water held not inconsistent with dedication to public use.

The fact that contracts were made by water company, declaring that the agreement to supply water should be appurtenant to respective tracts of land, is not inconsistent with the theory of a dedication, and such contracts relating to the service of water diverted to public use are subject to regulation and control by the public authorities, whether acting under laws then existing or under laws subsequently enacted.

9. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃254—Corporation had power to sell water, whether articles so declared or not.

A corporation organized under St. 1853, p. 87 (Garfielde & Snyder, p. 273), St. 1862, p. 540, St. 1861, pp. 618–622, §§ 22–39, and St. 1869–70, p. 660, had the power to sell water for public use, whether its articles so declared or not.

10. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃254—Agreement of water company as to use of its canal held not a discrimination.

Where a water company, in constructing a canal, found it necessary, by reason of the construction of a ditch by other persons who had appropriated water, to enter into an agreement with such other persons to carry their water in its canal free of charge, other users of the water could not claim that an order of the Railroad Commission fixing the rates for water to be used by them authorized an unlawful discrimination; the arrangement between the water company and the owners of the ditch, which interfered with its construction, not making the company the owner of the water diverted from the river and carried to and delivered to such persons, the effect being that the prior appropriators had a common use of the ditch, although it was under the control of the water company.

In Bank.

Proceeding in certiorari by John W. Traber and another to review an order and decision of the Railroad Commission of the State of California. Petition for writ denied.

Short & Sutherland, W. A. Sutherland, and J. O. Traber, all of Fresno, for applicants.

Milton M. Dearing, of Fresno, for certain water users.

Hugh Gordon, of Los Angeles (Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari, under the Public Utilities Act, by plaintiffs, for themselves and in behalf of 22 other persons interested in like manner, to review an order and decision of the Railroad Commission made on June 6, 1919, fixing rates to be charged by the Fresno Canal & Land Corporation for water supplied from its canal for the irrigation of land. The ground for review is that the Fresno Land & Canal Corporation is not a public utility, at least so far as plaintiffs' rights to water are concerned; that the respective rights of the plaintiffs to the water are private rights appurtenant to their respective tracts of land, and consequently that the commission is without power over them, and may not fix rates different from those fixed by the respective contracts between plaintiffs and the predecessor in interest of said corporation. It is also claimed that the order is void, because it authorizes the canal corporation to make an improper discrimination in the rates charged.

The Fresno Canal & Land Corporation was incorporated on January 5, 1917. It thereupon took over the properties and functions of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, and ever since that time it has been operating the large water system in Fresno county previously operated by the last-named corporation. In the year 1917 it made two applications to the Railroad Commission, under section 32 of the Public Utilities Act (Stats. 1915, p. 132), asking said commission to investigate the condition of the business carried on by said corporation and make an award regulating and fixing the rates to be charged by said corporation for the service of water by it by means of said water system. On June 6, 1919, the commission made its award and decision in the matter of said applications, declaring that the corporation should thereafter charge for the service of water at the rate of $200 per year for each 160 acres of land served. The plaintiffs, in connection with other persons, numbering 24 in all, had been previously receiving water from the corporation under contracts made in 1875 with its predecessor in interest, providing that they should receive water at the rate of $25 annually for each quarter section served. The object of the present action is to annul said order, so far as these parties are concerned.

[1] Section 67 of the Public Utilities Act authorizes this proceeding in review. It provides that the review shall not be extended further than to determine whether the commission has regularly pursued its authority and whether or not it has violated any constitutional right of the petitioner. It also provides that the findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be final and not subject to review. The first duty of the commission with respect to such applications was to inquire into and determine whether or not the facts existed that were necessary to confer upon it jurisdiction to act in the matter. Notwithstanding the declaration of section 67 that the commission's determination of matters of fact are not subject to review, it must be held that its determination upon the question whether or not the facts existing are sufficient to bring the case within the scope of its powers must be subject to review, so far as they present a question of law bearing upon that subject, and that the provision that the "conclusions" of the commission on the facts are final does not apply to facts necessary to the existence of the jurisdiction of the commission to act. Del Mar, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 677, 140 Pac. 591, 948. But if the evidence in proof of such facts is substantial in character, and justifies the inference or conclusion that the facts necessary to the jurisdiction of the commission did exist, then, under the general principles of law regarding the proceeding in certiorari, its decision as to the effect of such evidence is binding and conclusive on the reviewing court. Farmers' etc., Bank v. Board, 97 Cal. 325, 32 Pac. 312; In re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 453; Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 162, 19 Pac. 275, 11 Am. St. Rep. 251; De Pedrorena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 145, 22 Pac. 71; Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 44, 78 Pac. 467; Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 255, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23. Our consideration of the facts presented must therefore be governed by this principle.

The Public Utilities Act and the Constitution (section 23, art. 12) undoubtedly give the commission power to make orders prescribing the rates to be charged by corporations engaged in operating a system of waterworks or canals for the distribution of water dedicated to public use. If said canal corporation was so engaged, and the water it agreed to supply, and was supplying, to the plaintiffs for their land, was a part of the water so dedicated to public use, the power of the commission to make the order is clear. The rights of these parties arise from contracts made with the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, and the inquiry relates exclusively to the character and business of that company and its water supply, and the nature and effect of those contracts.

[2] We think the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the commission that the company last named was a public utility at the time these contracts were made, and that the water to be supplied by it in pursuance of said contracts was a part of the water it had dedicated to public use. The Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company was incorporated on February 16, 1871. Paragraph III of its original articles stated that it was formed for the purpose of constructing canals out of Kings river with which to supply water for irrigation to lands along and near the line of its canals and to collect rents for the use of the water it supplied. In May, 1871, said paragraph III was amended by eliminating the foregoing provisions and stating in lieu thereof that the corporation was formed to erect dams or other works in the channel of Kings river and its branches at points near and above the town of Centerville and for the construction and enlargement of canals out of Kings river, and to continue said canals along such routes as should be found most feasible across Fresno county in every available direction. Nothing was said in the amendment about supplying water for irrigation or for any other use to any person or about charges or rates for water supplied. The articles also declared that the company was organized under the act of April 14, 1853, "and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto."

The act of April 14, 1853, provided for the organization of corporations, but not for corporations for supplying water. Stats. 1853, p. 87 (G. & S. p. 273). The act of May 14, 1862, which was supplemental to the act of 1853, provided that corporations could be formed under the act of 1853 for "the construction of canals, for the transportation of passengers and freights, or for the purpose of irrigation or water power, or for the conveyance of water for mining or manufacturing purposes, or for all of such purposes." Stats. 1862, p. 540. It also provided that such corporations should have power "to establish, collect, and receive rates, water rents, or tolls, which shall be subject to regulation by the board of supervisors," and also the power to exercise the right of eminent domain by acquiring land or other property necessary for its canals by condemnation in the mode prescribed by the railroad act of 1861. Stats. 1861, p. 618, §§ 22 to 39. The declaration in its articles that said corporation was formed under the act of 1853 and the several acts supplemental thereto includes the act of 1862 aforesaid as one of the acts under which it was organized. This act, in effect, gives the corporations organized under it the power to act as a public service corporation for the supply of water for irrigation. In Price v. Riverside, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431, it was decided that "every corporation deriving its being from the act above cited (the act of 1862) has impressed upon it a public trust—the duty of furnishing water, if water it has, to all those who come within the class or community for whose alleged benefit it has been created. * * * The power—in its nature a public power—and the public duty are correlative. The duty exists without any express statutory words imposing it wherever the public use appears." It is therefore clear that the company, in so far as it derives its powers from the act of 1862, was a corporation of the class now known and described as a public utility, and one which, with regard to public service it carries on, is subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission as provided in the Public Utilities Act.

Another act supplemental to the act of April 14, 1853, is the act of April 2, 1870. Stats. 1869–70, p. 660. (By an obviously clerical error it refers to the previous act as the act of April 14, 1863.) This act repeals all acts and parts of acts in conflict with its provisions. Section 13. The plaintiffs contend that the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company must be deemed to have been formed under the later act alone. Section 1 of the act of 1870 is in substantially the same words as section 1 of the act of 1862 above quoted, and the subsequent provisions of the act are similar to those of the act of 1862, except that, instead of referring to the Railroad Act of 1861 for the mode of condemning private property for corporate purposes, the act itself (sections 4 to 11), prescribes the mode, and with the further exception that it contains nothing corresponding to section 3 of the act of 1862, the section providing that the rates established by a company formed under it shall be "subject to regulation by the board of supervisors," and authorizing such corporations to make rules regulating the distribution of its water and the like. The argument is that these omissions operate as a repeal of those parts of the act of 1862 which in Price v. Riverside, supra, were held to make the corporations formed under that act public utilities, and hence that the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company had authority to act as a corporation for the private purpose of diverting, distributing, and selling water for its own profit, free from public regulation of any kind.

[3, 4] We do not think the act of 1870 operated as a repeal by implication of the act of May 14, 1862. The repeal of statutes by implication is not favored. The rule is "that where there are two laws upon the same subject, they must be so construed as to maintain both, if it can be done without destroying the evident intent and meaning of the latter act." Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. 42; Hilton v. Curry, 124 Cal. 87, 56 Pac. 784. The act of 1870 expressly repeals all parts of other acts which are "in conflict" with it. The provisions of section 3 of the act of 1862 do not in any manner conflict with the act of 1870, but are entirely consistent therewith. Hence there is no express repeal thereof. Nor do the provisions of the latter act show that it was intended as a complete substitute, and so to operate as a repeal of the earlier act, under the rule applied in Mack v. Jastro, 126 Cal. 132, 58 Pac. 372. Both statutes were in force when said company was organized, and it must be considered as a company formed under both statutes, and as having, potentially, at least, the powers conferred by both.

[5, 6] The act of 1870 confers authority to exercise the power of eminent domain. This would be a taking of private property for public use. Const. 1849, art. 1, § 8. Of necessity, the property so taken would be dedicated to public use, and to that extent at least the corporation taking it would be a public utility administering a public service. But it does not appear that the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company took any of its property in that manner, and it may be conceded that the act of 1870 might very reasonably be construed to authorize the formation of a corporation to appropriate, distribute, and sell water without dedicating it to public use. It is to be noted that these transactions took place prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 declaring that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is a public use. Article 14, § 1. At that time, therefore, no presumption of a public use arose from the mere fact that the corporation diverted water and agreed to sell it to certain persons. If there were no other evidence of a dedication of the water to such public use, it might be conceded that the proof before the commission was insufficient to show jurisdiction. But there was other evidence, consisting of acts and declarations, which were sufficient in that respect, as we will proceed to show.

[7] After the irrigation company had completed its dam, it was necessary to construct a canal through the higher banks of Kings river in order to take the water to lands susceptible of irrigation. The company was without funds wherewith to do so. It proposed to the plaintiffs and those whom they represent, 24 in number, that if they would excavate the canal through said banks the company would thereupon execute water-right contracts to each person so assisting, for the delivery of one cubic foot of flowing water per second for each quarter section of land, at an annual rate of $25. The proposal was accepted, and said parties excavated the canal under this agreement. Thereupon the company executed to said 24 persons the contracts now under consideration. They were all in the same form. They each recite that it was agreed that the company might sell 1,000 water rights of one cubic foot each, and that, if the water in its canals fell short of 1,000 cubic feet, the water it had should be distributed proportionally to the respective purchasers of such 1,000 water rights. At the hearing one of the plaintiffs testified that at the time the negotiations for these contracts were under way, Mr. Church, the manager of the company stated that the company had 1,000 cubic feet of water and intended to dispose of all of the 1,000 water rights; that it was not for disposition to any particular person, but that "anybody was to have it as wanted it"; and that "the water was for sale, and if any man had the money he could get it, until the 1,000 were disposed of." It also appeared that either before or after said contracts were made the company was willing to and actually did sell all said water rights to any one who would sign the form of contract prepared by the company. It is apparent that the company made no limitation upon the persons who should buy, except such as were necessary for the convenient delivery of the water from its canals to the land of such purchaser.

The contracts provided that the company was to furnish the water at its main canal or some branch thereof, and was to place a gate therein to allow the water to flow into a side ditch to be built by the purchaser from his land to said gate, which side ditch, after construction, should be under control of the company and become one of its branch ditches, with the right to use and enlarge the same, providing such act did not interfere with the delivery of water to said land. Subject to these and similar restrictions, depending upon the situation of the particular tract, the water was for sale to all who would apply. From all this evidence the commission concluded that the conduct of the company in disposing of its water in this manner amounted to a dedication thereof to public use. We think the evidence was sufficient to establish that fact. Thayer v. Cal. Dev. Co., 164 Cal. 128, 128 Pac. 21. The offer of the company was a general offer to any and all persons who should apply for the water upon its terms for their lands. Whether in all cases such an offer would constitute a dedication to public use or not, it is clear that evidence of such offer and acceptance is sufficient to justify a finding of such dedication. As soon as the contracts were all sold, the persons making the purchase and the lands to which the water was to be applied would comprise the portion of the public entitled to the use, and to whose use the water was dedicated, so far as it was necessary thereto.

[8] The fact that contracts were made declaring that the agreement to supply water should be appurtenant to the respective tracts of land is not inconsistent with the theory of a dedication to public use. Fresno C. & I. Co. v. Park, 129 Cal. 437, 62 Pac. 87. Such contracts relating to the service of water devoted to public use are subject to regulation and control by the public authorities, whether acting under laws then existing or under laws subsequently enacted. Southern P. Co. v. Spring Valley W. Co., 173 Cal. 298, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680.

[9] In this view of the case the point made by the plaintiffs that the amendment to its articles eliminated the pre-existing declaration that the company was organized to furnish water and collect rates for its use becomes immaterial. By the acts under which the company was formed it had the power to sell water for public use whether its articles so declared or not.

[10] The objection that the order of the Railroad Commission authorized an unlawful discrimination between persons similarly situated with regard to the use of the water is not well taken. It appears that, at and before the time the company was constructing its diversion works and preparing for the construction of its canal, certain other persons owning some 1,700 acres of land had constructed a ditch and had taken water from Kings river therein to their lands for the irrigation thereof, and claimed a prior right to do so, both to the water taken and to the use of the ditch through which it was carried. As this ditch would interfere with the construction of the canal laid out by the company, it became advisable to make some arrangement with said persons for a common use. Accordingly it was arranged that the company should construct its canal as laid out, and that thereafter it should take out of the river at its headgate the quantity of water previously diverted by said persons, and should carry the same to a designated place on its canal, and there deliver it to said other persons into a canal to be constructed by them leading to their lands, and that in view of the mutual concessions of the parties the company should make no charge for such carriage of the water. This, in substance, was the arrangement made at that time, and under it the company has ever since carried the water from the river to said canal of said other persons free of charge, as it had agreed to do. The order of the Railroad Commission did not expressly authorize this to be continued, but it did not provide that it should be discontinued, and this constitutes the discrimination complained of. The arrangement made between the company and these persons was entirely lawful, and it did not make the company the owner of the water it diverted from the river to be carried to and delivered to these persons for their lands. It was a mere arrangement whereby the ditch of the company was for that purpose to be used by the other persons to carry their water to their lands. The effect was that they had a common use of the ditch, although it was under the control of the company.

Upon the filing of the petition herein the court did not order a writ of review to issue and return to be made, but merely made an order that the respondent show cause why such writ should not issue. We are unable to perceive any reason for the issuance thereof.

The petition for a writ of review is denied.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(47 Cal. App. 788)

CHASTEK et al. v. ALBERTSON et al.
(Civ. 3125.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 28, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂⊃931(1)—Evidence considered most favorably toward prevailing party.

In determining whether a judgment is warranted by the evidence, the appellate court must consider the testimony in its most favorable aspect toward the prevailing party.

2. Bailment ⊂⊃14(1)—Ordinary care required of automobile dealer trying out car to be credited on purchase.

Where one, desiring to purchase an automobile, left with the dealer a car to be credited on the purchase price to determine its value, the bailment was for the mutual benefit of both, and ordinary care was required to be exercised by the dealer in protecting the car while retaining it for the purpose of ascertaining its value.

3. Bailment ⊂⊃14(1)—Automobile dealer did not exercise ordinary care to protect car left to determine value for purpose of credit on new car.

Where one, contemplating the purchase of an automobile from a dealer, left with him an old car to have its value ascertained for the purpose of crediting the amount on the purchase price, and the car was stolen, in an action by the purchaser to recover the value of the car held that the court was justified in concluding that ordinary care was not used for protection of the automobile, the defendant dealer having left it at the curb unlocked.

4. Bailment ⊂⊃30—Complaint to recover value of automobile negligently lost by bailee sufficient, though allegations were in general appropriate for action for conversion.

A complaint, alleging that plaintiff left an automobile with defendants as bailee, and subsequently demanded the return thereof, and that they failed and refused to return the same, to the damage of the plaintiff in a certain sum, while in general form the allegations are appropriate to an action for conversion, warranted a recovery as against one who assumed the obligation of a depositary, who must upon demand redeliver or become liable for value of the property, in view of Civ. Code, § 1822.

5. Pleading ⊂⊃406 (5) — Special objections waived by not demurring.

Any special objections which might have been urged as to the completeness of the allegations of a complaint were waived where no demurrer was interposed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Marion W. Chastek and the New Jersey Fire Insurance Company against Fred S. Albertson and John Hoover. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, Wm. B. Himrod, and George W. Prince, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward Brody and Charles A. Bank, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Appeal by defendants from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiffs by which an award was made for the value of an automobile.

In the complaint it was alleged that appellant Albertson was engaged in business under the name of Albertson Motor Company; that plaintiff Chastek was the owner of an automobile. This allegation followed:

"That at the city of Los Angeles, state of California, and on or about the 4th day of May, 1918, the plaintiff Marion W. Chastek, at the special instance and request of the defendants, and each of them, placed the said automobile in the possession of the defendants, and each of them, as bailees, and subsequently thereto on the same day plaintiff Marion W. Chastek demanded the return of the said automobile of the said defendants, and each of them, and the defendants, and each of them, failed, neglected, and refused, and still fail, neglect, and refuse to return the said automobile to plaintiff Marion W. Chastek to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $574.00."

There was the further allegation that prior to the commencement of this action Chastek had assigned to his coplaintiff a one-half interest in the claim; and the prayer was for the recovery of $574. Defendants, after making denial of the material allegations of the complaint, further answered, alleging that at the request of Chastek, defendants had taken possession of the automobile described in the complaint for the purpose of examining and appraising the same and determining the amount that they would allow as a credit in part payment on a new motorcar which plaintiff Chastek contemplated buying from defendants. The defendants alleged that while the automobile was in their possession for the purposes last set forth, the same was without fault or negligence on their part, stolen and taken from their possession.

[1–3] In determining the first point as to whether the judgment is warranted by the evidence, we will consider the testimony, as we must, in its most favorable aspect toward the plaintiffs. The plaintiff testified that he went to the place of business of the defendants with the idea of purchasing an automobile of which the defendants were the vendors; that he desired to "turn in" the Ford automobile which he owned, and defendants desired to "try out" the Ford automobile before finally determining what allowance would be made as a credit on the purchase of the machine which they were seeking to sell to the plaintiff. Plaintiff testified, in part, as follows:

"When I came to Albertson's place of business I locked the car. When Mr. Hoover took the car to try it out I handed him the key. I don't think I unlocked the car for Mr. Hoover. I handed Mr. Hoover the key. Mr. Rall, the salesman, suggested that Mr. Hoover, the appraiser, try the Ford out, to see if they could allow me more than $450. So Mr. Hoover took the Ford in order to appraise it. I saw Mr. Hoover leaving the place of business with my car, and I saw him again that day after the machine was stolen, when he came back to the Albertson Motor Company."

On the part of the defendants, Hoover, the appraiser, testified that he took Chastek's machine, ran it into the central portion of the city of Los Angeles, and left it at the curb while he entered an office building to interview a man who desired to buy a Ford automobile of similar style and equipment to that of the plaintiff; that he was gone five or six minutes; when he returned the machine had been stolen. He testified further:

"I don't know whether Mr. Chastek gave me the key to the car, either he gave me the key or else he had left the car unlocked, because it was a Rex lock, and you can't take the key out unless you locked the car; so he either left it unlocked while he was there, or else he gave me the key. I don't remember. Mr. Chastek either gave me the key to the car, or I went out and found the key in the lock of the car. I do remember that I did not lock it when I got out."

In arriving at a conclusion as to whether defendants, in view of the fact that the car was stolen, incurred any liability to Chastek, the question arises as to what degree of care was required to be exercised by them in the circumstances. Appellants contend that the bailment was gratuitous; hence that a slight degree of care only was required of them; and that the evidence did not show that they were guilty of gross negligence. The court determined that the bailment was for the mutual benefit of Chastek and defendants, and hence ordinary care was required to be exercised by the latter in protecting Chastek's property. We agree that this conclusion was the correct one to be drawn. The defendants received the automobile of Chastek in the course of the negotiation for a machine which they desired to sell to Chastek, and that they would be benefited by the transaction was only contingent upon an amount being agreed upon as a credit to be allowed Chastek which would be satisfactory to both sides. We think that the court was justified in concluding that ordinary care was not used for the protection of Chastek's automobile while it was in possession of the defendants. The machine was equipped with a lock, as to the operation of which Hoover, one of the defendants and the man who took charge of the machine, appeared to be familiar. Chastek delivered the key of the lock to Hoover, and when he turned the machine over in front of the place of business of the defendants the lock was fastened. Hoover took the automobile into the business section of a large city, left it unattended and unlocked, and it was stolen. With very simple means at hand by which the machine could have been made more secure in the place where he left it, Hoover omitted altogether to make use of this means. It would seem to be clear beyond question that such act of his by no means satisfied the requirement of ordinary care.

[4, 5] Neither do we think there is merit in the contention of appellants that the action as framed by the complaint was not appropriate to permit a recovery by the plaintiffs. While in general form the allegations were appropriate to an action for conversion, facts are alleged which show that a bailment had been created and the refusal of the defendants to redeliver the property upon demand. Under the circumstances of this case, we feel well satisfied that in taking control of the automobile of Chastek, defendants assumed the obligation of a depositary. It was their duty, upon demand, to redeliver the same to plaintiff, in default of which they would become liable for the value of the property. Civ. Code, § 1822. The case assumed no different aspect in regard to the legal relation than that of the ordinary warehouse contract, in which cases suit for the property itself or its value has been assumed to be the proper remedy. Morse v. Imperial Grain & Warehouse Co., 181 Pac. 815; Pope v. Farmers' Union Milling Co., 130 Cal. 139, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87. The case of Poggi v. Scott, 167 Cal. 372, 139 Pac. 815, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925, cited by appellants, is not, we think, inconsistent with the view here expressed. No damages were claimed herein beyond the value of the automobile which was lost, and the court expressly found that value to be the sum of $500, for which judgment was awarded. No demurrer was interposed to the complaint; hence any special objections which might have been urged as to the completeness of the allegations thereof have been waived.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

47 Cal. App. 774

HUNT v. GLASSELL. (Civ. 3201.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 27, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=1170(1)—No reversal for error, unless prejudicial.

On appeal the question is not as to whether there is error in the record, but rather as to whether there is prejudicial error, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Bills and notes ⊂=358—Assignee of, as collateral holder for value.

An assignment of a negotiable instrument before maturity as collateral security for a pre-existing debt constitutes an indorsement for a valuable consideration, sufficient to protect the purchaser thereof under the law merchant against defenses to the note of which he has no notice at the time of the indorsement, under Civ. Code, §§ 3123, 3124.

3. Bills and notes ⊂=351—Maker may set up any defense as against indorsee after maturity.

The maker of a note, sued on by indorsee after maturity, may prove anything to destroy or satisfy the note that he might prove if it were in the hands of the person to whom originally given, anything that denies its validity, or that constitutes a bar to an action upon it, as distinguished from anything which constitutes admission or affirmance of the plaintiff's right of action, but which seeks to defeat recovery by establishing liability on his part.

4. Bills and notes ⊂=351—Notes purchased from trustee in bankruptcy after maturity subject to all defenses.

Even a bankruptcy court possesses no such power that it can by a pretended sale of a purported right to a note which it never possessed, actually or constructively, and which was settled in full, surrendered, canceled, and destroyed several months before payee had been adjudged a bankrupt, deprive the maker thereof of such defenses thereto as he might interpose at the time it was delivered by the payee to a third person as collateral security.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by F. W. Hunt against A. Glassell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Murphey & Poplin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. E. Hannon and J. Vincent Hannon, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover judgment against the defendant on a promissory note alleged to have been made, executed, and delivered by the defendant on the 25th day of September, 1907, to the Duquesne Brewing Company, a corporation, for the sum of $10,000, subsequently delivered as collateral security to the Fidelity Investment Company, and by further transfers, hereinafter set forth, eventually becoming the purported property of this plaintiff.

[1] In this, as in all cases, our first query is not, "Is there error in the record?" but rather, "Is there prejudicial error?" or "Is the judgment just?" In quest for the correct answer to the latter inquiry, it will be necessary, we think, to set forth briefly a statement of the case, as disclosed by the record. It first appears that on September 25, 1907, this defendant, as the result of certain representations made to him by an agent of the Duquesne Brewing Company, a corporation—the payee named in the note hereinafter referred to—executed and delivered to said brewing company a certain subscription for 200 shares of stock in said corporation, which subscription reads as follows, to wit:

"I, the undersigned, hereby subscribe for 200 shares of the capital stock of the Duquesne Brewing Company, par value $50, amounting to $10,000, payable as follows, to wit: August 1, 1908. Witness my hand and seal this 25th day of September, 1907. Andrew Glassell. [Seal.]"

And at the same time and place, as a part of the same transaction, and as further evidence of the promise and agreement to pay for such shares, but not as payment therefor, the defendant also executed the note sued on here, which note is in words and figures as follows:

"$10,000.00. September 25, 1907. Ten months after date I promise to pay to the order of Duquesne Brewing Company ten thousand dollars. This note is negotiable and payable, without any relief or benefit whatever from stay, valuations, appraisements, or homestead exemption laws. Due August 1, 1908. Andrew Glassell."

Briefly stated, the representations so made to induce defendant to execute the subscription and the note were as follows: That said brewing company was about to erect, in the city of Los Angeles, a brewery of large capacity, and engage in the business of conducting such brewery in said city; that it owned the land upon which such brewery was to be erected, and that it had money enough on hand to erect and to put the brewery in operation; that the buildings would be completed and the brewery in operation by August 1, 1908, and that if defendant did subscribe for such 200 shares he would not be required or called upon to pay said subscription, or to accept such stock, prior to the completion of said brewery and the commencement of the operation thereof; that each and every one of said statements was false, and known by said brewery company to be false, for the reason that such company did not own the land referred to, or have sufficient funds on hand with which to complete the brewery, or to put the same in operation.

We are next met with the fact that the shares of stock so subscribed for were never issued or delivered to defendant, or to any one else for him; that before the expiration of the time within which the money was, by the terms of the subscription and note, to be paid and said stock delivered, the said brewing company had wholly abandoned the intention to erect such brewery or to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling the products thereof, and had wholly abandoned the purposes for which said subscription to its capital stock was made; and that it had been, at all times mentioned, unable to erect such brewery, or to carry out the purposes or intention for which said subscription was obtained, or to engage in the business as already set forth.

In addition to said alleged fraud, one of the defenses made by defendant here was that there was no consideration for the subscription referred to, or for the note which is the basis of this action. Some time between "some time in the year 1909 and prior to the 24th day of June, 1909," the said Duquesne Brewing Company, being indebted to the Fidelity Investment Company in the sum of about $2,500, as evidenced by a promissory note payable to and negotiated by one Martel to the latter company, delivered the note sued on here to said investment company as collateral security to secure the payment of such indebtedness. Thereafter, and on the 24th day of June, 1909, such indebtedness being past due and unpaid, the said Fidelity Investment Company brought suit on the $10,000 collateral security note, and while such suit was pending, and prior to the 10th day of May, 1910, the plaintiff in that action sold and transferred the said $2,500 note—the transaction carrying with it the note here involved and so held as collateral security—to one Hugh Glassell; the latter conducting and continuing the suit so commenced in the name of his assignor, the Fidelity Investment Company. On or about May 10, 1910, this defendant, believing that said Hugh Glassell was an innocent holder of said note for value, paid to him something more than $2,500, in full payment and discharge of the said $10,000 note for cancellation, and it was thereupon destroyed. On October 5, 1909, the Duquesne Brewing Company was, in accordance with the federal bankruptcy law, adjudged a bankrupt, a trustee of the estate of the bankrupt was duly appointed, and by the referee, to whom the matter was referred, authorized to sell at public auction the assets of such bankrupt. Thereupon the trustee proceeded as directed to sell the property of the bankrupt estate, which consisted of certain real estate and promissory notes, among which was included the note of defendant upon which this action is based—being designated as "Parcel 3. Andrew Glassell, promissory note for $10,000." On December 19, 1910, 7 months and 9 days after the payment of said sum by this defendant to said Hugh Glassell, and at least 1 year, 5 months and 25 days after the note in controversy was delivered by the Duquesne Brewing Company as collateral security to said Fidelity Investment Company, the note having been so delivered at least 3 months and 11 days before the adjudication of said brewing company to be a bankrupt, as already set forth, the trustee in bankruptcy was authorized to sell all of said property, which, as we have already shown, purported to include the note in question, notwithstanding the fact—which must now be obvious—that this note was not among the assets of said bankrupt estate at the time the corporation was by the court declared a bankrupt, nor has it been at any time since; it being shown that the company had not possessed it at all since June 24, 1909. Pursuant to said purported order, the trustee in bankruptcy made a purported sale of said note to the plaintiff herein, which purported sale the referee in bankruptcy did thereafter, on January 23, 1911, pretend and purport to confirm. Accordingly, on January 26, 1911, whatever right the said Duquesne Brewing Company, a corporation, bankrupt, had in and to said note, was pretended and purported to be sold and delivered to the plaintiff herein.

Under these facts and conditions, plaintiff claims that the judgment so entered should be reversed, and the lower court directed to enter judgment in his favor "as prayed for in his second amended complaint." The trial court found, among other things, as follows:

"It is not true that at the time the defendant made said payment he knew that said note for $10,000 made by him to Duquesne Brewing Company was held by the Fidelity Investment Company as collateral security to secure the payment of the said $2,500 note or notes, or for no other purpose, or knew that the only interest that the Fidelity Investment Company had in said note of $10,000 was to the extent of $2,500, with interest; nor is it true that said note was at the time of said settlement held by the said

Fidelity Investment Company, a corporation, as collateral security or otherwise. * * * The court further finds that the note herein sued on * * * is the same note that was sued on in the original complaint; * * * that said note had been delivered up to be canceled as fully paid and discharged, and had been canceled and destroyed, paid and discharged, prior to * * * December 10, 1910."

There is evidence to support these findings. Were this action between the defendant here and the brewing company, there is no question but that on the showing made the defendant would have been entitled to judgment on both grounds; i. e., "fraud" and "no consideration." Is the plaintiff in this action in any better position than the brewing company would have been? We think not.

[2] As we have already seen, the $10,000 note was due by its terms on August 1, 1908. The Fidelity Investment Company became the holder of the note during the year 1909, and prior to June 24th of that year, which was some time after the note had become due. It was therefore, as a matter of law, received by said investment company, as well as by the latter's successor in interest—Hugh Glassell—subject to any and all defenses which the maker thereof, defendant here, might interpose. Risley v. Gray, 98 Cal. 40, 32 Pac. 884; James v. Yaeger, 86 Cal. 184, 24 Pac. 1005; Braly v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481, 11 Pac. 385, 12 Pac. 623, 60 Am. Rep. 543; Folsom v. Bartlett, 2 Cal. 163. The rule in this state is that an assignment of a negotiable instrument before maturity as collateral security for a pre-existing debt constitutes an indorsement for a valuable consideration sufficient to protect the purchaser thereof under the law merchant against defenses to the note of which he has no notice at the time of the indorsement. Sections 3123 and 3124, Civ. Code; Pezzoni v. Greenwell, 178 Cal. 649, 174 Pac. 60. The record in the case at bar discloses the fact that the note in question was signed by defendant, made payable "to the order of Duquesne Brewing Company," and was negotiable in form. The court found that said brewery company did practice the fraud upon defendant and induced him to subscribe for said stock, and that no stock was ever issued or delivered by said brewery company to defendant, which findings find support in the evidence. The court further found that at the time said Fidelity Investment Company so received the said note it had no notice of any fraud in the procuring of the note in the first instance, or of any defense to its validity, except the fact that it was by its terms several months past due. It also appears that no call or assessment upon the stockholders or against the stock subscribed for was made by the board of directors of said brewing company at any time, for any amount, nor by said bankruptcy court, or the trustee therein, nor were any proceedings had to determine what, if any, amount would be necessary to pay the debts, etc., of the bankrupt corporation, and that there are no unsatisfied creditors.

[3] Under such conditions as these, the general rule is that—

"The maker of a note sued on by an indorsee after maturity may prove anything in defense which goes to destroy or satisfy the note—anything that denies its validity, or that constitutes a bar to an action upon it, as distinguished from anything which constitutes an admission or affirmance of the plaintiff's right of action and his title to the money he seeks to recover, but which seeks to defeat the recovery by establishing liability on his part. Within this class of defenses are fraud, mistake, want or failure of consideration, release, or anything else which goes to show that he ought never be compelled to pay the note to the person to whom it was originally given, or to any person who had held it after maturity, and before it came into the hands of the plaintiff." Note to Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Co. v. Rockford Nat. Bank (Ill.) 46 L. R. A. 760.

There is, therefore, no merit in appellant's contention that respondent here is liable as trustee of an involuntary trust.

[4] Appellant urges 13 points for reversal of the judgment, none of which, however, do we deem it necessary or essential to discuss, for the reason that it is now obvious that the bankruptcy court had absolutely no jurisdiction or control over the note, and that the bankrupt estate had no interest therein that could be so disposed of. Under these facts, even a bankruptcy court possesses no such power that it can, by a pretended sale of a purported right to a note which it had never possessed, actually or constructively, and which was settled in full, surrendered, canceled, and destroyed several months before the payee named therein had been adjudged a bankrupt deprive the maker thereof of such defenses thereto as he might interpose at the time it was so delivered as such collateral security.

We think, regardless of the claim that there is error in the record, finding no prejudicial error therein, that the judgment is eminently just. Particularly is this so when the entire record is viewed in the light of section 4½ of article 6 of our Constitution; for we cannot say, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, that we are of the opinion that the errors complained of have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WELLER, J.

47 Cal. App. 274

DAMAN v. HUNT (REYNOLDS, Intervener). (Civ. 2072.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1920. On Hearing in Supreme Court, June 28, 1920.)

1. Insolvency ⟸14—Jurisdiction must appear on face of record in insolvency proceedings.

The superior court in proceedings in insolvency exercises a special or limited jurisdiction, and therefore everything required by the Insolvency Act of 1880, to give the court the jurisdiction to hear and determine the same or act in the proceedings must be made affirmatively to appear in the record.

2. Pleading ⟸129(1)—Ultimate facts not denied admitted.

Where vital ultimate facts alleged in a complaint are not denied by the adversary party in his pleadings, they are to be deemed as admitted.

3. Insolvency ⟸89—Successor to assignee needs no specific assignment of property.

In an insolvency proceeding, where the office of assignee has become vacant and the vacancy has become regularly supplied by the appointment of another to discharge the duties of the office, property of the insolvent estate having already been assigned and conveyed to the original assignee and his "successor and successors in office," it was not necessary that there should be a specific assignment and conveyance of the property belonging to the insolvent to the person appointed to the vacancy.

4. Insolvency ⟸21—Consent to dismissal must appear upon face of proceedings.

Consent of all interested parties, in an insolvency proceeding under Insolvency Act 1880, to a dismissal, must be made to appear upon the face of the proceedings to dismiss, to render an order of dismissal immune from collateral attack.

5. Motions ⟸59(2)—Have jurisdiction to vacate void order.

A court making an order without jurisdiction had authority to vacate it.

6. Insolvency ⟸167—Unauthorized dismissal of proceedings complete nullity.

Unauthorized dismissal of an insolvency proceeding, unauthorized because the court was without jurisdiction to dismiss, did not have the effect of nullifying the proceedings, and they were still pending in contemplation of law, and the insolvent did not thereby gain title to the property of the estate.

7. Insolvency ⟸82—Assignee must file bond, otherwise sale void.

The requirement in Insolvency Act, § 15, that assignee in insolvency should file a bond, is an essential requisite for his qualification, and a sale by an assignee who had not filed a bond was absolutely void.

8. Insolvency ⟸82—Order for private sale void in absence of petition.

An order requiring assignee in insolvency proceeding to make a private sale was absolutely void, where there was no petition filed praying for the sale or disposal of the property by private sale, in view of Insolvency Act, § 25.

9. Insolvency ⟸81—Failure of assignee to promptly prosecute proceedings not abandonment of property.

The fact that the administration of the estate of an insolvent remained in abeyance or was dormant because the proceeding in insolvency was not properly prosecuted to final determination did not constitute an abandonment of land forming a part of the assets of the estate; there being no presumption of abandonment from mere lapse of time.

10. Insolvency ⟸81—Abandonment of property by assignee question of fact.

The question of abandonment of property by an assignee of an insolvent is one of fact to be determined by the jury, or the court if the issues of fact are tried by the court.

11. Insolvency ⟸81 — Party claiming abandonment of property by assignee must clearly prove it.

In an action concerning title to land, one claiming that the land was abandoned by assignee of an insolvent had the burden of clearly showing that there was an intention in the assignee to abandon the property.

12. Limitation of actions ⟸19(3)—Five-year statute held to apply to action to quiet title involving land fraudulently obtained.

The five-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 318) held to govern the time within which an action to quiet title might be commenced, although the purpose was to recover land fraudulently acquired, section 338 not applying, the relief prayed for being based upon the ground that plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property.

13. Limitation of actions ⟸44(4)—Accrual of cause of action to recover land.

Where assignee of insolvent in insolvency proceeding failed to promptly sell land and subsequently the court dismissed the proceedings and appointed an assignee to transfer the property without the consent of the creditors, the five-year statute of limitation, Code Civ. Proc. § 318, did not commence to run until the making of the order of dismissal, or perhaps from the act of the filing of the petition for a dismissal.

14. Limitation of actions ⟸110—No statute runs against claim after filing of petition in insolvency.

In view of Insolvency Act, § 58, no statute of limitation will run against a claim after the filing of a petition to be adjudged an insolvent, during the pendency of the proceeding.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

15. Insolvency ⟸21—Proceeding could not be dismissed without creditors' consent.

Dismissal of an insolvency proceeding without the consent of the creditors was absolutely void under Insolvency Act 1880.

16. Insolvency ⟸51—After dismissal, appointment of assignee for limited purpose not authorized.

Court had no authority to appoint an assignee after dismissal of an insolvency proceeding under Insolvency Act 1880, for the limited purpose of making a conveyance of the property to the insolvent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by A. O. Daman against John Wesley Hunt, Jr., in which H. W. Reynolds intervened. From a judgment for part of the relief prayed for plaintiff appealed. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

A. J. Mitchell and Charles H. Brock, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. Creighton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Charles Thomson, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to quiet his title to certain lots in the town site of Howard, in the county of Los Angeles. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff for a portion of said lots and in favor of the intervener as to the balance thereof. Plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from that portion of the judgment which was in favor of the intervener, no question arising herein as to the other lots.

The complaint was filed on September 23, 1915, and was in the usual form, alleging that defendant, Hunt, claimed some interest in the real property adverse to plaintiff. On February 16, 1916, H. W. Reynolds, as assignee in the matter of Jeremiah W. German, an insolvent debtor, filed a complaint in intervention.

The findings of the court present fully certain facts of the case. They are as follows: (2) That, on the 31st day of July, 1888, Jeremiah W. German was the owner in fee, and was in possession of the lots in controversy. (3) That on said day said German filed his petition in voluntary insolvency in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, and that he was duly adjudged an insolvent. (4) That at a meeting of the creditors of said insolvent, Jacob Baruch was chosen assignee in said insolvency matter, and duly qualified as such assignee. (5) That in the schedule attached to the petition of said insolvent was the real property involved herein. (6) That verified claims were filed against said insolvent estate to the amount of $4,907.09, which were duly allowed by the court, and are now unpaid, except that there was paid thereon the sum of 7.1046 cents on each dollar thereof received from the sale of the personal property belonging to the insolvent. (7) That, on the 8th of September, 1888, the county clerk deeded said real property to the assignee, Jacob Baruch, and to his successor or successors in office. (8) That said assignee, Jacob Baruch, died about January 1, 1909. (9) That, about the 28th of February, 1912, the court, "without any notice to creditors or to any one else interested in said insolvency proceedings, made the following order in said proceedings, to wit: 'This cause coming on to be heard upon the application of Jeremiah W. German, the insolvent debtor, * * * for an order dismissing this action for want of prosecution, and it appearing * * * that no proceedings have been had therein for a period of more than 20 years, * * * it is ordered that the said action be, and the same is hereby dismissed for want of prosecution.'" (10) That on or about the 7th day of June, 1912, the court, "without any notice to creditors, or to anyone else interested in said insolvency proceedings, made the following order: 'It appearing to the court' that said order dismissing the action 'was inadvertently made in this, that said order does not provide for the disposition of the undisposed property heretofore conveyed to the assignee' of the estate of said insolvent, 'it is therefore ordered that the said order of dismissal be, and the same is hereby, canceled and set aside and the court hereby assumes jurisdiction of said cause for the purpose only of taking such further action therein as may be necessary and proper in the furtherance of justice; and it further appearing to the court that there is certain real estate heretofore conveyed to Jacob Baruch as assignee in this cause, * * * and that no disposition has been made of said real estate by the said assignee; * * * that by reason of the death of the said Jacob Baruch * * * a vacancy exists, and that there is no person qualified to act herein; * * * that no successor to said Jacob Baruch as assignee has been appointed, and that by reason of the want of prosecution of said action the said assignor * * * is entitled to a dismissal thereof and to a reconveyance of any undisposed of property herein; that said German has conveyed to one A. O. Daman, by deed dated March 5, 1912, * * * an interest in and to the said undisposed of real estate—it is therefore ordered that James H. Blanchard be, and he is hereby, appointed as assignee in this cause, without bond, for the purpose only, and he is hereby directed to convey to A. O. Damon, as grantee of Jeremiah W. German, the undisposed of real estate heretofore conveyed to Jacob Baruch,'" etc. (11) That, on or about the 28th of February, 1917, said court vacated the portion of the last-above quoted order which appointed said Blanchard special assignee, and appointed H. W. Reynolds as assignee with bond of $1,000. (12) That the said German gave a quitclaim deed, dated March 5, 1912, to A. O. Daman, to the property in question. (13) That, on or about the 7th day of June, 1912, the said Blanchard, acting as special assignee, gave a deed to said property to said Daman, purporting to convey the title from the estate of said insolvent, "but the said James H. Blanchard had not qualified as said assignee * * * and never did qualify as such assignee, and no order had been obtained for the making of said transfer, save and except the order" set out in finding 10, "and no notice of sale had been given" or obtained, "and no sale had been made of said property, and no consideration for said deed passed to the said assignee, * * * and the estate of said insolvent and "the creditors therein did not * * * at any time receive any consideration for the said transfer of said property," and no notice to creditors was ever given of the intention to make said transfer. (14) That the creditors first obtained knowledge of the making of the orders set out in findings 9 and 10 about the 1st day of November, 1915. (15) That, about the 10th day of June, 1912, A. O. Daman gave to Frank P. Stedman a grant deed to said property, the consideration recited in said deed being $1,000.00. (16) That, about the 7th day of September, 1915, Stedman gave to Daman a grant deed to said property, the consideration recited in said deed being $10. (17) That in the account of the assignee, Jacob Baruch, filed July 9, 1889, said Baruch reported to the court that the real estate in question was undisposed of, for the reason "that the said assignee was unable to find purchasers therefor, and that upon the 22d day of July, 1889, this court audited and settled the account of said assignee."

The points made by the appellant for a reversal are thus specifically stated in the brief of the respondent:

"(1) That the demurrer to respondent's amended complaint should have been sustained; (2) that there is no evidence to show that Jacob Baruch was ever appointed assignee or ever qualified as such in the insolvency proceedings of Jeremiah W. German, or that the property here involved was ever assigned to him, or that respondent was ever appointed assignee in such insolvency matter or ever qualified as such, or that the property in question was ever assigned to him; (3) that the findings of fact and conclusions of law do not support the judgment; (4) that the intervener could not make a collateral attack on the orders made in the insolvency proceedings for the reason that the superior court when sitting as an insolvency court is a court of general jurisdiction; (5) that the order of dismissal made in the insolvency proceedings was a valid order, and disposed of all of the interest which the assignee or creditors might or could have had in the property here involved, and put the property back in Jeremiah German just the same as if no insolvency proceedings had been had; (6) that the order setting aside and vacating the order of dismissal did not set aside and vacate it, and that if any of the order setting aside and vacating the order of dismissal is void, it is void in toto; (7) that the property here involved was abandoned by the assignee in the insolvency proceedings; (8) that the intervener is barred from bringing this action by the statute of limitation; (9) that by reason of the great lapse of time since the insolvency proceedings were instituted, all the claims, debts, liabilities, or demands against Jeremiah German on July 31, 1888, being the time when said insolvency proceedings were commenced, must be deemed to have been discharged; (10) that appellant was an innocent purchaser of said property; (11) that James H. Blanchard was the legally appointed and qualified assignee in the insolvency matter."

It is deemed proper first to examine and present herein such of the provisions of the Insolvency Act of 1880 (Stats. 1880, p. 82), under which the insolvency proceedings involved herein were instituted, as have direct pertinency to the inquiry submitted by this appeal.

The first, second, third, and fourth sections of said act pointed out the manner in which an insolvent debtor may as a voluntary insolvent petition the superior court to be discharged from his debts and liabilities, and provided that annexed to his petition there should be a schedule of his debts and liabilities, which should contain a full and true statement thereof, and an inventory containing a description of all his estate, both real and personal. The fifteenth section provided for the election by the creditors of an assignee to take charge of and administer the insolvent's estate. Said section also provided that the assignee so elected should, within five days after his election, file with the clerk of the court a bond, in an amount fixed by the court, with two or more sufficient sureties, approved by the court, and conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties devolving upon him. The court could, however, upon a proper showing, extend the time for filing such bond beyond the five days' limit specified in said section for said purpose.

Section 25 of the act provided as follows:

"The assignee shall, as speedily as possible, convert the estate, real and personal, into money. He shall keep a regular account of all moneys received by him as assignee, to which every creditor or other person interested therein may, at all reasonable times, have access. No private sale of any property of the estate of an insolvent debtor shall be valid, unless made under the order of the court upon a petition in writing, which shall set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary. Upon filing the petition, notice of at least ten days shall be given by publication and mailing, in the same manner as is provided in section seven of this act. If it appears that a private sale is for the best interests of the estate, the court shall order it to be made."

See, also, subdivision 4, § 21, of said act.

Section 58 of the act provided:

"Pending proceedings by or against any person, copartnership, or corporation, no statute of limitation of this state shall run against a claim, which in its nature is provable against the estate of the debtor."

Section 66 of said act provided:

"The court may, upon the application of the debtor, if it be a voluntary petition, or of the petitioning creditors, if a creditor's petition, dismiss the petition and discontinue the proceedings at any time before the appointment of assignee. After the appointment of assignee, no dismissal shall be made without the consent of all parties interested in or affected thereby."

[1] It is settled that the superior court, in proceedings in insolvency, exercises a special or limited jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that everything required by the insolvency statute to give said court the jurisdiction to hear and determine the same or to act in the proceedings must be made affirmatively to appear in the record. If any jurisdictional fact appears, upon the face of the record, to be wanting, then the court was wholly without jurisdiction to act or to make any valid order or adjudication in the proceeding.

In the case of McDonald v. Katz, 31 Cal. 167, the court said, referring to insolvency proceedings:

"The proceedings are special, and no intendments can be made in favor of the jurisdiction. Everything bearing upon that question must appear affirmatively"—citing McAllister v. Strode, 7 Cal. 430; Judson v. Atwill, 9 Cal. 478; Meyer v. Kohlman, 8 Cal. 47; Swain v. Chase, 12 Cal. 283.

See, also, Keystone Driller Co. v. Superior Court, etc., 138 Cal. 738, 742, 72 Pac. 398.

By the rules stated in the foregoing cases the points as to the jurisdiction of the court to make the several orders referred to must be considered and determined.

1. The demurrer to the amended complaint in intervention was general, and was properly overruled. That pleading states the facts as they are substantially hereinabove reproduced. It is not necessary to examine in detail herein the averments of said complaint, and we shall not attempt to do so, since the facts as they are above stated show that, as embraced in the complaint, a cause of action is stated.

[2] 2. As to the point that there was no evidence showing that Jacob Baruch was duly appointed and the qualified assignee in the insolvency proceedings, a ready and conclusive reply is found in the fact that the appellant failed to deny the allegation in the complaint of Baruch's appointment, etc., and so in legal effect admitted that fact. The complaint in intervention alleges the appointment and qualification of Baruch as assignee, and also that the clerk of the superior court, on the 8th day of September, 1888, deeded and assigned to said Baruch, as assignee, etc., and to his successor and successors in office all of the property, real and personal, belonging to the insolvent, Jeremiah W. German, except such property as was by law exempt, said deed and assignment having been duly recorded. There was no denial of these averments, and, as above stated, the facts so averred, therefore, stand as having been admitted. Nor was there any denial in the answer of the averments of the complaint in intervention that the court set aside and vacated the order appointing James H. Blanchard as assignee, and declared the office of assignee vacant, and thereupon appointed H. W. Reynolds (intervener and respondent) as such assignee, and that said Reynolds "ever since has been, and now is, the duly appointed, qualified, and acting assignee in the said insolvency matter," etc.

[3] It requires the citation of no authorities to confirm the obvious proposition that where certain vital ultimate facts alleged in a complaint are not denied by the adversary party in his pleading, such facts are to be deemed admitted, and that in such case it is not necessary to introduce evidence extrinsic to the pleadings themselves to support such facts. But in this connection, it may be noted that counsel for appellant contend that there is neither allegation nor proof that the property was assigned to the intervener. This contention cannot be maintained. The undenied allegation of the complaint in intervention is, as we have seen, that the clerk of the court, upon the filing of the petition in insolvency and the adjudication following therefrom that German was an insolvent debtor, deeded and assigned to said Baruch, the original assignee, "and to his successor and successors in office, all of the property, real and personal, then belonging to the said Jeremiah W. German," etc. It follows, of course, that the office of assignee having become vacant and a successor to Baruch having been regularly appointed and qualified, such successor thereupon immediately became vested with the right to the possession of all the property belonging to the insolvent estate by virtue of the assignment and conveyance to Baruch. We have found no provision in the insolvency law to the effect that, where the office of assignee has become vacant and the vacancy has been regularly supplied by the appointment of another to discharge the duties of the office, and where the property of the insolvent estate had already been assigned and conveyed to the original assignee, and his "successor and successors in office," it is necessary or requisite that there should be a specific assignment and conveyance of the property belonging to the insolvent's estate to such successor or successors. We, therefore, conclude that it was not necessary to plead and prove that the clerk directly assigned and conveyed the property to Reynolds, Baruch's successor.

[4] 3. The order dismissing the insolvency proceedings showed upon its face that the court was without jurisdiction to make said order, and that the same was absolutely void.

The petition for the order of dismissal and the order constitute the entire record of the proceeding wherein the order dismissing the proceedings was made, and it appears therefrom that the petition was filed on the 28th day of February, 1912, and that the order of dismissal was made on the same day. As will be observed, section 66 of the Insolvency Act, above quoted herein, provided that after the appointment of an assignee in insolvency, no dismissal of the petition in insolvency and discontinuance of the insolvency proceedings should be made and ordered without the consent of all parties interested in or affected thereby. It was not made to appear upon the face of the petition to dismiss or in the order of dismissal or otherwise that the consent of the parties interested in or affected by the insolvency proceedings had been obtained for a dismissal and discontinuance of the proceedings in insolvency. The consent of the parties interested in the proceedings involved a jurisdictional fact. The court was absolutely powerless to make an order of dismissal and discontinuance of the proceedings in the absence of a showing of that fact, and its act in making the order under such circumstances was coram non judice. Moreover, since the superior court was in insolvency proceedings vested only with a special or limited jurisdiction, no presumptions or intendments can be indulged in favor of the validity of the order. It was necessary that the consent of all interested parties should be made to appear upon the face of the proceeding to dismiss to render the order immune from collateral attack. As above intimated, there was no showing nor any attempt to show by evidence de hors the record of the proceeding to dismiss that the consent of the interested parties to a dismissal and a discontinuance of the insolvency proceedings actually was had, assuming that it would have been proper thus to have made such a showing.

[5, 6] 4. It was, of course, proper for the court to set aside and nullify its order dismissing the insolvency proceedings. As above shown, the court was wholly without authority or jurisdiction to make the order of dismissal and discontinuance, and there was therefore left to it no other alternative but that of vacating said order, and thus getting it out of the way and so preventing complications which would necessarily arise in the insolvency proceedings by reason of said order. The deed of conveyance of the property by German to the appellant was, of course, absolutely void. It conveyed nothing. The unauthorized dismissal of the insolvency proceedings—unauthorized because the court was without jurisdiction to dismiss the proceedings—did not have the effect of nullifying the proceedings. They still were pending in contemplation of law, and, of course, the insolvent was not legally reinvested with title to the property which had belonged to the estate and which had been conveyed for the purposes of administration of the estate to the assignee and his successor and successors in office. And the fact that appellant, having conveyed the property to one Stedman after German, in the interval between the dismissal and the restoration of the insolvency proceedings, had made a purported conveyance of the property to the appellant, received a conveyance back of the property from said Stedman could not have the effect of vesting any greater title in the appellant than he was able to convey to Stedman. In other words, having obtained no title from German, the appellant could convey none to Stedman, and therefore the latter had no title he could convey when he made the purported reconveyance to the appellant.

[7-9] It was also proper for the court, upon vacating the order of dismissal and thus reviving the proceedings, to appoint an assignee to take charge of and administer upon the remaining undisposed assets of the insolvent's estate, since there was a vacancy in that office by reason of the death of the original assignee. The appointment of James H. Blanchard as assignee to succeed Baruch, assignee, was regular. But Blanchard failed to file a bond as assignee, and he was therefore without authority to exercise the duties of his office or to perform a valid act as assignee until he filed such bond. It follows that the conveyance by him of the land in controversy to the appellant involved a void act. It was wholly without legal force or effect. Counsel for the appellant vigorously contend, however, that the mere appointment of Blanchard vested him with all the powers of an assignee or a trustee, and that he could act or perform the duties of the office without giving or filing a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as such assignee. We are unable to concur in that contention. As above shown, the Insolvency Act (section 15) provided that the assignee, within a certain specified time, or within any further time which the court might allow for meeting that requirement, should file a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties devolving upon him. It is true that section 15 of said act does not expressly declare that the filing of the bond should be a prerequisite to his right to exercise his authority as assignee, but it certainly meant that such was to be the case. If the assignee could go on and legally administer the insolvent estate without filing the bond required, what could have been the object of the Legislature in requiring a bond at all? The assignee derived his title to the insolvent's estate from the assignment, which divested the insolvent of his property and vested it in the assignee from the time of the insolvency. Both the insolvent and the creditors are interested in the estate, and are entitled to have its assets administered according to the best interests of all concerned. The insolvent is interested in having his liabilities as far extinguished by the assets of his estate as possible and the creditors are interested in having their claims as nearly satisfied in full as the condition of the estate will permit. Hence, it was a wise provision that one having cast upon him so important a trust should be required to file a sufficient bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the trust, and we entertain no doubt that the requirement that an assignee in insolvency should file a bond for that purpose was intended by the Legislature as an essential requisite for his qualification to exercise or perform the duties of that office. At any rate, it has been so held in a number of cases, among which may be mentioned the case of Winchester v. Union Bank of Maryland, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 79, 19 Am. Dec. 255. Furthermore, the order appointing Blanchard limited his authority as assignee to the performance of the act of making a conveyance of the property in dispute to the appellant. That portion of the order was absolutely void, since it does not appear therefrom or from anything in the proceeding culminating in his appointment that a petition was filed praying for the sale or disposal of the property by private sale. Section 25 of the Insolvency Act provided that "no private sale of any property of the estate of an insolvent debtor shall be valid, unless made under the order of the court upon a petition in writing, which shall set forth the facts showing the sale to be necessary." And the same section provided that upon the filing of a petition for such a sale notice of at least 10 days should be given by publication, etc. The order appointing Blanchard as assignee and the order authorizing him to convey the property to the appellant was, as we have seen, practically one order, and both were made on the same day. Thus it is manifest that there is not only not any showing that a petition was presented to the court asking for a private sale, but that it was absolutely impossible for any notice whatever, much less the required notice of 10 days, to have been given of such sale, assuming, of course, that the conveyance to the appellant involved a sale by the assignee. And this brings us to the question, raised by the appellant, that the right to subject the land in controversy to the payment of the debts of the insolvent was lost by reason of the fact that said land had been abandoned by the assignee. But there is no merit to the point. The complaint of the intervener alleges that said property was taken possession of by the original assignee, Jacob Baruch, the same having been assigned and conveyed to him by the clerk of the superior court. This allegation is not denied by the answer to the complaint in intervention, and therefore stands as admitted. The fact that the administration of the estate of the insolvent remained in abeyance or was dormant because the proceedings in insolvency were not promptly prosecuted to a final determination did not constitute an abandonment of the property as part of the assets of the insolvent estate to be subjected to the extinguishment of the liabilities of the insolvent. The rule of law as to abandonment is that there is no presumption of abandonment from mere lapse of time. Partridge v. McKinney, 10 Cal. 181. See, also, Utt v. Frey, 106 Cal. 352, 397, 398, 39 Pac. 807, as to what will and will not constitute the abandonment of property. In the present case, there could be no abandonment except by the assignee in whom the title to the property for the purposes of the insolvency proceedings had been vested. There is no evidence tending to show that Baruch abandoned, or intended to abandon, the property, save and except the fact that he failed to sell it during his incumbency as assignee and appropriate the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the debts of the insolvent. This omission may be assumed to have involved a dereliction of official duty on the part of Baruch rather than an abandonment, since it does not appear that the property was not of sufficient value to have justified the expense of selling it for the benefit of the insolvent's estate.

[10, 11] Appellant cites a number of cases which it is claimed support the view that the property herein involved was abandoned, and therefore the right to appropriate it to the payment of the debts of the insolvent lost; but we have examined the cases and do not perceive that they are in point here. The property belonged to the insolvent's estate, and it was available for disposition by the assignee in insolvency. No claim was ever made that it was abandoned or that there was an intention to abandon it as a part of the insolvent's estate until the void order was made, at the instigation of the insolvent, dismissing and discontinuing the insolvency proceedings, when the insolvent himself undertook to retake possession of it and convey it to the plaintiff. The question of abandonment is one of fact to be determined by the jury or the court, if the issues of fact are tried by the court, and the burden was upon the plaintiff clearly to show that there was an intention in the assignee to abandon the property. Latham v. City of Los Angeles, 87 Cal. 514, 518, 25 Pac. 673. The finding of the court in this case that there was no abandonment is conclusive upon this court.

[12] 5. The contention that the action, in so far as it is made by the complaint in intervention, is barred by the statute of limitations is without force. The complaint of the intervener is one for the quieting of title to the property in dispute as against the plaintiff and the defendant and in favor of the intervener, or, in effect, is for the recovery of real property, and the claim that the intervener's claim is barred proceeds upon the theory that the action, as to the time within which it should have been commenced, is governed by section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is manifest that that section does not apply to the intervener's case, but that section 318 of said Code governs as to the time within which such an action may be commenced. Section 338 provides for the commencement of actions where the relief prayed for is based upon the ground of fraud, and that is not the ground of the relief asked for by the intervener. Section 318 provides that an action for the recovery of real property, or for the possession thereof, cannot be maintained "unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor, was seized or possessed of the property in question, within five years next before the commencement of the action." The Supreme Court, in construing section 318, in Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 146, 147, 73 Pac. 820, 821, 822, says:

"It seems to be established, therefore, by these cases that, although the main ground of the action is fraud or mistake, whereby the defendant has obtained the legal title to the land in controversy, and the chief contention between the parties is with respect to the fraud or mistake alleged, yet, if the plaintiff alleges facts which show, as matter of law, that he is entitled to possession of the property, and a part of the relief asked is that he be let into possession, or that his title to the land be quieted, the action is in reality for the recovery of real property, and is not barred except by the five-year limitation contained in section 318. The same rule has been followed in the states of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and Texas. Williams v. Allison, 33 Iowa, 278; Reihl v. Likowski, 33 Kan. 515; Dunn v. Miller, 96 Mo. 338; Shepard v. Cummings, 44 Tex. 502. There is a case to the contrary in New York. Hoyt v. Putnam, 39 Hun, 406.

"Unless the decisions of this court above cited are to be overruled, it must be conceded that, although the wrong complained of, and undoubtedly the principal contest in the case, arises from the undue influence exerted by the defendant Crowley on her deceased husband in his lifetime, the action in question is nevertheless an action to recover real property and for the possession thereof, and is not barred by the provisions of section 318."

See, also, Page v. Garver, 146 Cal. 577, 80 Pac. 860.

[13] In the present case the first act which could start the statute of limitations to running, or could in any way impart to the intervener or the creditors of the estate of which the intervener became the assignee, information that the appellant claimed an interest in the property was the filing for record of the deed from German to the appellant, which act of recordation occurred on the 11th day of March, 1912, or, as counsel for the respondent suggest, perhaps the act of the filing of the petition for a dismissal of the proceedings in insolvency and the making of the order of dismissal might have been the first acts indicating a claim of interest in the property by parties other than the assignee, and the order of dismissal was made on the 28th day of February, 1912. The intervener's amended complaint, upon which the action was tried, was filed on the 11th day of March, 1916, within the five-year limitation prescribed by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is therefore manifest, as stated, that the intervener's action is not barred.

[14] 6. The point that "because of the lapse of time since the filing of the petition by the said Jeremiah W. German to be adjudged an insolvent debtor, the presumption exists that all claims, debts, liabilities, and demands that were valid claims against said petitioner on July 31, 1888, have been paid and discharged" is conclusively answered by section 58 of the Insolvency Act, above quoted herein, that no statute of limitation of this state shall run against a claim which, in its nature, is provable against the estate of the debtor.

7. It is claimed that the findings of fact and conclusions of law do not support the judgment. It is not necessary to reproduce herein the findings of fact and the conclusions of law to show that this contention has no foundation. It is sufficient to say that we have carefully examined the findings and the conclusions of law, and that we have concluded from said examination that the judgment derives ample support from them.

There are numerous other points made by the appellant in impeachment of the judgment, but we have discovered no merit in them. We are satisfied that the judgment is legally impregnable, and it is accordingly affirmed.

We concur: ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [15, 16] In denying the petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District we are not to be understood as approving that portion of the opinion substantially holding that the ordinary presumptions and intendments applicable to judgments of courts of record are not applicable to judgments and orders of the superior court in insolvency proceedings. We think that here the order of the superior court dismissing the insolvency proceeding, and the subsequent order appointing Blanchard as assignee for the limited purpose of making a conveyance of the property to the insolvent, were manifestly void upon their face, the order of dismissal because it sufficiently appears on the face of the record that it was made without the consent of the creditors, and the other order because no such appointment of an assignee is authorized by law. In view of this conclusion, we intimate no opinion upon the question of the effect of the failure of Blanchard to give a bond. In all other respects we are satisfied with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

All concur.

183 Cal. 314

In re PRATHER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 9162.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 19, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⟸461(1)—Intent of parties when writing letters furnishing basis of contract, inadmissible.

Where contract as to attorney's fees was embraced in correspondence, evidence as to what the parties had in mind at the time they wrote letters is inadmissible to vary terms of the writings.

2. Contracts ⟸169—Intention of parties to written contract must be ascertained from the writing and surrounding circumstances.

The intention of the parties to a written contract contained in correspondence must be determined from the language of letters read in light of surrounding circumstances.

3. Attorney and client ⟸144—Attorney held not entitled under contract to additional compensation for services.

Where an attorney employed by the executor of an estate in litigation pending to recover property which the deceased had transferred shortly before his death advised that recovery could be had in creditor's suit, and it was begun and prosecuted to a successful determination, the attorney's agreement that a stipulated fee should cover all necessary litigation in the superior court of the county included litigation not then pending and as well a creditors' suit, which was necessary to recover the property.

4. Executors and administrators ⟸256(6)—Allowance of probate court for attorney's fee will not be disturbed unless erroneous.

An allowance by the probate court for services of an attorney in appellate court will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the claim appears to be without justification.

5. Executors and administrators ⟸216(2)—An allowance of $4,550 for attorney's fees rendered in appellate court held warranted.

Where on appeal an attorney secured reversal of an adverse judgment in a suit by an executor to recovery property transferred by decedent shortly before his death, and secured an affirmative judgment for the executor, who bought in the property for about $40,000, an award of $4,550 for services was not excessive.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

In the matter of estate of Thomas Prather, deceased. Appeal by the executor from order fixing attorney's fees. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed, with directions.

J. P. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an appeal by the executor of the will of Thomas Prather, deceased, from an order in probate fixing certain sums as the compensation to which the respondents, a firm of attorneys, are entitled for legal services rendered the executor, and directing their payment. The facts are:

The decedent, Thomas Prather, shortly before his death transferred to his brother, Samuel Prather, a large amount of his property. The appellant, upon his appointment as executor and before the employment of the respondents, brought a number of suits to recover the property so transferred. Three of these suits were brought in the superior court of San Francisco and others elsewhere. One of the San Francisco suits was to recover an open book account of some $112,000 due the decedent from the Merced Stone Company. The theory of this action was that the transfer was a gift, and had not been completed so as to pass title before the decedent's death. The other suits were on the theory that the transfers were invalid because of the incompetency of the decedent and the undue influence upon him of his brother.

After these suits had been brought, but before any of them had been tried, the respondents were employed. The terms of their employment were arranged by correspondence between them and what may be described as the attorney for the estate; that is, the attorney having general charge of the legal affairs of the estate. After one of the respondents, Mr. Corbet, had been interviewed by the attorney for the estate, Mr. Snook, and the papers in the pending actions had been placed in Mr. Corbet's hands, he wrote Mr. Snook on December 31, 1913, as follows [the italics being ours]:

"Confirming our understanding as to the fee to be paid to our firm for services in connection with the pending litigation in the city and county of San Francisco in which Edson F. Adams, as executor, is the plaintiff, the amount thereof is $5,000. This to be paid by Mr. Adams."

To this Mr. Snook replied, under date of January 8, 1914 (the italics again being ours):

"In reference to your letter of the 31st ult. regarding your understanding of our agreement for services, I do not think your letter is quite specific enough in the matter of your services in the Prather estate. I told Mr. Adams that your service charge included all the necessary litigation in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and also that you would respond when your services would be needed to assist outside of San Francisco in the cases now pending.

"I would also suggest that your charge should be made against the Prather estate, the same to be guaranteed by Mr. Adams."

The next day Mr. Corbet replied (the italics being ours):

"My understanding with Mr. Adams, through you, about my charge for services—$5,000, includes the necessary litigation in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; and, further, I will assist you when needed outside of San Francisco in all of the cases now pending.

"This is to be a charge against the Prather estate, payment of same to be guaranteed by Mr. Edson F. Adams."

Following this exchange of letters, Mr. Corbet examined into the matters committed to him, and advised that he believed a recovery could be had in the action against the Merced Stone Company, but that none could be had in the other actions, based as they were on the theory of incompetence and undue influence; that, however, he believed the transfers attacked could be set aside as in fraud of the decedent's creditor's and advised the bringing of such an action. This was done, and the action so brought is referred to in the present litigation as the creditors' suit, meaning not that it was brought by the decedent's creditors, but by the executor on behalf of the creditors. Pursuant to the advice of Mr. Corbet, the action against the Merced Stone Company and the creditors' suit were brought to trial, and resulted, after appeal, in a judgment in each case in favor of the executor. Mr. Corbet had charge of and conducted both actions, both in the superior court and on appeal. The actions pending in the San Francisco court at the time of Mr. Corbet's employment other than the one against the Merced Stone Company were not prosecuted, and were finally dismissed without trial. The soundness of his advice that a recovery could not be had in them, but that the result desired, the recovery of the property transferred, could be had in the creditors' suit, was demonstrated, not only by the success of the latter, but by the fact that one of the actions in another county on the theory of incompetency and undue influence was tried and lost.

The two judgments in favor of the executor obtained by Mr. Corbet resulted in the recovery for the estate of a very considerable amount of property. There is a sharp dispute as to just how much its value was, but it is evident it had substantial value. The mere statement of the character of the litigation is enough to indicate to any lawyer of experience that it was difficult and required time, attention and ability for its successful prosecution, and that the services of Mr. Corbet were of decided value.

Under the foregoing circumstances the respondents asked that, in addition to the $5,000 called for by their exchange of letters with Mr. Snook, they be allowed compensation for their services on appeal in the action against the Merced Stone Company, and for their services both in the superior court and on appeal in the creditors' suit. The probate court allowed them $4,550 because of the first item, and $3,600 because of the second, making in the latter case no apportionment as between services rendered in the superior court and those rendered on appeal. The appeal of the executor is, as to the first item, on the ground that the amount allowed is excessive, and as to the second item, on the ground that nothing should have been included for services in the creditors' suit in the superior court because such services came under the contract for $5,000.

[1,2] Taking up the second point first, it turns, of course, on the proper construction of the letters between Mr. Corbet and Mr. Snook, which evidence the terms upon which the respondents were employed. Much testimony was introduced as to what the parties had in mind when they wrote these letters. We do not understand upon what theory such testimony was offered or received or may be considered by us. It certainly cannot be received or considered for the purpose of varying the terms of the writings. As to construing those writings, it is certainly also the primary rule of construction that the meaning of the parties is to be determined by the language of the writings read in the light of the surrounding circumstances. It is also the rule that with the exception of a single class of cases, of which the present is not one, testimony either by the parties themselves as to what they intended, or as to declarations of intention made by them at the time, is wholly incompetent.

[3] Reading the letters in the light of the situation as it existed when they were written, we find ourselves unable to avoid the conclusion that they cover the services rendered by the respondents in the creditors' suit in the superior court. The first letter written by Mr. Corbet specifies that the services for which he is to receive $5,000 are services in the superior court of San Francisco in the "pending litigation." This plainly would limit the services covered by the arrangement to services in the actions then pending, if this letter were the final arrangement between the parties. But it was not. Mr. Snook replied to it that it was not specific enough, and that he had informed the executor that the respondent's charge (of $5,000) included "all the necessary litigation in the superior court." To this Mr. Corbet replied that his understanding with the executor made through Mr. Snook was that his charge of $5,000 included "the necessary litigation in the superior court," and this letter is the final expression of the terms of the respondent's employment. It is plain that the expression in the first letter "pending litigation" was changed ex industria to "all necessary litigation." The inference from this is unavoidable that the charge of $5,000 was intended to cover litigation not then pending if such litigation were necessary.

There remains the question as to whether or not the creditors' suit subsequently brought comes within the expression "all necessary litigation." It is claimed that this suit was not contemplated at the time Mr.

Corbet's letter was written. This is undoubtedly true in the sense that an action of that particular character was not then contemplated. But it is also true that the possibility of other actions than those pending was contemplated, as otherwise there would have been no occasion for the deliberate change from an arrangement for "pending litigation" to one for "all necessary litigation."

What, then, was meant by the phrase "all necessary litigation?" Necessary for what? Clearly, it must have been all litigation necessary to accomplish the object for which the pending actions had been brought. It was the accomplishment of this object for which the respondents were employed, and was the thing which the parties had in mind and about which they were talking. That object was the setting aside of the transfers by the decedent to his brother. This also was the object of the creditors' suit. The situation, therefore, is that the respondents by the arrangement for their employment agreed that they would charge only $5,000 for their services in the superior court in all litigation necessary to set aside the decedent's transfers of property to his brother, and the creditors' suit, subsequently brought, comes directly in the category of such litigation.

It follows that the order of the lower court was in error in allowing the respondents compensation for services in the superior court in addition to the $5,000 provided for in the arrangement for their original employment. Before dismissing this branch of the case, however, it may be advisable to note one argument made on respondents' behalf by their counsel. It is argued that the creditors' suit could have been brought in any one of a number of counties, while the $5,000 charge of the respondents was limited to services in the superior court of San Francisco, and that it is not to be supposed that it was intended that the services in the creditors' suit were within the $5,000 charge, when they could have been taken without it by the simple expedient of bringing the action elsewhere than in San Francisco. The answer to this is: First, that no lawyer worthy of his profession would change the venue of a contemplated action for such a reason, and we are certain that this is true of the respondents; and, second, that the matter of the venue was one finally within the control of the client and not of the lawyer.

[4, 5] As to the other branch of the case, the claim of the executor that the allowance of $4,550 for services on appeal in the action against the Merced Stone Company was excessive, little need be said. The question of what was the proper amount was one to be determined by the probate court, and with its decision we cannot interfere, unless it appear plainly that it was without justification. It does not so appear, but rather the contrary. The action was a difficult and complicated one, and the services on appeal were quite exceptional. The trial court gave judgment against the executor. This was affirmed on appeal by the District Court of Appeal. The respondents then petitioned for a hearing before this court and obtained it. This court reversed the judgment against the executor, and ordered the action back for a new trial. The respondents thereupon petitioned that the order of reversal be modified by directing judgment for the executor upon the findings, instead of requiring a new trial. This petition was granted, so that the final result of the respondents' services on appeal was that a judgment against the executor was transformed into one for him. The chief argument of the executor's present counsel is that the compensation allowed is excessive because of the comparatively small actual value of the claim against the Merced Stone Company which was recovered from the decedent's brother. But while the value of the recovery made is an element to be considered in determining the proper amount to be allowed as compensation, it is not controlling, and, furthermore, the actual value of the recovery does not appear with any certainty. It does appear that the executor, upon acquiring the claim against the Stone Company, proceeded to enforce it, and, upon execution sale, bought in the assets of that company for about $40,000. If this was the real value of the recovery obtained by the respondents for the executor, the compensation allowed them was certainly no more than reasonable, in view of the rather exceptional services rendered.

Order affirmed as to the compensation allowed the respondents for services on appeal in the action by the executor against the Merced Stone Company, and reversed as to the compensation allowed respondents for services in the so-called creditors' suit, with directions that the lower court redetermine the amount to be allowed for the latter services, eliminating all services rendered in that action in the superior court.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 295

OAKLAND BANK OF SAVINGS v. CALIFORNIA PRESSED BRICK CO. et al.

(S. F. 8685.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 9, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1920.)

1. Chattel mortgages ⊂=138(1)—Sales ⊂=473(1)—Buyer and seller may agree that title to personalty shall remain in the seller until payment, which title will be superior to that of subsequent mortgagee or purchaser.

The owner of personalty has the right to sell the same and deliver possession to the buyer, on condition that title shall remain in him until payment, and the title so withheld will until payment be superior to that of a subsequent mortgage or purchase of the property from the buyer, even if such subsequent mortgage, etc., was made without notice so long as the property retains its character as personalty.

2. Fixtures ⊂=21—Notwithstanding personalty is converted into realty because affixed to the land, it will as between the buyer and seller be treated as personalty.

Notwithstanding the fact that personalty may be converted into realty by being affixed to the land, yet where the question arises solely between the seller, who retains the title, and the buyer, who affixes it to the land, the property as between the two will, under Civ. Code, § 1013, be treated as personalty.

3. Fixtures ⊂=21—Personalty affixed to the land becomes realty, and may be held by subsequent mortgagee against seller who reserved title.

Where boilers and other heavy machinery were affixed to land, so as to become land, within Civ. Code, §§ 658–660, such property, though the seller retained title, will pass to a subsequent mortgagee without notice, notwithstanding section 1013, for under the circumstances the machinery became part of the land and passed under the mortgage.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by the Oakland Bank of Savings against the California Pressed Brick Company to foreclose a trust deed, in which Curtner and McWhinney alleged they were owners of certain personal property placed by defendant on the incumbered property. From a judgment foreclosing the trust deed as to the other property, but directing that certain funds should be paid over to Curtner and McWhinney, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and cause remanded.

McKee & Tasheira, and Peck, Bunker & Cole, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Thomas C. Huxley, of Oakland, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The California Pressed Brick Company executed a deed of trust conveying to Bankers' Trust Company certain property, real and personal, comprising the plant in use by the brick company for the making of pressed brick and similar articles, as security for payment of a series of bonds issued by the brick company, amounting to $100,000. Afterwards, the Oakland Bank of Savings was duly substituted as trustee. Bonds to the amount of $93,400 have been issued and are unpaid. The object of this action is to foreclose the lien of said trust deed upon said property and thus enforce payment of the bonds.

The defendants Curtner and McWhinney made answer, alleging that they are the owners of certain boilers, machinery, and personal property conveyed by said deed of trust and embraced in said plant and that their title thereto is superior to that of the trustee. They claim as successors in interest of C. N. Raymond Company, a corporation, which was the seller in an agreement for the conditional sale of the property to the brick company, providing that the title should remain in the seller until the price was fully paid, notwithstanding the delivery of possession to the buyer. The conditional sale was made, the property delivered, and the boilers and the heavy machinery affixed to the land in the manner specified in section 660 of the Civil Code, prior to the execution of the trust deed. The portion of the property not so affixed is not in controversy; it being conceded that the reservation of title in the seller is good with respect to that part of the property, as against the subsequent deed of the buyer to the trustee. Prior to the judgment the property was, in pursuance of a stipulation between the parties, converted into money, which was deposited to await the event of the action.

The court below was confronted with the question which party, under these circumstances, had the superior title. It decided that Curtner and McWhinney, as successors to the title of C. W. Raymond Company under the conditional sale, had title superior to that conveyed by the trust deed from the brick company, and gave judgment foreclosing the trust deed as to the other property, but directing that the money so deposited should be paid over to Curtner and McWhinney free from all claims of the plaintiff. The plaintiff appeals from the part of the judgment in favor of said defendants.

[1] The owner of personal property has the right to make an agreement to sell the same and deliver possession thereof to the buyer, upon the condition that the title thereto shall nevertheless remain in the seller until the price agreed on has been fully paid, and the title so withheld by the owner will until full payment, be superior to that of a subsequent mortgage or purchase of such personal property from the buyer, even if such subsequent mortgage or purchase was made without knowledge or notice of the reservation of title and paid full value for the property. Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 157; Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 457; Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 295, 13 Pac. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 60; Lowe v. Woods, 100 Cal. 409, 34 Pac. 959, 38 Am. St. Rep. 301; Vermont M. Co. v. Brow, 109 Cal. 241, 41 Pac. 1031, 50 Am. St. Rep. 37; Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 555, 42 Pac. 448; Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 477, 56 Pac. 339; Perkins v. Mettler, 126 Cal. 105, 58 Pac. 384; Lundy F. Co. v. White, 128 Cal. 170, 60 Pac. 759, 79 Am. St. Rep. 41; Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 462, 101 Pac. 299.

[2, 3] The above rule prevails so long as the property retains its character as personalty, and the cases cited state the rule applicable in such case. The case at bar raises the question what the rule is or should be when the personal property which is the subject of the conditional sale has become affixed to the land of the buyer, so as to become a part of the realty, after its delivery to him, and the buyer has thereafter made a mortgage or trust deed to one who has no knowledge or notice that such title remains in the seller on condition, and money has been loaned on the faith of such security, also without knowledge of the secret title.

Few cases have arisen in this state which touch upon this precise question. The Civil Code declares the law as to what constitutes real property as follows:

"Real or immovable property consists of: 1. Land; 2. That which is affixed to land; 3. That which is incidental or appurtenant to land; 4. That which is immovable by law." Section 658.

"Land is the solid material of the earth, whatever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other substance." Section 659.

"A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws." Section 660.

The boilers in controversy were set in the building on the land on a concrete foundation made to receive them, and then bricked in by a wall, so as to retain the heat. The heavy machinery was set on concrete blocks built in the ground for that purpose, with large bolts or rods brought up through the concrete, by means of which the machines were fastened down. The machinery, engine, and boilers were connected together by pipes, rods, shafts, and belts, so that the engine would operate the machinery, and they were all attached for the purpose of using them permanently in the plant in the making of brick. There can be no doubt that they were affixed to the land, so as to become real property, under the definition given in section 660. Lavenson v. Standard Soap Co., 80 Cal. 250, 22 Pac. 184, 13 Am. St. Rep. 147; McNally v. Connolly, 70 Cal. 3, 11 Pac. 320.

Notwithstanding the fact that personal property may be converted into real property by being affixed to land in this manner, there is a well-established rule in this state and elsewhere that where the question arises solely between the seller, who retains the title, and the buyer, who affixes it to the land, the relations or the contract between the parties may be such that the property will be deemed personalty, and will be treated as such in law, so that the title will continue in the seller, after it is so affixed, as well as before. The Civil Code recognizes this rule in section 1013, which declares that:

"When a person affixes his property to the land of another, without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed, except as provided in section ten hundred and nineteen, belongs to the owner of the land, unless he chooses to require the former to remove it."

But this does not cover the case of a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of the land without notice of the agreement.

Our decisions are not harmonious on the subject. In Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, 57 Cal. 5, 40 Am. Rep. 107, Hendy had leased a steam engine and boiler to one Lampson for two months, for use on a mining claim, the latter to pay $566.50 for the use for that period, and then to have the right to buy them from Hendy for $1, but until then he should have no right to them, except as lessee. They were permanently affixed to the quartz mill on the claim, so as to become part of the realty. The mining claim and mill belonged to Dinkerhoff, who had agreed to sell it to Lampson, who took possession thereof and affixed the engine and boiler, but afterward failed to complete the purchase, whereupon Dinkerhoff took possession and claimed ownership of the engine and boiler as part of the realty. The court held that as between Hendy and Lampson "the engine and boiler remained personal property, notwithstanding the fact that it was by him attached to the mill," and then proceeded to say:

"Can they be so regarded in the hands of the defendants? How this would be if the latter occupied the position of bona fide purchasers, without notice, of the real estate to which the chattels were attached, need not be determined, for they are not in that position."

In March v. McKoy, 56 Cal. 85, March, being the owner of a thresher engine and boiler mounted on wheels so that they could be readily moved from place to place, leased the same to one Woods for six months at a rental of $100 per month, with an agreement that if $600 was paid at the end of six months he would sell the property to Woods. Woods took off the wheels, bolted the axles to large timbers bedded in the soil, and connected the same with machinery in a sawmill owned by him and thereafter the engine was used to drive the machinery. Woods failed to pay the rent, but made repairs on the engine at a cost of $30. A mechanic's lien was filed upon the entire property for these repairs. The same was foreclosed and the property sold, March not being made a party to the suit. It was described in the foreclosure proceedings as a planing mill contiguous to McKoy & Hubbard's sawmill. The decree did not provide for any sale of the land on which the engine stood. The court said that assuming that, the Code gave a lien upon personal property for repairs by mechanics who did not take possession of it, it was clear that March could not be deprived of his title unless he was a party to the foreclosure proceedings, and gave its decision accordingly. The opinion shows that the case was decided upon the theory that all the parties to the foreclosure proceedings had treated the property as personalty and that it was to be considered in that aspect. The case does not appear to be applicable to the question we have before us.

In Jordan v. Myres, 126 Cal. 565, 58 Pac. 1061, the question arose in an action to foreclose mechanics' liens against Myres and Joshua Hendy Machine Works; the latter being the appellant. Myres was the owner of mining property. He agreed to sell the same to one Berry under an agreement that if he failed to complete the purchase he could remove any engine or hoisting machinery which he may have placed on the mine above ground. Shortly afterwards the Machine Works leased to Berry and his associates an engine and other machinery for a stipulated rental, on payment of which they were to have the right to purchase the same. The lessees placed the same on the mine, where it was permanently affixed to the land, and was thereafter used in working the mine. The work for which the mechanics' liens were filed was done after the machinery was so affixed. The court said:

"It is settled law that this personal property cannot be treated as part of the realty, so far as the owner of the mine and the defendants were concerned. * * * The question is: Must it be so treated as to respondent? Section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: 'And any person who performs labor in any mining claim or claims has a lien upon the same, and the works owned and used by the owners for reducing ores from such mining claim or claims, for the work or labor done or materials furnished by each respectively,' etc. This section contemplates that the lien shall attach to the property of the owner, and not to the property of some other person."

To the objection that the machinery had been affixed to the realty as a part of it, and that the lien would attach to it as the property of the owner of the mine, unless notice was given to the lienholders by the appellant of its title, the court referred to and quoted from Hill v. Sewald, 53 Pa. 271, 91 Am. Dec. 209, and Stell v. Paschal, 41 Tex. 640, holding that the intention of the parties to affix personal property to land is controlling as to the character of the property after it is so affixed. In the Texas case the machinery was merely put into the mortgaged property for exhibition and not for permanent use. The court then said that the general rule as to sales on execution and foreclosure was that the purchaser acquired only such title and interest as the judgment debtor had and "we cannot see in what way the sale upon foreclosure of a mechanic's lien can be said to carry any greater interest than the owner of property had at the time the lien attached, whatever may be the rule as to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of land without notice," and that "respondent secured no lien upon this personal property by virtue of the statute, for he could only have a lien upon the property of the owner of the mine." It proceeded to say that any other view would greatly retard development, especially of mining property, where it often became necessary for the miner to hire machinery, which for the time being, in order to utilize it, must be affixed to the realty. It will be observed that the court took care to say that the rule might be different with respect to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of land without notice. It seems to have been assumed by the court that the plaintiff in the mechanic's lien suit did not occupy the same position as a purchaser or mortgagee without notice. In its relation of the facts, however, the court stated that it would deal with the case as though the plaintiffs had no notice of the appellant's claim of title. Apparently the court was of the view that the statute allowing such liens restricted the rights of the lienholders to a greater extent than those of a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser without notice. The case is not an express authority on the question before us, although it is somewhat difficult to distinguish it on principle.

In Tibbitts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 208, Moore executed a mortgage on real property to the appellant, and thereafter purchased certain machinery from Lambard, giving to him a chattel mortgage for the price thereof, and then attached the machinery to the mortgaged realty in such manner that it became a part thereof. Each mortgage was duly executed and recorded. The court held that the lien of the realty mortgage did not take effect upon the personalty until it became attached to the realty, and consequently that as to that property the chattel mortgage was superior to the prior mortgage on the realty.

These comprise all the cases in this state which have any material relation to the question. None of them, except Jordan v. Myres and Tibbitts v. Moore, touches upon the exact question. In the former the court expressly excepted cases of bona fide purchasers or mortgagees of the land without notice, while the latter involved only the question of the lien of a mortgage on land to which personal property already subject to a chattel mortgage was afterward affixed. In the case at bar the machinery in question was affixed to the realty, so as to become a part thereof, before the deed of trust, under which plaintiff claims, was made, and there was nothing to indicate to a purchaser or mortgagee that the property so affixed was not a part of the realty, or that the title thereto was not in the owner of the soil. The question, so far as this state is concerned, is an open one.

The rules of the Civil Code, above quoted, are essentially the same as those of the common law on the subject. They prevail generally throughout the United States. The exact question has often arisen in other states, and the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that the title of the seller of personal property of this character, which title is to be held by him until the price thereof is paid, and which is afterwards affixed to land of the vendee, so as to become part of the realty, is subject to the lien of a subsequent mortgagee in good faith without notice of the reserved title. This is fully shown in the elaborate note of Mr. Freeman to Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter, 110 Wis. 80, 85 N. W. 698, 53 L. R. A. 603, in 84 Am. St. Rep. at pages 892 and 893, and also in the notes to Muir v. Jones, 23 Or. 332, 31 Pac. 646, in 19 L. R. A. 444, and Lawton, etc., Co. v. Ross-Kellar, etc., Co., 33 Okl. 59, 124 Pac. 43, in 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) at page 396, to which we refer for a list of the cases.

We think the proposition is in accordance with justice and reason. The seller of the personal property voluntarily placed it in the possession and control of his vendee, with knowledge that, if it was put to the use for which it was designed, it would be affixed to land. Its character was such that it could not ordinarily be used at all by the vendee, unless it was so affixed to the real estate comprising its plant. The seller, because of these facts, is presumed to have agreed that the personal property should be, or might be, converted into real property. By this transformation is was brought under the operation of the laws for recording contracts affecting realty and for the protection of innocent purchasers thereof, regardless of the conditions of the agreement of sale. The contract between the Raymond Company and the brick company shows by its terms that this was the intention and hence Curtner and McWhinney are chargeable with knowledge thereof. A person about to loan money on the security of a mortgage or trust deed on such real property, and having no information of the secret agreement as to the title, would be justified in believing that all the machinery would be hypothecated by such mortgage or deed and would have the right to rely on such belief and to make the loan accordingly. He is the innocent party in the transaction, and he should be protected, rather than he who caused the deceitful appearances.

Our conclusion is that the court below erred in directing that the proceeds of the machinery in question which was affixed to the realty should be paid over to Curtner and McWhinney. They were entitled to the proceeds of those of the articles sold by the Raymond Company to the brick company that were not so affixed, if any such articles were included in the sale made under the stipulation for the sale of the property claimed by Curtner and McWhinney. It may be necessary for the court below to take evidence to ascertain how much of the $5,000 deposited is attributable to such articles; consequently we cannot direct a judgment.

The portion of the judgment appealed from and set forth in the notice of appeal is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 326

LAMPORT v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(L. A. 6026.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 21, 1920.)

1. Master and servant ⟸286(33)—Negligence as to switchman held question for jury.

In an action for death of a switchman struck by the rear of a train while signaling to the engineer of another train, where there was evidence that deceased was directly on a line between the engineer of the train by which he was struck and a switchman signaling to such engineer so as to be clearly in the field of their vision, whether their failure to warn him of his danger was negligence held a question for the jury.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1078(1)—Points not argued not considered.

Points not argued either in brief or oral argument will not be considered on appeal.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Edith S. Lamport, administratrix of the estate of Lester C. Lamport, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The complaint stated a cause of action to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, Lester C. Lamport, which death, it is alleged, was caused by the negligence of the defendant. Lamport was in the employ of the defendant as a switchman in the Oakland yards at the time of his death.

The only point argued by the defendant in support of its appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the allegations of the complaint with regard to the negligence of the defendant. The complaint alleges that while Lamport was engaged in his work as switchman standing near one of the switch tracks of the defendant, the defendant ran one of its cars against and over him, causing his death; that said death was caused solely by the negligence of defendant in giving no warning or notice of the approach of said car, and in negligently failing to have any light upon the car that struck the decedent.

[1] There was evidence of the following facts: At the time of the accident two trains were being operated in the switchyard of the defendant. One of them was the train with which Lamport was connected. It was upon a track on which there was a platform scale for weighing cars. It was being operated to place the rear car on the platform in the track, so as to have the car weighed. It was necessary to stop the car that was to be weighed at the exact spot where its whole weight would be on the rails laid upon the scale platform. This was a process termed "spotting the car." The accident happened at about midnight. At each end of the scale a light was erected to enable the switchman to ascertain when this car was exactly at the right place to be cut out and weighed. The train with which Lamport was engaged was several car lengths away moving toward the scales upon a cross-over track leading from another track to the track in which the scales were affixed. This made it a curved track and required that Lamport should stand some distance to one side from the scale track in order that the engineer, who was upon the engine of that train at the farther end thereof could see his signals and be informed of the exact point at which to stop. It was also necessary for him to observe the lights opposite the end of the scale, so as to see precisely when to give the signal. At a point some 15 feet from the scales on the side on which Lamport had to stand to give the signals to his engineer there was another straight track upon which another engineer and switchmen were engaged in moving another train in the same direction as the train with which Lamport was engaged. This other train consisted of several cars, the rear car being an oil tank car without any light at the rear end thereof. This train was moving backwards toward Lamport. The switchman of that train was at some distance beyond Lamport at a point where he intended to stop his train and was standing there to give signals to his own engineer. Lamport was standing on a direct line between the two and between the two rails of that track. In order to give and receive these signals, it was necessary for the switchman and engineer upon the other train each to look toward the other and toward Lamport. While Lamport was so standing engaged in signaling to "spot" the car, the engineer of the other train moved that train down towards Lamport, and the rear car thereof ran over and killed him. Lamport while so engaged had in his hand a lighted lantern with which to give signals to his own engineer for the "spotting" of the car. It is plain that when the engineer and switchman of the other train were watching for each other's signals, as they were doing at that moment, Lamport would be clearly in the field of their vision and directly on a line between them.

No argument is required to demonstrate the proposition that, under these circumstances, they should have observed him and warned him of the danger, or that it was at least a question for the jury to determine whether or not their failure to do so was negligence. It is obvious from the mere statement of the facts that the evidence tended to show negligence, if it did not demonstrate it absolutely.

[2] Other points are mentioned in the brief on appeal, but no other point was argued either in the brief or oral argument. It is therefore unnecessary to consider any other questions in the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LAWLER, J.; OLNEY, J.

183 Cal. 321

SUTTER BUTTE CANAL CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT in and for BUTTE COUNTY et al.

(Sac. 3105.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 20, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 19, 1920.)

Prohibition ⟸5(3)—Not issued to restrain judicial action where question of lower court's jurisdiction had not been presented.

Superior court, which has overruled demurrers in actions to enjoin irrigation company from supplying water in new territory and has dismissed the Railroad Commission's complaint in intervention, will not be restrained from proceeding in such actions on the ground that the Railroad Commission had directed the company to supply such new land with water, under St. 1913, p. 84, where the complaint made no reference to the commission's order, so that ruling on demurrers was no more than a ruling that the complaint stated a cause of action within the general jurisdiction of the court, and where the dismissal of such complaint in intervention may have been ordered on the ground that the commission was not a party beneficially interested, since in such case the question of whether the court had jurisdiction in the face of the commission's order had not been presented.

Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application for writ of prohibition by the Sutter Butte Canal Company against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Butte and Hon. H. D. Gregory, the Judge thereof. Writ denied.

Bell, Brookman, Simmons & Creech, of San Francisco, W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and Isaac Frohman, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, and Armfield & Eddy, of Woodland, for respondents.

OLNEY, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition. The petitioner is a public utility corporation engaged in the business of selling and distributing water largely, if not entirely, for irrigation. By its articles of incorporation it was authorized to engage in this business in the counties of Butte and Sutter. Prior to the present year there were some 58,000 acres of land, mostly, if not all, in Butte county, to which water was furnished by it. In the fall of last year the Railroad Commission authorized the company to obligate itself to supply some 14,400 acres more of land, all in Sutter county. Pursuant to such authority, the petitioner did so obligate itself by contract with the owners of these lands, and has extended its work so as to supply them at a cost which the commission finds to have been between $200,000 and $250,000. No objection to this was made at the time by the old consumers of the water company, but it may be that they were unaware of the application for authority, although notice of the application was published in the newspapers circulating in Butte county, and the commission finds that the construction of the additional works by the company and its intention to serve thereby additional land was a matter of common knowledge in the county.

The last winter was an exceedingly dry one, and by spring it became evident that there would be a general water shortage. Representatives of the old consumers thereupon filed a complaint with the Railroad Commission, setting forth that they were old consumers of the company, that the company was intending to take on some 14,400 acres of additional land, that there was a shortage of water and the company would not be able to supply both the lands of the old consumers and the new lands, and asking that the company be ordered not to supply the contemplated additional lands. The owners of the latter lands intervened in the proceeding, so that all parties in interest were represented. After a hearing, the commission denied the complaint and directed the water company to deliver water for the new lands without discrimination between it and the lands previously supplied. See Stats. 1913, p. 84; Deering's General Laws, Act 4348a.

Pending the decision of the commission, three actions were commenced in the superior court of Butte county against the water company, one by a consumer of five years' standing under a contract, one by a consumer of a year's standing without a contract, and one by a landowner who was not a consumer but whose lands lay within the area served by the company's system as it had theretofore existed without the extension for the supplying of the 14,400 acres of new land. The complaints alleged a shortage of water, that the water company was intending to supply 14,400 acres of additional land, that there was not enough water for this land and the company's old consumers, and prayed for an injunction restraining the company from supplying the new land. No mention whatever was made in the complaints of any of the proceedings before the Railroad Commission. Demurrers were interposed to these complaints, and the Railroad Commission itself filed a complaint in intervention, setting up the authority previously given by it to the water company to supply the additional land and the pendency of the proceedings before it. After the rendition by the commission of its decision, the superior court of Butte county dismissed the commission's complaint in intervention and overruled the demurrers of the water company and directed it to answer. The water company thereupon applied to this court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the Butte county court from proceeding further with the actions before it. An alternative writ was granted, and a hearing has been had upon it.

The ground on which the writ is sought is that the superior court has no authority to enjoin the petitioner from supplying the additional lands in the face of the order of the Railroad Commission directing it to supply those lands. The question as to this authority has been the only point presented to us, and since it is one of importance, and its decision, if in favor of the petitioner, would finally determine the controversy between the parties, we would much prefer to decide it and grant or deny the writ asked for accordingly. But we think it fairly plain that the question is not presented by the proceedings before the superior court in their present stage, and we do not feel at liberty deliberately to overlook this fact and to proceed to decide a question not in reality presented by the record. The only action taken by the superior court has been to overrule the demurrers to the complaints and to dismiss the commission's complaint in intervention. Its action in neither of these respects involved a ruling that it had authority to enjoin the water company from doing what the commission directed it to do, or necessarily indicated that the court would proceed without regard to the order of the commission when the existence of such order and the water company's reliance upon it were properly presented to the court.

So far as the overruling of the demurrers is concerned, the essential point is that the complaints make, as we have said, no reference to the proceedings before the commission or to the latter's order in the matter. They merely allege the relation of consumer to the company, or, in one case, the right and desire to initiate the relation, the intention of the company to take on other lands, and the lack of water to supply both the company's old consumers and the new lands. The complaints and the demurrers to them present merely the question whether, under these circumstances, no order of the Railroad Commission being involved, an old consumer may enjoin a water company from taking on further requirements upon its supply. This question is purely one within the general equity jurisdiction of the superior court, and as such the court had authority to pass upon it and to overrule the demurrers to the complaints if it concluded that the old consumers were entitled to an injunction upon the facts alleged. With the correctness of this conclusion we are not concerned. If the facts were merely as stated in the complaints, and the court's conclusion that upon such facts causes of action existed in favor of the plaintiffs was incorrect, its decision could be reviewed on appeal, but not by prohibition. In brief, the action of the superior court in overruling the demurrers to the complaints was no more than a ruling that the complaints stated a cause of action within the general equity jurisdiction of the court. The question of whether or not the court had no authority to grant relief because of the fact that the Railroad Commission had made an order in the premises was not presented. With the complaints reading as they did, this question could be presented only by an answer to them, setting up the order of the commission. It may well be, and, in fact, we presume, that the superior court overruled the demurrers upon this theory, particularly in view of the decisions of this court in Pacific, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822, and Sexton v. Atchison, etc., Co., 173 Cal. 760, 161 Pac. 748; between which and the more recent decisions in Yolo, etc., Co. v. Superior Court (App.) 185 Pac. 195, and Red Bluff v. Southern Pacific (App.) 187 Pac. 152, we see no conflict.

As to the action of the court in dismissing the commission's complaint in intervention, the court may well have done this upon the ground that the case was not one for intervention by the commission, that the commission was not a party beneficially interested, and that if the defense that it had made an order in the matter was to be presented it should be presented either by the water company or by the owners of the additional land to be served. Such theory, at first blush, would seem to be sound, but, whether it be or not, the fact that the superior court may well have acted upon it establishes at once that the court's action in dismissing the commission's complaint is not a ruling that it has jurisdiction despite the order of the commission, or any indication that the court intended to proceed despite that order, if the fact of its existence were properly shown.

There is, therefore, as we have said, as yet no ruling by the superior court that it has jurisdiction to issue an injunction in the face of the order of the Railroad Commission, and the question as to such jurisdiction has not been presented.

It follows that the writ sought must be denied, but without prejudice to another application if occasion should hereafter require; and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOANE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I dissent, being of the opinion that it is apparent from the face of the complaints in the superior court actions that, in view of sections 5 and 6 of the act of April 25, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 84; Deering's General Laws, Act 4348a), the subject-matter of such actions is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission, subject only, in so far as the courts of this state are concerned, to review by this court, as provided by the Public Utilities Act.

183 Cal. 354

KNIGHT et al. v. MARKS et al. (S. F. 8653.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1920. Rehearing Denied, Aug. 23, 1920.)

1. Damages ⟸79(5) — Liquidated damages may not be stipulated for mere failure to pay an installment of rent.

Provision in lease fixing liquidated damages for breach, so far as applying to mere failure to pay an installment of rent, is void; Civ. Code, § 3302, fixing the damages for breach of obligation to pay money only at the amount due by the terms of the obligation, with interest, and sections 1670, 1671, declaring void provision of a contract determining in advance the amount of damages for breach of obligation, except when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟸184(2) — Assignee of lessee's interest in fund deposited by lessee as security for performance of covenants has contingent interest.

Assignee of the lessee's interest in a fund deposited by the lessee as security has a contingent interest in the fund, so long as lessee does not fail to perform.

3. Landlord and tenant ⟸184(2) — Deposit not released by change of lease, where unknown to lessor a third person was, as to such deposit, surety for lessee.

Where lessor did not know that as to a fund deposited as security for performance of lessee's covenants a third person stood in the relation of surety, the fund was not released by alteration of the lease.

4. Appeal and error ⟸158(2) — Right to prosecute appeal not lost by enforcement of judgment by execution.

Appellant does not lose his right to prosecute appeal by the fact that after it is taken the judgment was satisfied through enforcement by execution; the appellate court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 957, having power, in case of reversal, to make restitution.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Thomas G. Knight and another, executors of Serena H. Knight, deceased, against Benjamin L. Marks and others. From an adverse judgment, defendant Joseph C. Bianchi appeals. Reversed.

Geo. C. Sargent, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Peter A. Breen, Percy E. Towne, Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, and Elliott M. Epsteen, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action for money claimed to be due to the plaintiffs' testatrix upon a lease executed by her to Benjamin L. Marks, on October 22, 1908. The cause was tried by a jury and upon the verdict judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs against Marks for the sum of $2,000 and against defendant Bianchi and the German Savings & Loan Society for the sum of $11,222.87. From this judgment the defendant Joseph C. Bianchi appeals.

The lease embraced property upon which the lessor agreed to erect a building in accordance with plans and specifications annexed thereto, which plans, however, do not appear in the record. It was for the term of 10 years, beginning 30 days after the completion of the building. The total rental was $120,000, payable in monthly installments of $1,000 each on the 1st day of each month, and Marks was to pay $200 as attorneys' fees in any action by the lessor against the lessee for a breach of any covenant of the lease. It provided that the lessee should furnish $8,000 as security for the performance of the covenants on his part, which sum should be deposited in the German Savings & Loan Society in the names and for the joint account of the lessor and lessee, there to remain with such interest as should accumulate thereon, provided that, in the event of failure to pay rent or other breach of covenant by Marks, the "lessor may withdraw from the said account the entire sum, together with the accumulated interest, as agreed liquidated damages for the breach," and that upon the termination of the lease by expiration of time or otherwise any balance of the money and interest so on deposit and not applied to the claims of the lessor should be returned to the lessee.

The complaint alleged that the purpose of the parties in leasing the premises was that the lessee should conduct a livery stable therein and that the building was constructed so as to be suitable for that use; that the lessor would not have erected a building for that purpose except in consideration of the covenants and conditions of the lessee and except for the money deposited as security for performance; that because of the fact that it was designed for that use it would be difficult to procure another tenant and impractical and extremely difficult to fix the damages that would be suffered by the lessor in case of the ouster of the lessee for the nonpayment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease; and that it was for this reason that the provision regarding liquidated damages was inserted in the lease and the sum of $8,000 deposited as above stated. It further alleged that Joseph C. Bianchi claimed some interest in the fund on deposit.

Bianchi in his answer alleged that the money deposited by Marks with the defendant German Savings & Loan Society in pursuance of the lease was furnished to Marks by C. D. Bianchi for the purpose of making said deposit therewith; that the lessor was informed that the money was the property of Bianchi and was pledged by him as security for the obligation of Marks under the lease; that in May, 1912, without the consent of said C. D. Bianchi, the lessor and lessee by agreement in writing altered the terms of the lease by providing that the building could be accepted by the lessor and lessee in an uncompleted state and located upon ground other than that described in said lease and that the time for its completion should be extended and that it might be used as a garage instead of as a stable. It is also alleged that in November, 1912, said C. D. Bianchi assigned all of his right, title, and interest in the said fund on deposit to the defendant Joseph C. Bianchi. He asked judgment to the effect that he was the owner of the said fund on deposit.

[1] The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount to be allowed as damages for a breach thereon only "when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671. The only breach of the covenants of the lease here in question that is alleged is the failure to pay the stipulated rent. In the verdict, the jury found specially against Marks for $2,700. It was admitted that this sum included all rent due up to and including the rent due July 1, 1917. The trial was had on July 18, 1917, and judgment was entered on July 19, 1917. The building was completed and occupied by the lessee on or about August 1, 1909, and consequently the 10-year term began on September 1, 1909, and ended on September 1, 1919. This action was merely for the rent due and the stipulated damages, and no notice to quit or forfeiture of the lease was alleged, nor any restitution of the possession to the lessor demanded. Nor is it alleged that the lessee has vacated, abandoned, or surrendered the possession, or that he is insolvent. Where the lease has not expired and a forfeiture and restitution is not sought, the measure of damage for a breach of the covenant to pay the rent fixed by the lease is the amount of the rent unpaid and no more. It could not be difficult or impracticable to fix the damages in such a case. It was a breach of an obligation to pay money only, and the damages were "the amount due by the terms of the obligation, with interest thereon." Civ. Code, § 3302. The parties cannot overcome this objection in such a case by any provision in the contract itself, for such a provision is expressly declared to be void. Civ. Code, § 1670; Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 262, 168 Pac. 114; Jack v. Sinsheimer, 125 Cal. 564, 58 Pac. 130. It follows that the plaintiff was not entitled to anything as liquidated damages for the breach of contract alleged, and that the verdict and judgment are, to that extent, without support in the law and evidence.

[2] It must be admitted that, at the time of the judgment at all events, it was possible that Marks might fully perform all the covenants of the lease. If he did so the money on deposit would have then fully served its purpose as security and it would then belong to Marks, absolutely, free from any claims of the lessor. The evidence showed that at the time the money was deposited C. D. Bianchi, as a loan to Marks for the purposes of said lease, gave him a check for $8,000 to be used in making said deposit; that the check was indorsed by Marks and transferred to the bank; and that the deposit was by that means effected. Upon the deposit being made, Marks, in writing, assigned all his interest therein to C. D. Bianchi, "subject to the lien thereon of said Serena H. Knight," under the lease, as security for the repayment of said sum to Bianchi by Marks, and Marks therein expressly promised to repay the same. C. D. Bianchi having, as the evidence shows, assigned to the appellant, Joseph D. Bianchi, all his rights under the writing between him and said Marks to the fund so deposited, it follows that the appellant had, when the judgment was rendered, a contingent right to the fund, which would become a full right if Marks should perform his covenants in the lease. The judgment was erroneous, in that it denied Bianchi all relief. It should have declared his contingent interest therein.

[3] The appellant claims the absolute and immediate right to the fund, on the ground that, by the terms of an alleged agreement between Mrs. Knight, Marks, and C. D. Bianchi at the time the deposit was made, it was understood between them that said Bianchi should deposit the money as security for the performance by Marks of his obligations under the lease, and consequently that said Bianchi and the fund he so deposited stand in the relation of a surety for Marks to Mrs. Knight for such performance. It is claimed further that in May, 1912, after the lease had run nearly three years, Mrs. Knight and Marks made an agreement in writing constituting a material alteration of the terms of the lease, so far as the obligations of Marks thereunder were concerned, which alteration, it is argued, operated to release the fund and transfer the same to Bianchi as the absolute owner thereof, under his assignment from Marks. It does not appear that Mrs. Knight had any knowledge of the terms of the agreement between C. D. Bianchi and Marks whereby the money was loaned to Marks for the purpose of making the deposit, and was immediately assigned by Marks to Bianchi as security for the repayment to Bianchi of the money so loaned by him to Marks. By the terms of the agreement and of the loan, the title to it passed absolutely to Marks. Mrs. Knight was not informed that the right of Marks thereto, such as it was, had been pledged to Bianchi for the repayment of the loan to him by Marks. The evidence does not show that she knew that Bianchi was, or claimed to be, a surety for Marks with respect to this money. Consequently the alteration of the lease, even if there were such alteration, did not operate to release her claim to the money so deposited. It may be added that the agreement, which it is claimed changed the terms of the lease, merely gave the consent of the lessor to the lessee to make some alterations in the premises which he desired to make and thereafter to use the premises as a garage instead of a stable. Prior to that time he had been using it as a stable. There was no covenant in the original lease which restricted the lessee's right to use the premises for anything other than a stable. We do not perceive how the consent of the lessor to the proposed alterations operated in any respect to change the obligations of Marks for which the money was deposited as security.

[4] The respondents move to dismiss the appeal on the ground that after it was taken the judgment was fully satisfied. The proofs in support of the motion show that the satisfaction was the result of the enforcement of the judgment by execution. The appellant does not lose the right to prosecute his appeal by such enforcement. Code Civ. Proc. § 957.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.

183 Cal. 335

SCHNEIDER v. SCHNEIDER. (L. A. 6027.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1920.)

1. Marriage ⊂=54—Void marriage confers no rights in respect to property of other.

A void marriage confers no rights upon either of the parties in respect to the property of the other, such as would be conferred by a valid marriage.

2. Marriage ⊂=63—Wife of void marriage entitled to division of property jointly earned.

While, strictly speaking, there can be no community property in the absence of a valid marriage, courts will, in dividing gains of a married man and woman living together under a void marriage, innocently entered into, applied by analogy the rule which would obtain when a valid marriage is dissolved.

3. Marriage ⊂=65—Judgment dividing property or void marriage without settling legal status held valid.

In an action by a wife for divorce, where it was discovered that the plaintiff was not entitled to a divorce because she had a husband by a prior marriage, from whom she believed she had been divorced, and it was agreed that there should be a trial for the purpose of hearing evidence on the issue of the property rights of the parties, and such issue was tried on the day set, the court was warranted in adjudicating on the question of their property rights, and a judgment, dividing the jointly earned property, will not be reversed, although no decree of annulment was entered.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Sarah Schneider against Jacob Schneider. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gerecht & Chambers and Harry Ellis Dean, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. P. Thomson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice KERRIGAN of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, while acting as justice pro tem, of this court in place of Mr. Justice MELVIN. It is adopted as the opinion of this court.

This was an action for divorce brought by the wife, and the appeal is taken by the defendant from that part of the judgment awarding to the plaintiff a portion of the joint property. The defendant also appeals from an order denying his motion to set aside the judgment, and brings said appeals to this court upon the judgment roll alone. No argument is made in the briefs in support of the appeal from said order.

As to the appeal from the judgment, it appears from the findings of the trial court that the plaintiff at the time of her marriage to the defendant was the wife of another man, although at that time she was laboring under the belief that as the result of a certain proceeding had in the year 1905 her prior marriage had been dissolved. Her union to the defendant took place in 1908, and was entered into in good faith, and the parties thereafter lived together as husband and wife for about eight years, accumulating by their joint efforts certain property, a part of which by the judgment in this case, was awarded to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff as a ground for divorce alleged cruelty on the part of the defendant, and, in addition to praying for the dissolution of the matrimonial bonds, sought a division of the "community property." Upon the finding as to the continued existence of said prior marriage of the plaintiff the court denied a divorce, but declared the property described in the complaint to be joint property of the parties in the nature of and analogous to community property, and by its decree divided it equally between them giving to the defendant, however, in such division, credit for certain payments which he had been required to make to the plaintiff during the pendency of the action, in recognition of the fact that the parties were not legally husband and wife.

[1] Under the authorities it is clear that a void marriage confers no rights upon either of the parties to it in respect to the property of the other such as would be conferred by a valid marriage; but in the case before us the question for determination is, Conceding that the marriage was void, what right, if any, has the plaintiff in the property acquired by the joint efforts of herself and the defendant during their cohabitation entered upon innocently upon the faith of their admittedly void marriage?

On this question there is a conflict in the decisions. In the states where the common-law right of dower exists it is generally held that a woman, in order to be entitled to dower, must base her claim upon a legal marriage. In those states if a man has a wife living, and enters into a second marriage, no matter how innocent of wrongdoing the other party to it may be, nor how gross the deception by which she enters into the marriage, she is not entitled to dower, not being his lawful wife. Kennelly v. Cowle, 6 Ohio Dec. 170.

In the case of De France v. Johnson (C. C.) 26 Fed. 891, a man had a wife living at the time he married the plaintiff, a mere girl, with whom he lived for a great many years and until his death. By her he had 13 children. After his death she sought to recover dower, but the court decided against her, holding that a woman who innocently marries and cohabits with a man who has a wife living from whom he has never been divorced, cannot acquire an interest in his land by reason of such illegal marriage.

This doctrine does not prevail in all the states, nor in fact in any where the community property regime has been adopted. In Louisiana and possibly New Mexico a marriage such as the one here is known as a "putative" marriage, and the property rights of the woman are recognized and protected by statute. In four of the seven states where the community rule as to property of the character here considered prevails it has been held that where a woman is an innocent party to a void marriage she is entitled to the same interest in property acquired by the parties as if the marriage were valid. In the state of Texas the question has often been before the courts, and in a number of recent cases has been given attentive consideration. The Spanish law as to marital rights prevailed in Texas until 1840, and the doctrine of putative marriage was a part of that law, as shown by the decisions of its courts, and even since the adoption of the common law the property rights of persons who contract void marriages, but in good faith, have been upheld. McKay on Community Pro. 194.

In the case of Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 21 S. W. 154, which was decided after the adoption of the common law in that state, the court said:

"The status of property acquired by a man and woman living together as husband and wife without having been lawfully married has been the subject of doubt and litigation almost from the time Texas became an independent republic," —and after reviewing the early cases the court continued:

"It will thus be seen that the strong tendency of our judges in the past has been to hold that property acquired in this state, under our community laws, by a man and woman living together as husband and wife, should belong to them in equal shares, whether they were legally married or not. And why should this not be so, especially when they have attempted to enter into a marriage contract, and believed that they were lawfully husband and wife? In such cases, by attempting to enter into the marriage contract, they agreed, as far as they had the power to agree, that they would live together as husband and wife, and that all property that they might thereafter acquire should be community property, and belong to them in equal portions. Such is the meaning of the contract they attempted to make under our law. How, then, can it be said that the property acquired in pursuance of such a contract shall belong to one of the parties more than to the other? What right has the husband to all of the property to the exclusion of the wife, or what right has the wife to all of the property to the exclusion of the husband? Suppose a wife so situated should by her own exertions acquire property towards which the husband did not contribute anything, would it be contended that this property became his property? How, then, can it be that where the property is acquired by the joint labors of both, each in the eye of the law contributing one-half thereto, it shall belong only to the husband? It will not do to refer to the decisions in common-law states to sustain the proposition that the woman under such circumstances has no right to any part of the property so acquired. In those states, by entering into the marriage contract she understood that all the property they might acquire while living together should belong to the husband, but in this state she understood that their rights in the property they might acmulate should be equal."

See, also, Lawson v. Lawson, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 69 S. W. 246; Routh v. Routh, 57 Tex. 589.

In the case of Barkley v. Dumke et al., 99 Tex. 150, 87 S. W. 1147, a girl had innocently contracted marriage with a man having a living wife; and the court held that it was the settled doctrine in that state that by virtue of such a marriage the putative wife became entitled to the same rights in property acquired by the parties as would be the case if the marriage were free from defect, pointing out that the statute law of Texas upon the subject of the mutual property rights of married persons is so inconsistent with the common law as to show an intention on the part of the law-making power not to subject such rights to the rule of the latter. This case has since been frequently followed in that state.

[2] In California, as in Texas, the common law is the general rule of decision, but in both states the law regulating the mutual property rights of married persons is radically different from that law; and, while we do not wish to be understood as saying that the rule of the common law as to husband and wife apply to no case under our system, yet we agree with the Texas courts that the common-law rule as to the consequences of a void marriage upon the mutual property rights of the parties to it is inapplicable where the community property regime prevails. This conclusion is dictated by simple justice, for where persons domiciled in such a jurisdiction, believing themselves to be lawfully married to each other, acquire property as the result of their joint efforts, they have impliedly adopted, as is said in the Texas case cited, the rule of an equal division of their acquisitions, and the expectation of such a division should not be defeated in the case of innocent persons.

In Werner v. Werner, 59 Kan. 399, 53 Pac. 127, 41 L. R. A. 349, 68 Am. St. Rep. 372, a case very similar to the present one, a woman having a husband living contracted marriage, and lived with this supposititious husband for many years in the belief that her former marriage was invalid. Her action for divorce was held to be an equitable proceeding in which the court had full jurisdiction to give adequate relief, and accordingly it annulled the marriage and made an equitable division of the property.

In the province of Quebec, a civil law jurisdiction, it was held, in Gregory v. Dyer, 15 L. C. Jur. 223, that a woman who in good faith had married a man who had a wife living, and lived with him until his death, was entitled to a community interest in the property acquired by them after their marriage. See, also, Cathcart v. Union Bldg. Soc., 15 L. C. Rep. 467; Morin v. Corporation des Pilotes, 8 Quebec, 222; 1 Cyc. 1633.

In the case of Buckley v. Buckley, 50 Wash. 213, 96 Pac. 1079, 126 Am. St. Rep. 900, it is held that, where a woman enters into a marriage contract with a man without knowledge that he has a wife living, the court has power to annul the marriage, whether the action be for divorce or annulment, and in such action to dispose of property acquired by the joint efforts of the parties, and can, as in a true divorce proceeding, award to the innocent injured woman such proportion of the property as under all the circumstances would be just and equitable.

The authorities on the subject are reviewed and the rule in this state announced by Mr. Justice Sloss in the well-considered case of Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 118 Pac. 441, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88. That was an action, after a decree of annulment, for a division of the property which had been accumulated by the parties after the marriage. It was held that a woman who in good faith had entered into a marriage, which was subsequently annulled at the instance of the other party upon the ground of her physical incapacity to enter into the marriage state, was entitled to participate in the property which had been accumulated by the efforts of both parties during the existence of the abortive marriage. "To say," declares the court, "that the woman in such case, even though she may be penniless and unable to earn a living, is to receive nothing, while the man with whom she lived and labored in the belief that she was his wife shall take and hold whatever he and she have acquired, would be contrary to the most elementary conceptions of fairness and justice." In that case the appellant argued that, the marriage being voidable, the effect of the decree of annulment was to render the marriage void from the beginning, and that all property rights of either dependent upon the marriage were terminated and annulled. "But," said the court, "these decisions * * * deal with the rights of one of the parties in property owned by the other. * * * Here, however, the question is a different one. The controversy is not over the property owned by the defendant prior to marriage, or acquired by him alone thereafter, but has to do with the acquisitions of the two parties after marriage and before annulment. * * * In the absence of fraud or other ground affecting the right to claim relief, there can be no good reason for saying that either party should, by reason of the annulment, be vested with title to all the property acquired during the existence of the supposed marriage." And the court proceeds to hold that while, strictly speaking, there can be no community property in the absence of a valid marriage, courts will, in dividing gains made by the joint efforts of a man and woman living together under a voidable marriage which is subsequently annulled, apply by analogy the rule which would obtain when a valid marriage is dissolved. It is true in that case that the marriage was only voidable, while here it was void; but this difference furnishes no logical or sound reason why a different rule should be applied in the division of the jointly acquired property. Indeed, in the case from which we have quoted, the marriage having been annulled, the court assumed it to have been void ab initio.

[3] We do not overlook the fact that the present action was for divorce, and that no decree of divorce or annulment of the marriage was entered. But it is also to be noted that when the parties discovered that the plaintiff was not entitled to a divorce they agreed upon a day to which the trial should be postponed for the purpose of hearing evidence on the issue of their property rights, and accordingly such issue was tried on the day set. It therefore appears to us that, in view of the issues framed by the pleadings, and the course of trial adopted upon the development of the facts bearing upon the marriage of the parties, the court was warranted in adjudicating upon the question of their property rights. The circumstance that the court failed to settle their legal status, as it might well have done, is no ground for reversing that part of its judgment dealing with such property rights, and to which the appeal is directed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WILBUR, LENNON, and SLOANE, JJ., concur.

183 Cal. 342

SAN PEDRO, L. A. & S. L. R. CO. v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. (L. A. 6099.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1920.)

1. Railroads ⟸138—Trackage agreement for division of taxes construed.

A covenant in a trackage agreement between two connecting railroads for joint use of leased connecting lines operated by one of them, requiring the other to pay one-half of all taxes accruing upon the joint line during the term of the agreement, must be construed without regard to the subsequent change in the law to the gross earnings method of taxation provided for by Const. art. 13, § 14, and Laws 1911, c. 335, § 9, where the agreement contains no provision for such contingency.

2. Contracts ⟸303(1) — Unforeseen contingency cannot affect.

An unforeseen contingency or event, not considered by the parties at the time they entered into a contract, can in no manner affect the same.

3. Evidence ⟸48 — Common knowledge that taxes do not remain constant.

It is a matter of common knowledge that our tax laws and the amount of the tax to be paid seldom, if ever, remains constant.

4. Appeal and error ⟸1050(2) — Admission of immaterial evidence harmless.

Admission of immaterial evidence was harmless, where it in no manner tended to aid the court in the interpretation of a contract, which was the issue involved.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Halsted, of Los Angeles, Dana T. Smith, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and E. E. Bennett and Fred E. Pettit, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. W. Camp, U. T. Clotfelter, M. W. Reed, and Robert Dunlap, all of Los Angeles (Gardiner Lathrop, of Chicago, Ill., and Charles H. Woods, of Carlinville, Ill., of counsel), for respondent.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice KERRIGAN of the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District while acting as justice pro tempore in this court in place of Mr. Justice MELVIN. It is adopted as the opinion of this court.

By this action plaintiff seeks to recover the sum of $71,534.08 paid on account of state taxes to defendant under a certain agreement relating to the same. It is admitted that the amount was paid under duress and protest. For the sake of brevity counsel have referred to the plaintiff as the Salt Lake Company and to the defendant as the Santa Fé Company. We will so refer to them.

The plaintiff and defendant are railroad companies, and this action involves the construction of a certain trackage agreement entered into between them. It appears from the record that the Santa Fé Company holds and operates in this state two connecting lines of railroad under lease from the Southern Pacific Company. One of these lines extends from Barstow to Daggett, and the other from Colton to Barstow. The Salt Lake Company owns, controls, and operates a line of railway extending from San Pedro to Colton. By the terms of the contract under consideration the parties hereto agreed to jointly use the leased lines of the Santa Fé Company upon certain conditions. The lines are designated in the agreement as the "Joint Line." The contract is lengthy, but the issue in the case relates to the covenant to pay taxes. This issue arises from a difference between the parties as to the proper construction and effect to be given to that covenant. The right or license to use the Joint Line was for an indefinite period, terminable upon three years' notice, the grant being conditioned, among other things, upon the payment to the Santa Fé Company, for such use, of a sum of $48,782.38 per annum and a certain per cent. of costs chargeable to capital account, together with sums equal to one-half of all taxes and assessments accruing upon or in respect of all or any part of the railroads, franchises, and other property composing the Joint Line, during the term of the agreement, since terminated.

The contract further provided that the taxes and assessments accruing upon the Joint Line should be deemed to be such proportion of the total taxes paid by the Santa Fé Company as the Joint Line mileage bore to the total mileage on which said taxes were paid.

The so-called Joint Line is situated within the state of California, and the lines of the Santa Fé Company, of which the Joint Line forms a part, extend into different counties.

The contract here involved is dated April 26, 1905. From that date until the year 1910 taxes were assessed and levied directly against railroad property in the state, the assessment being an ad valorem one only. The amount paid as taxes by the Salt Lake Company for the period aggregated $70,687.36. There is no dispute concerning payments made during this time. Upon the adoption in 1910 of a constitutional amendment prescribing what is generally termed the "gross earnings" method of taxation of railroads, this system of taxation was changed. Section 14, art. 13. By it and the enactment of laws in conformity therewith (Laws 1911, § 9, c. 335) the railroads were required to pay, as taxes to the state in lieu of all other taxes, sums equal to a certain percentage of the gross earnings from the operation of their railroads. By reason of this change a dispute arose between the parties as to the proper interpretation of their contract relating to the payment of taxes. Under the constitutional amendment and the laws passed in pursuance thereof both the Santa Fé Company and the Salt Lake Company were required to pay a tax "equal to the percentages hereinafter fixed upon the gross receipts from the operation of such companies within the state." The amendment also provided that the gross receipts shall be deemed to be all receipts on business beginning "and ending within this state, and a proportion, based upon the proportion which the mileage within the state shall bear to the entire mileage over which the business is done, of receipts on all business passing through, into or out of this state."

After the adoption of this constitutional amendment the Santa Fé Company claimed that the Salt Lake Company should pay one-half of the amount of the Santa Fé Company's gross earnings tax allotable to the Joint Line on a mileage basis. The Salt Lake Company, on the other hand, insisted that the amount of its gross earnings tax allotable to the Joint Line by the same method of taxation should be taken into consideration in order to determine the amount due from it to the Santa Fé Company under the agreement, it being claimed that the total sum to be paid by the Salt Lake Company under the terms of the contract was one-half of the aggregate of the taxes so paid by both companies allotable to the Joint Line.

The trial court adopted the construction of the Santa Fé Company and rendered judgment in its favor, and plaintiff appeals.

We are of the opinion that the construction adopted by the trial court is the proper one to be given to the agreement.

It is admitted that the tax paid by both companies under the new method of taxation is a tax upon property within the meaning of the contract. The question here presented, therefore, requires a construction of the tax clause in the agreement. That portion of the covenant involved is as follows:

"That in consideration of the foregoing grant, the San Pedro Company agrees: That from and after the date of the commencement of said term, and until such term shall expire as provided in section 3 of article 1, it will pay to the Atchison Company, at its office in the city of Los Angeles, California, the following sums, namely:

"(b) From time to time, sums equal to one-half of all taxes and assessments, which during said term shall accrue upon or in respect of all or any part of the railroads, franchises and other property composing the Joint Line.

"The taxes and assessments accruing upon or in respect of that portion of the Joint Line which is leased by the Atchison Company from the Southern Pacific Company, shall be deemed to be sums bearing the same ratio to the whole sums payable by the Atchison Company, under said indenture of lease and contract dated July 15, 1898, in respect of taxes and assessments upon the whole line leased to the Atchison Company under said indenture of lease and contract, as the mileage of said portion thereof embraced in the Joint Line bears to the mileage of said leased line.

"Inasmuch as the portion of the Joint Line leased by the Atchison Company from the Southern California Railway Company, will not be taxed or assessed separately, but will be taxed or assessed with or as a part of other railway lines of the Southern California Railway Company or of the Atchison Company, it is understood and agreed that the taxes and assessments upon that portion of the Joint Line shall be deemed and taken to be such share of the taxes and assessments upon all such lines including such portion of the Joint Line so taxed together as an entirety, as shall bear to the whole of such taxes and assessments thereon the same ratio as that which the mileage of said portion of the Joint Line shall bear to the mileage of all such lines so taxed together or as an entirety.

"Any taxes or assessments for any year of which only a part is included in said term shall be apportioned and the San Pedro Company shall pay a sum equal to one-half of a share thereof proportionate to such part of the year as is included in the term.

"Each sum payable under this subdivision (b) in respect of taxes and assessments shall be payable by the San Pedro Company, within thirty days after the Atchison Company shall have paid such taxes and assessments, and shall have caused a written statement thereof to be furnished to the San Pedro Company."

Neither counsel has furnished us authority, and we have found none, where a contract of like character has received judicial interpretation. To us, however, it appears that none is required, for the terms of the covenant involved seem clear and free from doubt. From the language employed, considering the surrounding circumstances at the time the contract was entered into, it is plainly manifest that it was the intention of the parties hereto that the Salt Lake Company was to pay one-half of the taxes imposed on the Joint Line, which the Santa Fé Company was required to pay during the life of the agreement.

[1, 2] The contract provides that the Salt Lake Company shall pay one-half the taxes allocated to the Joint Line "after the Atchison Company shall have paid such taxes." Again, it is provided that the taxes shall be payable by the Salt Lake Company "thirty days after the Atchison Company shall have paid such taxes and assessments, and shall have caused a written statement to be furnished to the San Pedro Company." The plain inference from these provisions is that the Santa Fé Company was to be reimbursed for one-half of the taxes paid by it upon the property constituting the Joint Line. Nothing is contained in the contract with reference to what the Salt Lake Company might be obliged to pay by reason of a change in the taxing method. Under the method of taxation in force at that time the taxes levied against the Joint Line were wholly paid by the Santa Fé Company. No other system of taxation, such as here involved, under which both parties might become liable for a tax by reason of the use of the Joint Line, seems to have been contemplated by the parties, for their contract contains no clause with reference to such a contingency. An unforeseen contingency or event, not considered by the parties at the time they entered into their agreement, can in no manner affect the same.

[3] It is a matter of common knowledge that our tax laws and the amount of the tax to be paid seldom, if ever, remains constant. Different character and forms of taxes and assessments are frequently being created. The parties hereto are deemed to have had knowledge of this fact, and it was their duty, if such was their intention, to make provision relating to such change. We cannot do this for them. To do so would be to impose upon them a contract which neither party might have assented to in the first instance.

The fact that the change in the law might create additional burdens upon either of the parties is of no consequence. The agreement provides that the Salt Lake Company shall pay to the Santa Fé Company one-half of all taxes which shall accrue during the term thereof. It is admitted that the amount paid by defendant was paid as taxes, and there is no question that they accrued during the term of the contract.

[4] Appellant complains of the admission of certain evidence offered by defendant for the purpose of showing that the change in the method of taxation did not bring about an equitable result. From this evidence it appeared that for the years 1907 to 1910 the taxes paid by the Salt Lake Company aggregated $70,687.36, and that from 1911 to 1914, inclusive, the amount paid was $93,513.69. To justify its admissions respondent argues that the evidence refutes the claim of gross injustice, for the reason that under plaintiff's construction of the agreement it would only pay $21,979.60 for the disputed period, notwithstanding that the taxes were materially higher than during the preceding four years. The evidence should have been rejected. Courts are not concerned with the question of how changed conditions might or might not benefit either party, where their contract is silent with reference thereto. The admission of the evidence, however, was harmless, for it in no manner tended to aid the court in the interpretation of the agreement, for it did not affect the same.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 329

ANTHONY et al. v. JANSSEN. (L. A. 5038.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 24, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⇐183(15)—Sufficient foundation held not laid for secondary evidence of lost deed's contents.

Sufficient foundation is not laid for introduction of secondary evidence of the contents of a deed as lost, where, so far as appears, if searched for, it could have been found.

2. Mines and minerals ⇐117—Sheriff's deed under decree against holder of option on mining claim not evidence of recitals against owner.

A sheriff's deed, purporting to be made pursuant to a decree, only against one having merely an option to purchase a mining claim, ordering foreclosure, of a lien for debt contracted by him in development, is not evidence against the one giving the option.

3. Mines and minerals ⇐117—Sheriff's deed under judgment against one person only held to convey no other interest.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 700, sheriff's deed, pursuant to judgment, in action to foreclose lien for debt contracted by P. in developing mining claim for which it had option, conveyed only the interest of P., the judgment running only against P., and directing sale of the property and execution of a deed for the interest of P.

4. Corporations ⊂=619 — Directors, as trustees, on forfeiture of charter, must act as a body.

The powers of directors as trustees, which they become under St. 1905, p. 493, as amended by St. 1907, p. 746, on a corporation forfeiting its charter for nonpayment of its license tax, must, under Civ. Code, §§ 860, 2268, in absence of provision to the contrary, be exercised by their united action, so that a deed by one of them, as an act in execution of the trust, transfers no title, unless done in consummation of some disposition of the property made by all the trustees acting unitedly.

5. Corporations ⊂=619 — Deed of individual stockholder after forfeiture of charter subject to powers of trustees.

Deed of individual interest of stockholder of a corporation which had forfeited its charter for nonpayment of its license tax, is subject to the rights and powers of the trustees of the corporation in settling the corporate affairs, and so is no basis for judgment quieting title to mining claim of the corporation in the grantee against the trustees.

6. Judicial sales ⊂=3—Direction in decree, for deed immediately after sale, void as contrary to Code.

Direction in the decree that deed be made immediately after execution sale, being contrary to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 700a, 703, and beyond the court's power, is void.

7. Execution ⊂=241—Deed executed on making sale given effect as certificate of sale.

A deed, executed by a sheriff on making execution sale of real estate, subject to redemption, when under Code Civ. Proc. § 700a, he should execute only a certificate of sale, may be given effect as a certificate of sale; it containing all the statutory requirements thereof, except the statement that the property was subject to redemption, which is declared by the law itself.

8. Execution ⊂=303—Deed after time to redeem necessary to complete transfer of interest.

A deed under Code Civ. Proc. § 703, after failure to redeem within a year from execution sale of interest in real estate, is necessary to complete transfer to the purchaser of the rights of the judgment debtor.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Mabel E. Anthony and others against I. P. Janssen. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Eugene Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for appellants.

C. E. Joslin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice Kerrigan of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, while acting as justice pro tempore of this court in place of Mr. Justice Melvin. It is adopted as the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from the judgment in an action brought by the plaintiffs, as trustees of the Palagonite Industrial Mining Company, a defunct corporation, and of the stockholders thereof, to quiet title to four separate mining claims in San Diego county. The complaint is in the form usual in such cases. In the answer of the defendant it is not only denied that the plaintiffs are the owners of the premises or have any interest therein, but facts are therein set forth constituting the basis of the defendant's alleged title, for the quieting of which he also prays the court's decree.

The court by its decision determined, first, that the plaintiffs have no interest in these mining claims and are not entitled to any relief in the action; second, that defendant is the owner of the portion claimed by him of the said mining claims. Judgment was entered accordingly, and the plaintiffs appealed therefrom. Plaintiffs also duly presented in the lower court a motion to vacate the judgment and for a new trial. On that motion it was ordered:

"That the said judgment and decree be vacated and set aside and a new trial be, and the same is hereby, granted as to all matters contained therein, quieting defendant's title to the described premises and as to all affirmative relief to the defendant other than his judgment for costs."

At present, therefore, and assuming that the said order did not vacate the entire judgment, it is only necessary to consider that part of the judgment from which the appeal is insisted upon at this time, viz. the determination "that the plaintiff take nothing by this action." This adjudication resulted from a finding that the allegations of the complaint are untrue; in other words a finding that it is not true that the plaintiffs own or have any interest in the described property.

At the trial it was stipulated that on the 2d day of June, 1910, title to the said mining claims was vested in the plaintiffs as trustees of the Palagonite Industrial Mining Company and of its stockholders. On this stipulation plaintiffs rested, whereupon the defendant in support of the allegations of his answer introduced in evidence a contract entered into between the plaintiffs and Ralph E. Pearce on the 2d day of June, 1910, whereby the plaintiffs agreed to convey the premises to Pearce for $50,000 upon certain specified conditions, and under which Pearce went into possession of said claims. Thereafter, on or about July 15, 1910, Pearce assigned this contract to the Premier Investment Company, a corporation, at the same time delivering to said corporation possession of the premises. On August 1, 1910, Margaret Standeford, one of said plaintiffs, conveyed to Pearce all her interest in the mining claims as one of the trustees of said defunct corporation, and Pearce two weeks later conveyed that interest to the Premier Investment Company. Oral evidence was also introduced tending to show a similar conveyance from Mabel E. Anthony and Ada D. Anthony, the remaining trustees. While the Premier Investment Company was in possession of the mining claims, debts were incurred by it for work and labor done thereon, for which liens were filed. James R. Haddock became the owner of these liens, and in August, 1911, commenced an action to foreclose the same against these plaintiffs and the Premier Investment Company. All of the defendants in said suit failed to appear, and their default was entered. The judgment, however, ran against the Premier Investment Company alone. By it the sheriff was directed to make a sale of the property, and to execute a deed thereof to the purchaser "for the interest of said defendant Premier Investment Company." In the month of May, 1917, the sheriff of San Diego county sold and conveyed the property described in the judgment to the plaintiff therein, James R. Haddock, who thereafter conveyed it to I. P. Janssen, the defendant and respondent herein.

[1] It is not claimed by the respondent that the option agreement divested plaintiffs of their title, but that he deraigned title from the plaintiffs by means of the above-mentioned conveyances to the Premier Investment Company, coupled with the sheriff's deed made in the foreclosure suit, and which purported to convey to the grantee therein named whatever interest in the property was owned by said corporation. As before stated, the defendant introduced evidence for the purpose of establishing that plaintiffs, as trustees of the Palagonite Industrial Mining Company, had conveyed the real property involved in this action to the Premier Investment Company. Such evidence included a deed from Margaret S. Standeford, but the only evidence produced tending to show a similar conveyance by the other two trustees was in the form of testimony, offered and received on the theory, as counsel for the defendant stated, that there had been executed by said plaintiffs as trustees a deed conveying the property to Pearce, which deed had been lost and had not been recorded. There were two witnesses on the subject. The testimony of Charles L. Brown, at one time president of the Premier Investment Company, amounted to nothing more than that "the assignment from Mabel E. Anthony and Ada D. Anthony to Pearce" had been brought to him by Pearce and had been examined by him; that afterwards this document and others having been deposited in the files of that company, the papers had been missing, had been searched for and returned to the files. This testimony was stricken out by the court, except the statement that the papers were missing, were sought for and returned. J E. Neal, a bookkeeper of the Premier Investment Company for about a year following September 1, 1910, after examining the deed from Standeford to Pearce and of Pearce to the Premier Investment Company, testified that he saw a paper "similar to the first of these instruments," but whether the wording was just the same he could not say. Further he testified:

"I know nothing of any search being made for the papers and was not aware of it. It is among the files of the company now."

It is manifest that no sufficient foundation was laid to entitle the defendant to introduce secondary evidence of the contents of the deed said to have been made by plaintiffs Anthony. So far as appears, if searched for, it would have been found and could have been produced at the trial. Moreover, there is no evidence of its delivery by the grantors. It is also clear that the testimony does not show what property, if any, was conveyed thereby.

[2-5] The only other evidence relied on by the defendant to show that the title of the trustees had passed to him consisted of the decree of the superior court of San Diego county and the sheriff's deed executed to James R. Haddock, above referred to, purporting to be made under the authority of that decree, which evidence was received over the objection of plaintiffs. The Premier Investment Company was in possession of the property under the optional contract of purchase, according to the terms of which the corporation was authorized to do certain development work. It was while operating the property under this contract that the company incurred certain debts for such work for which the mining claims were legally subject to liens as against the plaintiffs as well as against that company. We have already referred to the filing of these liens, their foreclosure by decree of the superior court, and the sheriff's deed to the predecessor in interest of the defendant pursuant thereto. In that proceeding the plaintiff therein proceeded on the theory that the trustees for the Palagonite Industrial Mining Company had only some incidental or subordinate claim to the premises, and that the Premier Investment Company was the only real and substantial owner thereof, and accordingly prayed and was granted a decree ordering the foreclosure of the liens only against the interest of the Premier Investment Company in the property. The sheriff's deed, purporting to be made pursuant to the terms of this decree, while broad in its terms, is evidence only against the Premier Investment Company, and not against these plaintiffs. Donahue v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 411, 85 Am. Dec. 78. The sheriff's deed could convey no more than directed by the decree, and therefore conveyed to the purchaser only the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor, the Premier Investment Company. Code Civ. Proc. § 700; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680. Under it the defendant could obtain only the rights of that company under the option contract of plaintiffs with Pearce, and the title conveyed by the deed from Margaret Standeford to Pearce. The option contract gave Pearce only the right to purchase the property on the specified terms, by complying with the conditions therein stated, and the right of possession of the property in the meantime, subject to forfeiture for failure to perform those conditions. It does not appear that that company ever exercised the option or obtained any title under it. Hence the sheriff's deed did not transfer the title of the plaintiffs. The deed of Margaret Standeford, so far as the evidence shows, was of no effect upon the rights and powers of the trustees. The Palagonite Company forfeited its charter on November 30, 1908, because of its failure to pay its license tax as provided in the act of 1905 and amendments thereto. Stats. 1905, p. 493, as amended by Stats. 1907, pp. 664, 746. The plaintiffs were then its directors, and under the amendment of 1907 (page 746) they thereupon became trustees of the corporation and its stockholders, with full power to settle its affairs and take such legal proceedings as should be necessary for that purpose. They have the same power under section 400 of the Civil Code. Their powers as trustees include authority to sell and convey the corporate property whenever in their judgment it is necessary for the settlement of the corporate affairs. Rossi v. Caire, 174 Cal. 81, 161 Pac. 1161. There is no provision of the law authorizing them to act separately in the matter. Their powers as trustees must therefore be exercised by the united action of all of them in order to be valid. Civ. Code, §§ 860, 2268. The Standeford deed was executed by herself alone, and it purports to be her deed, both as trustee of said Palagonite Company and in her own right. As an act in execution of the trust, it was not binding on the trust property, and transferred no title, unless it was done in consummation of some disposition of the property made by all the trustees acting unitedly, which does not appear. As a conveyance of her own right, since there is evidence that she was a stockholder in some amount, it would operate to convey whatever title or interest she then had as a stockholder. That title or right, whatever it be, would be subject to the rights and powers of the trustees in settling the corporate affairs, and hence the deed would afford no basis for a judgment against the trustees in this action by them in their trust capacity.

[6-8] With respect to the sheriff's deed, it is sufficient to say, in anticipation of a new trial, that the sheriff was without lawful power at that time to execute a conveyance of the property, or to do anything in consummation of the sale, except to execute to the purchaser a certificate of sale as provided in the Code. Code Civ. Proc. § 700a. The property was real estate and the sale was made subject to redemption. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 700a, 701, 702. The sheriff's power to convey did not accrue until there had been a failure to redeem within the time fixed. Code Civ. Proc. § 703. The direction in the decree that the deed should be made immediately after the sale was contrary to the Code, and beyond the power of the court. It was therefore void. The deed, however, may be given effect as a certificate of sale. It contains all the statutory requirements of a certificate of sale, except the statement that the property is subject to redemption, and as that is declared by the law itself its omission in the certificate does not affect the validity of the sale, nor deprive the document of effect as a certificate showing the sale upon the decree. A deed based thereon, made after the failure to redeem within the year, is, however, necessary to complete the transfer of the right of the Premier Investment Company to the purchaser or his successors in interest.

Under all these circumstances it is clear that the evidence fails to show, as found by the court, that the plaintiffs have no interest in the property. The judgment that they take nothing by their action, and that the defendant recover costs, is therefore erroneous.

The judgment is reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and OLNEY, SHAW, LAWLOR, and LENNON, JJ., concur.

183 Cal. 359

ROY v. POS et al. (S. F. 8642.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1920.)

1. Specific performance ⊂⊃73—Contract for personal services, dependent on personal will, not enforceable.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3386, 3390, subd. 1, contracts for personal services, where the full performance rests upon the personal will of the contracting party, will not be specifically enforced against him.

2. Specific performance ⊂⊃6 — Contract for services not enforced, where plaintiff has not performed.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3386, 3390, subd. 1, contracts for personal services will not be specifically enforced, where the plaintiff is the party who has contracted to render the services, and there has been no full performance on his part, since in such case mutuality in the equitable remedy is lacking.

3. Specific performance ⊂⊃94—Contract to devise land in consideration of support held not substantially performed.

Contract to devise land in consideration of support to be furnished by plaintiff during owner's lifetime will not be specifically enforced, where plaintiff furnished such support during only six months following the agreement, though owner continued to live for a year and a half thereafter; plaintiff not having substantially performed her part of the contract.

4. Wills ⊂⊃58(1)—Agreement to devise not affected by duration of promisor's life.

Validity of an agreement to devise in consideration of support for life is not affected by the length of life of the promisor after the making of the agreement, provided the agreement was fair in its inception.

5. Wills ⊂⊃66—Factor determining substantial performance of contract to devise.

Where one has contracted to devise land in consideration of support for life, the proportion of the remaining lifetime during which the services are rendered is a material factor in determining whether or not there has been a substantial performance of the agreement for support.

6. Specific performance ⊂⊃94—Contract to devise in consideration for support not enforced under evidence.

Contract to devise land, made in consideration for care and support to be furnished owner by plaintiff during owner's lifetime, will not be specifically enforced, where plaintiff did not furnish such care and support more than one-third of remainder of owner's lifetime, though plaintiff was able and willing, but was prevented from so doing by owner, notwithstanding Civ. Code, §§ 1511, 1512, in absence of showing that plaintiff in reliance upon agreement had expended a considerable amount of labor or money upon the property agreed to be devised to her, since during owner's lifetime plaintiff could not have been compelled to perform, and owner could not have been compelled to accept plaintiff's performance, and since plaintiff in such case has an adequate remedy at law in action for damages for the breach.

7. Wills ⊂⊃68—Measure of damages for breach of contract to devise stated.

Where a party to a property owner's contract to devise in consideration of support for life does not sue in quantum meruit on the owner's breach but waits until owner's death and sues for damages, the measure of damages is not the value of the services rendered, but the value of the property agreed to be devised.

8. Wills ⊂⊃68—Mortgage deducted from value of property in ascertaining damages for breach of contract to devise.

If the consideration for a mortgage is the support of owner by mortgagee, and such support is not so inadequate a consideration as to amount to fraud on a party benefited by the owner's prior contract to devise in consideration of support for life, the mortgage is a valid charge against the owner's estate, and should be deducted from the value of the property in ascertaining damages for the owner's breach of the contract.

9. Specific performance ⊂⊃127(3)—Mortgage, executed in violation of agreement to devise, will not be set aside.

In an action to specifically enforce contract to devise property, plaintiff is not entitled to a decree setting aside mortgage on the property executed by owner in breach of such contract, where no cause of action for setting aside the mortgage is separately stated; a cause of action for setting aside such mortgage being separate and distinct from the action for specific performance.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Cecile B. Roy against Rosa L. Pos and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

P. A. Bergerot and A. P. Dessouslavy, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. W. Sanderson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. The plaintiff in this action sought to enforce a written agreement to devise property. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendants, entered upon the failure of the plaintiff to amend her complaint within the time granted for that purpose by an order sustaining the demurrers of the defendants.

The facts alleged by the complaint are substantially these: In October, 1914, Constance Roy was a widow about 81 years of age, having no living brother, sister, or parent, and without child or other issue; the only person in the United States in any way related to her was the plaintiff, who was the widow of a deceased stepson. Said Constance Roy had lived in the state of California for over 40 years. On and prior to the date above mentioned she lived with strangers, having no home or residence of her own. She was the owner of real property of the approximate value of $8,000 and of personal property amounting to about $1,700, and consisting largely of moneys in bank. Being desirous of making her home with plaintiff, who with her mother lived in San Francisco and supported herself by her own efforts, Constance Roy "solicited and importuned" plaintiff to enter into a written agreement, made and dated October 24, 1914, whereby plaintiff, as the party of the second part covenanted "to maintain, support, care for the party of the first part [Constance Roy], and to furnish to and provide for her suitable board, lodging, clothing, medical attention and all other necessaries of life, in a manner in keeping with the first party's present means and situation in life, from the date of this agreement, for and during the natural lifetime of the party of the first part [Constance Roy]." In consideration of this covenant, Constance Roy, as the party of the first part, agreed as follows:

"To make and execute her last will and testament in due, proper and legal form, whereby the party of the first part shall give, devise and bequeath unto the party of the second part, the whole of the estate now owned by her or belonging to her, real or personal, wheresoever situate, without conditions or restrictions of any kind whatsoever, and to appoint in said will the party of the second part, as her executrix without bonds. The party of the first part hereby further agrees not to revoke said will or any of its provisions or to change or modify the same, in any respect without the written consent of the party of the second part first had and obtained."

The agreement further provided that plaintiff was thereupon and thereafter entitled to the use and possession of all of Constance Roy's property and the income thereof, but was to "assume, pay and discharge for the account of the party of the first part [Constance Roy], all charges, taxes, assessments, insurance premiums and all costs and expenses of keeping any and all of the property of the party of the first part in good and tenantable condition and repair. * * *" Constance Roy, however, by further provisions of the agreement, reserved the right to "rescind this contract and revoke said will or any of its or their provisions * * * upon a substantial violation" thereof by the plaintiff, who, upon such rescission, so the agreement provided, should be entitled to the reasonable value of the services, etc., rendered Constance Roy. The agreement further provided that it was "conclusively admitted and established as a fact by the party of the first part that the damages which shall result to the party of the second part upon a violation of the terms of this agreement, or by a revocation of said will, or any part thereof by the party of the first part, without cause or without the written consent of the party of the second part, shall not be capable of pecuniary compensation and that in consequence, the party of the second part shall, in said event, be entitled to relief in equity upon the death of the party of the first part, and the estate of the party of the first part shall thereupon be impressed with a trust in favor of the party of the second part to the extent of securing to her, all and singular, all benefits contemplated by this agreement." The agreement was recorded October 26, 1914, and thereupon Constance Roy went to live with plaintiff and executed her will and a power of attorney to plaintff pursuant to the terms of the agreement.

About April 22, 1915, Constance Roy, against the will and without the consent of the plaintiff, left plaintiff's home and refused to live with or be cared for by plaintiff, although plaintiff at all times since the execution of the agreement and until the death of Constance Roy was ready, able, and willing to perform all the terms of the agreement, and offered so to do. About April 22, 1915, Constance Roy gave to defendant, Rosa L. Pos, without consideration, the sum of about $1,000, which was part of the money owned by Constance Roy at the date of her agreement with plaintiff. On April 29, 1915, Constance Roy revoked the power of attorney to plaintiff, and since said date plaintiff has been unable to collect any of the rentals of said real property, which have been received by defendant Rosa L. Pos, who gave no consideration therefor. Defendants at all times subsequent to March 1, 1915, had notice and actual knowledge of the provisions of plaintiff's agreement. On June 25, 1915, Constance Roy executed to defendant Rosa L. Pos a mortgage on her real property, which purported to secure the payment of the sum of $3,000, but this mortgage was executed with intent to defraud plaintiff, and the only consideration therefor if any, was the care and support of Constance Roy by defendant Rosa L. Pos. On March 26, 1916, 10 days before her death, Constance Roy made another will leaving her entire estate to defendant Rosa L. Pos, and appointing the latter's husband, defendant Bernard Pos, executor. This will was admitted to probate and administration is pending.

The complaint prays for a decree to the effect that all of the property owned by said Constance Roy on October 24, 1914, or at the date of her death is held by defendants in trust for plaintiff, and that plaintiff is the owner thereof, subject only to administration; that defendants be directed to convey all of said property to plaintiff, together with the rents from May 15, 1915; that the mortgage to defendant Rosa L. Pos be decreed fraudulent and void as to plaintiff; and that defendant Bernard Pos, as the executor of the last will of Constance Roy, deceased, be enjoined and restrained from delivering to Rosa L. Pos any portion of the property belonging to said estate or the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and be directed to deliver said property to plaintiff.

It is earnestly urged by counsel for plaintiff that the cases which have heretofore arisen in this state for the specific performance of agreements to devise interests in land furnish no tests for the solution of the problem here presented. In this behalf it is argued that the agreements sued upon in the former cases were parol and therefore prima facie within the statute of frauds (Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 263), and that the court in those cases directed the discussion merely to the nature of the part performance necessary to relieve the contract from the operation of the statute, and that, in this connection, the tests of irremediable change of position and the rendition of services incapable of pecuniary estimation were the controlling and determining factors of the decision in each instance. Because of this it is insisted that the cases referred to have no application to the case at bar, where the agreement is not within the statute of frauds. While there is probably no case in this state for the specific performance of a contract to make a will which is directly in point with the pleaded facts of the instant case, nevertheless the principle which must control in the decision of the case now before the court is one which has long been established in this state in actions for the specific performance of contracts for the conveyance of real property.

[1-3] "It is a familiar rule that contracts for personal services, where the full performance rests upon the personal will of the contracting party, will not be specifically enforced against him. It is also generally true that they will not be enforced where the plaintiff is the one who has contracted to render the services and there has been no full performance on his part, since mutuality in the equitable remedy is then lacking." Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 5, § 2181. That this is the law in California is evidenced by section 3386 and section 3390, subdivision 1, of the Civil Code. It is apparent from the complaint that the plaintiff in this case has not in fact fully performed the services agreed upon.

[4, 5] Neither do the services alleged to have been actually rendered by plaintiff amount to substantial performance on her part, for it appears from the complaint that Constance Roy lived about a year and a half after the agreement was made, and plaintiff's services covered only the first six months of this period. While the length of life of the promisor after the making of an agreement such as the one in suit here is immaterial, providing the agreement was fair in its inception (Howe v. Watson, 179 Mass. 30, 60 N. E. 415), nevertheless it is a self-evident proposition that the proportion of the remaining lifetime during which the services were rendered is a material factor in determining whether or not there has been a substantial performance of the agreement.

[6] Counsel for plaintiff, however, advance the theory that, since plaintiff was able and willing and offered to perform, but was prevented from fully performing by the decedent herself, want of performance is excused, and plaintiff's acts were tantamount to full performance. Sections 1511, 1512, Civ. Code. In support of this contention counsel cite the case of Alexander v. Lewes, 104 Wash. 32, 175 Pac. 572. In that action, although the personal services had not been fully performed by plaintiff, a written agreement similar to the one in the instant case was specifically enforced upon the theory that—

"One who is willing to act upon the contract, but who is prevented by the voluntary repudiation of the other party, is in the same legal position as one who has substantially complied before repudiation, goes without saying."

Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions, the rule in California was definitely defined in the early case of Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 404, and since then consistently adhered to in this state. In the case of Moore v. Tuohy, 142 Cal. 342, 75 Pac. 896, a suit for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land in return for personal services, this court said:

"It seems to be the theory on the part of the plaintiff that, because the defendant failed in his action to rescind the contract in question, and as he refuses to permit the plaintiff to proceed thereunder, and practically has repudiated the contract, therefore plaintiff has a right to have said contract specifically performed. This, however, does not follow. One party to a contract may refuse to carry it out, and thereby cause damage to the other party; still the nature of the contract and the conditions may be such that the contract cannot be specifically enforced. * * * The defendant, within less than a month, having repudiated the contract, and refused to carry it out on his part, as alleged, may have caused the plaintiff damages, as was stated in the original complaint herein filed, and for which he may have a right of action. But an action for specific performance cannot be maintained unless the plaintiff has performed, or can be compelled to perform, on his part." Wakeham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 46, 49, 22 Pac. 1131; Pacific, etc., Ry. Co. v. Campbell-Johnston, 153 Cal. 106, 94 Pac. 623; Civ. Code, § 3392.

While the agreements in the cases cited were for conveyances inter vivos, the rule therein adopted is not, for that reason, inapplicable to the case at bar. Plaintiff could not, during the lifetime of Constance Roy, have been compelled to perform, nor could Constance Roy have been compelled to accept plaintiff's performance. Had plaintiff actually performed the services called for by the contract up to the time of the death of Constance Roy, she would probably now be in a position to ask specific performance.

If, on the other hand, plaintiff had so altered her position before the breach of the agreement that to deny specific performance would operate as a fraud upon her, equity would probably regard her part performance as a substantial performance, and grant the relief prayed for. While the excessive weight and inordinately large appetite of Constance Roy may have rendered her care "costly, burdensome, and wearisome," still it does not appear that plaintiff altered her position even to the extent of changing her residence or giving up her position in life in order to care for Constance Roy; nor does it appear that plaintiff, in reliance upon the agreement, expended any considerable amount of labor or money of her own upon the property agreed to be devised to her. The allegations of the complaint do not disclose any injustice to plaintiff such as amounts to a fraud within the purview of equity, and nothing was undertaken or done by plaintiff pursuant to the provisions of the agreement in suit for which she cannot be adequately compensated in an action for damages.

[7] We turn now to a consideration of the claim of plaintiff that a judgment in an action at law for damages would be unavailing for the reason that "the real estate—virtually the sole fund for the payment of such judgment—would be subject to extinction by a foreclosure of the mortgage." This necessitates a consideration of the amount of damages to which plaintiff would be entitled in an action at law for damages. Where a creditor under a written contract of the nature of that now in suit does not sue in quantum meruit, but waits until a final breach of the contract and sues for damages, the measure of damages is the value of the property agreed to be devised or bequeathed, and not the value of the services rendered. Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, 590, 147 Pac. 259; Noyes v. Noyes, 224 Mass. 125, 112 N. E. 850; Dilger v. McQuade's Estate, 158 Wis. 328, 148 N. W. 1085; Day v. Washburn, 76 N. H. 203, 81 Atl. 474; 40 Cyc. 1073. Section 1512 of the Civil Code provides:

"If the performance of an obligation be prevented by the creditor, the debtor is entitled to all the benefits which he would have obtained if it had been performed by both parties."

We are proceeding upon the assumption that plaintiff is able to prove the allegations of her complaint, and that performance on her part was prevented solely by the act of decedent. From what has been said it is clear that, in an action at law for damages, the measure of damages to which plaintiff would be entitled would include the value of the property agreed to be bequeathed, subject to administration. From this amount, in the instant case, in addition to the debts and expenses of administration, there must also be deducted the reasonable cost of caring for and maintaining the deceased and the reasonable expenditures upon her property from the time of the breach of the agreement, unless, of course, these expenses have been paid from the property of deceased or have been charged as debts against the estate, as well as the amount which plaintiff earned, or could have earned, by devoting her services to others than the decedent.

[8] If, therefore, the mortgage to defendant Rosa L. Pos is a valid charge against the estate, it must be deducted from the value of the estate in ascertaining the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled and plaintiff cannot be heard to complain. On the other hand, while decedent retained the ownership of the property during her lifetime, her right to the control of the property was subject to the qualification that any disposition of the property to persons with knowledge of plaintiff's agreement and for the sole purpose of defeating the benefits to be derived by plaintiff from the agreement would be "a fraud in law, or a constructive fraud upon the agreement." Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 48, 138 Pac. 728, 733; Van Duyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J. Eq. 142.

[9] If such is the case here, plaintiff does not thereby become entitled to specific performance of her agreement, but she may have the right to have the mortgage set aside. The complaint alleges that the mortgage was executed to defendant Rosa L. Pos, defendants having at the time full knowledge and notice of plaintiff's agreement, and neither Constance Roy nor her estate has ever received the $3,000 or any money or property whatever in respect of said mortgage; that the only consideration for said mortgage, if any existed at all, was the care and support of said Constance Roy by defendant Rosa L. Pos; that the mortgage was executed in pursuance of the plan and agreement between the parties of evading and defeating the operation of plaintiff's agreement with said Constance Roy, and with the intention to defraud plaintiff, and in the attempt to withdraw and remove the real property from the effect and operation of plaintiff's agreement. If the support of Constance Roy was the consideration for the mortgage, and such support was not so totally inadequate a consideration as to amount to fraud, the mortgage is a valid charge against the estate. Even were the allegations of the complaint upon this phase of the case sufficient in themselves to state a cause of action for setting aside the mortgage, still the fact remains that such a cause of action would necessarily be separate and distinct from the action for specific performance, and it was not separately stated in this case. Plaintiff having failed to amend in this particular, the complaint cannot, as it stands, be said to state a cause of action for the setting aside of the mortgage, nor can it be held that the complaint was primarily intended to or did do anything more than attempt to state a cause of action for specific performance. Inasmuch as plaintiff has been held not to be entitled to specific performance, she cannot be held to be entitled, under the pleadings presented upon this appeal, to a decree setting aside the mortgage. Sharp v. Miller, 54 Cal. 329.

The demurrers were properly sustained, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.

47 Cal. App. 300

MILLS v. SAN DIEGO CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC et al. (Civ. 3194; L. A. 5662.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 1, 1920. Opinion of Supreme Court, In Bank, Denying Hearing, June 28, 1920.)

1. Trade-marks and trade-names ⊂=92—Complaint for unfair competition stated cause of action.

A complaint in an action to enjoin the use of a name, alleging that the name was adopted with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff and appropriating for defendants' use and benefit the good will of plaintiff's business, etc., held sufficient as against a general demurrer.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names ⊂=79—Courts will enjoin use of name.

Courts of equity, where one has been first in the field doing business under a given name, will protect that person to the extent of compelling competitors to use reasonable precautions to prevent deceit and fraud upon the public and upon the business first in the field.

3. Trade-marks and trade-names ⊂=69—Fraudulent intent in using the same name inferable from facts.

In an action to enjoin the use of a trade-name, fraudulent intent and deceit by the defendants practiced upon the plaintiff held fairly inferable from the facts.

4. Damages ⊂=5—"General damages" defined.

"General damages" are such as the law implies and presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of and are such as naturally and necessarily result from the wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Damages.]

5. Damages ⊂=142—Special damages must be pleaded.

Where special damages are not claimed, a party can recover only such damages as are not only the natural and proximate result, but also the necessary result of the act complained of.

6. Trade-marks and trade-names ⊂=92—Damages shown special and not general, requiring pleading.

In an action to enjoin use of a trade-name of a school of music, where no special damages were alleged, evidence that a certain music company refused to carry out a contemplated scheme it had agreed upon to buy a certain number of scholarships in plaintiff's conservatory of music was inadmissible to show damages; such damage being special, requiring that it be alleged.

7. Appeal and error ⊂=1039(13) — Proof of special damages not pleaded reversible error.

The admission of evidence over objection as to special damages not specially pleaded will result in a reversal, where it cannot be ascertained whether such damages were allowed.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

8. Trade-marks and trade-names ⊂=92—Proof of special damages not alleged erroneously admitted.

In an action to enjoin use of a trade-name and for damages, where the alleged damage was confined to a loss of patronage in that the use of plaintiff's name by defendants had actually misled the public to patronize defendants in the belief that they were patronizing the plaintiff, and that the reputation of plaintiff's business had been greatly injured and damaged, it was error to permit introduction of evidence that a certain music company had refused to carry out a contemplated scheme which had been agreed upon to buy a certain number of scholarships in plaintiff's conservatory of music; such evidence relating to an entirely different matter than the special damage alleged.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Chesley Mills, doing business under the name and style of the San Diego Conservatory of Music, against the San Diego Conservatory of Music, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in the Supreme Court.

Henry C. Ryan and F. F. Grant, both of San Diego, for appellants.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward and Stephen Connell, all of San Diego, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action for an injunction against the defendants, praying that the latter be enjoined from using the name "San Diego Conservatory of Music," and from conducting business under that name "or using the same in any manner whatsoever," asking for damages and for general relief. The relief is sought on the ground of unfair dealing on the part of the defendants.

The complaint, in apt and proper allegations, set forth the acts complained of and because of which plaintiff seeks relief. A general demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and was by the court overruled. Defendants, by their answer, deny practically all the material allegations of the complaint, admitting, however, that defendants other than the corporation organized the defendant corporation, adopting said name therefor "for the purpose of engaging in the same character and line of business claimed to be carried on by plaintiff herein," the location of their business as alleged by plaintiff, and the publishing of certain advertisements; averring that only for the injunctional order of the court they would have continued to carry on such business. The court found for the plaintiff on all the issues, and judgment was entered accordingly. There was a motion for new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment.

We have read the entire record. From the record it appears that the plaintiff, Prof. Chesley Mills, during the year 1915 established a school devoted to the art of music in all its branches, including instruction in the playing of the piano, organ, violin, flute, cornet, mandolin, ukulele, and other orchestral instruments together with voice culture, platform art, and dramatic training in general, and for the operation and management of a conservatory of music for such instruction and teaching, and the holding of public and private musicals and entertainments incident thereto, as well as the employment of teachers necessary to conduct and carry on such business; that at the time said business was so established the plaintiff adopted the name of "San Diego Conservatory of Music," under which name, since the establishment of said business as aforesaid, he has carried on and conducted the same at 1630 Fifth street, in the city of San Diego; and that under said name plaintiff built up a large business, widely and favorably known, as well as a valuable reputation, etc.; that in September, 1917, the defendants, other than the corporation, organized the defendant corporation, under the laws of this state, under the identical name adopted by plaintiff at the time and place aforesaid, and established the office of said corporation and studio at No. 1434 Fifth street, in San Diego, "within 800 feet of plaintiff's said place of business, on the same side of the street," from which place and under which name defendants caused certain advertisements to be published; and that such business was so transacted by defendants from that time until restrained from so doing by the court. It is further alleged in the complaint that all this was done "with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff and appropriating for their own use and benefit the good will of plaintiff's business and deluding and deceiving plaintiff's customers and the public in general into the belief that the business of plaintiff conducted at the aforesaid place was being conducted by defendants, * * * and that the same has actually misled many of them to patronize defendants in the belief that they, the said persons, are patronizing the plaintiff," all to plaintiff's damage, etc.

Appellants enumerate eight assignments of error, which may be reduced to two: Errors of law occurring during the trial, and insufficiency of the evidence to support certain findings.

[1] As to the first point urged, it is claimed that the court erred in overruling defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. With this we cannot agree. We think the complaint amply sufficient as against the general demurrer.

The next point urged is that the evidence does not support findings Nos. 4, 5, and 6. These findings, in full, are as follows:

"(4) That said defendants, B. Roscoe Schryock, Florence M. Young, Mary Barnum Kessler, Edna D. Anderson, J. Wm. Brown, and Mrs. L. R. Kirby, Sr., caused the name of San Diego Conservatory of Music to be adopted as the name of said defendants' corporation with the intent and with the express purpose of defrauding plaintiff and appropriating for their own use and benefit the good will of plaintiff's business and deluding and deceiving plaintiff's customers and the public in general into the belief that the business of plaintiff conducted at 1630 Fifth street in said city as aforesaid was conducted by said defendants, and that each and all of the said notices or advertisements placed by defendants in said newspapers as aforesaid were caused to be placed therein for the same purpose and with the same intent, and that if said defendants are permitted to carry on said business at said No. 1434 Fifth street or elsewhere under said corporate name of San Diego Conservatory of Music that the prospective applicants for instruction and customers of plaintiff and the public in general will at all times be deceived, misled and defrauded into believing that the place where defendants are so conducting business is plaintiff's place of business, all of which is and will be to the injury and damage of plaintiff and to the public in general.

"(5) That unless restrained from so doing by this court, the defendants will continue and proceed to carry on the said business under the said name of San Diego Conservatory of Music for and with the express purpose of deceiving plaintiff's customers and the public in general into the belief that plaintiff's business conducted at its place aforesaid is defendants' business; and that the name adopted by said defendants, to wit, San Diego Conservatory of Music, was at all times calculated and intended to receive the prospective applicants for instruction at plaintiff's said school or business and the patrons and customers thereof together with the public in general; that by reason of each and all of the acts of said defendants herein so done or caused to be done by them and each of them, plaintiff has been injured and damaged in the sum of $100.

"(6) That the adoption of said name of defendant corporation, San Diego Conservatory of Music, was made with the intention or purpose of defrauding plaintiff and deceiving or misleading the public and to injure plaintiff, and that each and all of the acts of said defendants have created much confusion in plaintiff's said business. Plaintiff has fully complied with all the provisions of sections 2466–2468 of the Civil Code of the State of California relating to the use of fictitious names. That plaintiff having had the prior and exclusive right to said name of San Diego Conservatory of Music, the said defendants herein and neither of them have any right to use said name of 'San Diego Conservatory of Music' for the reason that the use of said name by defendants is of damage to plaintiff and his business and is calculated to mislead and deceive as hereinbefore set forth."

[2, 3] There is no merit whatever in the "point" that the evidence does not support these findings. Indeed, by the evidence of Mr. Schryock, director and head of the violin and piano department of the defendant corporation, it was shown that he knew, at the time of the incorporation of the defendant company, that plaintiff was conducting a business under that name, and instead of being open and aboveboard in his testimony, as one would be if acting wholly devoid of any ulterior motive, we see all through his testimony evidence of evasiveness and elusiveness, which, we think, amply justified the trial court in its observation that in its opinion this was a case of "rank fraud" on the part of the defendants. As we have already seen, plaintiff was first in the field doing business as above set forth. We think "that in the interest of fair commercial dealing courts of equity, where one has been first in the field doing business under a given name, will protect that person to the extent of making competitors to use reasonable precautions to prevent deceit and fraud upon the public and upon the business first in the field." Spieker v. Lash, 102 Cal. 38, 36 Pac. 362; Dunston v. Los Angeles Van, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 89, 131 Pac. 115; Temple v. Gordon, 31 Cal. App. 127, 159 Pac. 983. We think, too, that the fraudulent intent, as well as the deceit and fraud which defendants practiced upon the plaintiff here, are fairly inferable from the situation of the parties and the defendants' acts.

[4, 5] It is also urged by defendants, in support of this same assignment, that if any damage was done to plaintiff by reason of the fraudulent acts of the defendants, "that it was a special damage and not a general damage," and by reason of that fact that the complaint did not set forth the elements of the special damage incurred by the plaintiff. Hence, it is argued, no damages can be recovered against the defendants herein. There is merit in this contention. "General damages are such as the law implies and presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of. They are such as naturally and necessarily result from the wrong, although this does not mean that they must inevitably and always result from a given wrong. * * * The subject of general and special damages as contradistinguished is principally a question of pleading, the general rule being that, where special damages are not claimed, a party can recover only such damages as are not only the natural and proximate result, but also the necessary result of the act complained of." 17 C. J. 712, § 20.

[6] The defendants were obliged to conduct themselves and to carry on their business in such a way as to be not unfairly or unjustly detrimental to plaintiff. Because of their admitted actions in this matter they breached that obligation in this, that because of defendants' adoption in use of the same name as that under which plaintiff had been and was at the time of said breach conducting his business, the Gray-Maw Music Company, a corporation, refused to carry out a contemplated scheme which had been agreed upon to buy a certain number of scholarships in plaintiff's conservatory of music. It is undoubtedly true that such injury might be said to follow naturally as a result of the defendants' said actions. We do not think, however, that it can be successfully maintained that they were such damages as necessarily would follow or result therefrom.

[7] It follows, we think, that because of the absence of a pleading setting forth the special damages referred to, the court erred in overruling defendants' objection to the reception of evidence in support of the item of $100 damages found by the court to have been actually suffered by plaintiff as aforesaid. The purpose of the rule requiring that such damages must be specially pleaded is to advise the defendant of the case he is expected to meet, and thus to prevent surprise at the trial. And where the admission of evidence as to special damages not specially pleaded will result in a reversal where it cannot be ascertained whether any such damages were allowed, it is prejudicial error to receive such evidence, in the absence of such a pleading, over defendants' objection. 8 R. C. L. § 157; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175; Terrace W. Co. v. San Antonio, etc., Co., 1 Cal. App. 511, 82 Pac. 562; Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. App. 684, 121 Pac. 690. It follows therefore that there is no legal evidence to support the finding as to this item of $100.

The judgment, in so far as it awards damages to the plaintiff, is reversed. In all other respects it is affirmed.

I concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.

SLOANE, J. I concur in the decision, but not in all the conclusions of the majority opinion.

Unless the trial court was justified in finding that the defendants were guilty of fraudulent attempt to pirate the business and patronage of the plaintiff, from the mere fact that they attempted to appropriate to their own use the trade-name under which plaintiff was doing business, I fail to see wherein the findings are supported by the evidence.

That there was a deliberate plan and purpose of the defendant Schryock to deprive the plaintiff of the use and benefit of the name "San Diego Conservatory of Music," and, in so far as possible, by incorporating his own business under the same name, obtain the exclusive use of such name, I think there is no doubt. But I fail to find any evidence in the record that he intended or attempted or used any means calculated to deceive the public or patrons of the plaintiff into patronizing his business under the belief that they were patronizing the plaintiff, other than by the bare use of the same trade-name. And there is certainly no evidence, if such was his purpose, that he succeeded in doing this with a single individual. The only publicity given the defendants' business after incorporating under the same name, "San Diego Conservatory of Music," so far as appears in evidence, was certain advertisements in the San Diego papers in which he announces the "San Diego Conservatory of Music (Incorporated)," with the name of "B. Roscoe Schryock, Director," displayed and emphasized in black-faced type. This use and display of defendant Schryock's name is calculated to distinguish his conservatory of music from the one which it is claimed owes its identity and standing to the name and personality of Chesley Mills, the plaintiff in this action. From the obvious attitude of these two rival musicians towards each other, it is probable that the last thing either of them would desire would be to have any of their patrons think he was serving the other's brand of music. If the defendant Schryock had located his home and business in the immediate vicinity of the plaintiff's school of music for the first time in connection with the incorporatng under the same name, it might be argued from that circumstance that he chose the location with a view to confusing the public as to the identity of the two schools; but the record discloses that Schryock had been on the ground and teaching music there nearly, if not quite, as long as had plaintiff, and in the neighborhood of two years before he incorporated under the same name that plaintiff was using.

It seems clear from the settled rule in this state that the mere appropriation of a geographical name which has previously been adopted and is in use by a rival in business affords no ground of action unless accompanied by acts of unfair competition calculated to deceive the public into patronizing the usurping concern under a mistake as to identity. The name "San Diego Conservatory of Music" is admittedly not one that is subject to exclusive appropriation as a trade-name, and the rule applicable to such trade designations is laid down in the leading case of Weinstock, Lubin & Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 42 Pac. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57, in the following words of the syllabus:

"Although there can be no property right in a trade-name which is not the subject of a trade-mark, yet it is a fraud on a person who has established a trade and carried it on under a given name that some other person should use the same name * * * in such a way as to induce persons to deal with him in the belief that they are dealing with one who has given a reputation to the name."

As is said in Banzhaf v. Chase, 150 Cal. 180, 88 Pac. 704:

"The gist of the action is not the appropriation and use of another's trade-mark, but is based upon the fraudulent injury to and appropriation of another's trade."

If in this case the defendants' acts were confined to the mere appropriation of the trade-names used by plaintiff, without acts calculated to mislead those desiring to patronize the plaintiff into patronizing the defendant through a mistake in identity, no cause of action is shown.

I am not sufficiently satisfied, however, to justify dissenting from a majority of the court that the mere fact of the appropriation of the name of plaintiff's business to a rival business, to be carried on in the same immediate vicinity may not in itself sufficiently establish a condition calculated to mislead plaintiff's patrons, and justify a finding of the trial court to that effect, beyond reversal on appeal for want of evidence. The attempt to deprive plaintiff of the benefit of the trade-name under which in good faith he had established his business was morally indefensible, and I do not know that the appellate court should go out of its way to strain a legal point in defendants' favor.

I cannot, however, agree with the conclusions of the opinion that there is evidence of intention on the part of defendants to mislead the public as to the separate identity of the two music concerns, or that they have been guilty of anything more than a constructive fraud.

Opinion of Supreme Court, In Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [8] In denying the petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 2, it seems proper to note that by the complaint the alleged damage was confined to loss of patronage in that the use of its name by defendants has actually misled and does still mislead the public to patronize defendants in the belief that they are patronizing the plaintiff, and that the reputation of the plaintiff's business has been greatly injured and damaged. The only evidence in fact introduced on the subject of actual damage related to an entirely different matter. As the pleadings stood the evidence was inadmissible, and the finding of actual damage is without support in the evidence.

The petition for hearing in this court is denied.

All concur.

48 Cal. App. 300

GASCHLIN v. SIERRA. (Civ. 3322.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 3, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Aug. 2, 1920.)

1. Trial ⊜165—Giving fair intendment on motion for nonsuit does not prevent weighing of evidence.

The rule that the court must, on motion for nonsuit, indulge every fair intendment that can be drawn from plaintiff's testimony, does not mean such court must surrender its right to estimate the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as a whole, or to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to support plaintiff's case.

2. Wills ⊜93—Evidence held to show grantor intended testamentary disposition by deed.

In a grantee's action to quiet title, evidence held to show that grantor intended to make a testamentary disposition by deed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Fred G. Gaschlin against Celso T. Sierra, individually and as executor of the will of Karl Theodore Schuppert, deceased. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

August L. Fourtner, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. T. Satterwhite, of Oakland, and J. E. Harper, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in person and as executor of the will of Karl Theodore Schuppert, deceased, in an action by the plaintiff to quiet title to a certain piece of real estate against said defendant and said estate. The court granted a motion for nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case, basing its action in doing so upon its conclusion from the plaintiff's testimony that the deed from said Karl Theodore Schuppert to the plaintiff, on which he relied to establish his ownership of said property, had never been delivered to him. The facts of the case, as shown by the plaintiff's testimony, may be briefly summarized as follows:

Karl T. Schuppert had for some years prior to December 6, 1911, been, and on that date was, the owner of a house and lot on Waller street in San Francisco. He and the plaintiff had been on friendly terms for a number of years, and the latter had done for the former, who was the older man, many little kindnesses. On the 6th day of December, 1911, Karl T. Schuppert, taking the plaintiff with him, went to the office of a scrivener, and there caused a grant, bargain, and sale deed of said premises to be made to the plaintiff as the grantee thereof, which deed, when drawn, he signed and acknowledged before a notary public. When this had been done, Schuppert, taking the deed, went with the plaintiff to the offices of the Merchants' National Safe Deposit Company where Schuppert had a safe deposit box. When they arrived there, Schuppert sat down and, taking the deed from his pocket handed it to the plaintiff, saying:

"This is what the old man has done for you. This is yours."

The plaintiff read the deed through and handed it back to Schuppert, who placed it in his safe deposit box. Schuppert then caused the plaintiff to be entitled to access to the box, and he received a key to it. At some time during this episode Schuppert asked the plaintiff to give him $10, which he did, and in this connection it may be noted that the consideration named in the conveyance was $10. The parties then left the safe deposit vaults and went to the premises on Waller street, where the plaintiff was residing, and when they arrived there Schuppert said to him:

"Fred, remember what I tell you. When I am gone, when I am passed out, take that deed and have it recorded."

Thereafter, and up to the time of his death, Schuppert remained in the full possession and control of the premises in question, collecting or causing to be collected its rents, and applying the same to his own uses. The plaintiff never saw the deed again, except upon one occasion, in the month of October, 1913, when Schuppert, being ill and in bed, requested the plaintiff to go to the safe deposit vaults and get the deed and bring it to him. This the plaintiff did, and left the deed with Schuppert. A few days later, at the latter's request, he took the deed again to the safe deposit vaults, and left it there. On June 14, 1917, Schuppert died, and the defendant Celso T. Sierra was appointed executor of his last will and testament. When the safe deposit box was opened after the death of Schuppert, it was found to be empty, and there is evidence to the effect that at some time between October, 1915, and the date of Schuppert's death he had sent for and destroyed the deed; at any rate, it was never found nor produced at the trial of the action.

The trial court held these facts insufficient to show a delivery of said deed, and the only question before this court is as to whether the trial court was in error in so ruling upon the motion for nonsuit.

[1] It is conceded by the parties hereto that upon a motion for nonsuit every fair intendment that can be drawn from the testimony offered in support of the plaintiff's case is to be indulged in by the trial court in his favor. This does not mean, however, that the trial court, in passing upon a motion for nonsuit, must surrender its right to estimate the weight and sufficiency of the evidence taken as a whole, or to determine whether, giving to such evidence such fair and reasonable intendment, it is sufficient to support the plaintiff's case.

[2] Putting ourselves in the position of the trial judge in this respect, we are unable to arrive at the conclusion that the plaintiff had sufficiently shown a delivery of the deed in question to him with the intent on the part of its grantor to presently convey title to the premises in question. It is true that the grantor had of his own motion caused the deed to be signed and acknowledged by himself, and that he had asked the defendant to give him $10, the consideration named in the deed, which the defendant had done; but these facts would be insufficient to show a transaction between the parties for the purchase and sale of the premises coincident with the preparation, signing, and acknowledgement of the deed. It is also true that, when the parties arrived at the safe deposit vaults, the grantor handed to the grantee the deed in question, saying:

"This is what the old man has done for you. This is yours."

But evidently the grantor's intent at the time was merely to show the plaintiff the deed as evincing the former's desire and purpose that the plaintiff should at some later time come into the ownership and enjoyment of the property described therein. Evidently, also, the plaintiff himself so understood Schuppert's action, since, after reading the deed, he handed it back to him, and never thereafter until the death of the grantor attempted either to possess himself of said deed or to exercise any acts of ownership or control over the premises. Further light is shed upon this particular episode by the words of the grantor, when, upon arriving at his home upon the premises, he said to the plaintiff:

"Fred, remember what I tell you. When I am gone, when I am passed out, take that deed and have it recorded."

We think it is plain upon the face of this transaction, taken as a whole that it was the intention of the grantor not to invest the grantee in said deed with the present title and ownership in the premises described therein, but rather to invest the grantee named in said deed with the right to its possession and to the ownership of said premises after the grantor's death, or, in other words, to make a testamentary disposition of the property. A strong light is shed upon this intent by the subsequent action of the grantor in instructing the grantee to go to the safe deposit vaults and get the deed and bring it to him at his home where he was lying ill, and in again a few days later instructing the grantee to return said deed to its place of deposit. The action of both parties upon this occasion indicates clearly that it was not understood by either of them that the grantor in said deed had so far surrendered possession and control over it to the grantee named therein as to constitute such a delivery thereof as would suffice to pass the title to the property.

Upon the trial of the cause, and while testifying in his own behalf, the plaintiff himself made this statement:

"I was to assume possession of the property, to have the benefit of it, when he died, and from that time on I claimed the ownership of it."

This statement on the part of the plaintiff is wholly inconsistent with the idea that it was understood by the parties to the conveyance that their acts at the time of the making of said deed and of its deposit in the safe deposit vaults amounted to such a delivery of the instrument as would invest the grantee with the present title to the premises described therein. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the trial court was not in error in granting the defendant's motion for nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case.

This being so, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 38

KEISER v. BUTTE CREEK CONSOL. DREDGING CO. et al. (two cases). (Civ. No. 3066.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. June 1, 1920.)

1. Bills and notes ⊂=397 — That indorsers were officers of maker corporation does not excuse notice of presentment.

The fact that defendants, indorsers of corporation's notes, were also directors or officers with full knowledge of the corporate affairs and of the failure to pay the note does not excuse lack of notice of presentment and dishonor.

2. Bills and notes ⊂=526 — Evidence held insufficient to show waiver of presentment and dishonor.

In an action against a corporation upon its note and against its officers as indorsers, evidence of a statement by one of the parties in the hearing of the others, made to plaintiff, asking him to wait, stating that he was taking no risk, that they were all responsible on the note, held insufficient to show a waiver of notice of presentment and dishonor, of which strict proof is required.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Two actions by E. T. Keiser against the Butte Creek Consolidated Dredging Company and others resulted in judgments for defendants, and separate appeals were taken by the plaintiff and presented upon one record and one set of briefs by stipulation. Affirmed.

Joseph E. Hannon and J. Vincent Hannon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg and C. E. Joslin, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Separate appeals were taken in the two actions the titles of which appear first above. As precisely the same questions of law were involved, the parties stipulated to present both cases upon one record and one set of briefs. The appeals were taken by the plaintiff from a judgment entered in favor of respondents, the latter being indorsers upon two promissory notes executed by the defendant corporation in favor of the plaintiff. All of the respondents except Ira D. McCoy, as well as the plaintiff, were, at the times the two promissory notes were executed, directors of defendant corporation. McCoy was secretary of the same corporation. All of the respondents were at all times familiar with the transactions having to do with the execution of the two notes, and had actual knowledge of the fact that the notes were not paid at maturity. It is admitted that no formal presentment and demand for payment of the obligations was made upon the makers of the notes, and no notice given to the indorsers of dishonor thereof.

[1] The first point made on behalf of appellant is that the fact that the directors and McCoy the secretary (the indorsers) at all times had full knowledge of the fact that the corporation had not satisfied its obligations to the plaintiff, relieved him of the duty of making demand upon the payor and giving notice of dishonor to the indorsers. Appellant cites to this point a decision from another state which supports that view, the case being Hull v. Myers, 90 Ga. 674, 16 S. E. 653. Respondents make question with the soundness of that decision, claiming that its reasoning is illogical, and refer to the case of Hudson Furniture Co. v. Harding, 70 Fed. 468, 17 C. C. A. 203, 30 L. R. A. 513. In the latter decision the federal court distinctly decides the question the other way, and refers pointedly to Hull v. Myers, with this observation:

"The case of Hull v. Myers, 90 Ga. 674, 16 S. E. 653, is urged upon our attention in support of this contention. The decision of the court upon this question is bottomed, as we think, upon incorrect reasoning, and is without the support of authority."

Upon an examination of the two decisions, we prefer the determination as made in the federal case as representing a more careful consideration of the question and better logic in its reason. Respondents also cite McDonald v. Luchenbach, 170 Fed. 434, 95 C. C. A. 604, and Houser v. Fayssoux et al., 168 N. C. 1, 83 S. E. 692, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 835, both of which give support to the proposition that the fact that an indorser on a note of a corporation is also a director, with full knowledge of the corporate affairs, does not excuse the lack of notice of presentment and dishonor. In this case it was shown that the various indebtednesses of the defendant corporation, including that to the plaintiff, were discussed at different meetings of the board of directors, both before and after the particular obligation sued upon here became due. In so far as those discussions showed familiarity of the indorsers with the true situation as to nonpayment of the obligations, they add nothing to the statement of fact already made herein and conceded by respondents, that the indorsers at all times were possessed of such knowledge.

[2] Appellant further argues, however, that after the maturity of the two notes and at a meeting of the directors at which all of the indorsers were present, a statement was made by one of the directors which was in itself of potent effect in establishing a waiver of the notice to the indorsers. This statement was testified by plaintiff to have been made by respondent Hubbard, in which Hubbard said to the plaintiff:

"'Can't you just wait? You are taking no risk whatever; we are all responsible on that note—on those notes.' Nobody said anything to the contrary. That statement was made in the presence and hearing of each of the parties whose names appear on the back of the notes."

The secretary and several of the directors testified that they were present at the meeting, and did not hear any one request the plaintiff to forbear payment of the note. This testimony created a conflict as to a portion at least of the statement made by plaintiff attributing the words quoted to Hubbard. It left lacking categorical contradiction of the words, "You are taking no risk whatever; we are all responsible on that note—on those notes." There is merit in the argument of respondents that the court in drawing its deductions had the right to conclude that no part of the statement attributed to Hubbard was made. However, conceding that the contradiction which in express terms only covered a portion of the Hubbard statement left without denial the assertion of Hubbard that plaintiff was taking no risk, that "we are all responsible," we do not believe that this expression was of such positive scope as to entitle it to be considered as evidence of a waiver of the presentment and notice of dishonor. Strict proof is required, and statements to bear the import attempted to be attached to those here made must be clear and unequivocal. Keyes v. Fenstermaker, 24 Cal. 329. In that case it is said that the law is settled that a promise to pay by an indorser, made after maturity with full knowledge of the payee's neglect to make demand and give notice, must be established by clear and distinct evidence. To the same effect is another case cited by respondents, to wit, Glidden v. Chamberlin, 167 Mass. 486, 46 N. E. 103, 57 Am. St. Rep. 479.

The points discussed are the principal ones argued upon this appeal. Under the evidence shown, we think that the court was justified in each of the findings made. We conclude also that the rulings upon the admission of evidence were without prejudicial error.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

48 Cal. App. 34

HASKETT v. HARTWICK et al. (Civ. 2936.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 1, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 30, 1920.)

Sales ⊂=52(6)—Evidence held to show plaintiff, and not another, was seller of property.

In an action by conditional seller of automobile to recover possession thereof as against purchaser and his vendees, evidence held to show that plaintiff, and not another, was the owner and had sold the automobile to defendant purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by R. C. Haskett against C. B. Hartwick and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. A. Klein, of Bakersfield, for appellant.
E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff in this action brought to recover the possession of an automobile was aggrieved by the judgment entered against him; hence this appeal.

Defendant Hartwick had possession of the automobile in question. He attempted to transfer title thereto for a valuable consideration to Berges, and Berges in turn attempted to sell the machine to Swett. Berges and Swett appear as alleged innocent purchasers resisting the claim of Haskett, the plaintiff. In support of his side of the case, plaintiff introduced a conditional-sale contract made between him and Hartwick whereby he agreed to sell and Hartwick agreed to buy the automobile. An initial payment on account was acknowledged in the writing to have been received by Haskett, and monthly installments were provided to be paid until the whole sum agreed upon was satisfied. In the meantime the contract contained provisions reserving title in the vendor and providing that in case of default in payments Haskett might take possession of the property. All of these provisions were the familiar ones usually contained in contracts of that kind. Haskett's testimony further showed that payments as agreed upon had not been made by Hartwick. Plaintiff, learning that Hartwick had attempted to dispose of the machine and that it had passed out of his possession, resting finally in the hands of Swett, brought this action to recover possession or the value of the automobile. The original parties defendant were Hartwick and Swett, Berges having afterwards been permitted to intervene and become a party to the suit. Berges' defense was similar to that of Swett. We do not find that any appearance was made on the part of Hartwick. By the answers and the intervention pleading, issue was made as to the ownership of the automobile being in the plaintiff, and facts were alleged for the purpose of showing that plaintiff was estopped from denying the authority of Hartwick to transfer title to the machine.

The material point in the case is as to whether the evidence sustains the findings of the trial judge. In those findings it was determined that the plaintiff was not the owner or entitled to possession of the automobile; that Hartwick had purchased the property from a motorcar company in the city of Los Angeles on August 18, 1917; and that said motorcar company was the owner thereof at the time of said sale. The judgment was that plaintiff take nothing, and the defendants Berges and Swett recover their costs. In order to establish ownership in Hartwick, Berges and Swett called a bookkeeper of the Leach Motorcar Company, the original vendor of the machine, who testified that the books of that company showed a transaction had with Hartwick, commencing on August 18th and concluded on the 20th, whereby the company sold to Hartwick the automobile. This bookkeeper spoke only by the authority of the records in his possession, and had no direct part in the claimed transaction had with Hartwick. On the other hand, plaintiff produced a bill of sale of the machine made directly to him by the same motorcar company and dated August 20th. He supplemented that evidence with the sworn testimony that he (the plaintiff) was engaged in a brokerage business in the course of which he purchased automobiles for persons who desired them and made sale of the desired automobiles to such persons upon similar contracts as that which he exhibited and which he testified had been signed by Hartwick; that at about the date of the bill of sale Hartwick had requested that he purchase for him from the Leach Motorcar Company the automobile in question; and that he (the plaintiff) had, after agreeing upon the terms of the contract, made a bargain with the motorcar people and had actually received delivery of the automobile on the premises of the Leach Company, and had then turned it over to Hartwick under the contract already referred to. When his attention was called to the fact that it appeared that Hartwick had had dealings with the Leach Company regarding the same machine, he testified that he knew in fact that Hartwick had had negotiations affecting the same car; that Hartwick had turned in an old automobile on account and had given a check, which check was dishonored for lack of funds; and that the motorcar company had canceled the sale before delivery was made to Hartwick. The testimony of the plaintiff was in no wise contradicted, unless it may be said that the testimony of the bookkeeper of the Leach Company presented a contradiction as to the facts. The case, as we view it upon the evidence, presented no such conflict. Plaintiff produced Hartwick's written contract as to the making of which there was no denial whatsoever. By that contract it appeared that plaintiff had conditionally sold to Hartwick the automobile, reserving title in himself until all payments had been made. No witness was introduced to contradict plaintiff's statement as to the termination of the negotiations between Hartwick and the motorcar company looking to a sale of the machine to the former. Plaintiff's testimony was, as already noted, that that deal had fallen through because Hartwick's check given in part payment of the price was dishonored. The mere fact that upon the books of the Leach Company there appeared a record of a transaction with Hartwick was not inconsistent at all with the explanation given by plaintiff of that transaction. That the motorcar company did not cancel that record, or make an entry evidencing the nullity of the purported deal with Hartwick, indicates only that such was not their method of bookkeeping or that they had been neglectful in recording the facts showing the termination of the transaction. The evidence did not show facts sufficient to justify the legal conclusion that the plaintiff by any act of his became estopped from asserting his title and right to possession of the automobile as against subsequent purchasers thereof; neither did the court so find.

For the reasons given, it seems quite plain that the determination of the trial court cannot be sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

47 Cal. App. 745

RICHMOND v. DENNY et al. (Civ. 3393.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 26, 1920.)

1. Records ⟸17(2, 3)—Unless satisfied that destroyed record was as claimed, court may refuse to restore it.

On application to restore a lost or destroyed record in a divorce action, held that under St. 1906 (Ex. Sess.) p. 73, § 2, the trial court, not being fully satisfied that the provision for alimony, alleged to have been part of the original divorce decree, correctly expressed the order made, was justified in refusing to direct the restoration, particularly in view of petitioner's long delay, the application not being made until more than 30 years after the divorce, and also after the death of the petitioner's former husband.

2. Witnesses ⟸258—Testimony as to date of action based on record not made by witness inadmissible.

In an action to restore the record of a destroyed divorce judgment, it was not error to refuse to allow a witness to testify as to the date of the action from a record of a title and trust company, which was not made by the witness or under her direction.

3. Evidence ⟸320—Testimony based on hearsay properly excluded.

Testimony based on hearsay is properly excluded.

4. Witnesses ⊂⊃313—Tests showing that plaintiff had a remarkable memory properly excluded.

In an action for the restoration of a lost or destroyed record, tests showing that plaintiff had a remarkable memory were properly excluded.

5. Witnesses ⊂⊃164(2) — Conversation with deceased defendant in proceeding to restore lost record inadmissible.

In an action to restore the alimony provision of a lost or destroyed record in a divorce action, testimony as to a conversation between plaintiff and her former husband, since deceased, showing that he knew the divorce had been granted and the amount of alimony, etc., was properly excluded.

6. Appeal and error ⊂⊃1041(2)—Refusal to allow amendments to complaint not prejudicial.

Where the amended petition sufficiently presented the facts for restoration of a lost or destroyed record, the refusal to allow amendments was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Eva F. Richmond, formerly Eva F. Denny, against Helen V. Denny, executrix, and others. From the judgment refusing to restore the lost or destroyed record in accordance with plaintiff's application, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis P. Dunkley and George F. Owens, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jas. P. Sweeney and Frank J. Fontes, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment, or order, of the trial court refusing to restore a lost or destroyed record, in conformity with appellant's application for restoration of the records in the case of Eva F. Denny v. Orion O. Denny, a divorce action instituted by the appellant against her husband, since deceased, in 1884, the record of which was destroyed in the conflagration of April 18, 1906. The court found, in substance and restored, the complaint, the summons, service of which was made and default entered, the findings, and the decree of divorce. It refused to incorporate in the decree an alleged provision granting the plaintiff the sum of $250 per month as and for permanent alimony, for the maintenance and support of plaintiff alone, commencing September 1, 1884. The restoration of the decree of divorce as presented would have laid the foundation for a judgment in favor of the petitioner, which could have been made the basis of a claim against the estate of the deceased.

The lower court found that—

"In view of the impecunious condition of the defendant [the deceased husband] in said action at the time of said trial, as disclosed by the evidence herein, that no such amount as the sum of $250 per month was awarded to plaintiff for the support of herself alone; * * * that, at the time of the destruction of said records by fire, the said Eva F. Richmond (formerly Eva F. Denny) was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco; that, in failing to apply for the restoration of said record for more than 32 years since the date of said decree of divorce, and more than 10 years after the destruction of the records herein, and more than 6 months after the date of the death of said Orion O. Denny, the said Eva F. Richmond, formerly Eva F. Denny, was guilty of laches, in allowing an unreasonable length of time to elapse before the filing of said petition herein, thus rendering uncertain and unsatisfactory to the court the testimony offered as to the contents of the proposed record."

[1] The act providing for the restoration of lost or destroyed records provides, in part:

"If, upon such hearing the court shall be satisfied that the statements contained in such written application are true, the court shall make an order reciting what was the substance and effect of such lost, injured, or destroyed judgment." Stats. Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 73, § 2.

While the attorney of record for the plaintiff in the divorce action testified that, to the best of her recollection, the complaint prayed for, and the decree contained, a provision awarding $250 to the plaintiff as her permanent alimony, the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiff was that she testified, upon the trial of the divorce action, that her husband had no business or occupation; that his father put him in business in Seattle; that he did not "make good"; that she and her husband were living upon the bounty of defendant's father; that the largest amount that the defendant had ever received from his father, as an allowance, was $150 per month; and that these facts were true. There was therefore sufficient warrant for the court's action in holding the evidence unsatisfactory, and in refusing to include the alimony provision in the decree as restored, and ample justification for the remark of astonishment of the trial judge, the same one before whom the action was tried some 32 years ago, that he, "having heard that the man was only getting $150, ordered him to pay $250."

The lower court, not being fully satisfied from the evidence adduced in support thereof that the provision for alimony, alleged to have been a part of the original decree of divorce correctly expressed the order previously made by it, was justified in refusing to direct the restoration of the record, to the extent of including it. Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 16, 21, 43 Pac. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139. Regardless of the question of the effect of the long delay in making the application, and the strong inference thereby arising, the failure of the petitioner to satisfy the lower court as to the contents of the destroyed decree was fatal to her cause.

Certain errors complained of by the appellant may be briefly disposed of. The objection that the executrix and executors of the estate of the deceased defendant in the state of Washington were allowed to appear and defend the action was expressly waived in the court below, and no motion was made to strike out their answer, the verification of which, by the attorney for the defendant, complied with the requirements of the Code.

[2-4] It was not error to refuse to allow the witness, Mrs. Faltz, to testify regarding the date of the divorce action from a record of the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, which was not made by the witness, or under her direction. The evidence of the plaintiff that she knew her husband, the defendant, was served with summons in the divorce action in San Francisco was based on hearsay, and was properly excluded. Neither was it error to refuse to permit plaintiff's counsel to show by tests of her recollection that she had a remarkable memory.

[5] The appellant urges as one of the grounds of her appeal that the court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff to testify as to conversations had by her with the defendant subsequent to the divorce action, for the purpose of showing that he was served personally in the city and county of San Francisco, that he knew a divorce had been granted, and that he knew the amount of the permanent maintenance, and the other facts contained in the decree of divorce. On this ground the evidence was immaterial in a proceeding to restore the lost record, and was properly excluded, regardless of the other reasons urged by respondents in their objections, and which seem to have been favored by the lower court. The claim that the rejected testimony would have had some bearing on the matter of laches of the petitioner appears to be an afterthought. Such contention was not made in the lower court.

[6] The alleged facts as to the contents of the destroyed documents were fairly presented by the amended petition for the restoration, and the action of the court in not permitting certain minor amendments was not prejudicial to the rights of the petitioner. The motion for a new trial was properly denied. No statutory provision has been called to our attention permitting a retrial of the limited, and special, proceedings provided for the restoration of lost or destroyed records.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; WELCH, Judge pro tem.

(47 Cal. App. 533)

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. GOULD.

(Civ. 3310; L. A. 6176.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 18, 1920. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing, July 16, 1920.)

1. Abatement and revival ⊂=75(1)—Summons on original complaint need not be served on representative of deceased defendant after supplemental complaint showing death.

Where defendant died pending action, and supplemental complaint was filed, in which the substance of the original complaint was incorporated, together with appropriate allegations showing the death of the defendant, the appointment of the executor, and presentation of the claim, it was not necessary to serve the executor with the summons on the original complaint; the supplemental complaint stating a complete cause of action in itself, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1502.

2. Evidence ⊂=571(7)—Court may determine value of legal services, regardless of testimony by attorneys.

In an action on a note, the court, considering the work performed and shown in evidence, was authorized to form its own conclusion as to the value of services performed by plaintiff's attorney, notwithstanding testimony was given by experienced attorneys as to what in their opinion would be a reasonable fee.

3. Executors and administrators ⊂=456(5)—Costs may be taxed against executor personally.

In an action against an executor on a claim which he has refused to pay, it is within the discretion of the court to assess the court costs against the executor personally, without making any particular finding against mismanagement or bad faith.

4. Executors and administrators ⊂=434(5)—Presentation prerequisite to counterclaim.

A claim for damages and for services rendered an estate cannot be set up as a counterclaim in an action by the executor, where not presented against the estate.

5. Executors and administrators ⊂=111(1)—Attorney's fees are allowances, not charges.

Attorney's fees are not charges directly against the estate, but are allowances made to the administrator or executor.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

6. Executors and administrators ⊂=434(1)—Counterclaim for attorney's fees improper.

Matter of rendering legal services to an estate was one to be adjudicated in the probate proceedings, and could not be set up as a counterclaim in an action on a note by the executor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, special administrator of the estate of Samuel F. Baker, deceased, against James H. Blanchard. Defendant dying pending the action, Will D. Gould, his executor, was substituted as defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

Clara Shortridge Foltz and Will D. Gould, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thos. C. Ridgway and Chas. H. Brock, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought in the lifetime of James H. Blanchard to recover upon a promissory note made in favor of Samuel F. Baker, of whose estate plaintiff is the special administrator. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff, and the defendant, in his representative capacity as executor of the estate of Blanchard, appeals.

[1] Summons in the action was not served upon Blanchard, but after his death his executor was substituted as party defendant and a claim for the amounts sued for was regularly presented to such executor. The executor allowed the claim for the principal amount of the note and interest, and rejected the same as for any attorney's fees or costs. Supplemental complaint was then filed, in which the substance of the original complaint was incorporated, together with appropriate allegations showing the death of the maker of the note, the appointment of the executor, and presentation of the claim. The summons was issued upon this supplemental complaint and served upon the executor.

One of the points made by appellant is that he should have been served with the summons on the original complaint. However, the plaintiff appears to have proceeded in strict compliance with the law in such a case, and as the supplemental complaint stated a complete cause of action in itself, there was no necessity or requirement that any other summons than that served should have been used. Section 1502, Code Civ. Proc. In Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, at page 52, 40 Pac. 21, at page 22, the court said:

"Section 1502 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if an action is pending against a decedent at the time of his death, it must be presented to the executor or administrator as in other cases, 'and no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentations required.' Regularly, in such cases, a supplemental complaint should be filed, alleging the death and due presentation of the claim."

See Frazier v. Murphy, 133 Cal. 91, 65 Pac. 326.

In McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300, at page 313, the court declared:

"By filing the supplemental complaint and issuing a summons thereon, the original action became merged in the action as supplemented by the addition of parties and subject-matter, and the summons last issued should have been served by publication in order to clothe the court with jurisdiction of the persons of the absent defendants."

In the claim as presented to the executor the claimant set forth that—

"$300 is a reasonable attorney's fee therein, and in addition thereto claimant incurred costs of court and sheriff's fees amounting to $11.75."

As before noted, the executor allowed only the principal sum and interest due, and rejected the "balance" of the claim. The trial judge made an allowance of $105 for attorney's fees and included the $11.75 costs. The additional costs incurred in this action, which amounted to $8.35, were assessed against the executor personally. Appellant complains that under the evidence no attorney's fees should have been allowed; also that the item of costs last mentioned should not have been assessed against the executor personally.

The first contention is based upon the fact that it appeared in evidence that one of the attorneys for the plaintiff was a regular paid attorney of plaintiff corporation, and that therefore it appeared that plaintiff had not incurred by reason of this action any charge which it was not obligated to pay in the course of its own business. This contention, however, is not borne out by the evidence, because it is shown that the main counsel in the case was not connected with the plaintiff corporation, but was specially employed by plaintiff, and that plaintiff was liable to this counsel for such an amount as would compensate him for his services. This evidence was sufficient to sustain the allowance as made. On the last question, Prescott et al. v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755, is not at all decisive in favor of appellant's position. In this case it was particularly alleged in the complaint that a special attorney had been employed, and this attorney testified to different acts which he had performed in the conduct of the case from its commencement. The court, considering the work performed and shown in evidence, was authorized to form its own conclusion as to the value of such services, which were purely legal. Conner v. Blodget, 18 Cal. App. 787, 124 Pac. 733; Eastman v. Sunset Park Land Co., 35 Cal. App. 628, 170 Pac. 642.

[2, 3] Even though testimony had been given by experienced attorneys as to what, in their opinion, would be a reasonable fee, the court, under the circumstances of this case, might have disregarded such testimony. It is within the discretion of the court to assess these costs against the executor personally, without making any particular finding of mismanagement or bad faith. Meyer v. O'Rourke, 150 Cal. 177, 88 Pac. 706. The decision last cited also holds that, where the executor appeals in his representative capacity alone (as is the case here), he is not an aggrieved party in the sense that permits him to contest the allowance of a judge for costs entered against him personally.

[4, 5] By way of counterclaim, defendant charged that an attachment against the property of his testator was levied without cause or sufficient reason, and prayed for damages on that account in the sum of $1,000. By cross-complaint he asserted a charge against the estate of Baker for attorney's fees rendered by the deceased after the death of Baker and before the appointment of plaintiff as special administrator. The court properly refused to allow testimony to be given to sustain either alleged cause of action. This ruling in the first place was properly made, because it was not pretended that any claim had been presented against the estate of Baker covering the matters alleged. The presentation of such a claim was a necessary prerequisite to the bringing of suit. As to the attorney's fees, a further answer is suggested to the alleged cause of action made by the cross-complaint, to wit: That attorney's fees are not charges directly against an estate, but are allowances made to the administrator or executor. To this point respondent cites Briggs et al. v. Breen et al., 123 Cal. 657, 56 Pac. 633, 886. The findings made by the trial judge sufficiently disposed of the issues presented.

We find no error in the record sustaining appellant's plea for a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 1, is denied.

[6] As to the refusal of the trial court to allow testimony to sustain the claim of defendant's testator for attorney's fees for services rendered in the matter of the estate of Baker, if the services were rendered to some one authorized to bind the estate the action of the trial court is correct for the reason that the matter was one to be adjudicated in the probate proceedings.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.

48 Cal. App. 41

HENDERSON v. D. S. DENEHY MERCANTILE CO., Inc., et al. (Civ. 2174.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 2, 1920.)

1. Action ⇐38(1)—Complaint seeking goods under Bulk Sales Law held to state one cause of action.

Complaint by judgment creditor, seeking goods sold in violation of Bulk Sales Law (Civ. Code, § 3440), and setting forth the judgment and return of execution nulla bona, need not allege an attachment proceeding; but such allegation could do no harm, and, since but one cause of action is stated, a special demurrer for uncertainty, that it commingled different causes of action, is without merit.

2. Creditors' suit ⇐6, 13—Proceedings supplementary to execution not adequate remedy; resort to supplementary proceeding usually condition precedent.

Generally resort must be had to proceedings supplementary to execution under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 717–720, before a creditors' bill will lie; but where such proceedings do not afford an adequate remedy, as where there has been a void transfer of personal property, and the transferee claims the title, such proceedings do not supersede the remedy by action.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐182(1)—Fraudulent grantee of property personally liable.

A fraudulent vendee, who sells the property, is liable for its value to the creditors of the vendor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Action by J. S. Henderson against the D. S. Denehy Mercantile Company, Incorporated, and others. From a judgment in favor of the named defendant, after sustaining of demurrer to second amended complaint, and plaintiff declining to further amend, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to overrule demurrer.

J. T. Sharp, of Alturas, for appellant.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant Denehy Mercantile Company after a demurrer to a second amended complaint had been sustained and the plaintiff had declined to amend. The sole question on this appeal is therefore the sufficiency of said amended complaint. Appellant has made and presented a synopsis of said complaint, which we substantially adopt in the following statement:

On April 30, 1918, M. Hotchkiss & Sons, retail merchants of Lake City, Modoc county, Cal., while indebted to plaintiff's assignors in the sum of $1,197.91, sold and delivered their stock in trade, of the value of $3,000, to the defendants herein.

"That neither the said M. Hotchkiss & Sons nor said defendants, D. S. Denehy Mercantile Company, Incorporated, and John H. Hornback, or either, or any of them, either at least seven days before the consummation of said sale, or transfer, or assignment, or ever, or at all, recorded, or caused to be recorded, nor was there at any time recorded on behalf of either of said persons, or at all, in the office of the county recorder of the county of Modoc, state aforesaid, or any other place, a notice of said intended sale, transfer, or assignment, nor was there ever recorded a notice, or any notice, as provided in section 3440, division 4, part 2, of the Civil Code of the state of California; that no notice of said intended sale, transfer, or assignment, of any kind, character, or description, was filed, or recorded, or filed for record, either in the office of the county recorder of the county of Modoc, state aforesaid, where said stock in trade was situated, or at any other place."

On August 5, 1918, plaintiff brought suit on his assignors' claims, and on September 5, 1918, procured judgment thereon against Hotchkiss & Sons, and caused a writ of execution to be levied by way of garnishment on defendants in this action, and by way of direct levy on all other known property of said Hotchkiss & Sons in Modoc county, Cal. Defendants denied having any property belonging to Hotchkiss & Sons, and asserted themselves to be the owners of said stock in trade, and refused to turn over the same to the sheriff for application to satisfy the execution. Under the execution upon the other property the net receipts of the sheriff amounted only to $192.46. With this exception the writ was returned nulla bona, and as a result the plaintiff has an unsatisfied judgment for over $1,000 against Hotchkiss & Sons, who were and are insolvent, and have no other property out of which the judgment can be realized. After alleging in conclusion that the transfer of the stock in trade was made to the defendants by Hotchkiss & Sons with intent to defraud the latter's creditors, plaintiff prays judgment against the defendants for the delivery to him of the stock in trade, or sufficient thereof to satisfy his judgment against Hotchkiss & Sons, or, in case delivery cannot be made, for judgment against the defendants, and each of them, for the amount of his judgment against Hotchkiss & Sons, with interest, etc.

The defendant Denehy Mercantile Company interposed a demurrer upon the grounds: (a) That the complaint did not state a cause of action; (b) that several causes were improperly united; (c) that they were not separately stated; and (d) that the complaint was ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain. The action is clearly in the nature of a "creditors' bill," and we can see no valid objection to the complaint.

[1] We are satisfied that only one cause of action is attempted to be stated. The alleged facts show plaintiff to be a judgment creditor, who has attempted unavailingly by legal methods to satisfy his judgment, and then invokes the equitable power of the court to subject to his claim the property of the judgment debtor which has been fraudulently conveyed to another party. The allegations in reference to the garnishment and proceedings under execution have no legal relation to a separate cause of action, but are simply indicative of the efforts made by plaintiff to avoid the necessity for resorting to the equitable action. Indeed, it has been held in this state that such attempt must be made before the creditor is in a position to attack the fraudulent conveyance. In Bickerstaff v. Doub, 19 Cal. 109, 79 Am. Dec. 204, it was said:

"A fraudulent sale cannot be attacked by a creditor merely from the fact that he is a creditor, but only when he has a judgment establishing his debt, and an execution issued thereon, or has some process regularly issued, as in the case of attachment, authorizing a seizure of the property."

The complaint herein having set forth the judgment and the return of execution nulla bona, it was not necessary to allege the attachment proceeding, but, of course, it could do no harm. The special demurrer for uncertainty, etc., was based upon the same contention that different causes of action had been commingled, and it is equally without merit.

[2] As to the general demurrer, we may say that no material facts seem to be omitted from the complaint. The general rule is, no doubt, that, since the statute provides for proceedings supplementary to execution (sections 717 to 720, Code Civ. Proc.), resort must be had to such proceedings before a creditors' bill will lie. But if said statutory proceedings do not afford an adequate remedy, as where there has been a void transfer of personal property by the debtor and the transferee claims the title, said supplementary procedings do not supersede the remedy by action. Rapp v. Whittier, 113 Cal. 429, 45 Pac. 703; Phillips v. Price, 153 Cal. 146, 94 Pac. 617. This case falls clearly within the exception, as the complaint alleges:

"That said defendants * * * denied and now deny that they had, or have, any property in their possession belonging to said M. Hotchkiss & Sons, and assert the fact to be that said stock in trade belongs to them, the said defendants, and that they have title thereto."

[3] However, it is due respondent's counsel to say that they do not specifically make this objection. The only reason they advance for their position as to the insufficiency of the complaint is found in this statement:

"If it is an action against defendant, as the vendee of M. Hotchkiss & Sons, for purchasing the stock of goods without giving the notice required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, it fails to state a cause of action. The effect of that statute is simply to make such sale void and leave the title to the property in the vendor so far as the creditors are concerned. In other words, the plaintiff could have levied his execution or attachment upon these goods while they were in the hands of M. Hotchkiss & Sons, and this sale without notice did not prevent him from following the goods and levying upon them in the hands of the vendee of said M. Hotchkiss and Sons. The remedy of the plaintiff, if defendant purchased the stock of goods without giving the notice required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, was to follow and seize the goods."

The foregoing may be considered as a suggestion that the complaint should show the said steps to have been taken. So considered, it is sufficient to say that therein it clearly appears that just that course was pursued. It appears:

That the property was in the possession of said defendant D. S. Denehy Mercantile Company—the only defendant that has appeared in this court—and that the sheriff levied upon said property the writ of execution. "That after the levy of said writ of execution upon said defendant D. S. Denehy Mercantile Company, it neglected, failed, and refused, and still neglects, fails, and refuses, to deliver over to said sheriff, for the plaintiff, the aforesaid stock in trade, or any part thereof, so received by it as aforesaid from said M. Hotchkiss & Sons, or to pay to said sheriff the value thereof, or any part thereof, or to pay unto said sheriff the amount named in said writ of execution, or any part thereof." That the plaintiff did not take actual possession of the property was due to the action of the company in refusing to permit it, and, of course, it cannot attach any saving virtue to its own wrong.

It may be added that, if respondent company had not interfered, no doubt the sheriff would have taken the property into his possession and sold it to satisfy the demand, and this action would never have been brought. Nor do we think there is any merit in the claim that it does not appear but that the property at the time of the beginning of the action was in the possession of some other party, and, if so, the action would not lie against these defendants. But this is a mistake, both as to the fact and as to the law. The fact is alleged as follows:

"That at all times herein mentioned, and since the 30th of April, 1918, said defendant D. S. Denehy Mercantile Company, Incorporated, has had sole, exclusive, continuous, and unqualified possession of all the goods, wares, and merchandise belonging to said M. Hotchkiss & Sons, and now is the sole and exclusive and unqualified possessor of said stock of merchandise, and the whole thereof."

Moreover, if the company had transferred the property, the fraudulent vendee would still be liable for the value of the property to the creditors of the vendor. Swinford v. Rogers, 23 Cal. 234; 20 Cyc. p. 630.

We are satisfied that the ruling of the trial court was erroneous, and the judgment is therefore reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

48 Cal. App. 46

BOYD v. BEARCE et al. (Civ. 2168.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 2, 1920.)

1. Bills and notes ⊂⊃523—Evidence held to show fraud in procuring possession of note.

In an action on a note, evidence held sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that a fraud was perpetrated on plaintiff by the maker's codefendant, as alleged in the complaint, in securing possession of the note from plaintiff.

2. Bills and notes ⊂⊃155—Provision for acceleration of time of payment on default renders note nonnegotiable.

A note having a provision for acceleration of time of payment of the principal if any installment of interest was not paid was nonnegotiable, and any subsequent purchaser or holder is held to stricter accountability as to notice of any infirmity in the title of the one transferring it than in case of a negotiable instrument.

3. Bills and notes ⊂⊃354—Inadequacy of consideration evidence as to holder's good faith.

Inadequacy of consideration paid for a note is a circumstance proper to be considered in determining the question of good faith on the part of the person who takes it.

4. Bills and notes ⊂⊃354—Maker of nonnegotiable note must inquire into right of person offering to surrender note for half its face value.

Where the maker of a nonnegotiable note has a good deal of paper out, and a third party offers to sell him his own nonnegotiable note for less than half its face value, he is under duty to make some inquiry as to why the third party makes such concession, and under what circumstances he came into the possession of the instrument.

5. Bills and notes ⊂⊃525—Evidence held to show purchase of note by maker was not in good faith.

In an action on a nonnegotiable note delivered by the payee to a third party and by him sold to the maker for less than half its face value, evidence held to support the trial court's finding that the note was not purchased by the maker in good faith.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by Josephine P. Boyd against Byron A. Bearce and M. P. Fries. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant Bearce appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton (Clarence E. Fleming, of Stockton, of counsel), for appellant.

Harris & Hayhurst, of Fresno, and C. W. Miller, of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff by the superior court of San Joaquin county. The defendant Bearce was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $2,958.68, evidenced by his promissory note in that amount, dated April 22, 1916, bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Said note required the "interest to be paid annually, and, if not so paid as it becomes due, to bear interest at the same rate as said principal sum, but if default be made in the payment of interest, then the principal sum of this note shall immediately become due at the option of the holder hereof." The first year's interest on the note was not paid, and plaintiff's attorneys wrote to defendant Bearce on May 11, 1917, demanding payment of the interest, and again on May 18th following, notifying said defendant that the plaintiff elected to declare the whole of said note due and demanding payment of the sum. On May 22, 1917, defendant wrote to said attorneys that he had paid the note in full, having purchased the same from the defendant M. P. Fries on or about the 18th day of May, 1917. About the 15th day of May, 1917, defendant Fries called upon plaintiff for the purpose of inducing her to let him have the Bearce note for collection. After some conversation Mrs. Boyd delivered the note to Fries and he in return gave her his note for $1,600, and for security gave her 3,200 shares of the capital stock of Shasta National Copper Company and an agreement in writing as follows:

"Fresno, Cal., May 15, 1917.

"Mrs. Josephine P. Boyd, Fresno, Calif.—Dear Madam: In addition to the secured note given you this date, I hereby promise and agree to pay all money collected on the Byron A. Bearce note given me this day, over and above the sum of $1,600. M. P. Fries."

On May 15th Fries, at Fresno, called Mr. Bearce, at Stockton, by telephone and asked him what he would pay for the Boyd note. Mr. Bearce finally agreed to pay 50 cents on the dollar and wired Fries to that effect. Several days later Fries came to Stockton with the note and Mr. Bearce, according to his testimony, on seeing that the same was properly indorsed, gave Fries a check for $1,350 and credited him with $250 on account of money which Fries at that time owed to Mr. Bearce. On November 6, 1917, Fries sent Mrs. Boyd a check for $56 in payment of the sum semiannually due on his note for $1,600. This check was received by Mrs. Boyd and delivered to her attorney, Judge Harris, who on November 7th returned the same to Mr. Fries with the statement that Mrs. Boyd had not accepted Fries' note. About six months later Fries sent another check to Mrs. Boyd for $112, covering the first year's interest on his note for $1,600, and this was likewise returned to Fries. Thereafter Mrs. Boyd brought suit against Bearce for the full amount of the note, and the court gave her judgment for said full amount, together with $300 attorneys' fees. Fries was never served and did not appear at the trial. Plaintiff claimed in her complaint that Fries fraudulently obtained possession of said note and that defendant Bearce paid no consideration for it, and that at the time it was delivered to him he was familiar with the facts constituting the fraud consummated by Fries and that said defendant Bearce was not a purchaser in good faith. The court found that the fraud was perpetrated by Fries as alleged in the complaint, and, furthermore, as to Bearce, that it is not true that he paid no consideration for said note—

"and that it is not true that at the time it was delivered to said defendant Bearce he knew of the facts and circumstances of the loaning of said note to said defendant Fries by plaintiff, or the manner in which said defendant Fries came into the possession thereof, or that the plaintiff was the owner of said note, or entitled to the possession thereof, and in that behalf the court finds that the defendant Bearce paid for said note the sum of $1,350, and no more, and gave said defendant Fries in addition to said sum a credit for $250, and no more; that while defendant Bearce did not have actual knowledge of the facts and circumstances of said note as aforesaid and the manner in which said defendant Fries came into possession thereof, said defendant Bearce had sufficient information to put a reasonable person upon inquiry, and such inquiry would have disclosed the fact that said Fries got possession of said note through fraudulent representations; that said note was not indorsed by said plaintiff; that said Fries never had title to said note and never had right of possession thereof, and never had the right or authority to transfer or dispose of or to collect said note or any part thereof."

[1] As to the first of these considerations, it may be said that the finding of the court is abundantly supported. The testimony of plaintiff and her husband, or of either, is sufficient for that purpose. It may be admitted that the transaction as detailed by plaintiff presents a somewhat peculiar aspect, but her account is not inherently improbable, and we cannot say that the lower court was not justified in believing her. The trial judge, of course, had the advantages that go with a personal contact with the witnesses, and having been convinced that plaintiff was "an elderly woman, unskilled in the ways of the world, and apparently an easy prey," he had no difficulty in reconciling her eccentric conduct with the theory of her veracity and entire innocence of any wrongdoing. Indeed, the sufficiency of the showing as to this first branch of the case does not seem to be seriously disputed.

[2] The other question is more worthy of careful consideration. In viewing it, the trial judge in the first place had regard to the fact that the note, having a provision for acceleration of the time of payment of the principal if any installment of interest was not paid, was nonnegotiable. Wetzel v. Cale, 175 Cal. 208, 165 Pac. 692. Therefore, under the decisions, any subsequent purchaser or holder is held to a stricter accountability as to notice of any infirmity in the title of the one transferring it than in case of a negotiable instrument. This circumstance is of some moment in testing the sufficiency of the showing made to justify the court's conclusion that appellant was not an innocent purchaser.

[3] One fact to which great significance was attached is that appellant paid only about 42 cents on the dollar for his note. There is no evidence that he was insolvent or unable to pay the full amount due, and the circumstances that he was thus permitted to purchase it at such a discount would naturally excite the suspicions of an honest man, and should have led to an inquiry as to the circumstances under which Fries secured possession of the note. Inadequacy of consideration is, indeed, not conclusive, but the authorities generally hold that it is a circumstance proper to be considered in determining the question of good faith. It is so held in Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 220. The question was carefully considered by the Supreme Court of Tennessee in Oppenheimer v. Bank, 97 Tenn. 19, 36 S. W. 705, 33 L. R. A. 767, 56 Am. St. Rep. 778, wherein is quoted with approval section 291 of Tiedeman on Commercial Paper, from which we make the following extract:

"And it may be stated, subject to an explanation of terms, that an inadequate price always puts the person upon inquiry and may, certainly, along with other suspicious circumstances, charge him with notice of existing defenses. But every price is not inadequate which is less than the face value of the instrument purchased. Commercial paper of every kind has its commercial value, rising above or falling below par, according to the financial credit of the person liable on it. Only that price is inadequate which falls below the market value, and if the disproportion between the price paid and the market value be very great, it is fair and just to presume that the purchaser had reasonable grounds for suspecting fraud or some other defense to the instrument. Each case must, therefore, stand on its own merits. One-half the face value may, under some circumstances, be a grossly inadequate price, while, under different circumstances, it may be greatly in excess of what the instrument is worth on the market."

[4] Herein, there is no direct evidence of the market value of said note, but it is fair to assume that, if appellant had been insolvent or unable to pay his debts in full, he would have made some showing to that effect. He did testify that a good deal of his paper was out, but he did not claim that he was financially embarrassed in any way. Under such circumstances, where a third party offers to sell to the maker the latter's own note for less than one-half its face value, is it not just to exact of him some inquiry as to why the vendor makes such concession and under what circumstances he came into possession of the instrument? We think the transaction would naturally excite the suspicion of the average man, and his impulse would be to make inquiry of the payee of the note. But, as far as the record shows, appellant did not even question Fries as to any of the circumstances connected with his possession or asserted ownership of the instrument. This conduct was rather singular upon the theory of the good faith of appellant.

Moreover, there are other circumstances in the case "of such a strong and pointed character as necessarily to cast a shade upon the transaction and to put the holder on inquiry," adopting the language of Judge Story in his work on Promissory Notes, § 197,

Among these is the fact that appellant had reason to believe that Fries was impecunious. Appellant had been compelled to sue him for a debt and had recovered judgment, but had not been able to satisfy it. At the time of this transaction Fries owed him about $1,500. It also appears that Fries by his conduct in selling "Tidewater" stock had discredited himself with appellant, and it seems improbable that with this relation existing between the two appellant should have calmly taken it for granted that Fries had become the bona fide holder of the note.

Again, appellant testified that Mrs. Boyd had promised him that she would not transfer the note, and two or three days before said transaction, with Fries appellant received from Mrs. Boyd's attorneys a letter containing the following statements:

"Mrs. Josephine T. Boyd has handed to us your note dated April 22, 1916, for the principal sum of $2,598.68, payable to her at the city of Fresno, on or before three years after date. The interest on this note fell due on April 22d of this year, but she has not received the same. She advised us that she wrote you a letter a short time before it was due, requesting payment, but that she never received any reply. Will you please send this interest to us for Mrs. Boyd?"

These circumstances would naturally inspire caution in considering the proposition of a stranger to sell said note for less than 50 per cent. of its face value.

[5] Moreover, appellant was contradicted in some material respects and, in a legal sense, this would justify the trial court in discrediting his testimony. The fact also that he did not attempt to take the deposition of Fries in corroboration of his own testimony and his manner upon the stand as a witness may have been deemed significant by the trial judge. We mention the foregoing, not as indicative of any opinion of our own as to the credibility or good faith of appellant, but to demonstrate that the case is one falling within the familiar rule as to the province of the trial court in determining the probative force of the evidence.

It is suggested by appellant that the decision is unjust, because thereby respondent secures the full payment of her note from appellant in addition to having the note of Fries for $1,600. However, the circumstances are such as to create the suspicion, if not to justify the conviction, that said note of Fries, together with the stock pledged to secure its payment, is altogether worthless. At any rate, respondent offered to surrender them to appellant and is willing to do so now.

As we view the record, we think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: HART, J.; NICOL, Presiding Judge, pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 29

KEELER v. BAIRD. (Civ. 3345.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 1, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 30, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators ⇐437(4)—Action on claim after dismissal of former as premature held not barred by limitations.

Where plaintiff's action to establish a claim against the estate of her father, which she elected, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1496, to treat as rejected, was dismissed as premature because the writing on which it was based provided for payment on distribution, a subsequent action brought six months after distribution was not barred by section 1498, requiring action on a rejected claim to be begun within three months after notice of rejection; the fact that plaintiff in the first action elected to treat the claim as rejected not starting the running of limitations, as the action was premature.

2. Appeal and error ⇐842(2)—Conclusion that former action on claim started limitations one of law.

A conclusion of the trial court that a former action on the claim against the estate of decedent started the running of limitations is one of law rather than fact, and where erroneous may be disregarded and corrected by the decision of the appellate court on the facts found.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by Florence Gail Keeler against Mary Frances Baird, as executrix of the estate of B. M. Baird, deceased. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Geo. Cosgrave, of Fresno, for appellant.

W. P. Thompson and J. P. Bernhard, both of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action instituted by the plaintiff against the said defendant, as executrix of the estate of B. M. Baird, deceased, to establish a claim against said estate.

The facts out of which said claim arose maye be briefly summarized as follows: One Alfred Baird was for many years a resident of Fresno county, where he had amassed a considerable amount of property, chiefly in the form of real estate. Several years before his death, which occurred in 1914, he undertook to make a division of certain of his lands between his two children, Florence Gail Keeler, the plaintiff in this action, and B. M. Baird, her brother. In his effort to accomplish this purpose he caused several deeds to be made and placed in escrow, to be delivered at his death. In the deed to plaintiff there was included certain land which he afterward determined to convey to his son, B. M. Baird, and he therefore requested the plaintiff to execute a deed back to him of said particular piece of land. She complied with this request by executing a quitclaim deed on September 24, 1907, conveying the land in question to her father, who on the same day conveyed the same to B. M. Baird, his son. At the same time and as a part of the same transaction Alfred Baird required his said son to execute an agreement in writing by which, in consideration of the conveyance of said land to him, B. M. Baird agreed to pay to the plaintiff "out of his share of his father's and mother's estate, when the same is distributed to him, money or property of the value of $2,000 in lieu of said land." Later on Alfred Baird changed his mind in regard to the deeds which had been placed in escrow, and withdrew and destroyed them, and thereupon made a will by which he divided the remaining portion of his property between the plaintiff and his son, B. M. Baird. By the terms of this will, and apparently having in mind the fact that the plaintiff retained the aforesaid agreement, Alfred Baird directed in his said will that the sum of $2,000 should be paid to his said son; the same being in excess of the portion coming to his daughter under the will. Alfred Baird died on November 22, 1914; his said will was duly offered and admitted to probate, but before the distribution of his estate thereunder his son, B. M. Baird, also died, and the defendant herein, Mary Frances Baird, was appointed executrix of his estate. Plaintiff presented to the latter her claim against the estate of B. M. Baird, deceased, on May 3, 1916, which claim was founded upon the aforesaid written agreement. The executrix took no action in regard to this claim in the way of either allowing or rejecting it. On February 18, 1918, plaintiff commenced an action to compel the allowance of the claim, basing her said suit upon her alleged election to consider the claim rejected. At the time of the institution of this suit distribution had not been made of the estate of Alfred Baird, and said action, being therefore determined on a demurrer to the complaint to have been prematurely brought, was dismissed by the plaintiff. The decree of distribution was entered in the estate of Alfred Baird on March 29, 1918, and thereafter and on October 28, 1918, the plaintiff commenced the present action.

Among other defenses, the defendant pleaded that said action was barred by the provisions of section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Upon the trial of the cause the court made its findings in favor of the plaintiff so far as the facts attending the creation and presentation of said claim are concerned; but the trial court further found that the plaintiff, by the institution of her former action upon said claim, had thereby elected to treat her claim as having been rejected on February 18, 1918, the date of the institution of said former action; and the court therefore concluded and found that the present suit, not having been commenced until October 28, 1918, was barred by the provisions of section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment was accordingly rendered in the defendant's favor, and from that judgment this appeal is taken.

The sole contention of the appellant upon this appeal is that the trial court was in error in its conclusion that this action was barred by the provisions of said section of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In order to determine this question several sections of said Code, with relation to the presentation and rejection of claims and to institution of actions to establish the same, must be considered and construed.

By the terms of section 1496, Code of Civil Procedure, when a claim has been presented to the executor or administrator of an estate he must allow or reject it, and his allowance or rejection thereof must be indorsed upon said claim with the day and date thereof, and the claim bearing this indorsement must be presented to the judge for approval, and if approved by him must be filed with the clerk. The said section further provides that—

In case "the executor or administrator refuse or neglect to indorse such allowance or rejection for ten days after the claim has been presented to him, or if the judge refuse or neglect to indorse such allowance or rejection for ten days after the claim has been presented to him, such refusal or neglect may, at the option of the claimant, be deemed equivalent to a rejection on the tenth day."

Section 1498, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that—

"When a claim is rejected either by the executor or administrator, or a judge of the superior court, written notice of such rejection shall be given by the executor or administrator to the holder of such claim or to the person filing or presenting the same, and the holder must bring suit in the proper court against the executor or administrator within three months after the date of service of such notice if the claim be then due, or within two months after it becomes due; otherwise the claim shall be forever barred."

[1] It was the conclusion of the trial court, as expressed in its findings, that the institution by the plaintiff of her former action to establish her said claim against the estate of B. M. Baird, deceased, constituted an election on her part to consider said claim as having been rejected by the executrix of said estate, and that she was bound by such election, notwithstanding her dismissal of said former action after the trial court had ruled upon demurrer that the same had been prematurely brought. We are unable to agree with this conclusion. It would seem to be clear from the other findings of the court that said first action was prematurely brought, for the reason that at the time of its institution there had been no distribution to B. M. Baird or his successors in interest of his share in his father's estate, and hence that the claim of the plaintiff was, by the express terms of the writing upon which it was predicated, not then due. Miller v. Miller, 171 Cal. 269, 152 Pac. 728. By the dismissal of the action thus prematurely brought, the plaintiff, in our opinion, placed herself in the same position as though such action had not been commenced, and, in substance and effect, by the dismissal of said action withdrew her option to consider her claim as having been rejected by the executrix of said estate. While no authority has been presented on either side directly construing those provisions of the foregoing sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, which deal with the election of the claimant to deem a claim which has not been acted upon by the executor or administrator of an estate as having been rejected, we think a clear analogy exists between the option which a claimant against an estate may exercise in that regard, and the option which a creditor in an obligation may have to consider the whole sum named in said obligation to be due upon the debtor's failure to pay an installment of the principal or interest thereon. In such a case it has been held that the dismissal of the creditor's action upon the exercise of such option amounted to a withdrawal and waiver of the option. Moore v. Russell, 133 Cal. 297, 65 Pac. 624, 85 Am. St. Rep. 166; Cal. Safe & Loan Society v. Culver, 127 Cal. 107, 59 Pac. 292.

The same principle would seem to be applicable to claims against an estate. The language of section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure lends strength to this conclusion, since it is therein expressly provided that the time within which a claimant must bring suit against the executor or administrator of an estate to establish such claim is three months after the date of service of the written notice of the rejection of the claim, if the claim be then due, or within two months after it becomes due; otherwise the claim shall be forever barred. The clear intendment of this section is that it is the giving of said notice of the rejection of the claim by the executor or administrator which sets in motion the limitation of the time within which an action must be brought to establish the claim, and that the option which the claimant has under the preceding section of said Code to consider his claim as having been rejected for the purpose of enabling him to bring an action thereon is not such as in the event of the dismissal of such action shall operate to set in motion the provisions of the later section, so as to bar said claim in the event that no action to establish the same is not commenced within the periods named therein.

[2] The conclusion of the trial court embraced in its findings, to the effect that the plaintiff's institution of the former action was to be deemed such a rejection of the claim as to set the statute in motion, was in the nature of a conclusion of law rather than a finding of fact; and, that being so, this court is in a position, in disagreeing with this conclusion, to consider the other findings in the case sufficient to sustain a judgment in the plaintiff's favor without a retrial of this cause.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment herein be reversed, and that the trial court be and is hereby directed to render and enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the action.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KOFORD, Judge pro tem.

47 Cal. App. 623

PYPER v. JENNINGS, Justice of Peace. (Civ. 3332.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1920.)

1. Discovery ⟸97(6)—Proof precedent to requiring delivery up of private paper.

It is a condition precedent to the right of a court to require a person to deliver up a private book or paper for examination that it be made to appear by clear and unequivocal proof that the book or document contains evidence relevant and material to the issues before the court, and that the precise book, paper, or document containing such evidence has been so designated or described that it may be identified.

2. Libel and slander ⟸54—Defendant must justify in sense in which innuendo explains words.

Where the defendant in a libel case sets up the truth as a defense, he must justify the words in the sense in which the innuendo explains them, assuming, of course, that the words are capable of the meaning imputed to them by the innuendo.

3. Libel and slander ⟸94(1)—Plea of justification must be as broad as charge.

The general rule is, in a libel case, that the plea of justification must be as broad as the charge, and in point of law must be identical with it.

4. Evidence ⟸106(5)—Witnesses ⟸37(4)—Reputation not to be established by proof of specific misconduct.

Reputation, or, as it is sometimes called, character, is a fact to be proved by testimony of witnesses who know it, and not by proof of specific instances of misconduct which may or may not have affected it injuriously.

5. Libel and slander ⟸86(2)—Innuendo held not justified.

A publication concerning mayor of city, "They were surprised you ever put him in office, dumfounded at his re-election, and amazed beyond measure that you continue to put up with him," did not justify an innuendo to the effect that he was not worthy of the confidence of the electors.

6. Libel and slander ⟸54—Charge of bad reputation rather than dishonesty.

An article concerning the mayor of San Diego that he might obtain 100 citizens from Tia Juana (in Mexico) to stand by him to suppress crime, was a charge that the reputation of the mayor in such place was such that the dissolute characters there would stand by him in what they would believe to be a simulated effort to suppress crime, and the defendant could not justify by proving specific misconduct on the part of the mayor.

7. Libel and slander ⟸86(2)—Innuendo held not justified by language used.

A statement in writing that the mayor had a bad reputation among certain persons, and that the chief of police of city deserved credit for having control of his temper and must be worthy of the confidence expressed on all sides, did not justify an innuendo that the mayor was not worthy of such confidence.

8. Libel and slander ⟸86(1)—Innuendo may explain but cannot enlarge charge.

The defendant in a libel action may justify the substance of a publication in the sense in which the innuendo explains it, if it explains it fairly, but the import of the words used in the publication cannot be enlarged, extended, or changed by the innuendo, and, if it is, the innuendo, to the extent that it is not borne out by defamatory words will be rejected as surplusage.

9. Contempt ⊂⊃63(4)—Order punishing witness for refusing to produce document must recite facts showing pertinency.

An order punishing a witness for contempt for refusing to produce a book or other document must recite the facts that constitute the contempt and confer jurisdiction upon the court to make the order, and for this purpose must recite facts showing that the document contains evidence pertinent and material to the issue to be tried.

10. Libel and slander ⊂⊃110(3)—Evidence of misuse of trust funds inadmissible to prove charge of gambling.

Where the defamatory words in a libel case charged one with the gambling habit, the truth of the charge could not be proved by evidence that libeled person had misused trust funds.

Application by Alexander C. Pyper for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to Lacy D. Jennings, Justice of the Peace in and for the Township of San Diego, County of San Diego, State of California, to restrain enforcement of a judgment of contempt. Application granted.

Morganstern & Dorn, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Curtis Hillyer and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain respondent, justice of the peace for the township of San Diego, from enforcing a judgment of contempt rendered by him in an action for criminal libel then pending in his court and entitled "The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. The San Diego Sun Publishing Company, a Corporation, and R. A. Lacy, Defendants."

The criminal action, in the course of which the contempt proceedings arose, is based upon a defamatory article alleged to have been published of and concerning Louis J. Wilde, mayor of the city of San Diego. The defendants in the criminal action undertook to prove the truth of the libelous charge. For that purpose they sought to cause to be produced in court certain books in the possession of the petitioner here. These books, so it is claimed, show the payments into and disbursements from a certain trust fund, under the control of Wilde, known as the Community Oil Well Fund. As a basis for their claim that the books contain evidence relevant and material to the issues presented by the complaint in the action for criminal libel, the defendants in that action contended, as does the respondent here, that the entries in the books show that Mayor Wilde was not a man of integrity, in this, that they disclose that he had applied some of the moneys in the Community Oil Well Fund to uses foreign to the purposes for which that trust fund had been created. The fund is one in which private persons only are interested.

While a witness in the justice's court, petitioner was ordered by respondent to produce the books. Upon his refusal to comply with that order petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt of court and sentenced to imprisonment in the city jail for one day.

Respondent has demurred to the petition, and, at the same time, has filed a written answer. It was stipulated at the hearing that, in so far as the averments of the answer are allegations of fact and not mere conclusions of law, its averments are true. We therefore deem it not only the more expeditious course, but proper, to dispose of the case on its merits, and, for that purpose, to consider the case in its entirety—the facts averred in the answer as well as those alleged in the petition for the writ.

[1] It is the established rule that, as a condition precedent to the right of a court to require a person to deliver up a private book or paper for examination, it must be made to appear, by clear and unequivocal proof: (1) That the book or document contains evidence relevant and material to the issues before the court; and (2) that the precise book, paper, or document, containing such evidence, has been so designated or described that it may be identified. Ex parte Clarke, 126 Cal. 235, 58 Pac. 546, 46 L. R. A. 835, 77 Am. St. Rep. 176; Kullman, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 15 Cal. App. 276, 114 Pac. 589; Funkenstein v. Superior Court, 23 Cal. App. 663, 139 Pac. 101. For the purpose of this decision we shall assume that, by evidence properly adduced in the justice's court during the trial of the criminal action, the books themselves, and so much of their contents as the defendants in that action sought to introduce in furtherance of their declared purpose to show that Wilde had improperly used certain moneys of the Community Oil Well Fund, were identified with all the particularity required for compliance with the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures. Under the rule just adverted to, however, there was this further requisite: It was essential, as a condition precedent to the right of the justice's court to require petitioner to deliver the books up for examination, that it be made to appear, by clear and unequivocal proof, that the books contain evidence relevant and material to the issues in the criminal action. In our opinion the entries in the books, assuming that they do show that at times Mayor Wilde misused or misapplied certain of the moneys of the trust fund, are not material to any issue in the criminal action. Conceding to the defendants in that action all that they there claimed respecting the nature of the book entries, the entries, nevertheless, would not tend to prove the truth of any of the defamatory matters in the alleged libelous article as charged in the criminal complaint.

The alleged libelous article, published in the San Diego Sun, a newspaper printed and published in that city, is as follows:

"Editor Sun: Having come from a northern city where one of your city officials is only too well known, it was with considerable amusement that I read an article by him in a morning paper some few days ago. Hearing the public on every hand referring to same as another 'Brain Storm,' proved San Diegans are 'next,' but truly it is said your northern neighbors are not aware of this. They were surprised you ever put him in office, dumfounded at his re-election and amazed beyond measure that you continue to put up with him. San Diego must be virtuous if patience is anything to go by; but there comes a time when patience ceases to be a virtue. According to his own statements in the Sunday paper the 100 citizens didn't show up. Why doesn't he go to Tia Juana? He might get 100 there to stand by him, even though it is said there is honor among thieves. The ungentlemanly remarks and foul language he allows to come in print above his name must disgust even the worst. Although hearing the best reports of the San Diego police department, and personally knowing of some very efficient work done by same, I can speak only in terms of the department. If, however, your police chief is anything like your mayor described him he must be Wilde's twin brother, for he surely drew his own picture to perfection. What I can't understand is that the alleged ungovernable temper of your chief hasn't let loose and made a large and rather dirty grease spot in your city hall. He surely deserves credit for having control of that ungovernable temper (which is more than we can say of some folks), and must be worthy the confidence in him which I can find expressed on all sides. I do feel, however, your mayor is to be pitied rather than censured, but it is a shame that your lovely city must be the goat and suffer such humiliations. You are laughed at, but what can you expect with your jazz cat gambles and brain storms? You have an exceptional council; get rid of your Wild mayor and San Diego will take her place in the top ranks. Yours, from the north, R. A. Lacy, Gen. Del."

While this defamatory article may have a tendency to expose Mayor Wilde to public ridicule, it will be noticed that nowhere does it make any direct charge of dishonesty—certainly none of the character sought to be proved by the books that petitioner refused to produce—though, of course, it is possible that some passages of the letter published in the Sun may have a covert meaning, which, read in the light of such extrinsic circumstances as formerly it was the office of the inducement to narrate, may be susceptible of a construction imputing to the mayor dishonesty in financial transactions. But, unless, by way of innuendo, there is some averment in the criminal complaint that properly places such a construction upon the words of the defamatory article, the defendants in the criminal action cannot adduce evidence of any specific misappropriation of trust funds.

[2] The rule is that where the defendant in a libel case sets up the truth as a defense, he must justify the words in the sense in which the innuendo explains them, assuming, of course, that the words are capable of the meaning imputed to them by the innuendo. Snyder v. Tribune Co., 161 Iowa, 671, 143 N. W. 519; note to Hutchins v. Page, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140; 25 Cyc. 460; Newell on Slander and Libel, p. 793. In Snyder v. Tribune Co., supra, the court said:

"A proper plea of justification either expressly or impliedly admits the truth of the innuendo [for the purpose of the justification]; and, where the defendant sets up the truth, he must justify the words in the sense in which the innuendo explains them, unless the words used in the innuendo enlarge the natural and ordinary sense of the language or otherwise place a false construction thereon."

The complaint in the action for criminal libel, after setting forth the libelous article in hæc verba, proceeds, by the averment of what the pleader deemed to be appropriate innuendoes, to explain certain passages by alleging the meaning that the defendants intended to convey to readers thereof. It is claimed by respondent that these innuendoes give to the libelous article such a meaning that the defendants in that action, for the purpose of proving the truth of the libelous charges, may rightfully show any specific act of dishonesty on the part of Mayor Wilde, and that, for that purpose, the books showing Wilde's disbursements from the Community Oil Well Fund were admissible in evidence.

Taking up now the particular innuendoes relied upon by respondent to justify his order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt: By way of innuendo, the complaint in the criminal action alleges that—

"By and through the said letter above set forth the said defendants then and there intended to convey to any and all persons who read the same, by the use of the words 'where one of your city officials is only too well known,' that he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was, in the said northern city, unfavorably known, and was not entitled to the respect of those with whom he was acquainted in said northern city because he, the said Louis J. Wilde, lacked integrity."

We have italicized the words of this innuendo upon which respondent particularly relies.

[3, 4] The words used in the alleged defamatory article, "a northern city where one of your city officials is only too well known," at most can import no more than that among the inhabitants, or some of them, of a city north of San Diego, Mayor Wilde bears an unsavory reputation. An odious reputation in some unidentified northern city is therefore the gist or sting of the libelous charge. The defamatory charge implies no particular act committed by Wilde. Nor does it impute a reputation for the commission of any particularly improper, immoral, or criminal act; but only that, in the estimate of the public in some unnamed city, his reputation is bad —that his good name, credit, or honor, as derived from public opinion in that northern city, is to some extent impaired. The general rule is that the plea of justification must be as broad as the charge, and, in point of law, must be identical with it. Here, in order to justify, by proof of the truth of the words "a northern city where one of your city officials is only too well known," it would be necessary to show that in the northern city referred to by the author of the article, or which the readers understood to be the city referred to, Mayor Wilde's general reputation is not good. Reputation, or, as it is sometimes called, character, is a fact to be proved by the testimony of witnesses who know it, not by the proof of specific instances of misconduct which may or may not have affected it injuriously. Every man is bound, and is supposed to be always prepared, to answer and repel imputations upon his general reputation whenever that reputation is by the rules of law assailable in court, but not to answer specific charges of misconduct where no specific charge is imputed by the defamatory article of which he complains. Particular instances of misconduct on the part of a plaintiff in a civil action for libel, or of the complaining witness in an action for criminal libel, have no necessary connection with his reputation. It may not be known or believed that such specific acts of misconduct have in fact occurred, and so their occurrence may have produced no effect upon the public mind, and, consequently, have nothing to do with the good or bad reputation of the person libeled. Here the defamatory article merely implies that San Diego's mayor has acquired, in some unnamed community, a bad reputation, or at least that his general reputation in such community is, to some extent, impaired. But that is a matter that rests upon public opinion, and may exist without any just foundation. It is the existence of the public opinion, and not the foundation on which that opinion rests, that is the fact put in issue. There is therefore no necessary connection between any specific act of misappropriation of trust funds, such as may be disclosed by the entries in these private books of account, and a loss of Wilde's good reputation in some unidentified city where, it is charged, he "is only too well known." The case of Swift v. Dickerman, 31 Conn. 285, 293, is somewhat instructive in this connection. It was held in that case that where the libelous article reflects upon the general professional reputation of a physician, evidence of specific instances of mistakes in his treatment of his patients is not admissible. The general line of reasoning pursued by the Connecticut court in that case is applicable here. See, also, Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 347, 365. For these reasons we hold that the order directing petitioner to produce the books of the Community Oil Well Fund was not warranted by anything alleged in the innuendo that seeks to give point to the charge that Mayor Wilde "is only too well known" in the northern city referred to by the author of the defamatory article.

[5] It next is sought to justify the contempt order by this averment of the criminal complaint, alleged by way of innuendo:

"By the use of the words 'They were surprised you ever put him in office, dumfounded at his re-election, and amazed beyond measure that you continue to put up with him,' it was intended to convey to the persons who read said letter that said northern neighbors could not understand how the people of San Diego would re-elect said Louis J. Wilde to the office of mayor of the said city of San Diego, and that he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was not entitled to be re-elected, nor was he worthy of the confidence of the electors of said city."

It is the last clause of this averment, italicized by us, upon which respondent relies to justify his order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. But this innuendo, if respondent's interpretation of it be accepted as that intended by the pleader, is much too broad. As construed by respondent to justify his order to produce the books, this part of the innuendo gives to the language of the defamatory article a forced and unnatural meaning. The language of the alleged libelous article is:

"They [your northern neighbors] were surprised you ever put him [Mayor Wilde] in office, dumfounded at his re-election and amazed beyond measure that you continue to put up with him."

These words, read in the light of their context, can only mean that the "northern neighbors," whoever they may be, by reason of Mayor Wilde's reputation as they know it, were surprised, dumbfounded, and amazed. It may well be that in the opinion of these northern neighbors, and solely because of the reputation that he bears among them, Wilde was not entitled to be re-elected and is not now worthy the confidence of the electors of San Diego. But this is not tantamount to a charge that Mayor Wilde, in fact, was not entitled to be re-elected, or that, in fact, he is not worthy the confidence of his San Diego constituents. The gist or sting of the charge is that Mayor Wilde bears a poor reputation among the members of some northern community—that his reputation among them is so poor that they were surprised that the electors of San Diego put him in office, etc. So here again, the fact put in issue is the state of the public mind in some unnamed northern city. The truth of the charge can only be shown by direct evidence of Mayor Wilde's general reputation for trustworthiness in the particular northern city that the author of the defamatory article had in mind when he wrote the letter to the San Diego Sun. Such evidence can be given only by those who can testify that they know Wilde's reputation in the northern city referred to by the author of the article. To give to that part of the innuendo italicized by us—the part upon which respondent relies to justify his order—an interpretation consonant with the obvious meaning of the defamatory words sought to be explained thereby, it must be construed as meaning that San Diego's northern neighbors, because of what they believe Wilde to be, could not understand how or why he was entitled to be re-elected, or how or why he should be worthy the confidence of the electors of San Diego.

[6] It is alleged in the complaint in the criminal action, by way of innuendo, that by the words "according to his own statements in the Sunday paper the 100 citizens didn't show up. Why doesn't he go to Tia Juana? He might get 100 there to stand by him, even though it is said there is honor among thieves"—the defendants in the criminal action intended to convey to readers of the article that Mayor Wilde had been unable to obtain 100 citizens of San Diego to assist him in suppressing crime in that city, and that therefore he should go to Tia Juana, Mexico, where he would find 100 men who might be willing to assist him in an apparent effort to suppress crime in San Diego, but that they would not make any bona fide effort to suppress crime, because they are men of dissolute character and would be in sympathy with Mayor Wilde and would be guided by him in anything he undertook, "because of the fact that he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was not a citizen of good morals or integrity, or good character, and was not acting in good faith in his declared purpose to suppress crime in San Diego." The sting of the libelous words, as explained by this innuendo, is that Mayor Wilde's reputation among the habitués of Tia Juana is such that they, or 100 of them, would be willing to stand by him in a simulated effort to suppress crime, and would be guided by him in anything he undertook. It is what the 100 denizens of Tia Juana think of Wilde, and not what he actually is, that will determine their attitude toward him and his official conduct. He may or may not be honest in fact. But whether he be in fact a man of integrity or the reverse, the 100 dissolute characters of Tia Juana will be guided by him because, and only because, of what they believe him to be.

The publishers of the defamatory article, in almost every instance throughout their attack upon Wilde, have screened their assault behind either a direct or a veiled reference to Wilde's reputation among persons of a certain community or among those of a certain class. First, there is the reference to Wilde's reputation among the people of a northern city—San Diego's northern neighbors. Now there is a reference to the dissolute characters of Tia Juana, and their attitude toward Wilde—based, necessarily, upon what they think of him. By the defamatory words which we at present are considering, the publishers of the article screen their attack with the veiled implication that Wilde's reputation among the habitués of Tia Juana is such that they believe that he is "not a citizen of good morals or integrity, or of good character, and is not acting in good faith in his declared purpose to suppress crime," and that because they so believe they will be willing to stand behind him and be guided by him. This, manifestly, is the meaning intended. For obviously the 100 frequenters of Tia Juana will be guided by what they believe Wilde to be, not what he may in fact be. Therefore it is his reputation among the men of Tia Juana that Wilde must come prepared to defend, not his innocence of any and every specific charge of dishonesty that defendant may unexpectedly spring at the trial. We are not to be understood as holding that where some specific act of wrongdoing is the sting of the charge the defendant in a libel action cannot justify by proof of the truth of such specific act of misconduct, even though such wrongful act be covertly conveyed to the readers of the article as an implicit concealed in some reference to the reputation of the person libeled. What we do hold is that where, as here, the libelous article, without imputing any specific act of dishonesty, seeks to blacken the good name of the object of the defamatory words by vague references to some ill-defined opprobrious opinion others have of him, without conveying to the readers any sharply edged delineation of that opinion, the defendant can only justify by direct proof of bad, or at least impaired, reputation in the community or among the class of persons referred to in the defamatory article.

[7, 8] It is alleged in the criminal complaint that, by the use of the words "he [the chief of police] surely deserves credit for having control of that ungovernable temper (which is more than we can say of some folks), and must be worthy the confidence in him which I find expressed on all sides," it was intended to convey to readers of the article that the chief of police of San Diego had proper control of his temper and was worthy the confidence of the people of San Diego, but that Wilde "was not worthy of such confidence." This averment also is relied upon by respondent to justify his order directing petitioner to produce the books. But the innuendo, in so far as it undertakes to explain the libelous words by ascribing to them the meaning that Wilde is not worthy the confidence of the people of San Diego, is not supported by the libelous language that it seeks to explain. The innuendo improperly enlarges the plain and unambiguous meaning of the words of the article. The words of the defamatory article are: "He [the chief of police] * * * must be worthy the confidence in him which I find expressed on all sides." This language cannot be made to carry the covert charge that Mayor Wilde does not deserve the confidence of the people of San Diego. An innuendo seeking to give to the words of the published article any such meaning enlarges the natural and ordinary sense of the words. Without doubt, the ascription to one person of some particular virtue may be made in such a manner as to imply that another, at whom the blow is indirectly aimed, is lacking in that virtue. But here the libelous article affords no basis for the claim that any such contrasting of the two men was intended. It is made sufficiently apparent from the context that praise of San Diego's chief of police cannot be regarded as an indirect reflection upon the mayor. At any rate, the praise of the former cannot be regarded as carrying the imputation that the latter has forfeited his title to confidence by reason of any act of dishonesty. The defendant in a libel action may justify the substance of the publication in the sense in which the innuendo explains it, if it explains it fairly, but the import of the words used in the publication cannot be enlarged, extended, or changed by the innuendo, and, if it is, the innuendo, to the extent that it is not borne out by the defamatory words, will be rejected as surplusage. We think that that part of the innuendo that ascribes to the words of the libelous article the meaning that Wilde is not worthy the confidence of the people of San Diego places a false and unwarranted construction upon the words of the published article, and should be rejected as surplusage.

[9, 10] Finally, it is claimed by respondent that the entries in the books of the Community Oil Well Fund, showing, so it is claimed, the misuse of trust funds by Wilde, are relevant to the issues presented by these averments of the complaint in the criminal action:

"By the use of the following words, 'I do feel, however, your mayor is to be pitied rather than censured, but it is a shame that your lovely city must be the goat and suffer such humiliations. You are laughed at, but what can you expect with your jazz cat gambles and brain storms?' it was intended to have the readers of said letter understand that he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was mentally irresponsible, and that by reason thereof he was to be pitied rather than censured, and that it was a shame that San Diego was made to suffer because of the fact that Louis J. Wilde was the mayor of said city, and that he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was causing persons residing outside the city of San Diego, and therein, to laugh at San Diego, because he, the said Louis J. Wilde, was engaged in gambling, and that he was suffering from mental unsoundness."

Here the stings of the publication are that Wilde is mentally unbalanced and that he has been engaged in gambling. We do not know whether the books of the Community Oil Well Fund show that Mayor Wilde has been engaged in gambling. But, if they do, that fact can afford no foundation for the order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. The rule is that an order punishing a witness for contempt for refusing, in open court, to produce a book or other document must recite the facts that constitute the contempt and confer jurisdiction upon the court to make the order. For this purpose the order must recite facts showing that the document contains evidence pertinent and material to the issue to be tried. Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372. Here the order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt, a copy of which is annexed to respondent's answer, contains no recital that the books of the Community Oil Well Fund show that Wilde has ever been engaged in gambling. The most that the order attempts to show is that the books disclose that Wilde has misused the moneys of a fund intrusted to him. A charge that Wilde "was engaged in gambling" is not a charge of dishonesty of the character involved in the misuse of trust funds. Without enlarging upon the iniquity of gambling, suffice it to say that, however much moral obliquity may inhere in that vice, its unethical features are not of the character that distinguishes such downright acts of dishonesty as the misappropriation of trust funds. Where a charge is made in general terms imputing to another a habit or custom of wrongdoing, it has been held that particular acts of misconduct of the same character as the offense charged are admissible in evidence as tending to prove the truth of the charge; but never has it been held that wrongful acts of an entirely dissimilar character may be given in evidence in proof of the charge. 17 R. C. L. 413. It follows, therefore, that where the defamatory words charge one with the gambling habit the truth of the charge cannot be proved by evidence that the libeled person has misused trust funds.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of the opinion that Wilde's wrongful appropriation of the moneys of the Community Oil Well Fund, if, in fact, he did misappropriate them, was not relevant to any issue presented by the complaint in the criminal action, and that therefore the books that this petitioner was directed to produce contain no evidence pertinent or material to the issues before the justice's court.

Our conclusion is that respondent was without jurisdiction to make the order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court, and that the order is therefore void.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

183 Cal. 422

MERZOIAN v. KLUDJIAN et al.
(S. F. 9256.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⟸86(5)—Evidence held insufficient to show prospective purchaser able to buy.

In a broker's action to recover a commission for furnishing a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy, evidence showing prospective purchaser's agreements, consisting of oral promises for securing money, held insufficient to show his ability to buy on agreed terms.

2. Brokers ⟸63(5)—Vendors' refusal to sell held to excuse tender by purchaser.

Where defendant vendors refused to sell before prospective purchaser had opportunity to show his ability to make the cash payment required, it was unnecessary for purchaser to tender the cash required to bind the sale.

3. Appeal and error ⟸882(11)—Preventing plaintiff broker from testifying to his willingness to aid purchaser did not preclude objection that ability of purchaser was not shown.

In an action for commission for furnishing a party ready, willing, and able to buy, objections by defendants, preventing plaintiff from testifying on his direct examination to his willingness to help the purchaser, did not preclude defendants from asserting the evidence was insufficient to show an able purchaser, so far as it was affected by plaintiff's willingness to extend him credit in making the initial payment, since such burden rested on plaintiff.

4. Appeal and error ⟸843(1)—Where cause reversed on one ground discussion of others unnecessary.

Where a case must be reversed on one ground, it is unnecessary to discuss other objections presented by appellant.

Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by A. Merzoian against L. Kludjian and another, individually and as partners. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Harry Sarkisian, of Fresno, for appellants.
F. W. Docker, G. L. Aynesworth, and Astor Elmassian, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the defendants, L. Kludjian, S. Kludjian, and the said L. Kludjian and S. Kludjian, doing business as Kludjian Bros., from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, A. Merzoian, in an action brought to recover commissions which plaintiff alleged he had earned in securing for the defendants a purchaser for certain real estate which they owned and which they had employed him as agent to sell on a commission of 5 per cent. The record of the appeal is presented under the alternative method.

On January 16, 1917, the defendants authorized the plaintiff in writing to sell a tract of 40 acres of land in Fresno county, together with certain personal property consisting of agricultural implements, live stock and other accessories used on the ranch. The selling price of this property was to be $20,500, payable as follows: $5,000.00 cash. Balance $1,000.00 per year and interest." It is alleged in the complaint that on or about January 27 the plaintiff found a purchaser who agreed in writing to buy upon the owners' terms, and deposited with the plaintiff the sum of $100; that thereafter and prior to February 2 plaintiff duly notified defendants that he had effected a sale of the property; that the proposed purchaser and the defendants were brought together for the purpose of consummating the sale; "that said purchaser did then and there * * * offer to purchase * * * the property"; that the defendants thereupon refused to make the sale; that the defendants had agreed to pay the plaintiff "a 5 per cent. commission on the selling price" of $20,500, and that the plaintiff, having produced a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to buy, is entitled to the commission. Judgment was rendered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint for $1,025.

Appellants raise three questions:

"First and foremost of which is whether the prospective purchaser * * * was ready, willing, and able to purchase; * * * second, whether the defendants could have obtained a valid and binding contract from the prospective purchaser; * * * and third, whether the prospective purchaser was produced as such during the life of the contract of employment of the agent and before revocation of the same."

[1] 1. We shall first consider whether John Hatchegian, the prospective purchaser, was ready, able, and willing to make the purchase, and whether the defendants could have obtained a contract from him. In this connection the court found "that at all times said John Hatchegian was ready, able, and willing to purchase said property." Is this finding sustained by the evidence? Hatchegian testified on direct examination:

"Q. About the latter part of January, 1917, did you have any conversation with Mr. Merzoian? A. Yes, sir. * * * On I street. * * * It was further said, he asked me $5,000 for cash payment, and I said I didn't have $5,000. I told him I only had $2,000 cash, and there was another party, named Avadisian, said he was willing to lend $500 more. * * * Mr. Merzoian said at that time, 'In case Avadisian does not loan you $500, I am willing to help you with $3,000 so you can purchase the place.' * * * Q. Did you have any money in the bank or any place at that time? A. I had $1,000 in the Bank of Italy, and about $1,700 or $1,600 in the First National Bank of Fresno. Then, aside from that, I had another note which was due right away, $400. Q. And all together, then, you had in the neighborhood of $2,000 or $2,500, didn't you? A. I had $2,500. I had $2,500, and Mr. Avadisian was supposed to give me $500. * * * I went down and saw the cashier of the First National Bank, * * * Walrond. I asked him if they were willing to give me $500. They said, 'Yes, if you get a couple of fellows to sign on your note.' * * * Mr. Merzoian at that time had a note for $3,000, and he says his commission would amount to $1,000, that he would deposit the $3,000 in the bank and would get $2,000 and give it to me."

On cross-examination, he gave the following testimony:

"Q. Now, did Avadisian ever have any conversation with you at any time before this particular conversation you have spoken of, wherein he promised to loan you $500? A. Yes, lot of other occasions; many times. * * * He has said on many occasions if I were to buy the place he would lend me $500. * * * Q. Did you at that time, or at any other time since, agree as to when you should return that $500 to him? A. At any time I had money I was going to pay him back. Q. Is Mr. Avadisian related to you by blood? A. Godfather to my children. * * * Q. At the time you signed this paper [his agreement with Merozian for the purchase of the property] you had $1,000 on deposit in the Bank of Italy, did you? A. Yes, sir. Q. How much money did you have on deposit in the First National Bank of Fresno? A. I don't remember correctly; it might be $600 or $500, I don't know just exactly; and I had a note for $400. Q. Do you mean to tell me that on the 27th day of January, 1917, the day you signed this agreement, you had $1,000 on deposit in the Bank of Italy? * * * A. Yes, sir. Q. And you had $500 or $600 at the same time * * * in the First National Bank of Fresno, did you? A. Why, I don't know, five or six, I don't know; I don't remember whether it was $500 or $600 that I had. * * * That is all I had in money, $1,000 in the Bank of Italy, and $500 or $600 in the First National Bank. * * * I had two lots, deeded to my wife. * * * That is all I had. * * * At that time and now I had $2,000, my personal money, and Avadisian was going to lend me $500. That is how I make $2,500. * * * Q. You speak of a $400 note. Who was that given to you by? * * * A. One Michael Jacob. He has got 80 acres at Lone Star and 40 acres on California avenue. The nature of that note was so that I could demand my money at any time that I need it.

"The Court: Ask him if he ever borrowed that $500 from Mr. Avadisian. A. No; I didn't borrow at that time. * * * Q. How much did Mr. Merzoian promise to help you? A. He said, 'I am willing to help you from $2,500 to $3,000.' Q. Did he loan you $2,500 to $3,000 at any time? A. No; he did not."

W. A. Piper, bookkeeper at the First National Bank of Fresno, testified that there had never been an account at that bank in the name of John Hatchegian.

The plaintiff succeeded in bringing together at the office of his attorney, Astor Elmassian, the defendants and the prospective purchaser, John Hatchegian. On direct examination the plaintiff testified as follows regarding this interview:

"Q. Now what was said at this meeting at Mr. Elmassian's office? * * * A. Mr. Elmassian was present over there, and there was Mr. Kludjian brothers, Serop and Leon Kludjian, and Mr. Hatchegian, he like to buy the place. * * * I gave them the $100; told them, 'That is your deposit.' They said no, they won't take it; they don't like to sell. * * * Kludjian brothers said they don't like to sell at all; they said, 'We have trouble with my brother, we don't like to sell the place.' Q. Was there anything said at that time about furnishing an abstract of the place? A. No. * * * We said about that, but they said they don't like to sell."

On cross-examination, he further testified as to what was said at this interview:

"I talk about selling his place. That is all I told him [Kludjian]. I told him I got customer. * * * They say they don't like to sell. That is all I know."

Regarding the same meeting in his office, Elmassian stated:

"When Mr. Hatchegian and Kludjian brothers and Mr. Merzoian came in, Mr. Merzoian told the Kludjian brothers that he had sold their property and got a deposit from Mr. Hatchegian of $100, and that he wanted them to bring the abstract so the contract could be drawn up and conclude the business, and then he says Mr. Hatchegian had agreed to pay the $5,000 and $1,000 a year, and to that, as I believe, the older of the Kludjian brothers said they would not sell. * * * He said they would not sell because they had had trouble with the other brother, who had not signed the contract. * * * Q. Now, * * * did Mr. Hatchegian make any statements * * * to Kludjian brothers? A. Yes, he said he wanted to buy the place and pay $5,000 cash and $1,000 a year, but the elder brother of the Kludjian brothers said they would not sell."

He testified as follows on cross-examination:

"Q. On the meeting at your office * * * Hatchegian had made an offer to buy that place, hadn't he? A. Yes. Q. And the Kludjians had refused to make the sale? A. Yes, sir. * * * It appeared that they would not sell the place. They went out and they were mad; and that was the whole—the final transaction. * * * Q. Then they absolutely—in your conversation—absolutely refused, said, 'No, we are not going to sell'? A. They did."

Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87, was an action to recover commissions for the sale of mining stock. The plaintiff alleged that by a written contract he had been authorized to negotiate a sale of stock belonging to defendant's intestate; that he had a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to buy, and that the defendant's intestate had refused to sell. The court, reversing the judgment of the lower court in favor of the plaintiff, said, (105 Cal. at page 522, 39 Pac. at page 203, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87):

"The evidence is also insufficient to show that the supposed purchaser had the ability to purchase the stock at the price named. The only evidence on that point is his own testimony. * * * That testimony amounted to nothing more than a statement of his belief that persons not bound by contract to do so would have advanced the money; and it is clearly not such evidence as, under section 1835 of the Code of Civil Procedure, would justify the jury in finding that he had the ability to pay."

McCune v. Badger, 126 Wis. 186, 105 N. W. 667, was an action to recover a commission for the sale of real estate alleged to have been earned by plaintiff. The trial court directed a verdict for the defendant. We quote from the opinion of the court:

"We are unable to find any reasonably clear evidence that appellant found a purchaser able and willing to take respondent's property and pay therefor the amount in cash which it is conceded she was to have. * * * The most appellant claims he accomplished was to produce a person willing to take the property so that respondent could realize her price upon condition of appellant's furnishing or procuring the money necessary therefor in excess of $2,000, and that he had promise of loans to enable him to do so. He did not pretend his party was ever in circumstances to accept a deed of the property and pay the required amount of money therefor, except upon condition that certain persons, who had promised to loan the money to him on the property, redeemed the promise. * * * The arrangement claimed to have been made contemplated the passing of the title to the property to the proposed purchaser in order to enable him or the appellant to borrow money thereon with which to pay therefor."

In the instant case, the evidence we have quoted (and no other evidence was introduced as to the alleged readiness, ability, and willingness of the prospective purchaser), considered in the light most favorable to respondent, shows that Hatchegian had $1,000 in the Bank of Italy, $500 or $600 in the First National Bank of Fresno, a demand note for $400, and the verbal promises, made without any consideration therefor, of Avadisian and the plaintiff to lend him $500 and $2,000, respectively. Hatchegian, as we have seen, admitted that he had not borrowed the money from Avadisian or the plaintiff. He testified that he had "two lots deeded to my wife," but he did not state whether he could have borrowed money on that property. Moreover, it cannot be said that his testimony is at all certain as to his available assets, and, as we have shown, an official of one of the banks in which he asserted he had money on deposit stated that they had never had an account there in his name. In our opinion, the facts clearly fall within the rule announced in Mattingly v. Pennie, supra, and McCune v. Badger, supra.

Respondent cites McCabe v. Jones, 141 Wis. 540, 124 N. W. 486, an action by a real estate broker to recover commissions for negotiating a sale of real property, where the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a finding that the purchaser procured by the plaintiff was "able" to make the purchase. According to the opinion, "the parties agreed that, if plaintiff would induce Leach to purchase defendant's farm and personal property at the price of $13,000 and pay therefor $7,000 in cash and convey by good title Leach's residence property in Oshkosh, free of incumbrance, defendant would sell at that price and would pay plaintiff $250." The court continued:

"The trial judge reversed the answer to the second question because in his judgment the evidence was conclusive that Leach was not ready, able, and willing to make the trade, and the only question in the case is whether this ruling is correct. The evidence on this question was substantially as follows: Leach's homestead in Oshkosh was subject to a mortgage of $2,000. Leach testified that he owned $10,000 worth of unincumbered property in Oshkosh outside of his homestead; that he arranged with one Elmer Clark to let him have $7,000 upon mortgage on the Jones [defendant's] farm at the time the papers should be exchanged; that he had also provided to turn over his homestead clear of incumbrance; that these arrangements were complete before and at the time when the trade was to be completed. Clark testified that, in accordance with Leach's request he had the $7,000 ready in hand to loan to Leach on the Jones farm, and kept the money ready for two months. * * * There was no evidence to contradict this testimony of Leach and Clark, nor was there any evidence tending to throw doubt upon their good faith or upon the ability of either of them to carry out the arrangements which they testified they were ready and willing to carry out."

In our opinion, the facts which we have italicized are clearly distinguishable from those in the case at bar.

[2] It appears from the evidence, which we have already set forth, that the appellants' refusal to sell to Hatchegian was made before he had an opportunity to show whether he was able to make the cash payment of $5,000, and that such refusal could not have been based upon the asserted inability of Hatchegian to complete the purchase. This refusal to proceed with the transaction rendered it unnecessary for Hatchegian to tender the cash required to bind the sale. 9 Corpus Juris, p. 600, and cases there cited.

This point, however, is not urged by the respondent. His brief is devoted, principally, to a discussion of appellants' contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence to show that Hatchegian was ready, able, and willing to make the purchase.

[3] Respondent claims that the appellants are precluded from questioning the sufficiency of the evidence as to the financial ability of Hatchegian so far as it is affected by the respondent's willingness to extend him credit in making the initial payment. We quote from the direct examination of the respondent:

"Q. Did you, Mr. Merzoian, make any statement about being willing to help Mr. Hatchegian purchase the place? A. Yes, sir. Q. And did you make it at that time? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Sarkisian (attorney for the defendants): Now, if your honor please, we object to that; that is only a matter of defense.

"The Court: That is right. Mr. Sarkisian. Please, your honor, that is anticipating the defense.

"The Court: Perhaps the prospective purchaser would be the most competent to testify to his ability to pay. I think perhaps we had better wait for that."

With regard to this ruling respondent's contention in his supplemental brief thus states his position:

"The ground upon which the objection of defendant was made and upon which the court ruled out this evidence was that the matter was properly one of defense; that it was rebuttal only and could not be introduced as a part of the plaintiff's original case; that the burden was on the defendants to prove the contrary, and that in the absence of such proof it would stand admitted that the persons who had offered to loan Hatchegian money to make this purchase * * * were able to make their promises good. Having prevailed upon this theory and kept out all evidence for the plaintiff upon this point, he cannot now be heard to complain that the trial court applied his theory consistently and gave judgment against him without any evidence upon this point to sustain its findings."

The respondent does not contend that the exclusion of this testimony constituted error. It may be observed, however, since the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, that it was a part of the plaintiff's case in chief to show that Hatchegian was ready, able, and willing to make the purchase, and this could be done by proof either that he had the funds in hand, in whole or in part, or that he commanded resources upon which he could obtain the requisite credit. What respondent does contend is that appellants are precluded from asserting that the evidence is insufficient to show that Hatchegian was financially responsive. We do not think this contention can be sustained. Hatchegian himself did not have sufficient funds. He was relying in part upon credit. From what we have already said, it is plain that his resources consisted, apart from the $1,000 in the bank and the $400 note, not of tangible credits, but of unenforceable promises. It is not even claimed that he had a promise from his wife to convey to him the two lots which he declared stood in her name. It was upon these considerations that we reached the conclusion that the evidence does not support the findings that plaintiff produced a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to buy the property.

[4] 2. In view of the insufficiency of the evidence, it will not be necessary to discuss the third question presented by appellants—whether the contract of agency was revoked before the plaintiff produced the purchaser. Judgment reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I dissent, for the reason that I am of the opinion that the evidence sufficiently supports the finding of the trial court that the proposed purchaser was "ready, able, and willing to purchase said property upon the terms and conditions set forth in said instrument."

183 Cal. 270

MARTIN v. HILDEBRAND et al.
(S. F. 9004.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 22, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹501(3)—Bill of exceptions insufficient to permit consideration of evidence.

Where bill of exceptions contains no specifications of the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient, the question of sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered.

2. Mortgages ⟹300—Offer to purchase not sufficient tender.

An offer to purchase a note and mortgage and a tender of the amount due thereon did not operate either to extinguish the obligation for the debt or to terminate the lien of the mortgage, and holder of mortgage on foreclosure was entitled to interest up to foreclosure and a reasonable attorney's fee.

3. Mortgages ⟹580—Expenses in suit as to title to mortgage not taxable on foreclosure.

On foreclosure of a mortgage providing that mortgagors should pay all moneys expended by the mortgagee for the prosecution or defense of any action in regard to the property, expenses incurred in a suit wherein holder obtained an assignment were erroneously taxed as costs.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John T. Nourse, Judge.

Action by George J. Martin against Ernest H. Hildebrand and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Paul A. McCarthy, R. W. Gillogley, and Walter Christie, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

John H. Crabbe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff's complaint states a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff for the foreclosure of a mortgage on certain land executed by the defendants Hildebrand and Lettich to the Humboldt Savings Bank to secure the payment of a note of $3,000 dated December 26, 1912, due December 26, 1914, and bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum payable monthly in advance and compounded monthly if not paid when due. The mortgage was assigned to the plaintiff by an instrument dated February 5, 1916, which was delivered to the plaintiff on July 27, 1916.

The defendants' answer alleged that on August 9, 1916, the defendants Hildebrand and Lettich offered to the plaintiff the sum of $3,146.60 and demanded of plaintiff the return and cancellation of said note and mortgage and a satisfaction thereof, which offer the plaintiff refused, and that defendants have ever since been ready, willing, and able to pay said sum of money in discharge of said note and mortgage.

The court found "that on August 9, 1916, the defendants, Hildebrand and Lettich, offered to plaintiff in gold coin, the sum of $3,146.50, and demanded from plaintiff an assignment of said note and mortgage"; that said defendants did not then state whether the offer was on their own behalf as junior mortgagees, or as owners, or as agents for the owner of the real property; and that the plaintiff rejected said offer because it was insufficient in manner and in the amount offered.

[1] A motion for a new trial was made on the general ground of the "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision." The appeal is supported by a bill of exceptions which contains no specifications of the particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient. Consequently "the question of sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered." Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 799, 167 Pac. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184; Hawley v. Harrington, 152 Cal. 188, 92 Pac. 177; Carter v. Canty, 186 Pac. 347. The defense that the mortgage lien was extinguished by a tender of payment must therefore be considered upon the findings alone.

[2] According to the findings, the offer made by the defendants to the plaintiff on August 9 was not an offer to pay or discharge the mortgage debt, but was, in effect, an offer of the money, coupled with a demand for an assignment of the mortgage to the defendants. It was an offer to purchase the note and mortgage, not an offer to pay or discharge the mortgage debt. Such an offer does not operate either to extinguish the obligation for the debt or to terminate the lien of the mortgage. The court did not err in giving judgment for the amount due on the mortgage with interest, including the reasonable fee for plaintiff's attorney in foreclosing the mortgage, and costs.

[3] In addition to these items the court allowed to the plaintiff and included in the judgment, sums amounting to $159.50 on account of expenditures made by the plaintiff before the assignment to him of the said mortgage as the costs and expenses of certain litigation arising out of an action by Martin against the defendants to quiet the title to the same tract of land. In that case an order was made requiring the Humboldt Savings Bank to assign the note and mortgage to the plaintiff, and the defendants sought to annul the order by a proceeding in certiorari in the Supreme Court, in which they were unsuccessful. Hildebrand v. Superior Court, 173 Cal. 86, 159 Pac. 147. The $159.50 above mentioned was for costs and attorney fees incurred by the plaintiff in making his defense thereto. We are of the opinion that they were improperly chargeable as costs in this foreclosure proceeding. They were not incurred on behalf of the holder of the mortgage, or for its benefit, nor to protect the mortgaged property, but solely for the purpose of carrying out the desire of the plaintiff to obtain an assignment of the mortgage to himself. The mortgage provided that the mortgagors should pay all moneys expended by the mortgagee "for the prosecution or defense of any action in regard to said property." But this did not require them to pay sums expended by a would-be purchaser of the mortgage in the effort to obtain an assignment thereof. It follows therefore that the judgment is excessive in the amount of $159.50 and is to that extent erroneous. It will be unnecessary to reverse the judgment for this error. The proper result can be reached by a modification thereof deducting that sum from the amount of the judgment and affirming it as so modified.

It is ordered by the court that the judgment appealed from be modified by deducting from the amount thereof the sum of $159.50 and that as so modified said judgment be affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 382

In re BENVENUTO'S ESTATE.
(L. A. 6375.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 23, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators ⊂=137—Preliminary order authorizing sale of property unnecessary.

The effect of the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1536, by St. 1919, p. 1179, in omitting the requirement that a sale of a decedent's property must be on order of court, is that a preliminary order is not required to authorize the administrator or executor to negotiate a sale of property for the purposes for which a sale is authorized by the section.

2. Executors and administrators ⊂=137—Decision as to necessity for sale required on hearing of return for confirmation.

The effect of the amendment of 1919 upon Code Civ. Proc. § 1536, regulating the sale of decedent's estates, is that the questions whether a sale is necessary and for the best interest of the estate are now decided on the hearing of the return of sale and application for confirmation, instead of on a petition for an order of sale, as formerly provided by sections 1540, 1542, 1543, and 1544.

3. Descent and distribution ⊂=3—Decedent's property vests in heirs at death, subject to laws then in force.

The property of an intestate decedent vests in his heirs on his death, subject to the burdens imposed on it by the law in force at that time for the purpose of paying the debts of the decedent and the expenses of the administration of the estate, and also subject to the sale by the executor or administrator for such reasons and purposes as may then be authorized by law.

4. Constitutional law ⊂=93(1)—Extent to which the Legislature may, by amendment of law after death of intestate, impose additional burdens thereon, stated.

The Legislature cannot, by amending the law after the death of an intestate, impose on his property any new or additional burdens, or authorize a sale thereof for new reasons or other purposes; but it may enact new laws prescribing a different mode of procedure for making and confirming sales to satisfy such purposes or carry out such objects as were provided for by the law as it was enforced at his death.

5. Executors and administrators ⊂=351—Additional bond for sale required; "ordered."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1389, providing that the court may direct the giving of an additional bond whenever the sale of any real estate belonging to the estate "is ordered," unless the bond already given is sufficient, is not made inapplicable by the amendment of 1919 eliminating the necessity for a preliminary order for sale, since the sale is "ordered" when it is confirmed and the deed is directed to be made.

6. Constitutional law ⊂=306—Executors and administrators ⊂=337—Amendment of statute regulating sale of decedent's property held not to deprive heirs of right to notice.

The amendment of 1919 to the law relating to the sale of decedent's property, eliminating the necessity of a preliminary order of sale, is not invalid as depriving the heirs of their right to personal notice of the sale proceedings, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1380, since the notice required to be given on the filing of a return of sale is sufficient to constitute due process of law.

7. Constitutional law ⊂=93(1)—Executors and administrators ⊂=361—Amendment of statute regulating sale of decedent's property on credit held valid.

The amendment of 1919, repealing Code Civ. Proc. § 1544, prohibiting the administrator from selling real property on a credit exceeding one year and making the limit of credit to be given by the administrator discretionary, held not invalid as to pending administration cases; it being a mere incident of the power to sell property for the payment of debts.

8. Executors and administrators ⊂=320—Amendments regulating sale held prospective.

The amendments of 1919 to the law regulating the sale of decedent's property are prospective, in that they do not apply to proceedings already completed at the time they were enacted, but are applicable to all proceedings begun thereafter, including pending administrations, so that they cannot be considered retroactive without expressed declaration to that effect, when applied to the sale of the property of a decedent who died before the amendments were enacted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Pietro Benvenuto, deceased. From an order confirming a sale of real estate by Jarrett T. Richards, administrator, Pastine Maddalena Benvenuto appeals. Affirmed.

A. C. Postel, of Santa Barbara (C. H. Brock, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Richards, Heaney & Price, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order confirming a sale of real estate made by the administrator of the estate of said decedent. The administrator did not file any petition for an order authorizing a sale, nor was such order ever made. He filed a return of the sale and asked confirmation thereof by the court. Notice of the hearing on the return was given as provided by section 1552 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1919. At the hearing the court made findings in accordance with the allegations of the return, and thereupon confirmed the sale. Herein the administrator and the court below proceeded under the authority of the provisions of the act which took effect July 25, 1919, amending sections 1516, 1517, 1522, 1523, 1525, 1536, 1545, 1547, 1549, 1552, 1554, 1555, 1559, 1565, and 1570 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and of the act taking effect on the same date repealing sections 1537, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1542, 1543, and 1544. Stats. 1919, p. 1177.

The decedent died intestate on November 22, 1911. His property, of course, descended to and vested in his heirs at that date, subject to administration in accordance with the law then in force. It is contended by the appellant, who is the widow and heir of said decedent, that the amendment of 1919 is invalid with respect to the estates of persons who died before the amendment took effect. She claims that it imposes additional burdens upon the property, and, if operative, would divest rights of the heirs which were previously vested in them. The amendment made no change in section 1516, except that it omits the words "as the court may direct" from the clause declaring that the property of the estate "may be sold as the court may direct, in the manner prescribed in this chapter." Section 1517, prior to the amendment of 1919, provided that—

"No sale of any property of an estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the superior court, except as otherwise provided in this chapter."

The amended section omits this clause and in lieu thereof declares that—

"The executor or administrator may sell any property of the estate of a decedent without order of court, and at either public or private sale, as the executor or administrator may determine."

The remainder of the section declares expressly "that no sale of such property is valid unless" reported under oath to and confirmed by the court. Section 1536, prior to the amendment, read as follows:

"When a sale of property of the estate is necessary to pay the allowance of the family, or the debts outstanding against the decedent, or the debts, expenses, or charges of administration or legacies; or when it appears to the satisfaction of the court that it is for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate, and those interested therein, that the real estate, or some part thereof, be sold, the executor or administrator may sell any real as well as personal property of the estate, upon the order of the court."

[1] In the section as amended the italicized words are omitted. The effect is that a preliminary order of the court is no longer required in order to authorize the administrator or executor to negotiate a sale of the property of the estate for the purposes and reasons for which a sale is authorized by the section. It is further to be noted that section 1380 of the said Code provides that any person interested in an estate may make a written request to the executor or administrator, stating his post office address and that he requires special notice of the filing of petitions for sales of property and certain other petitions described, and that thereafter notice of the filing of such petitions shall be served upon such party within two days after the filing thereof, either personally or by United States mail, and that the court, upon the hearing of the petition, shall find and declare that such notice has been given. The appellant, prior to the sale in question, gave to the administrator the notice as provided in this section.

[2] The amendment of section 1552 made no change in the manner of giving notice of the hearing of the return of sale. The notice was given in the present case in the manner prescribed and in addition thereto the notice as required by section 1380 as aforesaid. The appellant appeared at the hearing. In its order confirming the sale the court states that the sale was made without any order of the court first had or obtained, and without serving any notice upon said appellant of the application for such order, but that the appellant received due personal notice of the filing of the return of sale and of the date of the hearing thereof. The amendment to section 1552, however, provided that upon such hearing the court "must examine into the necessity for the sale, or the advantage, benefit and interest of the estate in having the sale made, and must examine the return and witnesses in relation to the sale, and if good reason does not exist for such sale," or if it was unfair, or for less than its value, the court may vacate the sale or direct a new sale. The change made by the amendment in this respect is that the questions whether a sale is necessary for payment of debts, expenses of administration or legacies, and whether a sale would be for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate, as provided in section 1536, are now to be decided upon the hearing of the return of sale and application for confirmation thereof, instead of upon the hearing of the petition for an order of sale as formerly provided by sections 1540, 1542, 1543, and 1544, which sections were repealed by the amending act of 1919.

[3, 4] The principles governing the question of the validity of the amendments, with respect to estates of persons previously deceased, are well established. The property of an intestate decedent vests in his heirs upon his death, subject to the burdens imposed upon it by the law in force at that time for the purposes of paying the debts of the decedent and the expenses of the administration of the estate, and also subject to sale by the executor or administrator for such reasons and purposes as may be then authorized by law. But the Legislature cannot, by amending the law after his death, impose upon the property of a decedent any new or additional burdens, or authorize a sale thereof for new reasons or other purposes. It may, however, enact new laws prescribing a different mode of procedure for making and confirming sales to satisfy such purposes or carry out such objects as were provided for by the law in force at his death.

In Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 183, one Charles White died intestate in 1853. The law then in force made his property subject to sale only for the payment of his debts and the expenses of administration. In 1861 a special act (special laws being then permitted by the Constitution) was passed by the Legislature purporting to authorize the administrator of the estate of White to sell his real estate, without first having obtained an order of court therefor, "as in the judgment of the said administrator will best promote the interest of those entitled to the estate." St. 1861, p. 152. It further provided for a return of sale and for confirmation thereof by the court. The court said that the estate of the decedent was subject to the payment of his debts and expenses of administration, which were burdens upon it, in the nature of liens; that it was competent for the Legislature, after the death of a decedent, to enact "laws which prescribe the manner in which these paramount claims shall be satisfied"; that such laws "are held to be entirely remedial"; that "such acts have been uniformly held valid where it appeared to be in execution of these liens." The sale was held void, not because of the provision in the act that the sale could be made without first obtaining an order to sell, but because it authorized a sale by the administrator when such sale "would advance the interests of those entitled to the estate; the sale was to be in the interest of the heirs as owners, and not to satisfy the paramount lien imposed by law upon the property of the decedent," and it was said that—

"The Legislature has no more right to order a sale of his (the heir's) vested interest in his inheritance, because it will be, in the estimation of the administrator and the probate judge, for his advantage, than it has to direct the sale of the property of any other person acquired in any other way."

So in Estate of Packer, 125 Cal. 397, 58 Pac. 59, 73 Am. St. Rep. 58, a similar ruling was made. Packer died in 1891. In 1893 sections 1536 and 1537 were amended, so as to provide, as 1536 now provides, that a sale of property of a decedent could be made when it was "for the advantage, benefit, and best interests of the estate and those interested therein." The court held that the property of decedents who had died before said amendments were enacted could not be sold for that reason; the court saying that the Legislature could not, after the title had vested in the heir, "empower the administrator to sell the inheritance for purposes not authorized at the time the title vested and to which it was not subject when it vested." See, also, Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 409, 19 Am. Rep. 656; Estate of Porter, 129 Cal. 89, 61 Pac. 659, 79 Am. St. Rep. 78; Murphy v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 131 Cal. 115, 63 Pac. 368, 731; Estate of Newlove, 142 Cal. 379, 75 Pac. 1083; Estate of Bazzuro, 161 Cal. 74, 118 Pac. 434.

With respect to the power of the Legislature to provide new methods of procedure for the making of sales for purposes authorized by law at the time of the death of the decedent, the decisions also establish the rule above stated. It was clearly stated in Brenham v. Story, supra, as above related. In Murphy v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, supra, after a testator's death, sections 1577 and 1578 of the Code were amended so as to authorize the administrator, upon the order of the court, to mortgage the property of the estate to provide money for the payment of the debts. It was held that the devisee took the land subject to a charge for the debts of the deceased and to the law authorizing a sale for payment thereof, and that "to authorize the mortgage of the property for the express purpose of raising money with which to pay these charges is but to change the form of the lien and adds no new burden not already borne by the property, or to which the property may be subjected under the law as it existed when the testator died," and that the amended law was valid with respect to estates of decedents whose death occurred prior to its passage. The decision in Estate of Freud, 131 Cal. 668, 674, 63 Pac. 1080, 82 Am. St. Rep. 407, is to the same effect. The rule is thus stated by Judge Cooley:

"As a general rule, every state has complete control over the remedies which it offers to suitors in its courts. It may abolish one class of courts and create another. It may give a new and additional remedy for a right or equity already in existence, and it may abolish old remedies and substitute new, or even without substituting any, if a reasonable remedy still remains. * * * And any rule or regulation in regard to the remedy which does not, under pretense of modifying or regulating it, take away or impair the right itself, cannot be regarded as beyond the proper province of legislation." Cooley's Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 515.

And with regard to matters of defense, the same author says:

"A party has no vested right in a defense based upon an informality not affecting his substantial equities." Id. p. 529.

In 12 Corpus Juris, at page 975, it is said:

"Existing remedies may be modified or impaired, particular remedies may be taken away, one particular remedy may be made the exclusive one, or one remedy may be substituted for another. * * * There must remain, however, a remedy that is not merely colorable, but is real and substantial."

To all these points many cases are cited in the footnotes. In the light of these authorities we proceed to examine the objections raised by the appellant.

Section 1389, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the court must direct the giving of an additional bond, "whenever the sale of any real estate belonging to an estate is ordered," unless the bond already given is sufficient as therein prescribed. The appellant claims that, as this may be done only when a sale of real estate "is ordered," the repeal of the sections which provide for the filing of a petition for sale, the making and service of an order to show cause, and the making of an order directing a sale (sections 1537, 1538, 1539, 1542, 1543, 1544) deprives the appellant of the opportunity to ask for an additional bond and the court of the power to require one, and thereby deprives her of the protection which such bond would afford. If this were the effect of the repeal, perhaps the objection would be good.

[5] But we think section 1389 remains applicable to the mode of sale now provided. The court has power, under section 1389, to require an additional bond when a sale "is ordered." By the law as amended the administrator is authorized to make what is in substance no more than an agreement of sale fixing the price and the terms thereof. He makes return of this to the court for approval and confirmation. Section 1517. Thereupon notice must be given, as the law provides, of the time of hearing the return. Upon the hearing the court must examine witnesses and determine whether the sale is a proper one, and it may order a new sale for the causes therein stated, or it may vacate the sale, or approve the one already made. Section 1552. If it approves the sale, it must thereupon make an order confirming the sale and direct a conveyance to be executed. Section 1554. The conveyance must thereupon be made by the executor to the purchaser, and it operates to convey to him all the right, title, and interest of the decedent in the premises at the time of his death. Section 1555. These proceedings constitute an order of sale, and thereby a sale "is ordered." It requires no stretch of construction to bring these proceedings within the meaning of that term as used in section 1389, and to hold that a sale "is ordered" when it is confirmed and the deed is directed to be made. The notice to be given upon the filing of the return of sale is sufficient to constitute due process of law, and it affords to the parties interested the opportunity to appear and ask for an additional bond in case they consider the bond already given insufficient. The amended law does not in this respect deprive the heirs of any right which they previously had, but merely changes to a very slight extent the time and place of asserting such right.

[6] It is also claimed that the heirs are deprived of the right to have personal notice of the proceedings for the sale as provided in section 1380. Under the authorities above cited this could not be considered fatal to the validity of the law as applied to descents cast, for, as above stated, the Code would still provide due process of law before a sale could be actually made. But the liberal construction which the Code declares it must receive "to effect its objects and promote justice" (section 4) justifies the conclusion that the phrase "filing of petitions for sales" in section 1380 may be held to apply to the report or return of sale required by section 1552. Such return must state the terms of the sale agreed on and the purposes for which the money is to be used. It may ask—that is, petition—for a hearing, or the hearing may be asked "by petition subsequently." The sale is not as yet complete, and the return and petition, in substance and in fact, constitute a petition for the sale agreed on. Undoubtedly, if the Code had not previously contained other provisions relating to petitions for sale, section 1380 would be understood to apply to such return and petition for confirmation of the sale. We perceive no sound reason for refusing to give it that meaning with the Code as it now stands. In the present case it was so construed, and the personal service notice was given to the appellant accordingly.

Objection is made to the amended section 1559 giving the administrator authority to employ a real estate broker to negotiate a sale and to charge his commission to the estate. Previously the section required an order from the court to authorize the employment of such broker. We need not determine whether or not this objection is good. No broker was employed. The question is not presented, and as section 1559 is not an essential part of the procedure for the sale, its invalidity, as applied to pending administrations, would not affect the sale here involved.

[7] Section 1544, which was repealed, prohibited the administrator from selling real property upon a credit exceeding one year. Under the scheme of sale provided by the amended sections of 1919, no limit is placed upon the credit which may be given by the administrator upon a sale, except the discretion of the court, and no limit is placed upon that discretion. It is contended that this imposes an additional burden upon the heirs and therefore is inapplicable to cases pending at the time the amendment was enacted. Under the authority of Murphy v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, supra, we think this enlargement of discretion as to the time of credit was within the power of the Legislature and a mere incident of the power to sell property for the payment of debts. The appellant refers to other sections prescribing proceedings with relation to sales of land which has been devised by will. It is unnecessary to consider these sections. They do not apply to sales by the administrator and have no application to the present case.

[8] Appellant further contends that under section 3, providing that no part of the Code "is retroactive, unless expressly so declared," these sections cannot be held to apply to proceedings pending at the time they were enacted, because of the fact that there is no express declaration that they shall so apply. It is not necessary to hold that the sections are retroactive. They are prospective in that they do not apply to proceedings already completed at the time they were enacted, but they do apply to all proceedings begun thereafter. That they were intended so to apply is obvious from the fact that at the same time and as a part of the same scheme the Legislature repealed the sections which provided for the filing of the petitions for sale and orders of sale prior to the making of any sale by the administrator. Unless the scheme as changed by the amendments applies to pending administrations, there would be no mode provided for the sale of property thereunder. There can be no doubt that the legislative intent was that proceedings subsequent to the enactment of the amendments should be governed by the provisions therein contained.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.

183 Cal. 392

Ex parte HINKELMAN. (Cr. 2283.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸707 — "Diffuse" defined.

Relative to meaning of phrase "diffusing type of lens," as used in Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (k), as amended by St. 1919, p. 211, § 10, subd. (k), to diffuse is to spread widely, to scatter or disperse, and any lens in an automobile light, not made of plain glass, would, to some extent, diffuse the rays of light passing through it.

2. Criminal law ⟸304(4)—No judicial notice taken of meaning of "diffusing type of lens."

The phrase "diffusing type of lens," used in Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (k), as amended by St. 1919, p. 211, § 10, subd. (k), is apparently a trade-name of recent origin, and its use has not as yet become sufficiently general to enable a court to take judicial notice of its trade meaning.

3. Indictment and information ⟸110(47) — Complaint using trade-name of unknown meaning, used in statute, sufficient.

A charge that defendant's headlight was of the "diffusing type of lens," a trade-name used in Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (k), as amended by St. 1919, p. 211, § 10, subd. (k), of whose meaning the court cannot take judicial notice, was nevertheless sufficient; the meaning of the term being a matter of proof at the trial.

4. Municipal corporations ⟸707—Use of untested headlight by automobile criminal, although not dangerous.

Use of a headlight of more power than had been sanctioned by a testing agent, as provided in Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, subd. (j), as amended by St. 1919, p. 210, § 10, subd. (j), was a violation of such act, although such lights did not produce a dangerous glare.

5. Municipal corporations ⟸707—Motor Vehicle Act, making it offense to use headlights not sanctioned by testing, valid.

Motor Vehicle Act, § 13, as amended by St. 1919, p. 206, § 10, making it an offense to use a headlight that has not been tested and sanctioned by a testing agency, is valid.

In Bank.

Application by Lee H. Hinkelman for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police, City and County of San Francisco, to secure the release of petitioner from custody. Petition remanded.

James M. Oliver and Raymond Benjamin, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Hinkelman was imprisoned on a warrant of arrest issued out of the police court of the city and county of San Francisco on a complaint charging him with violating sections 13 and 32 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, pp. 405, 413, as amended by St. 1919, pp. 206, 225, §§ 10, 16). He applied for a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that the complaint does not charge a public offense, and that sections 13 and 32 of said act, so far as they relate to the offense charged, are unconstitutional.

Section 32 declares it to be a misdemeanor for any person to violate any provisions of the act. The particular violation here charged is the driving of an automobile on a public street equipped with a headlight more brilliant and set at a different angle than is permitted by the provisions of section 13. This section makes elaborate and complex regulations relating to headlights. The portions thereof applying to the present case may be summarized as follows:

Subdivision (a) provides that, "at all times during the period from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise, every automobile while on the public highway shall carry at the front at least two lighted lamps." Subdivision (f) provides that during the time above stated "the headlights of all automobiles upon the highways shall give a light of sufficient power and so distributed as provided herein." The material provisions of subdivision (g) are as follows:

"The headlights of motor vehicles shall be so arranged, adjusted, and constructed when the car is fully loaded, that any pair of headlights under the conditions of use must produce a light which: (1) Is not less than 1,200 apparent candle power at a point two hundred feet directly in front of the lens, when measured on a level surface on which the car stands and at some point between such surface and a horizontal line passing through the top of the lens; (2) does not exceed 2,400 apparent candle power at a point one hundred feet directly in front and five feet above such level surface and which has no greater power at a height above five feet at that distance; and (3) does not exceed 800 apparent candle power "at a distance of one hundred feet ahead of the car and seven feet or more to the left of the axis of the same and five feet above the level surface on which the vehicle stands."

Subdivision (h) provides that no headlight referred to in subdivision (f) shall be used upon the highways until it shall have been tested as provided in subdivision (h). This subdivision makes elaborate provisions for the making of such tests by testing agency to be appointed by the superintendent of the motor vehicle department. Subdivision (i) requires the superintendent of the motor vehicle department to make a written report of the result of the test and file a copy thereof with each county clerk in the state and with the official of each city, town, or county whose duty it is to enforce the law. Subdivision (j) provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any manufactured device that is sold commercially to be used in connection with the headlight upon a motor vehicle to enable the same to comply with the provisions of subdivision (f) hereof unless such device shall have been first tested as provided in subdivision (h) hereof"

—and shall have been reported favorably by the testing agency, as complying with the requirements of the section, and such report incorporated into the report of the superintendent of the department, and a copy thereof filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the device is used, and sent to the city, county, or town police or traffic officers. Subdivision (k) contains the clause which has caused the difficulty in the present case. It reads as follows:

"Diffusing type of lens may be used with a candle power not sufficiently great to produce a dangerous glare. The maximum of such candle power shall be established by the testing agency selected by the superintendent of the motor vehicle department, based upon tests as hereinabove provided. Any device so certified shall be equipped with light bulbs labeled with the true candle power thereof, not exceeding that prescribed."

The complaint on which Hinkelman was arrested charged that he did unlawfully drive along and upon a public highway at half past 8 o'clock p. m. an automobile occupied by himself alone, carrying at the front thereof two lighted head lamps—

"each equipped with a device that is sold commercially to be used in connection with head lamps on motor vehicles to enable them to comply with the provisions of section 13, subdivision (f), of the Motor Vehicle Act, which said device was purchased by the defendant in 1918 and attached to said head lamps by defendant, to wit, a diffusing type of lens, known as a 'Warner lens,' which said type of device was, during the month of July, 1919, tested by the testing agency appointed by the superintendent of the motor vehicle department of the state of California and reported to said superintendent by said testing agency as substantially complying with the requirements of section 13, of the California Motor Vehicle Act, when used with light bulbs of a specific candle power prescribed by said testing agency, and adjusted at a specific angle designated by said testing agency; that said defendant did then and there drive said automobile with said head lamps adjusted at an angle other than designated by said testing agency and equipped with said device and did then and there use said device with light bulbs exceeding in amount the candle power prescribed by said testing agency, though not sufficiently great as to produce a dangerous glare."

The two main purposes of the section are to compel the driver of an automobile to use thereon headlights which (a) shall cast in front of the automobile a light of sufficient power to enable him, when driving in the dark, to see objects in the road at a distance of two hundred feet ahead, and which (b) shall not unduly dazzle the eyes of persons in front who may be looking toward him. The requirement of subdivision (g) that, at an elevation above the level surface equal to the elevation of the top of his lens and 200 feet ahead, the light shall not be less than 1,200 apparent candle power, is intended to meet the first mentioned purpose. The requirements that at a point 100 feet directly in front of the car the light shall not exceed 2,400 apparent candle power, and that at a point 100 feet ahead, 7 feet to the left and 5 feet above the surface, it shall not exceed 800 apparent candle power, are intended to serve the last-mentioned purpose.

[1-3] The meaning of the clause in subdivision (k) above quoted is not clear. The phrase "diffusing type of lens" is not defined in the act. To diffuse is to spread widely, to scatter, or disperse. Any lens not made of plain glass would to some extent diffuse the rays of light passing through it. The phrase is apparently a trade name of recent origin. Its use has not as yet become sufficiently general to enable a court to take judicial notice of its trade meaning. The charge is that the defendant's headlight was of that type. As a pleading this is sufficient and the meaning of the term would be a matter of proof at the trial. The question whether such a law is sufficiently certain to make the penalty valid is not here decided. But whatever this phrase may mean, it is clear that under the provisions of this clause all lenses of the "diffusing type" must be submitted to the testing agency for approval and subjected to the same tests as to the maximum candle power that are required for other types of lenses. It declares that the maximum candle power of such lenses "shall be established by the testing agency * * * based upon tests as hereinabove provided," and that the device so tested shall have light bulbs "not exceeding that prescribed." This obviously refers to subdivisions (g), (h), and (j). It therefore means that such diffusing type of lens shall not throw a light which, at 100 feet ahead and at a height of 5 feet from the level surface, shall exceed 2,400 candle power, or which, at said height and said distance ahead and 7 feet to the left, shall exceed 800 candle power, as provided in subdivision (g), and also that such device, if sold commercially, cannot be used by any person, unless it has been tested to ascertain this maximum, as provided in subdivision (h), and approved and certified, as provided in subdivision (j). It also makes such lenses subject to another clause in subdivision (h), not above mentioned, which is as follows:

"Provided, however, that if the test indicates that a device which is unacceptable with either of the test lamps will come within the specifications with lamps of another candle power or of the other type, the device may be passed with corresponding limitations as to the incandescent lamps to be used in connection with it."

[4] The complaint shows a violation of the act. It charges that the Warner type of lens was sold commercially, was tested by the testing agency as provided in the act, and was by it reported as complying with section 13 "when used with light bulbs" of a stated candle power, but that the defendant used Warner lenses with light bulbs exceeding the candle power so limited. Warner lenses equipped with light bulbs of the candle power used by the defendant may have been tested, but the complaint shows that they had not been approved or reported as permissible. The defendant is therefore, in effect, charged with using in connection with his headlight a "manufactured device that is sold commercially," which had not been first approved by the testing agency, or reported by said agency to the superintendent of the motor vehicle department as substantially complying with section 13 of the act, contrary to the provisions of subdivisions (h) and (j) above set forth. The fact that the headlights used did not produce a dangerous glare did not make it lawful for Hinkelman to use a headlight sold commercially that had not been tested and sanctioned by the testing agency as provided in subdivision (j). The complaint is therefore sufficient to justify the warrant upon which Hinkelman is detained in custody.

[5] We see no constitutional objection to the validity of these provisions. It may be true that the Legislature has no power to delegate to the testing agency or to any other body the authority to make regulations in the nature of laws prescribing the quality of headlights which shall be used by persons driving automobiles. But the act itself, in subdivision (g), prescribes the qualities of headlights. The office of the testing agency is to furnish a means for the convenient determination of the question whether or not a given light does comply with the regulations laid down in the act. The Legislature has provided that no such light shall be used until the testing agency shall have ascertained and reported that it does comply with the law. Were it not for such provision for a testing agency no one could be reasonably certain that he is complying with the law and no officer of the state could be reasonably certain that the user was not complying with the law, without an elaborate test of the particular light in use. This would entail great expense and inconvenience both to the state in enforcing the law and to persons charged with a violation of it in establishing the defense that they had not violated it. In such cases it is proper for the state to establish an agency for the ascertainment of the facts with respect to any particular kind of headlight that is sold commercially and for general use.

The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the officer.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.

183 Cal. 800

Ex parte TEATSEN. (Cr. 2282.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1920.)

In Bank.

Application by John F. Teatsen for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police, City and County of San Francisco, to secure the release of petitioner from custody. Petitioner remanded.

James M. Oliver and Raymond Benjamin, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The application for a writ of habeas corpus in this case is based on the same facts as are set forth in the Case of Hinkelman, 191 Pac. 682, decided concurrently herewith, except that Teatsen is charged with driving an empty motor truck of one ton capacity, instead of an ordinary automobile, and equipped with a Dillon lens, instead of a Warner lens. Said Dillon lens is also of the diffusive type referred to in section 13 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 206). The law on the subject of such vehicles and lenses is the same as applicable to automobiles carrying Warner lenses, and the principles stated in the Case of Hinkelman are decisive of the present case.

It is therefore ordered that the said John F. Teatsen be remanded to the custody of the officer.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; OLNEY, J.

(183 Cal. 348)

Application of DOWDALL. (S. F. 9401.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1920. On Rehearing Aug. 25, 1920.)

1. Prohibition ⇐11—Court having jurisdiction cannot be restrained from exercising it, even if proceeding erroneously.

Superior court of certain county having jurisdiction of the estate of a decedent under Code Civ. Proc. § 1699, will not be restrained by writ of prohibition from exercising jurisdiction in action for settlement of accounts of testamentary trustees and for termination of trust, notwithstanding pendency of similar action in superior court of another county, since the former court has jurisdiction in the matter, and its action cannot therefore be controlled by writ of prohibition under section 1102, even if proceeding erroneously.

On Rehearing.

2. Trusts ⇐298—Superior court retains jurisdiction of estate for settlement of a trustee's accounts.

Where will creates a trust, the superior court, sitting in probate upon the distribution of the estate, retains jurisdiction of the estate for the purpose of settlement of the trustee's accounts, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1699.

3. Courts ⇐475(2) — Where jurisdiction of settlement of account of testamentary trustee is primarily in court having jurisdiction of distribution of estate, bill in equity should be suspended.

The superior court, which, sitting in probate, has jurisdiction of distribution of estate, has primary jurisdiction of the settlement of accounts under testamentary trust, and if a bill in equity is filed in any other superior court for the purpose of settling the trustee's accounts, the latter court, upon being informed of the jurisdiction of the court in probate, and that an account is to be or has been filed therein for settlement, should postpone the proceeding in its own case, and allow the account to be settled by such court in probate, if proceedings in such court are prosecuted with diligence and good faith.

4. Judgment ⇐543 — Judgment of court in equity, settling accounts of testamentary trustee, valid and binding on court in probate, in subsequent proceeding for settlement thereof.

Where bill is filed in a superior court for settlement of the account of testamentary trustees, and no suggestion is made that the court in which will was probated has primary jurisdiction of the settlement of such accounts, the judgment of former court rendered on such bill is valid and binding on the court in probate on subsequent proceeding therein for settlement of such accounts.

In Bank.

In the matter of the application of Hannah Dowdall for a writ of prohibition to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and Frank H. Dunne, Judge thereof. Writ denied.

Walter R. Dunn, of Oakland, for applicant.

Sanderson & Davis, of San Francisco, for respondent.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice KERRIGAN of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, while acting as justice pro tempore of this court in place of Mr. Justice MELVIN. It is adopted as the opinion of the court.

This is an application for a writ of prohibition directed to the superior court of the city and county of San Franciso, sitting in probate, enjoining it from proceeding with the settlement of the account of certain trustees of a trust created by the will of John Nuttall, deceased.

John Nuttall had by his last will created a trust in favor of the petitioner, which was to continue after the distribution of his estate. His estate was distributed more than 25 years prior to the commencement of this proceeding; and, while the trustees apparently were in touch with the petitioner, and with one another concerning the affairs of the trust during the whole of this period, some 10 years had elapsed since the filing by them of any account. In the month of January, 1920, the petitioner, as the beneficiary of said trust, commenced an action against said trustees in the superior court of Alameda county, where they reside, and where a portion of the real property subject to the trust is situated, by which she sought an injunction to prevent an alleged contemplated sale of part of said property for an inadequate price, and also prayed for an accounting and for the termination of the trust. The trustees appeared generally in that action, and in their answer alleged that under the trust they had no power to sell the property without the consent of the beneficiary, plaintiff in that action, and that they had never attempted to do so; that an offer had been made to them to purchase said property; that the said plaintiff had an undivided one-third interest therein, the remaining two-thirds belonging to said trustees individually; that they, believing that the price offered was advantageous, had requested said plaintiff to join with them in a sale thereof, but this she refused to do, and thereupon commenced her said action to restrain said trustees from making such sale. They also alleged in their answer that under the terms of the trust they were permitted in their discretion to terminate it after 5 years from the making of the decree of distribution in the estate of said John Nuttall, deceased, but that the trust had never been terminated, and they had continued in charge of the property thereunder by reason of the express desire and request of said beneficiary; and they further alleged that said plaintiff was indebted to them in a certain amount on account of fees and advances in connection with their administration of the trust. Subsequent to the filing of this answer, and when a motion noticed to be heard in said action came on for hearing, said motion was dropped from the calendar in pursuance of an oral stipulation, which was thereafter to be reduced to writing, and whereby it was agreed that the trustees should file their account in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco (respondent) in the matter of the estate of John Nuttall, deceased. Later this account was filed, but when the parties attempted to reduce to writing their oral stipulation it developed that they could not agree as to the terms thereof, in view of which the petitioner, on February 13, 1920, after notice moved the court in Alameda county to set the case pending there for trial. The judge of that court, upon being apprised of the status of the two proceedings, and that the account of the trustees had been filed in the superior court of San Francisco, declared that, while he believed that he had concurrent jurisdiction with the said San Francisco court to settle said account, he would not, under the circumstances disclosed, interfere with the proceeding there, and he thereupon continued the hearing of the motion to set the case for trial to a day subsequent to the hearing of the account by that court.

When said hearing came on before said San Francisco court the petitioner there applied for an order suspending proceedings in said matter pending the determination of the action in Alameda county, upon the ground that by the commencement of that action the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco was divested of further jurisdiction to hear or determine said matter. That motion was denied, whereupon this proceeding was inaugurated.

[1] On behalf of the respondent it is urged that its jurisdiction to settle the account of said trustees arises by virtue of the provisions of section 1699 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, in part, provides:

"Where any trust has been created by or under any will to continue after distribution, the superior court shall not lose jurisdiction of the estate by final distribution, but shall retain jurisdiction thereof for the purpose of the settlement of accounts under the trusts."

The petitioner, on the other hand, contends that while this section may confer upon the San Francisco court having jurisdiction of the estate of John Nuttall, deceased, power to settle the account of said trustees, it is at most a jurisdiction existing concurrently with that of the superior court of Alameda county, and that the jurisdiction of the latter is broader in that it can grant the injunctive relief demanded; and that, having acquired jurisdiction for this purpose, it should be permitted to take control and to dispose of the whole controversy (citing 1 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 231–237).

It appears, however, by the uncontradicted affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent herein, that since the granting by this court of the order to show cause why the writ of prohibition prayed for in this proceeding should not issue, the petitioner has consented to the sale of the real property which by her action in the superior court of Alameda county she sought to enjoin and has joined in the conveyance thereof to the purchaser, so that the only relief she is now seeking is an accounting by the trustees and the termination of the trust. The trustees having filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco their account as such trustees, and prayed its settlement and their discharge, it results that if such court is allowed to proceed the petitioner will secure the very relief that she now seeks in the superior court of the county of Alameda. The latter court, recognizing the jurisdiction of the respondent, has by the exercise of proper judicial comity deferred action upon the suit pending before it, and under the circumstances as they now exist it is difficult to understand why the petitioner is still seeking the writ of prohibition against the respondent. In any case it is clear that the respondent has jurisdiction of the matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 1699, supra), so that its action cannot be controlled by writ of prohibition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1102), and, even if proceeding erroneously, it would still be exempt from control by this writ (S. P. Ry. Co. v. Sup. Ct., 63 Cal. 607).

Writ denied.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and OLNEY, J., SHAW, J., LENNON, J., and WILBUR, J., concur.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [2, 3] The petition for rehearing is denied. In view of the argument and the possible misconception of the effect of our opinion, we deem it proper to add some further remarks. By section 1699 of the Code of Civil Procedure the superior court, sitting in probate upon the distribution of an estate wherein the will creates a trust, retains jurisdiction of the estate for the purpose of the settlement of the accounts under the trust. It follows from this that in this particular case the superior court of San Francisco has had jurisdiction of the estate for the purpose of settling the trustees' accounts ever since the decree of distribution of the estate of John Nuttall, deceased, was made, more than 25 years ago. That jurisdiction remains until the accounts are closed, and the trustee discharged. It is also true that the superior court of each county in the state has general jurisdiction in equity to settle trustees' accounts and to entertain actions for injunctions. This jurisdiction is, in a sense, concurrent with that of the superior court, which, by virtue of the decree of distribution, has jurisdiction of a trust created by will. The latter, however, is the primary jurisdiction, and if a bill in equity is filed in any other superior court for the purpose of settling the account of such trustee, that court, upon being informed of the jurisdiction of the court in probate, and that an account is to be or has been filed therein for settlement, should postpone the proceeding in its own case, and allow the account to be settled by the court having primary jurisdiction thereof. We assume, of course, that the proposition to settle the account in the court in probate is made in good faith, and it will be prosecuted with diligence. Some discretion is vested in the court on this point, and if it appears that the suggestion of the primary jurisdiction of the court in probate is made for delay or in bad faith, we have no doubt that the other superior court might properly proceed to judgment on the bill in equity.

[4] The court entertaining the bill in equity is not without jurisdiction. If no suggestion of the primary jurisdiction of the court in probate is made to it, the judgment of such court in the suit in equity will undoubtedly be valid, and upon any subsequent proceeding in the court in probate under its jurisdiction such judgment would be binding upon that court.

SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J., and LAWLOR, J., concur.

183 Cal. 431

In re WALL'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6410.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸979(2)—New trial ⟸68—Grant of new trial for insufficiency of evidence discretionary.

The trial court in granting a motion for a new trial, particularly for insufficiency of evidence to support verdict or findings, has a wide discretion, and its action will not be disturbed unless abuse of discretion clearly appears.

2. Costs ⟸263—$200 penalty for useless appeal, delaying a $75,000 estate one year, not excessive.

Where an appeal from an order granting a new trial after verdict against probating a codicil clearly appears to have been for vexation and delaying the estate, which was valued at nearly $75,000, a $200 penalty for such useless appeal, causing almost a year's delay, is not excessive.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Helen A. Gries and another offered for probate the will of Nellie M. Wall, deceased, together with a codicil, and Arnold E. Wall and another contested the probate of the codicil, which was denied, and from a court order granting a motion for new trial the contestants appeal. Affirmed.

E. B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Pierce, Critchlow & Barrette, Lucius K. Chase, Walter L. Mann, and Dockweiler, Mott & Dockweiler, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial with respect to a part of the judgment.

The respondents offered for probate a document purporting to be the will of the decedent, and another document purporting to be a codicil thereto. The appellants contested the probate of the codicil on the ground that the same was not executed by the decedent either in the manner prescribed by section 1276 of the Civil Code or at all. The jury returned a special verdict to the effect that said Nellie M. Wall did not sign the said codicil, nor acknowledge nor declare to the subscribing witnesses that the same was her will, and that said witnesses did not sign the codicil at the request of Nellie M. Wall in her presence and in the presence of each other. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict, denying probate to the codicil. Thereupon the proponents moved for a new trial of the issues relating to the codicil on the grounds of newly discovered evidence; insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; that the verdict was against the law, and for errors of law occurring at the trial. The court granted the motion on all of said grounds, and set aside the part of the judgment which denied probate to said codicil.

[1] The trial court in acting upon a motion for a new trial, particularly on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or findings, has a wide discretion, and its action thereon, either for or against the motion, will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it clearly appears to the appellate court that the discretion was abused. This proposition has been so often decided that it is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of it. In the present case, three eyewitnesses, daughters of the decedent, testified directly and positively that the decedent acknowledged her signature to the document proposed as a codicil to them, and declared the same to be a codicil to her will, and that two of them, namely, Helen A. Gries and Bessie Elliott, then and there at her request, signed their names thereto as witnesses to the execution thereof in her presence and in the presence of each other. It is difficult to conceive of clearer or more positive evidence establishing the execution of the will than was presented in this case. The contradiction thereof consisted of the evidence of the three other children of the decedent, to the effect that in their opinion the signature to the codicil was not the signature of the decedent, and the testimony of a handwriting expert to the effect that, after comparing the same with numerous admittedly genuine signatures of the decedent, it was his opinion that the signature to the codicil was not genuine. There was also some testimony of circumstances tending to show that the subscribing witnesses to the will were not present at the house of the decedent on the day the will was signed by her, as claimed by the proponents. In support of the genuineness of the signature there was the additional testimony of two bank cashiers, who had been for some years accustomed to identifying the signature of the decedent on checks and other documents in connection with her account at the bank, each of whom testified, in effect, that they believed the signature to the codicil to be her genuine signature.

[2] It is obvious that in this state of the evidence it was within the discretion of the court to grant a new trial. If he believed the evidence of the witnesses for the proponents, it was his duty to do so. While it is true that on cross-examination the said witnesses contradicted themselves and showed evidence of considerable agitation, there was nothing from which, as a matter of law, we can say the court should have refused to credit their testimony. The judge who tried the case was the judge who granted the new trial, and he saw and heard the witnesses as they were testifying, and was in a much better position to determine their credibility than this court could possibly be. It is unnecessary to consider the other points presented in the motion for a new trial. Upon this ground alone the order must be affirmed. This proposition is so well established that we are unable to perceive any reason for the taking of this appeal, except a desire for vexation and delay. It is a proper case for the imposition of a penalty on the appellants. It appears that the estate was of the value of something near $75,000. A penalty of $200 for a useless appeal which has caused a delay of almost a year cannot be considered excessive.

The judgment is affirmed, and it is ordered that the respondents recover of the appellants the sum of $200 as damages on account of the appeal, and their costs.

We concur: OLNEY, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 415

INYO COUNTY v. GIVEN et al. (L. A. 6044.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 28, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜916(1)—Denial taken as true on appeal from judgment on pleadings.

Defendant's denials of allegations of complaint must be taken as true on appeal from judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings.

2. Dedication ⊜1—Governed by principles affecting conveyances and gifts.

A dedication, being a voluntary transfer of an interest in land, partakes both of the nature of a grant and of a gift, and is governed by the fundamental principles which control such transactions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dedication.]

3. Dedication ⊜31—Not binding until acceptance.

A dedication, like a contract, consists of an offer and acceptance, and is not binding until acceptance, proof of which must be unequivocal.

4. Dedication ⊜37—Acceptance may be "actual" or "implied."

Acceptance of dedication may be actual or implied, being "actual" when formal acceptance is made by the proper authorities, and "implied" when a use has been made of the property by the public for such a length of time as will evidence an intention to accept the dedication.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Actual Acceptance; Implied Acceptance.]

5. Dedication ⊜29—Sale of lots with reference to map not irrevocable dedication before acceptance.

The mere making of sales of lots with reference to a map showing streets does not constitute an irrevocable dedication to the public; an acceptance being necessary to constitute dedication as between owner and public.

6. Dedication ⊜35(1)—Order of abandonment not acceptance of offer of dedication.

Board of supervisors' order, vacating and abandoning certain streets delineated on plat, did not constitute an acceptance of the offer of dedication.

7. Dedication ⟹35(1)—Rescission of abandonment not an acceptance of offer of dedication.

Board of supervisors' order rescinding an order vacating and abandoning certain streets and avenues delineated on a plat, did not constitute an acceptance of an offer of dedication, where prior to the order of abandonment the offer of dedication had been withdrawn; the only effect of the order rescinding the abandonment being to leave the matter in the condition in which it was prior to the order.

8. Dedication ⟹35(1)—Suit 13 years after rescission of offer not acceptance of dedication.

Commencement of action by county to have certain street declared a public highway, and to abate an obstruction thereon, 13 years after offer of dedication had been made, and after it had been rescinded, held not to constitute an acceptance of offer of dedication.

9. Dedication ⟹65—Street became dedicator's property on abandonment.

Under Pol. Code, § 2643, board of supervisors of county had power to abandon rights of public in streets, and on such abandonment the proffered easement reverted, and the land became the private property of the dedicator.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the County of Inyo against Paul M. Given and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal Reversed.

A. H. Swallow, of Bishop, for appellants.

Jess Hession, of Independence, for respondent.

The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice KERRIGAN of the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District while acting as justice pro tempore in this court in place of Mr. Justice MELVIN. It is adopted as the opinion of this court.

This action was brought by the county of Inyo to have a certain street decreed a public highway and to remove and abate an obstruction thereon. As judgment went for plaintiff on the pleadings a review of the same becomes necessary. Plaintiff alleged, in substance, that in December, 1900, one A. M. Given filed in the recorder's office of Inyo county a plat of the Given addition to the town of Big Pine, and that on said plat certain streets, avenues, and alleys were delineated, including a street known as Washington street; that subsequently Given sold lots in said addition to certain persons, and that said Washington street was dedicated by Given to the use of the public, and particularly to certain purchasers named in the complaint; that thereafter in December, 1913, defendant Paul Given made an oral application to the board of supervisors, without any petition in writing, for an order vacating and abandoning certain of these streets and avenues delineated on said plat, including that portion of Washington street north of the north line of Center street. That to procure this order it is alleged defendant made certain false representations to the board of supervisors concerning the sale of said lots, and that as a result thereof the board in December, 1913, made an order without the knowledge, consent, or acquiescence of any of the abutting owners, vacating certain of the streets, including that portion of Washington street above mentioned. Further allegations recite that in so doing the board exceeded its authority and that thereafter in January, 1914, after learning of the false representations, it made an order revoking and rescinding that portion of the order and resolution relating to Washington street. It is also charged that while Washington street was a public highway, dedicated as aforesaid, defendant Lena T. Given placed certain obstructions thereon, and that she refused to remove the same upon demand being made. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled. Defendants answering, denied that the portion of Washington street referred to had ever been opened or used as a street or public highway, or that it was ever accepted as such by the county, and alleged that no lots abutting upon the streets or portions thereof vacated by the order of the board had ever been sold to any person. They also denied that any false representations were ever made to the board to induce the members thereof to make the revoking order, or that the board ever relied upon any such representations in making the same. On the trial defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or entitle the plaintiff to any relief against the defendants, or either of them. The trial court held, however, that the board of supervisors had no authority or jurisdiction to make the order vacating and abandoning the streets, and further concluded that as the answer did not controvert the allegations of the complaint constituting dedication, it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, and ordered judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings. It is defendants' contention that the court erred in overruling their demurrer, and further erred in not giving judgment in their favor. We are of the opinion that the judgment as rendered finds no support in the record.

[1] The allegations of the complaint with reference to the dedication of the land recite that defendants' predecessors in interest had sold to different persons lots in the tract according to the map or plat, and that there was thereby created an irrevocable easement in the streets and avenues delineated on such map. As above indicated the answer of defendants not only specifically alleges that no lots had ever been sold on the streets or portions thereof vacated by the order of December, 1913, but it also denies that any part of that portion of Washington street affected by the order had ever been opened or used or accepted by the public as a highway. These denials of plaintiff's conclusion that there was a dedication must be taken as true; judgment having been entered on the pleadings.

[2-4] Counsel for both parties have discussed at length the questions of the power of boards of supervisors to abandon highways, or to revoke, upon a proper showing, an order made with reference thereto. To our minds, however, the controlling question in this case is whether or not there has been an offer and acceptance of dedication of the street in question to public use as a public highway. Considering a dedication as a voluntary transfer of an interest in land, it partakes both of a nature of a grant and of a gift, and is governed by the fundamental principles which control such transactions. Hence a dedication, like a contract, consists of an offer and acceptance, and it is settled law that a dedication is not binding until acceptance, proof of which must be unequivocal. 18 Corpus Juris, p. 72. The acceptance may be actual or implied. It is actual when formal acceptance is made by the proper authorities, and implied when a use has been made of the property by the public for such a length of time as will evidence an intention to accept the dedication. Elliott v. McIntosh (App.) 183 Pac. 692. Two things, however, are necessary to a complete dedication, an offer and acceptance. A dedication without acceptance is, in law, merely an offer to dedicate, and such offer does not impose any burdens nor confer any rights, unless there is an acceptance. The rule therefore is that acceptance on the part of the public is necessary to a valid dedication of land as a highway. 1 Elliott on Roads and Streets, § 122; 8 Rul. Cas. Law, p. 898. Respondent claims, however, that defendants are estopped to deny that the streets delineated on the map were accepted, by reason of the filing of the map and the sale of lots with reference thereto, and it was upon this theory, no doubt, that the trial court based its decision.

That some confusion exists in the authorities in this state where the subject has received consideration there can be no doubt. Some of the cases confuse the doctrine of dedication with other doctrines pertinent only to private interrelations growing out of sales. The case of Town of San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, 13 Pac. 405, is of such a character. It is there held that where an owner of land lays off a town and makes a map thereof showing it to be divided into streets, alleys, and lots, and then sells lots with reference to such map, he thereby makes an irrevocable dedication of the space represented on the map as streets, to the use of the public, and that in such a case no formal acceptance is necessary by the town authorities. The rule announced in this case is mere dictum, as it appeared that there was an acceptance. The rule declared in that case is one of constructive dedication, and undoubtedly could be invoked in an action between the dedicator and his grantees. But the purchasers here, if there be any, are not complaining. This action is one brought by a county to abate an obstruction upon property which it claims to be a public highway. There is a distinction between the rights accruing to the public generally and the purchasers of lots according to a map upon an offer of dedication. Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 152 Pac. 915; People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 79, 22 Pac. 474, 15 Am. St. Rep. 22.

[5] As before stated, so far as the public is concerned, there must be an acceptance to complete an offer of dedication. Dedication is the joint effect of an offer by the owner to dedicate land, and an acceptance of such offer. There can be no dedication without the participation of both. City of Anaheim v. Langenberger, 134 Cal. 608, 610, 66 Pac. 855. Contrary to the doctrine announced in the Le Breton Case, the mere making of sales of lots with reference to a map does not therefore constitute an irrevocable dedication to the public. As between an owner of land and the public, this act alone is not sufficient to constitute dedication. An acceptance must be had either by user or by some formal act. See note, 57 Am. St. Rep. 753. So far, therefore, as the Le Breton opinion can be construed as militating against the rule, it should have no weight. People v. Reed, supra. The rule that such act simply constitutes an offer to dedicate which does not become effectual until acceptance is reflected in a long line of cases in this state. People v. Reed, supra; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 53, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145; Schmitt v. San Francisco, 100 Cal. 307, 34 Pac. 961; Koshland v. Spring, 116 Cal. 689, 48 Pac. 58; Prescott v. Edwards, 117 Cal. 298, 49 Pac. 178, 59 Am. St. Rep. 186; Niles v. City of Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 572, 58 Pac. 190; City of Anaheim v. Langenberger, supra; City of Los Angeles v. McCollum, 156 Cal. 148, 103 Pac. 914, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378; Eltinge v. Santos, supra; Elliott v. McIntosh, supra.

[6, 7] Here the answer denied that the streets in question had ever been opened or used as a street or public highway, or that it was ever accepted as such by the county, and it further denied that lots abutting thereon had ever been sold to any person. The affect of the allegations of the answer therefore is that the land in question, not having been accepted, is not a public street, unless it can be said that the effect of either of the orders of the board amounted to an acceptance of the offer of dedication. It is not contended, nor could it successfully be, that the order of abandonment amounted to an acceptance. If it had any effect in this relation it can be construed only as a rejection of the offer. The manifest object of the petition to the board was to remove any presumption to dedication from the record that the filing of the map or plat of the property had created, for at the time the application was made, so the complaint avers, the plaintiffs had erected a fence across the property, thereby evidencing their intention to revoke the offer of dedication. The only effect, if any, of this order of the board rescinding its vacating order was to leave the matter in the condition it was prior to the order of abandonment, and at that time, as above shown, the offer of dedication had been withdrawn.

[8] The only other act or circumstance that could possibly be construed as an acceptance is the filing of the present action, but the mere filing of this action 13 years after the offer was made, and after it was rescinded, can in no manner be construed as an acceptance. City of Anaheim v. Langenberger, 134 Cal. 611, 66 Pac. 855. There is, therefore, nothing so far as the pleadings show that would in any manner indicate an acceptance of the offer of dedication.

[9] It might be said in conclusion that it is very doubtful if the board had power to set aside the order abandoning the highway. If we assume that the streets and portions thereof in question had become highways, there is no question but that the board of supervisors, acting in its legislative capacity, had the power to abandon the rights of the public therein (Pol. Code, § 2643), and no petition was necessary to bring about this action Symons v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 555, 42 Pac. 913, 47 Pac. 453; Brown v. Board of Supervisors, 124 Cal. 274, 57 Pac. 82; Swift v. Board of Supervisors, 16 Cal. App. 72, 116 Pac. 317. Having done so, the proffered easement reverted, and the land thereby became the private property of the dedicator. Keena v. Board of Supervisors, 89 Cal. 11, 26 Pac. 615. In the absence of a new offer of dedication the only manner in which plaintiff could again acquire the property would be by condemnation proceedings.

It is true that the complaint alleged fraud in the procurement of the abandoning order, but this is denied in the answer, and, judgment having been had on the pleadings, this denial stands admitted as true. The conclusion we have reached that there was no acceptance of the offer makes further discussion of this question unnecessary.

From what we have said it follows that the judgment should be, and it is hereby, reversed.

WILBUR, SLOANE, and LENNON, JJ., concur.

183 Cal. 300

MERCANTILE TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. ALL PERSONS CLAIMING, etc. (McGLADE, Respondent). (S. F. 8428.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸714(5)—Brief cannot be looked to to show that court struck out evidence.

Where a record showed the proper admission of an abstract under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855a, as secondary evidence of a lease destroyed by fire, and decision of court was seemingly made with such evidence in the record, information in the brief that court admitted evidence only tentatively, and later struck it out, cannot be considered.

2. Appeal and error ⟸843(1)—Where reversal is required on one ground, other grounds not considered.

Where a reversal is necessary upon one ground, other grounds for reversal need not be considered.

3. Evidence ⟸588—Testimony held not overcome by geometrical inconsistency.

In a proceeding to quiet title to property in a block in a city, a decree for defendant held plainly not supported by the evidence, since the evidence upon which the witnesses all agreed, and which was supported by all probabilities, cannot be overcome by its inconsistency geometrically with an estimated street frontage.

4. Evidence ⟸372(12)—Abstract of record of destroyed lease admissible as ancient document, although instrument was defective.

In view of the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1951, that the record of an instrument affecting real property may be used in evidence, and Civ. Code, § 1207, that the record of any instrument recorded prior to January, 1915, may be so used notwithstanding defect in execution or in the certificate of acknowledgment or the absence thereof, and that where record was made within 15 years, genuineness of instrument must be proved, there is a prima facie presumption that such an instrument, more than 15 years old, and recorded before January, 1915, is genuine, although the record shows an instrument which would not prove itself because of such defects.

5. Evidence ⟸370(8)—Abstract of destroyed record admissible without other proof of genuineness.

The fundamental purpose of Code Civ. Proc. § 1855a, is to make abstracts of record available as secondary evidence, where the records were destroyed, and where such abstract shows the record of an instrument which, if not destroyed, could have been introduced without other proof of its genuineness, and would have raised a prima facie presumption of its genuineness, such abstract is admissible without other proof of genuineness.

6. Evidence ⊂372(12)—Abstract of recorded lease held admissible without further proof of genuineness regardless of certificate of acknowledgment.

An abstract of a lease recorded more than 15 years before trial is sufficient as secondary evidence of the record under Civ. Code, § 1207, regardless of whether there was a certificate of acknowledgment or not, and is admissible in evidence without further proof, in a case where secondary evidence is admissible.

7. Evidence ⊂70—Abstract not noting defect raises presumption of proper acknowledgment.

Where an abstracter under duty to note the absence of a certificate of acknowledgment conforming to statutory requirements made no record thereon such failure raises the presumption that it had a proper certificate, which presumption is strengthened by the fact of recording, which could not lawfully be done without such certificate, making the abstract competent prima facie evidence thereof in quieting title.

8. Evidence ⊂372(12)—Scope of curative act in respect to abstract of destroyed recorded instruments.

Where abstract of destroyed record of a lease, made more than 15 years before, was offered as evidence, and the lease was executed by a party affixing his mark, any defect in not showing that the execution was witnessed, as required by Civ. Code, § 14, and Code Civ. Proc. § 17, come directly within the curative provision of Civ. Code, § 1207; but, where the abstracter under duty to note any such defect has not done so, the abstract is evidence that there was no such defect.

9. Evidence ⊂372(10)—Ancient documents rule held not applicable in suit to quiet title.

In a suit to quiet title against defendant claiming by adverse possession, where abstract of record of destroyed lease, made more than 15 years before, was offered in evidence, objection that payments of rent were as consistent with the defendant's theory of tenancy in only a part of the property as with the plaintiff's theory of tenancy in all is suggestive of a rule applicable to ancient documents, but which has no reference to a record which itself proves the instrument or to secondary evidence of that record; no such requirement being contained in the Code sections making an abstract competent primary evidence, where the record was destroyed.

10. Evidence ⊂273(4)—Lease defectively executed admissible as showing acknowledgment of tenancy.

In an action to quiet title, an acknowledgment by defendant that he held the property, not as owner or adverse claimant, but as tenant, made in his lease, is not affected as evidence of a declaration against interest by the fact that the lease may not have been validly executed on the part of lessor by his attorney in fact; the power of attorney not being shown.

11. Evidence ⊂186(9)—Abstract of destroyed record of lease held admissible, being presumed to set out all material points.

In an action to quiet title against defendant, who claimed by adverse possession, where abstract of destroyed record of lease was objected to as being a mere summary, such abstract was admissible, as it must be presumed to set out all the materal points of the lease as recorded.

12. Evidence ⊂372(4)—Exactitude and certainty of proof of ancient instruments not required.

In a suit to quiet title, the same degree of exactitude and certainty of proof cannot be required in dealing with old instruments and muniments of title as with the recently executed ones, particularly where the record has been destroyed and the Code sections, making available abstracts of such records, may not be given a construction which would avoid their purpose.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Suit by the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco against all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, certain described real property or any part thereof to quiet title, in which Mary F. McGlade appeared as a defendant. Judgment for the named defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco (R. L. McWilliams, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is a so-called "all persons" suit, brought to establish the title of the plaintiff to certain real estate in the city of San Francisco. One Mary F. McGlade appeared in the action as a defendant and answered, claiming to be herself the owner of a one-half interest in a portion of the property, with the result that as to this portion the action assumed the character of an ordinary suit to quiet title by the plaintiff against Mrs. McGlade. The trial court found that Mrs. McGlade was in fact the owner of the interest claimed by her, and gave judgment accordingly, from which the plaintiff appeals. One of the grounds urged by the plaintiff for reversal is that the evidence does not justify the finding of ownership in the defendant.

The property as to which the plaintiff sought to establish title was the major portion of the block lying between Washington and Oregon streets on its southerly and northerly sides, respectively, and fronting on its eastern side on The Embarcadero, formerly East street, which forms the waterfront of the city. Washington and Oregon streets run very nearly east and west, but The Embarcadero at this point runs nearly northwesterly and southeasterly, so that Washington street starts from it at an angle, and the corner of the block formed by Washington street and The Embarcadero is a gore or an acute angle of about 45 degrees. The portion of the property in which the defendant claims an interest is this gore.

The plaintiff is admittedly the owner of the record title to all the property to which it sought to establish title, including the gore. It acquired it from one Richard D. Chandler subsequent to the San Francisco fire and earthquake of 1906. Chandler had acquired it in 1882 from one Garrison, who in turn had acquired it from the state in 1854. The defendant's claim is of title by adverse possession of the corner on the part of her father, one Drobaz, who died in 1905, and to a one-half interest in whose estate she succeeded. Included in the property originally acquired by Garrison from the state and subsequently conveyed by him to Chandler, and passing from the latter to the plaintiff, was the lot immediately to the west of the corner. Drobaz appears in possession of this lot in 1866, admittedly as a tenant of Garrison, and continued in such possession, paying rent therefor, first to Garrison and then to Chandler, until the time of his death. After his death this possession as tenant was continued by his heirs until all the improvements were destroyed by the fire of 1906. Along with the possession of this lot, Drobaz had possession of the corner, and the final question in the present controversy is as to whether he held such possession as tenant, or under a claim of adverse and independent ownership. Drobaz never paid any taxes on the property, but the block was not accurately described on the tax assessment maps, and it seems to be assumed that the corner was never assessed.

The lot to the west of the corner was improved with a two-story building when Drobaz appears in 1866 in possession of it as tenant. The corner to the east was unimproved, and had not been filled, and was still covered by the waters of the bay. Between 1866 and 1875 Drobaz inclosed the corner with a small fence and used it for drying nets, and filled it in. In 1875 he constructed a building on it immediately against the building on the lot to the west. Both buildings were destroyed by fire about 1877, and thereupon Drobaz erected a new building covering both pieces of property. The new building was apparently built as a unit, and without reference to any difference in ownership between the eastern and western portions of the land it occupied. There was, however, a stairway leading to the second story from Washington street, which, according to the testimony of all the witnesses on the point, was on, or approximately on, the east line of the old building occupied by Drobaz as tenant. This new building remained until the fire of 1906, when all possession by the heirs of Drobaz ceased, without any attempt on their part to retake possession and without any assertion of interest until after the commencement of the present action in 1911.

[1, 2] There was considerable evidence introduced in addition to that showing the foregoing, some of which tended to show a claim of ownership by Drobaz to the corner, and other of which tended to show that he occupied it only as a tenant in conjunction with the lot to the west, which he admittedly held in that capacity. It is not necessary, however, for the purposes of this opinion to state more than one bit of this evidence. The public records of San Francisco were for the most part destroyed by the fire of 1906, and for the purpose of permitting the use of secondary evidence of them, the Legislature in 1911 adopted a new section of the Code of Civil Procedure numbered 1855a. The material part of it reads:

"When, in any action, it is desired to prove the contents of any public record or document lost or destroyed by conflagration or other public calamity and after proof of such loss or destruction, there is offered in proof of such contents (a) any abstract of title made and issued and certified as correct prior to such loss or destruction, and purporting to have been prepared and made in the ordinary course of business by any person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of preparing and making abstracts of title prior to such loss or destruction; * * * the same may, without further proof, be admitted in evidence for the purpose aforesaid. * * *"

Pursuant to this section, there was received in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff an old abstract of title for the purpose of proving the record of a certain lease. This lease, according to the abstract, was one by Garrison to Drobaz covering all the property occupied by the latter, that is, covering the corner now in dispute, as well as the lot to the west, and describing it all as a single piece without division. It was made, according to the abstract, in 1876, which, it is to be noted, was about the time that Drobaz first constructed a building on the corner. So far as the bill of exceptions shows, the abstract was admitted for the purpose of showing the record of this lease without objection, was never stricken out, and the decision of the trial court was made with it as a part of the evidence before it. We are informed by the briefs, however, that it was admitted in evidence only tentatively, and that finally the court concluded that it was not admissible, and made its decision as if it were not in evidence. If this were the fact, as undoubtedly it was, since both sides assume it, the plaintiff should have insisted upon some ruling being made by the lower court which would appear in the bill of exceptions, and show the rejection of the evidence. As the record now stands, the question as to its admissibility is not presented, and the decision of the lower court against the plaintiff appears as if made with this evidence before it, although its very cogent and persuasive character is plain. Whether, in spite of its character in this respect, there was other evidence sufficient to overcome it and to sustain the decision, we need not consider, however, since a reversal is necessary on another ground.

[3] The whole theory of the defendant's case is that, while Drobaz was tenant of the lot to the west of the corner, he was not a tenant as to the property east of the east line of the building on that lot. The proof is plain, and is not controverted that west of this line the property he occupied was occupied by him only as a tenant. The proof by the defendant as to the location of the westerly boundary of the property in which she claimed an interest by reason of the adverse possession of her father was always as to the location of the east line of the old building to the west of the corner, and of the stairway built on that line when the old building was destroyed in 1877 and a new one erected covering both pieces of land. The evidence is also unanimous that this line ran at right angles to Washington street. It is evident, also, that almost necessarily it must have so run. The lot to the west fronted on Washington street, and was not a corner lot. There was nothing to require a building upon it to be built upon a bias. It is almost inconceivable that a building erected on such a lot would run, not at right angles with the street on which it fronted, but on a bias of about 45 degrees. Nevertheless, the property in which the judgment decrees that the defendant has an interest is described as a parallelogram whose frontage on Washington street is the distance between the corner on The Embarcadero and a point which it appears clearly from the evidence was located as the point where the east line of the old building began, and whose sides are the line of The Embarcadero on the east, and a line parallel thereto on the west. In other words, the west line of the property in which the defendant is decreed to have an interest runs northwesterly from a point on Washington street and at an angle of about 45 degrees with it, while the west line of the property in which alone, according to the proof, the defendant claims or can have an interest runs from the same point northerly and at right angles to Washington street. The major portion of the property described in the decree is west of this right angle line, and is a part of the property admittedly occupied by Drobaz as tenant and the plaintiff's title to which was not questioned at the trial.

The defendant's only answer to this point is that the witnesses testified that the gore occupied by Drobaz had a length on The Embarcadero of 70 or 73 feet, and that this is inconsistent with a west line running at right angles to Washington street, since such a line would intersect The Embarcadero at a point considerably less than 70 or 73 feet from the corner. But the witnesses were all testifying from memory as to a fact observed many years before. Estimates of distances are rarely accurate, even when the observations on which they are based are fresh. The testimony, on the other hand, that the building on the lot to the west ran at right angles to the street is quite reliable. If the building had run on a bias, particularly a bias anything like as great as 45 degrees, it would have been a most noticeable thing, certain to be observed and remembered. It would be wholly unreasonable to allow the evidence to this effect on which all the witnesses agree and which is supported by all the probabilities of the situation to be overcome by its inconsistency geometrically with the estimated frontage of the gore on The Embarcadero. In this respect the decree is plainly not supported by the evidence, and a new trial should be had.

[4] For the guidance of the court and parties upon a new trial, it is advisable that we pass upon the admissibility of the evidence as to the lease by Garrison to Drobaz, previously mentioned, since the question is certain to arise, and, although not in reality presented by the present record, has been fully argued before us.

No objection is made to the abstract for want of any of the preliminary matters required by section 1855a, Code of Civil Procedure, previously quoted. The objections made are some seven in number. The first and most fundamental is that there was no proof other than the abstract itself of the genuineness of the lease. The same point is put by counsel in a little different form in the reiterated objection that other than the abstract there was no proof that the lease ever in fact existed. Closely connected with the point also is the second objection that the abstract does not show that the instrument as recorded bore any certificate of acknowledgment. This objection is closely connected with the first, because if the record did show a proper certificate of acknowledgment, it would, under our Code, have proved prima facie the execution of the original instrument. Both objections, however, involve a misconception of the statutory provisions permitting (1) the use in evidence of the record of an instrument instead of the instrument itself, and (2) the use of an abstract where the record has been destroyed.

First, in regard to the use of a record. Our Code provides (section 1951, Code Civ. Proc.) that the record of any instrument affecting real property may be used in evidence with like effect as the original instrument itself. If the record purports to show an instrument which would prove itself, so to speak, as where it bears a proper certificate of acknowlegment of execution, the record is admissible without other proof of the existence or genuinenss of the instrument and, in fact, for the very purpose of showing that such a genuine instrument did exist. There is also at least one case other than this just mentioned where the record alone is admissible and sufficient for the same purpose. That case is the one of a record made before January 1, 1915, and also made more than 15 years before the time at which it is sought to use it in evidence. Section 1207, Civil Code, provides, in effect, that the record of any instrument recorded prior to January 1, 1915, may be used in evidence "notwithstanding any defect, omission, or informality in the execution of the instrument, or in the certificate of acknowledgment thereof, or the absence of any such certificate." The section further provides that when the record was made within 15 years of the time it is sought to use it in evidence, proof must first be made of the genuineness of the instrument. The plain and necessary implication is that such proof is not required where the record is more than 15 years old. The result is that, even though the record shows an instrument which would not prove itself because of the want of a proper certificate of acknowledgment or some defect in the manner of execution, yet if the record be 15 years old and was made prior to January 1, 1915, these latter facts are the equivalent, and serve the purpose of the proof of genuineness ordinarily required as a prerequisite to the introduction in evidence of an instrument or its record. They raise, in other words, a prima facie presumption that the instrument is genuine.

[5] Second, in regard to the use of an abstract of the records. The fundamental purpose of section 1855a, Code of Civil Procedure, heretofore quoted, is to make available as secondary evidence of the record, where the latter has been destroyed, abstracts of the record made under such circumstances as to be reasonably reliable. Such secondary evidence, when introduced in a proper case, proves primarily the record, and, the record being proved, the effect is exactly the same to the extent to which it is proved as if it were itself used in evidence instead of being proven by the secondary evidence of the abstract. In other words, if the secondary evidence of the abstract proves the record of an instrument, which record, if not destroyed, could have been introduced in evidence without other proof of the genuineness of the instrument recorded, and would have the effect of raising a prima facie presumption of genuineness, then the abstract may be introduced without such other proof and with like effect.

[6] Applying these propositions to the case at bar, no objection is made as we have said, that the case is not one where a proper abstract may be used as secondary evidence, or that the particular abstract did not conform to the statutory requirements. The abstract showed, furthermore, the record of a lease executed ostensibly by Drobaz as lessee, recorded prior to January 1, 1915, and more than 15 years before the time of trial. It was sufficient, therefore, as secondary evidence of a record which, under section 1207, Civil Code, regardless of whether there was a certificate of acknowledgment or not, was admissible in evidence without other proof of the genuineness of the instrument recorded, and raised a prima facie presumption of such genuineness. The abstract being sufficient as such secondary evidence, and the case being one where secondary evidence was admissible, it follows that it was admissible without further proof, and had the effect of making a prima facie showing that the lease whose record it showed was genuine.

[7] We would not, however, rest the disposition of these objections entirely on the fact that the record proven was one which came within the provisions of section 1207, Civil Code, with the possible implication that we did not consider the abstract sufficient to prove a record showing an instrument bearing a due certificate of acknowledgment, so that without section 1207, Civil Code, the record would be admissible in evidence without further proof. The abstract, to be sure, contains no notation of an acknowledgment of execution of the lease. But it contains no notation that the record failed to show such acknowledgment. An abstract is but a summary of the record. It does not purport to set it out in full. Some abstractors always note the acknowledgment; others do not. The present abstract in some instances notes it, and in others it does not. Among the latter instances are a number of instruments such as mortgages and trust deeds to banks or bankers which it is inconceivable were not acknowledged. But while a competent abstractor may or may not note the fact of acknowledgment if it appear, he will invariably note its absence if it does not appear. The absence of a certificate of acknowledgment conforming to the statutory requirements for such certificates is a defect which it is his duty to catch and note. If he does not note its absence or some defect in it, he in effect certifies that the record shows an instrument which is properly acknowledged.

In Attebery v. Blair, 244 Ill. 363, 91 N. E. 475, 135 Am. St. Rep. 342, an abstract was offered in evidence under a statute much the same as ours to prove the destroyed record of certain deeds. It was objected that the abstract did not show that the deeds were under seal, a requisite for their validity according to the Illinois law. The court held in effect that if the record had not shown that the deeds were under seal, it was the duty of the abstractor to note that fact, and, there being no note to that effect, the abstract was evidence that seals were shown by the record. There is no distinction in principle between this case and the present one where the abstract does not note a want of a certificate of acknowledgment or any defect in it. See, also, Warvelle on Abstracts (3d Ed.) p. 244.

We might add that the presumption arising from the fact that the abstract does not note a defective or lacking certificate of acknowledgment is strengthened by the fact that the instrument should not have been recorded unless it bore a proper certificate; and yet it was recorded. Altogether, we have no hesitation in holding that the abstract was sufficient to prove prima facie as a matter of secondary evidence that the record of the lease showed a due certificate of acknowledgment entitling the lease to record, and making the record sufficient evidence in itself without recourse to the curative provisions of section 1207, Civil Code.

[8] What has already been said answers the third objection, which is that the abstract shows that Drobaz, who was illiterate, executed the lease by affixing his mark without showing that the execution in that fashion was witnessed, as required by section 14 of the Civil Code and section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If this defect existed, it came directly within the curative provisions of section 1207, which apply to defects in the manner of execution as well as in the matter of acknowledgments. Furthermore, such a defect is one which again it was the duty of the abstractor to catch and note, and his certificate without such note appearing is in effect a certificate that the defect did not appear in the record, so that the abstract is sufficient prima facie evidence that it did not exist.

[9] The fourth objection is that there is no proof that anything was done under the lease, that is, the facts which appear, such as the payment of rental by Drobaz and his possession of the property, are as consistent with the defendant's theory that Drobaz was the tenant only of the property to the west of the gore as with the plaintiff's theory that he was tenant as to all that he occupied. The rule suggested by the objection is one applicable to ancient documents. It has no reference to a record which of itself proves the instrument or to secondary evidence of that record. It is not a requirement of the Code sections which make the record competent primary evidence and the abstract competent secondary evidence of the record.

[10] The fifth objection is that according to the abstract the lease was actually executed, not by Garrison himself, but by one Pratt on his behalf as his attorney in fact, and the existence of a power of attorney by Garrison to Pratt was not shown. Of course, if one were claiming title through Garrison by means of an instrument purported to be executed for him by some attorney in fact, or were seeking to rely upon such an instrument as against him or against an interest at the time in him, proof of authority on the part of his purported agent would be essential, unless the instrument were an ancient one and the circumstances such that authority would be presumed. But in the present case it is sought to use the instrument, not against Garrison or any interest he had, but against the interest of the other party to it, Drobaz. As a declaration against interest on the part of Drobaz, an acknowledgment by him that he held the property not as owner but as tenant, the effect of the instrument is not changed by the fact that it may not have been validly executed on the part of Garrison.

The sixth objection is that the lease calls for a monthly rental of $250, while so far as the evidence shows the only rental paid by Drobaz was $150 a month. If there were this discrepancy in fact between the terms of the purported lease and the actual conduct of the parties, it would seem that it would affect only the weight to be given to the evidence, not its admissibility. The claimed discrepancy, however, does not in fact exist. The only evidence as to the amount of rental paid by Drobaz is as to rental paid subsequent to the expiration of the term of the lease. There is no evidence whatever as to the amount of rental actually paid by Drobaz during the time the lease, if genuine and acted upon the parties, would have been in force.

[11] The seventh and last objection is that the abstract is but a summary of the contents of the lease, and does not purport to state them in full, and it may be that there were further terms not set out which would materially change the weight and effect to be given to the instrument. But it was the duty of the abstractor to set out the substance of all material terms. Taylor v. Williams, 2 Colo. App. 559, 31 Pac. 504; Attebery v. Blair, 244 Ill. 363, 91 N. E. 475, 135 Am. St. Rep. 342; Warvelle on Abstracts (3d Ed.) p. 2; 1 Cor. Juris, 366. The strong probability and the presumption are that there were no material terms not set out.

[12] Upon this whole subject we would say that in dealing with old instruments and muniments of title, the parties and witnesses to which are dead, and as to whose execution or the circumstances under which they were executed, or as to whose exact contents in case they or the original record of them is lost, certain and positive evidence is not possible, the same exactitude and certainty of proof cannot be required as is properly required in the case of more recent events. The courts must go upon probabilities and presumptions. To do otherwise would be to destroy valid titles, not to sustain them. In the present case the abstract in question was made by one of the best-known and most reliable abstractors of the early years of San Francisco. It is before us, and we venture to say that no lawyer of experience in the examination of titles in that city but would, on examining the abstract, feel reasonably certain that it set forth with accuracy the material terms of the instruments noted in it and defects in acknowledgment or execution which would be manifest on the face of the record. The courts should not, by a narrow construction of the Code sections which make this evidence available, blind themselves to the light which it affords, in many cases, because of the wholesale destruction of our public records, the only reliable light which can now be had.

Our conclusion is that the abstract was admissible for the purpose of proving the lease and its execution by Drobaz.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.

(183 Cal. 409)

UNION TANK LINE CO. v. RICHARDSON, State Treasurer. (S. F. 8954.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 28, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1920.)

1. Taxation ⟸164—All "car-loaning companies operating upon railroads in this state" subject to tax.

Const. art. 13, § 14, relating to taxation of car-loaning companies "operating upon railroads in this state," held applicable to all car-loaning companies which are carrying on their business upon railroads in the state.

2. Taxation ⟸168—Oil tank line corporation held liable for gross earnings tax; "car-loaning companies operating upon railroads in this state."

Oil tank line company, incorporated in and with principal place of business in other states, which leased tank cars to corporation within the state by lease executed in other state providing for payments to be made in other state, held subject to gross earnings tax under Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. "a", imposing such tax on "car-loaning and other car companies operating upon railroads in this state."

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the Union Tank Line Company against Friend W. Richardson, as Treasurer of the State of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Raymond Benjamin, and Frank L. Guerena, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco (Herbert W. Clark, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the Union Tank Line Company, a corporation, in an action brought to recover from the defendant, Friend W. Richardson, as treasurer of the state of California, taxes paid under protest.

There is no dispute as to the facts. The plaintiff is a new Jersey corporation, having its principal place of business in the state of New York. It was doing, and was qualified to do, business in this state, where it had a managing agent. The company was engaged in the acquiring, by purchase or otherwise, of oil tank cars and the leasing thereof to shippers throughout the United States. All contracts between the plaintiff and shippers were entered into and executed in New York at the plaintiff's office, where, it appears, all payments under such contracts were made to the company. Plaintiff maintained and operated repair shops for the repair of its cars in the city of Richmond, county of Contra Costa, and in the town of El Segundo, Los Angeles county. At some time prior to March 1, 1913, plaintiff entered into a contract with the Standard Oil Company of California by which the former undertook to lease to the latter, for its use and service in the transportation of petroleum oil and other oil products within and outside of the state, such cars as might be required. In this agreement it was provided that the oil company should repair plaintiff's cars at prices which should be mutually agreed upon from time to time; that the oil company should furnish the labor and should use materials specified by the plaintiff; that all materials should be inspected by the plaintiff's agents; that the tracks of the oil company at Richmond and El Segundo should be considered "home tracks" for any part of the plaintiff's equipment, and that the plaintiff should have free and reasonable use of those tracks; that the oil company should "perform, or assume the expense of, all switching within or about its plant where such switching is occasioned by the natural operation of the plant or by instructions of the car company"; "that the time any car shall be considered to be in the possession of the oil company shall be from the day the car is placed until it is unloaded, both inclusive, and that any car prior to the time of its being placed, or ordered placed for loading, by the oil company, and after the time it is unloaded shall be subject" to the plaintiff's orders and not to those of the oil company, "except that the oil company shall carry out the instructions of the car company with respect to the distribution of its empty cars"; and that plaintiff's cars should not be sublet without the plaintiff's consent. This contract was the only contract of lease into which the plaintiff entered with any person or corporation in California, and none of plaintiff's cars other than those furnished to the oil company was operated over rail lines in this state. It is admitted that, although the plaintiff, as already shown, reserved the right to direct the movements of its cars after unloading, that right was not exercised during the period in question. The rail carriers in the state which hauled plaintiff's cars paid to the plaintiff three-fourths of one cent per mile per car, while the oil company paid a rental to the plaintiff and regular freight rates to the carriers. Plaintiff owns no railroad or rolling stock in this state other than the cars leased to the oil company. Plaintiff's vice president and treasurer testified that the provision in the contract above referred to regarding the use of the oil company's "home tracks" was for the purpose of avoiding demurrage charges, that plaintiff did not allocate particular cars for the use of the oil company, and that, to his knowledge, no cars had been sublet by the oil company either with or without the plaintiff's consent.

In 1916 the state board of equalization assessed and levied against the plaintiff the tax authorized by subdivision (a) of section 14 of acticle 13 of the Constitution. In accordance with that constitutional provision, the tax was measured by the gross receipts from the operations of the company within the state. The tax was paid to the defendant under protest, and thereafter this action was commenced to recover the amount thus paid. The court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and gave judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $4,712.54, the amount prayed for.

In the first paragraph of section 14 of article 13 of the Constitution it is provided that—

"Taxes levied, assessed and collected * * * upon railroads, including * * * refrigerator, oil, stock, fruit, and other car-loaning and other car companies operating upon railroads in this state * * * shall be levied, assessed and collected in the manner hereinafter provided." (Italics ours.)

It is conceded that the only question on this appeal is "whether the respondent was a car-loaning company operating upon railroads in this state within the meaning of the above-quoted section."

[1] It is to be observed that the verb "operate" may be used either transitively or intransitively (Rhodes v. Matthews, 67 Ind. 131, 140), and that it is used here intransitively—"operating upon railroads in this state." (Italics ours.) This must be so, because the language of the section is not confined to car-loaning companies operating cars. If it had been intended to limit the scope of the taxing provisions to those companies which operated cars, language appropriate to a clear expression of such intention would presumably have been chosen. The American Universities New Unabridged Dictionary defines "operate," when used in the intransitive, as follows: "To have or produce a desired result or effect; to act effectively." And Funk & Wagnalls' Standard Dictionary gives to the word the meaning, "To effect any result; have agency; act." If we substitute one of these definitions for the word itself as it is used in the section, the context reads, "car-loaning companies * * * acting effectively upon railroads in this state." The only interpretation which can reasonably be given to this portion of the section is that it authorizes the taxation in the manner prescribed of all car-loaning companies which are carrying on their business upon railroads in this state.

[2] And, adopting this interpretation, we think that the plaintiff clearly comes within the purview of the section. While it is true that the only contract under which plaintiff's cars were sent into this state was executed outside of the state, nevertheless that contract was performed by the plaintiff by delivering cars over, and by permitting its lessee to use those cars upon, the railroads within the state. There is nothing in the section which requires that, in order for a public service company to be taxable thereunder, all its business must be transacted within the state. The fact that a portion of plaintiff's business (the execution of its contracts and all payments thereunder) is carried on outside of the state is immaterial in this connection. Likewise it is immaterial that the plaintiff does not use its cars in this state for the transportation of its own products, for it cannot be reasonably contended that the section relates only to cars so used when it expressly designates car-loaning companies. A car-loaning company obviously does not loan them to itself for the transportation of its own products.

Plaintiff cites Wright v. Union Tank Line Co., 143 Ga. 765, 85 S. E. 994, to show that under these facts the plaintiff was not "doing business" in the state. The distinguishing feature of that case, however, was that the state of Georgia was endeavoring to collect from the plaintiff, not only a tax upon tangible property, but also a tax upon its franchise to do business in Georgia. No such question is involved here.

Section 14 of article 13 was adopted by amendment in 1910. It was the result of a movement inaugurated in 1905 to separate the systems of state and local taxation. The first paragraph (which we have quoted) provides that all taxes upon those public utilities which are enumerated therein shall be levied in the manner prescribed in the following subdivisions and shall be for state purposes only. Subdivision (a) prescribes the manner of collecting taxes on railroads, express companies, telegraph and telephone companies, gas and electric companies; subdivision (b) for taxes on insurance companies; subdivision (c) for taxes on banks, and subdivision (d) for taxes on franchises. The following rule of construction is enunciated in 12 Corpus Juris, at page 710:

"The court should look to the history of the times and examine the state of things existing when the Constitution was framed and adopted, with a view to ascertaining its objects and purposes."

In 1905 a commission was appointed by the Governor to devise a plan for the separation of state from local taxation. That commission reported in 1907, but the amendment which it recommended at that time failed of adoption at the general election of 1908. Another commission was appointed in 1909 "to recommend a plan for the revision and reform" of "the system of revenue and taxation in force in this state." It was this commission, then, which formulated this amendment and presented it to the Governor in 1910 in the form of a report which reads (page 18):

"The amendment opens the way for a separation of state from local taxation. * * * The taxes reserved for the state are: * * * (2) On the property of * * * refrigerator, and all other car companies. * * *" (Italics ours.)

To hold that plaintiff, because of the terms of its contract with the Standard Oil Company under which it relinquished to the lessee the control over its cars, was not subject to the payment of the tax authorized by subdivision (a) would be in effect to hold that any concern conducting a business in this state of one of the classes enumerated in the section could evade the payment of this tax by entering into a similar arrangement by which it would receive the earnings of its property in the state while the control thereof was stipulated to be in a lessee.

Plaintiff has caused certain of its oil cars to come into California and to be hauled over and upon the railroads in this state. It is therefore in the language of the Constitution, "operating upon railroads in this state."

Judgment reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; SHAW, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

48 Cal. App. 131

STEVENS v. PARKFORD et al. (Civ. 2785.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 10, 1920.)

1. Sales ⊜273(5)—No implied warranty that refrigerating plant contracted for would answer purpose.

In sale of a refrigerating plant, furnished precisely according to order, there was no implied warranty the machine would answer the particular purpose for which it was intended.

2. Sales ⊜441(3)—Evidence held not to show refrigerating plant did not comply with guaranty.

In an action for the price of a refrigerating plant sold, evidence held insufficient to justify the finding that the plant did not produce refrigeration in accordance with plaintiff seller's guaranty that it would be equal to the melting of one ton of ice daily.

3. Sales ⊜65—Seller entitled to recover, irrespective of his performance of separate contract.

Plaintiff, who properly installed certain cold storage receptacles for defendant in accordance with specifications, is entitled to payment without regard to whether or not he failed to comply with his separate contract, made months before, under which he installed a refrigerating plant.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Will P. Stevens against E. A. Parkford and C. B. Ford. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Andrew M. Strong, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warmer & Jones, of Ontario, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff, insisting that the findings are not supported by the evidence, appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendants.

The complaint sets forth three causes of action. By the first count it is alleged that in December, 1914, plaintiff sold, delivered, and installed in defendants' hotel, known as the Casa Blanca Hotel, certain described cooling boxes, for which defendants agreed to pay him the sum of $537.50, all of which is unpaid. The second count declares upon a written contract, dated October 21, 1914, under and pursuant to which it is alleged that plaintiff furnished and installed in said hotel a one-ton refrigerating plant and appurtenances to be used in connection therewith, for which defendants agreed to pay the sum of $763, no part of which has been paid. The third count is for $17.50 alleged to be due for a pump and oil sold defendants, as to which, since judgment therefor was rendered in favor of plaintiff, there appears to be no controversy.

While the court found that plaintiff furnished and properly installed the cooling boxes, for which defendants agreed to pay him the sum of $537.50, it further found that payment therefor so to be made by defendants was conditional and dependent upon the refrigerating system operating according to warranties set forth in the contract, dated October 21st, for the installation of the same; in other words, payment for the cooling boxes was made to depend upon the successful operation of the refrigerating plant, which, as found, "did not operate according to the provisions and warranties set forth in said contract," and did not produce refrigeration in accordance with the guaranty contained in the contract dated October 21, 1914, under which the refrigerating plant was installed.

[1] The contract for the refrigerating plant contained full and complete specifications therefor, and not a scintilla of evidence, in so far as we are advised, was offered tending to show that, as installed, it was not constructed in strict accordance with the specifications therefor. In other words, as to the refrigerating plant, defendants got precisely what they contracted for, and there was no implied warranty that the machine would answer the particular purpose for which the buyers intended to use it. Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co., 141 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 35 L. Ed. 837; Fuchs & Lang Mfg. Co. v. Kittredge & Co., 242 Ill. 88, 89 N. E. 723; Bancroft v. San Francisco Tool Co., 120 Cal. 228, 52 Pac. 496. Hence, to sustain the finding complained of, we must look to the express warranties, if any, contained in the contract. Other than as to furnishing and installing the machinery in a workmanlike manner as provided in the specifications and as to which no complaint is made, the only obligation assumed by plaintiff is the following:

"I guarantee that the above-described machine and apparatus will produce refrigeration equal to the melting of * * * tons of ice daily (with continuous operation)."

Since the contract provides for a "one-ton refrigeration machine," the guaranty should be read as providing for refrigeration equal to the melting of one ton of ice daily, and the provision "with continuous operation" is modified by another provision in the contract that "length of operation to be not over eight hours per day, provided all doors are kept closed, except when in actual service." So the guaranty was that the apparatus, operated eight hours per day, with the doors closed, except when in actual use, would produce refrigeration equal to the melting of one ton of ice per day. The record is entirely silent as to the performance of the machinery under the condition so expressed. The entire evidence offered by defendants was to the effect that the apparatus did not work satisfactorily, in that meats, poultry, milk, and cream on occasions deteriorated and became unfit for use. But plaintiff's guaranty was, not that the apparatus would produce refrigeration sufficient to preserve commodities placed in the cooling boxes, but solely that it would, subject to the conditions stated, produce refrigeration equal to the melting of one ton of ice daily, and as to which no evidence whatsoever was introduced. For aught that appears to the contrary, such degree of refrigeration might have been produced, and, notwithstanding such fact, the commodities placed in the cold storage receptacles deteriorated.

[2] Since no question is raised as to the construction of the plant in accordance with the specifications, and the only guaranty was as to the degree of refrigeration to be produced, that was the only question which the court was called upon to try. The fact that it did not perform the service satisfactorily to defendants, or that meats, fruits, and milk deteriorated, is wholly immaterial, provided the apparatus produced the degree of refrigeration guaranteed by plaintiff. The evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the plant did not produce refrigeration in accordance with the plaintiff's guaranty.

[3] The court also erred in finding that the cold storage boxes installed by plaintiff under his contract were covered by the contract for the installation of the refrigerating plant. The two contracts were entirely distinct and separate. That for the cold storage boxes, constructed in accordance with specifications, was made months after the contract for the refrigerating plant, and the position of plaintiff in reference thereto is precisely that of a third party who had put in the cooling boxes. While it is true that the contract of October 21, 1914, under which the refrigerating plant was installed, required defendants to provide the storage chambers and insulate and construct them in accordance with plaintiff's plans and instructions therefor, the construction thereof by plaintiff, under a contract wherein no reference was made to the prior contract for other work, did not render payment dependent upon whether or not the refrigerating plant should operate successfully. If done by a third party, he would have been entitled to payment, regardless of whether the refrigerating plant produced refrigeration equal to the melting of one ton of ice per day or not. And so plaintiff, having properly installed the cold storage receptacles in accordance with the specfications, is entitled to payment, without regard to whether or not he failed to comply with the contract under which he installed he refrigerating plant.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J; JAMES, J.

48 Cal. App. 67

GRIZZEL v. GOOD FELLOWS GROTTO, GRILL & OYSTER HOUSE. (Civ. 3205.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 3, 1920.)

Master and servant ⊂330(3)—Evidence held to show employer of injured mechanic was independent contractor and want of negligence on owner's part.

Judgment for owner of building, sued by carpenter injured in work thereon, held sustained by the evidence, showing plaintiff's employer was an independent contractor for the work, and failing to show any negligence of defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Meyers, Judge.

Action by Elam Grizzel against the Good Fellows Grotto, Grill & Oyster House. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

David A. Jacobs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. Plaintiff brings this action against the defendant to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while employed in the making of certain repairs on a building owned by defendant. The record discloses the fact that plaintiff was, at the time of the trial, a man 42 years of age, and a carpenter with some 10 or 12 years' experience in that calling in the city of Los Angeles; that as the result of a conversation had with one Aaron he went to work on the said building. According to his own testimony, plaintiff had no conversation in reference to his being employed, or his employment on said work, with any one except the said Aaron. In that conversation plaintiff made no inquiry as to whether Aaron was the agent, acting in any capacity for the defendant, or whether he was acting in the matter as an independent contractor.

It further appears from the record that Aaron had entered into a verbal contract with the defendant to construct a certain skylight in the building already referred to, that the price to be paid by defendant to said Aaron was stated and agreed upon, that the price so agreed upon was a lump sum, and that for this lump sum Aaron was to furnish all materials and labor. As to these facts there is no conflict in the evidence. After the conversation between Aaron and plaintiff, the latter went to work and proceeded to put in the skylight. After the opening in the ceiling was made, and because of some mistake or miscalculation of said Aaron, by reason of which the opening was not cut in the proper place, plaintiff was directed by Aaron to extend the same. During this work it was necessary to saw off certain rafters of the building, and to do this plaintiff and another man employed by Aaron placed a "2x10" scantling board across the opening and sat upon it. While thus proceeding to saw off the rafters, the ceiling, for some reason not disclosed by the evidence, gave way, causing plaintiff to fall, from which he sustained the injuries, damages for which are here sought. The case was tried to the court without a jury; the court finding for the defendant on all the issues.

The theory upon which this action is prosecuted by plaintiff is that Aaron was the ostensible agent of the defendant. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that Aaron was an independent contractor. The only evidence contained in the record—and we have read all of it—to support plaintiff's contention as to the claimed ostensible agency is the fact that plaintiff saw a card posted in defendant's place of business by the contents of which it was made to appear that the work was being done by day labor, and that the owner's name was "Good Fellows Grotto." In the blank space on this card, after the words, "Contractor's Name," appeared the words: "None. Day work." This card, as shown by the record without conflict, was the usual and ordinary "permit," which had been obtained by Aaron from the city authorities of the city of Los Angeles to perform the work. It appears that the defendant corporation, or any of its officers, or any one acting for it, knew nothing about this card. It also appears that the plaintiff, after his injuries, and within the time provided by law, made application to the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation against Aaron, and in that application, among other things, gave the name of D. W. Aaron as his employer; that after full hearing on said application at which plaintiff testified that Aaron was his employer, the commission made an award in his favor on account of the same injuries set up in this action; and that thereafter plaintiff made application to the commission to set aside such judgment of award that he might prosecute this action, which application was granted.

It is contended by respondent that, appellant having elected to take compensation against Aaron, the commission was without authority of law, and was not authorized by section 81 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as it then existed, to set aside said award, and that the judgment entered in this action may be sustained on this ground alone. We think it unnecessary to pass upon this point. As we see it, irrespective of the alleged ostensible agency of Aaron, as claimed by plaintiff, or the absence of jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission to set aside its said award, as claimed by defendant, and even though the action were involved directly against the defendant without the theory of "ostensible agency," the judgment finds ample support in the evidence. In our opinion the evidence shows without conflict: (1) That Aaron was, so far as this case is concerned, an independent contractor; and (2) that there is no proof of negligence on the part of defendant. Either of these propositions, standing alone, would be sufficient to support the judgment entered. Both propositions are, we think, sound.

Having considered all the points raised by appellant, we deem it unnecessary to cite authorities to sustain the conclusion we have reached.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WELLER, J.

48 Cal. App. 84

BROWN v. BROWN. (Civ. 3423.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 7, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹907(3)—Evidence presumed to support all findings.

Appeal being on the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions or other record of the proceedings, the evidence must be assumed to support all the findings.

2. Husband and wife ⟹31(2)—Payment of incumbrance held a partial discharge of antenuptial agreement.

Payment by wife of incumbrance on house bought by her held but a payment on account of purchase price, within her prenuptial agreement to purchase the house with her funds for the parties in their joint names and as joint tenants, and so not to entitle her to a lien as against, or reimbursement from, the husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Emma R. Brown, also known as Emma Strawn Brown, against Robert D. Brown. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Poole and Stutsman & Stutsman, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edgar K. Brown and L. B. George, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action against her husband, alleging in her complaint that certain real property in the city of Los Angeles, purchased by her with her separate funds, was, without her consent and through the unauthorized act of the defendant, deeded to plaintiff and defendant, as joint tenants; that after the execution of the deed defendant assured plaintiff that his apparent interest in said property was merely held by him in trust and for her benefit; that, relying upon these assurances, plaintiff paid $6,500 from her separate funds, in discharging a mortgage and a deed of trust on said property, and in securing the release and satisfaction of the debts secured thereby; that thereafter defendant repudiated the trust and denied any interest of plaintiff in the property, and has not paid any part of the purchase price, or of the amount expended in securing the release and discharge of the incumbrances thereon. Plaintiff further alleges that through fear and intimidation, and without any consideration on her part the defendant, some two years after the purchase, compelled her to sign a contract, reciting that the parties were owners, as joint tenants, of the real property in question, and agreeing that it be sold for the sum of $7,000, the proceeds of the sale to be equally divided between them.

On these facts plaintiff prayed for a decree that the interest of the defendant in the property be declared to be held in trust for her, and that he deed the same to her, and, if such recovery could not be had, that the court impose a lien upon defendant's interest in the property in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $7,000, the aggregate amount of the purchase price and the incumbrances discharged by her. She also prayed that the agreement entered into between her husband and herself be canceled and set aside.

The lower court found that the real property in question was purchased by the plaintiff, and the title thereto taken in the joint names of plaintiff and defendant, with full rights of survivorship between them, with the plaintiff's consent, and in performance, upon her part, of a prenuptial agreement between the parties, the consideration for which was the marriage of the parties and the defendant's release of his interest in certain property of the plaintiff in Illinois. There were other findings, to the effect that the subsequent agreement, whereby the parties acknowledged their respective interests in the property in Los Angeles to be that of joint tenants, was executed by the plaintiff voluntarily, and of her own free will, and was not induced by the improper act or through undue influence of the defendant. From the judgment entered in favor of the defendant, plaintiff appeals, claiming that the findings are inconsistent and conflicting, and that the pretended joint tenancy agreement between the parties, on which the court based its judgment, was without consideration, and consequently void.

[1] As the appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions or other record of the proceedings, we must assume that the evidence was sufficient to support all the findings of the court. Avery v. Clark, 87 Cal. 619, 629, 25 Pac. 919, 22 Am. St. Rep. 272; Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 143 Cal. 654, 657, 77 Pac. 659. Thus viewed, we find nothing in the alleged inconsistencies in the findings to warrant serious consideration of appellant's contentions.

[2] Appellant argues, in effect, that as the agreement found by the court between the parties related to the purchase by plaintiff, with her own funds, of a home for the parties and in their joint names as joint tenants, and did not specify that she should discharge any incumbrances thereon, the court's finding "that the plaintiff discharged the incumbrances upon said property pursuant to her express agreement" has no support. Aside from the fact that, under the authority of the cases cited, the finding is deemed to be sustained by the evidence, we are of the opinion that the discharge of the incumbrances, amounting to $6,500, was but a payment on account of the purchase price to that extent. The court found that the consideration for the property was $6,900 and that the cash paid down was $400. For the same reason, and because of the fact, as found by the trial court, that the property in Los Angeles was acquired in fulfillment of the contract in which plaintiff agreed to purchase the property with her separate funds in the joint names of plaintiff and defendant and for their joint use and benefit as a home, the finding that the defendant "has not reimbursed plaintiff for any part of the purchase price, or the incumbrances of and upon said property," is not inconsistent with the other finding, which is really only a conclusion that plaintiff has no lien upon the property. From the facts appearing in the judgment roll we are satisfied the lower court was correct in reaching the conclusion that the discharge of the incumbrances on the property was part of the act of purchase, and that consequently plaintiff was not entitled to reimbursement from her cotenant under the terms of the prenuptial contract. No lien arose in her favor, therefore, by reason of such payments. The contention that the finding, that no money was paid for the execution of the joint tenancy agreement, is inconsistent with and contradictory of the further finding that "there was a good and valuable consideration therefor," falls with its own statement.

The appellant assumes that the court based its judgment upon the joint tenancy stipulation, executed some two years after the purchase of the Los Angeles property, and asserts that that agreement is not supported by any consideration. In making this contention she is evidently mistaken. The court rests its decision upon the prenuptial contract, and the deed by which the Los Angeles property was acquired, which latter instrument expressly designates the grantees as joint tenants. The facts appearing from the judgment roll warrant this conclusion, and the inferences which may be drawn therefrom afford ample support to the lower court's judgment. To hold otherwise would result in declaring an absurdity, for the respective rights of the parties were fixed and determined by the prenuptial agreement, and the deed by which the property was acquired. Nothing in addition to those rights was gained or lost, by either party, by reason of the subsequent agreement.

This conclusion on our part renders it unnecessary to consider the contentions of the appellant, that by this later agreement the defendant obtained an advantage over the plaintiff in violation of the fiduciary relations existing between husbands and wives, thereby rendering the transaction void. Furthermore, the finding of the trial court is that the agreement, whatever its effect, was not improperly secured by the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WELCH, Judge pro tem.; RICHARDS, J.

47 Cal. App. 753

ROSS v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TERMINAL RYS. CO. et al. (Civ. 3244.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 27, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1920.)

1. Trial ⊜139(1)—To justify submission of question of fact, proof must raise more than conjecture.

To justify the submission of any question of fact to the jury, the proof must raise more than a mere conjecture or surmise that the fact is as alleged, and must be such that a rational mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists.

2. Trial ⊜139(1) — Directed verdict proper unless substantial evidence tends to establish case.

A directed verdict is proper, unless there is substantial evidence tending to prove for plaintiff all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case.

3. Trial ⟸143—Conflicting evidence to deprive court of right to direct verdict must be substantial.

To warrant a court in directing verdict, it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence, but to deprive the court of the right, if there is a conflict, it must be substantial.

4. Street railroads ⟸112(2)—Res ipsa loquitur doctrine inapplicable to collision between car and pedestrian.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has no application to the case of a collision between a street car and a pedestrian on the street, which is as likely to be due to the fault of the person struck, or some third person, or to some unforeseen and unpreventable cause, as to the negligence of the car's crew.

5. Street railroads ⟸85(6)—Duties of railroad and pedestrian reciprocal.

The duties of a street railroad and of a pedestrian crossing the street at the tracks were reciprocal, each being required to approach the crossing with due regard for the rights of the other, and failure of either to observe due care being negligence on his or its part.

6. Street railroads ⟸117(22) — Contributory negligence of pedestrian crossing ahead of car is ordinarily for jury.

If in view of his distance from an approaching street car, the rate of its speed, and all other circumstances, a reasonably prudent man would accept the hazard and undertake to cross the street at a track ahead of the car, a pedestrian may do so, and the propriety of his conduct is ordinarily a question for jury.

7. Negligence ⟸134(11)—Proof of negligence unconnected with injury does not make case.

Mere proof of a defendant's negligence, without connecting such negligence with plaintiff's injury, does not make out a case.

8. Negligence ⟸134(2) — Circumstantial evidence sufficient.

The connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's injury may be made by circumstantial evidence.

9. Death ⟸58(1)—Care on part of pedestrian killed by street car presumed.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, when a pedestrian attempting to cross a street is killed by the street railway's car, there is a presumption that he exercised ordinary care.

10. Appeal and error ⟸1001(1)—Rule that if probabilities are balanced plaintiff must fail does not control appellate court.

The principle of law that if the probabilities are equally balanced on the issue whether the accident involved was produced by a cause for which defendant was responsible plaintiff must fail is more applicable to guide the jury in its deliberations on the facts than as a rule to guide the appellate court as to the sufficiency of evidence.

11. Street railroads ⟸114(14)—Evidence held to show traveler rightfully on streets.

In an action against a street railroad company for death of a 16 year old boy crossing its tracks, circumstantial evidence held to justify the jury in assuming that the boy was going to his home, and was therefore a traveler rightfully on the street when killed.

12. Evidence ⟸589—Jury can scrutinize testimony of defendant.

In an action against a street railroad company for a death on its tracks, the jury had a right closely to scrutinize the testimony of the motorman of the car claimed to have killed decedent, he being a defendant and an interested witness, in view of all the circumstances, to see if he was on the lookout for approaching pedestrians, as his testimony seemed to imply.

13. Evidence ⟸20(2)—Slowing of street cars before crossings perhaps a matter of common knowledge.

It is almost, if not quite, a matter of common knowledge that street cars slow their speed materially or come to a full stop before attempting street crossings.

14. Street railroads ⟸98(6) — Reliance on practice of stopping cars permissible.

The settled practice of stopping street cars at a usual place as before a crossing, becomes a rule of conduct on which the public has a right to rely to a reasonable extent, and departure therefrom is vitally important in determining the question of negligence of a motorman toward a pedestrian attempting to cross the tracks.

15. Death ⟸58(1)—Reliance by deceased on rule for operation of street cars may be inferred from circumstances.

It may be inferred from circumstantial evidence that a pedestrian killed by a street railway's car at a crossing had knowledge of the rule governing the operation of cars, and put some reliance on it.

16. Street railroads ⟸93(2) — Motorman's failure to stop held to show negligence.

A motorman's failure to stop before a crossing, as his slowing of a car at the point indicated he would, tended to show negligence on his part and on the part of the street railway toward pedestrians.

17. Street railroads ⟸98(6) — Pedestrian crossing entitled to rely on motorman's obedience to rules and use of care.

A pedestrian about to cross a street railroad's tracks was entitled to act on the belief that the operator of the car would obey the rules of the company, run at the customary speed at the point, give usual warning signals, and take the usual precautions to avoid injury to others, not being bound in law to a belief the car would not check its speed as it drew near the crossing.

18. Street railroads ⟸117(8)—Negligence as to person crossing held jury question.

In an action against a street railway for death of a boy on its tracks at a crossing, whether or not the manner in which the motorman operated the car at the crossing was such that he should have assumed that persons might ignorantly attempt to cross in front so near the car as to make collision probable, held for the jury.

19. Evidence ⟹219(2)—Testimony that motorman attempted to suppress evidence admissible.

In an action against a street railway and its motorman for death of a boy on its track at a crossing in the nighttime, testimony of motorman by deposition that immediately after accident a shoe worn by decedent was found back of the pony truck of the car, and that he put it out of sight in a garbage can, held admissible as admission by supression of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by A. Ross against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways Company and S. Serpico. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; Olney, J., dissenting.

Elston, Clark & Nichols, of Berkeley, for appellant.

W. H. Smith, of Oakland, and A. L. Whittle, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action against the defendant street railway company, and its motorman, S. Serpico, for damages resulting from the death of plaintiff's minor son, Andrew Ross.

It is charged in the complaint that at the time he was killed, Andrew Ross, a boy of the age of 16 years, was walking across Telegraph avenue in the city of Berkeley, when a street car of the defendant company, operated by Serpico at a high, excessive, and careless rate of speed, ran over him, causing his death. It is alleged in a second count that at the time of the accident the motorman so operated the street car as to lead the boy to believe that it was about to come to a full stop, allowing him to continue safely in his course of walking across the street in front of the car, and that, so believing, he attempted to cross the track of defendant, when he was suddenly struck by the car and killed.

The court shut out testimony considered vital by the plaintiff, and at the conclusion of the trial instructed the jury to find for the defendants. From the judgment entered the plaintiff appeals.

There were no eyewitnesses to the accident, which occurred at the intersection of Telegraph and Ashby avenues, on both of which streets the defendant operated its street railway system. Shortly before 1 o'clock on the morning of February 15, 1918, Andrew Ross, then alive and well, escorted a young lady friend to the place where she was working in Berkeley, a point about five blocks north of Ashby avenue, and three blocks east of Telegraph avenue. Leaving his companion at the front steps, he walked west on Derby street towards Telegraph avenue. At that time Ross lived at 2150 Woolsey street, which is three blocks south of Ashby avenue, and two blocks west of Telegraph avenue. It is thus apparent that in order for him to reach his home, from the place where he left his friend, it was necessary for him to cross both Telegraph and Ashby avenues.

As some time prior to 1:20 o'clock, the motorman on a car of the defendant, running south on Telegraph avenue, discovered the body of Ross lying on the south side of Ashby avenue, near the west rail of the Telegraph avenue track. A sergeant of police, who was summoned, found the boy in a dying condition. He was semiconscious, but could not talk. One of his legs was crushed off, and pieces of the left foot and left shoe were gone. His clothing was badly torn, and he had the appearance of having been rolled and crumpled underneath something. He died soon after being removed to the emergency hospital.

Between the time Ross left his friend, east of the crossing, and the time he was found, car 397 of the defendant company had passed that point. It was a car, which on leaving Berkeley after its final trip, had turned into Telegraph avenue to run to the car barn in Oakland for the night. The car never stopped after entering Telegraph avenue. It slowed down, but did not stop at Dwight Way, on which an intersecting line of the defendant was operated. The motorman gave it "a big kick" after crossing that street; that is, he applied the power for a time, then shut it off, and allowed the car to coast toward Oakland, the grade on Telegraph avenue being down hill, without applying the brakes at any point to check its speed, which, so he testified, was 15 or 16 miles per hour. As he neared Ashby avenue Serpico had his car under full control, and about 100 feet north of that street he applied the brakes, and gradually reduced the speed to 4 or 5 miles per hour. When the front of his car was about 25 feet from the car rails on Ashby avenue, he "gave it some more juice," and went on towards the carhouse, without stopping, as he was required by the rules of the company to do, before crossing Ashby avenue, on which was operated a cross-line of the same company. After the car had passed over the intersecting rails of the cross-line tracks, and had proceeded some 10 or 15 feet, Serpico and the conductor, who was sitting in the forward compartment of the car with him, felt a jar, or jolt, different from that caused by the trucks running over the cross-rails. The car jumped two or three times, the cause of which, the motorman testified, he "thought was a stone on the track * * * he supposed it was a medium-sized rock." The car was not stopped, but proceeded to the car barn. Serpico testified that he heard no outcry at the time, and saw no one crossing, or near the car track, although the streets at that point were well lighted.

When the car turned in at the barn it was discovered that the middle guard on the westerly side was missing, and the rear guard was hanging by a single hook. There was blood on the side of the car, on the flange of the front drive wheel, and hair and blood on the air compressor, a few feet back of the wheel. The missing side guard was later picked up near the spot where the body of Ross was discovered. A subsequent investigation of the scene of the accident disclosed the fact that his body had been dragged from a point almost on a line with the northerly crossing of Ashby avenue clear across that street, and close beside the westerly rail of the south-bound track. The marks and blood stains on the ground indicated that he had been rolled, or dragged, some distance before any part of the car ran over his body, which lay at just about the spot where the crew of the car felt the jar, or jolt, as it passed over something.

From the foregoing facts, which appear without contradiction, no one can doubt for an instant that the boy, Ross, was killed by being run over by the street car of the defendant railway company, operated by the employé, and codefendant, Serpico. Respondents in their brief apparently concede the point, but argue that the proximate cause of the injury and death rests in surmise and conjecture, and that the evidence fails to establish that it was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendants. That was the view adopted by the lower court, as indicated by its action in removing the cause from the consideration of the jury. The appellant contends that it was error for the court to direct a verdict in the case, claiming that upon the evidence the presumption was that the boy was killed through the negligence of the defendant; that although that presumption might be rebutted it was a question for the jury whether the facts and circumstances in the case did so. The respondents answer that there was no evidence tending in any way to show that the plaintiff's son was killed by any act of it; and particularly contends that, if it be admitted that the boy was killed by the street car, there is nothing tending in the slightest to show any negligence on its part. The ruling of the lower court presents the main issue for determination upon this appeal.

[1-4] In order to justify the submission of any question of fact to a jury, the proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere conjecture, or surmise, that the fact is as alleged. It must be such that a rational, well-constructed mind can reasonably draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists. When the evidence is not sufficient to justify such an inference, the court may properly refuse to submit the question to the jury. Janin v. London, etc., Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82. A directed verdict is proper, unless there is substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of a plaintiff all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case. In other words, a directed verdict is proper whenever upon the whole evidence the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence. To warrant a court in directing a verdict, it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence, but, to deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one. Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 473, 123 Pac. 267. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has no just or proper application to the case of a collision between a street car and a pedestrian on the street. Such mishap is quite as likely to be due to the fault of the person struck, or of some third person, or to some unforeseen and unpreventable cause, as to the negligence of those operating the car. Tower v. Humboldt Transit Co., 176 Cal. 602, 607, 169 Pac. 227. Consequently it was not sufficient for the plaintiff in the instant case to merely show the happening of the accident. It was necessary that he go further, and fasten the blame for the injury upon the defendants.

[5, 6] At the time of the happening of the accident in question, the duty of the defendants, and of the decedent, were reciprocal. Each was required to approach the crossing with a due regard for the rights of the other, and if either failed to observe the care required, it was negligence for which the guilty party is responsible. Bickel v. Penn. R. R. Co., 217 Pa. 456, 462, 66 Atl. 756, 118 Am. St. Rep. 926. In Kansas City, etc., R. R. Co. v. Gallagher, 68 Kan. 424, 75 Pac. 469, 64 L. R. A. 344, the court held that, while it is the duty of a pedestrian upon a city street, who is about to cross the track of an electric street railway company, to exercise his faculties, and take ordinary care to avoid collisions with the cars, if he does look and listen he will be held to an apprehension of that which he should have seen and heard, and if he fails to look and listen he will be held to the same liability in case of disaster as if he had done so. But a traveler may cross an electric street railway track in front of an approaching car which he sees and hears and not be negligent. If, in view of his distance from the car, the rate of its speed, and all other circumstances of the event, a reasonably prudent man would accept the hazard and undertake to cross the highway, a traveler may do so, and the propriety of his conduct is ordinarily a question for the jury. See, also, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 611, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274.

In support of the action of the lower court in the instant case, in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendants, the respondents rely upon Puckhaber v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 363, 64 Pac. 480, as deciding this case. As was said by the writer of that decision, the facts of the case were of the most meager character. Upon a dark and foggy morning, about half past 5 o'clock, the mutilated dead body of a young man, a total stranger in the locality, was found lying upon a side track in the railroad yards of the defendant, near the dead body of another man, also a stranger in the village. There was no witness to any accident. It was claimed by the plaintiff that the deceased was killed by a backing engine and tender which passed over the particular spot to the roundhouse about an hour earlier on the same morning. The negligence of the defendant was claimed to be established by showing that the tender of the engine had no light upon the rear end. The court held that, conceding these facts, the case was still too weak to support a verdict, for the reason that there was a total lack of evidence showing any causal connection between the absence of a light upon the tender and the death of the deceased. This was held to be true, even though it be assumed to be the law of this state that, in the absence of evidence upon the subject, it will not be presumed that the deceased was himself guilty of negligence. The court said:

"It is as necessary for the plaintiffs to show that the defendant's negligence caused the injury as it is for them to show that defendant was guilty of negligence, or that the party was injured." Puckhaber v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 132 Cal. 365, 64 Pac. 481.

[7, 8] By proving a defendant's negligence, without in some way fastening that negligence to the injury, a case is not made out. Union, etc., Co. v. S. F. Gas. Co., 168 Cal. 58, 62, 141 Pac. 807. These rules, however, do not require demonstration of the connection between the proved, or admitted, negligence and the resulting injury. It is not necessary that an eyewitness be produced to testify directly to the fact. The connection may be made by circumstantial evidence in the same way that any other fact can be so proved. County of Alameda v. Tieslau, 30 Cal. App. Dec. 546, 549, 186 Pac. 398. The conclusion reached by the court in the Puckhaber decision was, no doubt, correct upon the facts there considered. The circumstances disclosed in other cases, possibly possessing some degree of similarity, may not fit the facts of that case. Peters v. McKay, 136 Cal. 73, 76, 68 Pac. 478.

[9] While, as before stated, the presumption arising from the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply to accidents like the one in which young Ross was killed, another, and an equally binding, presumption does arise, to wit, that the deceased, in such cases, exercised ordinary care. The rule of law referred to in the Puckhaber decision is, perhaps, more clearly stated in a later case, in which the court said:

"When death is caused under circumstances such as this, without eyewitnesses, the law comes to the aid of the plaintiff who is pressing a suit for damages for the death, and that law is found in the presumption of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4. * * * This is a controvertible presumption, it is true, but until controverted it is evidence in accordance with which the jury is bound to decide. Code Civ. Proc. § 1961." Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. M. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 506, 143 Pac. 714.

In applying this principle of law to personal injury cases the Supreme Court of the United States has said:

"The presumption is founded on a law of nature. We know of no more universal instinct than that of self-preservation—none that so insistently urges to care against injury. It has its motives to exercise in the fear of pain, maiming, and death. There are few presumptions, based on human feelings or expression, that have surer foundation." Baltimore & Potomac R. R. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 474, 24 Sup. Ct. 137, 140, 48 L. Ed. 262.

When recourse must be had to this rule of human conduct, in determining the question of responsibility in cases of accidents, like the one now being considered, "it is fair to presume, until the contrary is proven, and this presumption is sustained by a rule of law that one who was killed while crossing a railroad track was exercising due and proper care for the protection of his * * * life. The presumption which arises in favor of the instincts of self-preservation and the known disposition of men to avoid injury and personal harm to themselves is sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence that the person killed was at the time of the accident free from contributory negligence." Fleenor v. Oregon Short Line R. R. Co., 16 Idaho, 781, 802, 102 Pac. 897, 903.

Existing facts and circumstances very similar to those surrounding the death of the boy Ross, in this case, have been frequently considered by the courts, in the light of the foregoing rule of self-preservation. In Robbins v. Penn. Co., 257 Fed. 671, 168 C. C. A. 621, the decedent left the house of a friend, which was on the east side of the street, and south of the two railroad tracks, for the purpose of mailing a letter at the post office, which was on the west side of the street, and on the north side of the tracks. At the time she started on this errand the south track was occupied by a long, slowly moving east-bound freight train. At about the time the caboose, at the rear of this train passed out of the street, an engine drawing a short west-bound train on the northerly track, and running at a speed of 55 to 60 miles an hour, suddenly burst into view, without ringing of bell, or blowing of whistle. The proof tended to show that it was this west-bound train on the northerly track which struck and killed the decedent. No one saw the decedent after she left her friend's house, and the point of collision was left to inference. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant, one of the grounds being that the plaintiff had not sustained the burden of showing that the defendant's alleged negligence was the direct and proximate cause of decedent's death. The trial judge concluded that the "decedent must either have crossed behind the east-bound train immediately on its clearing the sidewalk, when she was not in position to see the west-bound train, or have gone ahead without looking to see whether a train was coming from the east. This conclusion is not," said the Circuit Court of Appeals, in reversing the lower court, "in our opinion inevitable, at least on the theory that the collision occurred at the west crossing. Defendant had the burden of proving decedent's negligence. The law presumes that, following the instinct of self-preservation, she exercised due caution, and that before crossing the tracks she looked and listened for approaching trains." After citing a number of cases, some of which we have already alluded to, the court considered the circumstances, and held that as different inferences might be drawn from the circumstances surrounding the accident, the decision of the question rested with the jury.

A case having some of the essential features of the case at bar was considered by the United States Supreme Court in Baltimore & Potomac R. R. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 24 Sup. Ct. 137, 48 L. Ed. 262. The deceased was employed on the night force of the railroad company. The usual and direct route to his home took him over a well-lighted crossing. A few minutes after he left the roundhouse his body was found near the crossing, with flesh and blood scattered along the track. There were no witnesses to the accident. At that time a switching crew was making up a train, one of the Pullman cars of which broke loose by reason of an alleged defective method of coupling, and was shunted over the crossing. A passenger train passed the same point just about the same time. On these facts the trial court refused to direct the jury to render a verdict for the defendant, but submitted the case to the jury, which found for the plaintiff. On appeal it was held that it was not error for the lower court to instruct the jury that in the absence of all evidence to the contrary there was a presumption that the deceased stopped, looked and listened before attempting to cross the tracks, citing Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 353, 366, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 41 L. Ed. 186. The railroad company also contended that as there was no evidence from which it could be determined that it was the uncoupled Pullman car, and not the passing express train, which injured the deceased, it was error to submit the issue to the jury. The Supreme Court held that the action of the lower court was right, saying, "There was certainly evidence on the issue from which reasonable men might draw different conclusions."

In Dalton v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Iowa, 26, 73 N. W. 349, a highway crossing accident occurred at night. The decedent was struck by a passing train of the defendant. There were no witnesses to the conduct of the deceased. The contrary not appearing, it was held that it must be presumed that the decedent exercised care on approaching and going upon the crossing, and that whether the circumstances were such as to overcome that presumption was a question for the jury. Other cases to the same effect are Eckhard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 593, 89 S. W. 602, 608; Lewis v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 40 Utah, 483, 123 Pac. 98, 99; Lotz v. B. & O. Ry. Co., 247 Penn. 206, 93 Atl. 274; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 270, 53 L. Ed. 453; Korab v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 149 Iowa, 711, 128 N. W. 529, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 32, 38. In the last case cited, in which no witnesses appeared to testify to the accident, the court set aside a directed verdict in favor of the defendant, and held the decedent's administrator entitled to the benefit of the presumption of due care on the part of the deceased, saying:

"If the record is such that, under the rule to which we have referred, a presumption of due care obtains, then proof of an act which may or may not have been negligent according to the circumstances under which it was done will not justify a holding as a matter of law that the presumption of care is thereby rebutted."

The respondent contends that we should view the evidence as presenting only a question of probabilities, and cites Tremelling v. Southern Pacific Co. (Utah) 170 Pac. 80, 83, to the effect that—

"If the probabilities are equally balanced that the accident was produced by a cause for which the defendant is responsible or by one for which he is not, the plaintiff must fail."

[10] This principle of law is more applicable as a rule to guide the jury in its deliberations upon the facts than it is as a rule to guide the appellate court in passing on the sufficiency of the evidence. Peters v. McKay, 136 Cal. 73, 76, 68 Pac. 478. The foregoing cases bearing on the point and others which have been examined by us present facts with many essentials similar to the circumstances surrounding the accident in which Ross was killed. In few, if any, were the facts as strong. Yet the action of the trial courts in refusing to direct verdicts for the defendants was upheld on the one hand, and the granting of such relief was reversed on the other.

[11, 12] In the instant case, the decedent was a traveler. The plaintiff sought to introduce evidence to establish that the decedent Ross, on leaving his friend at her doorstep, a few minutes before he was killed, stated to her that he was going to his home, the purpose being to show that his intended route would take him across the tracks of the defendant, and that he was a traveler crossing the street when killed, and not a trespasser suddenly approaching the car from the west, and attempting to steal a ride, as was suggested by the defense, at the trial. This testimony was excluded by the court. Whether or not the action of the trial court, in refusing to admit the declaration as to the boy's intention, was error, we are of the opinion that, in the absence of testimony, the jury had the right to assume that he was going to his home, and was therefore a traveler, rightfully upon the streets. The hour of the night, the circumstance that he had just escorted his friend to her home, coupled with the further facts that he was a sober, industrious, working boy, and that his home was situated in a southerly and westerly direction, across the intersecting tracks of the company at Ashby and Telegraph avenues, in almost a direct line from the point where he left his companion—all these circumstances readily give rise to such an inference. The intersection of the streets mentioned, according to the testimony, was well lighted, and the car was equipped with a headlight. The details of the accident, it is true, were few, but they were related by a defendant, who was also an employé of the railway company. He was an interested witness, and although he testified that he did not see the boy before the accident or at any time, yet, there being no obstruction to the view, the jury would have the right to closely scrutinize his testimony, in view of all the circumstances, to see if he was on the lookout for approaching pedestrians, as his testimony would seem to imply. Wahlgren v. Market Street Railway Co., 132 Cal. 656, 665, 62 Pac. 308; 64 Pac. 993.

[13-15] The motorman was also guilty of a violation of the rules of the company requiring him to bring his car to a full stop before crossing Dwight Way and the Ashby avenue tracks. After passing the former street, he had "given his car a big kick," and it was coasting on the downgrade toward the car house, on its last trip late at night, at a rate of speed which, if the testimony of the motorman be true, would not be considered excessive. By his own testimony, Serpico would make it appear that when about 100 feet north of the Ashby avenue tracks, he retarded the speed of his car from 15 or 16 miles an hour to 4 or 5 miles an hour, at which speed he was going when he was about 25 feet north of the crossing. He then "gave it more juice." It is very easy to infer from the circumstances that young Ross was acquainted with the rule requiring the cars to stop before crossing intersecting tracks. He had been living in the vicinity some little time, and it is almost, if not quite, a matter of common knowledge that the street cars do slow their speed materially, or come to a full stop, at such points. The settled practice of stopping a street car at a particular place becomes a rule of conduct upon which the public has a right to rely to a reasonable extent, and a departure from such rule is a vitally important element in determining the question of negligence, for it constitutes a departure from the standard of safety which the defendant has itself adopted. Godfrey v. Old Colony Street Railway Co., 223 Mass. 419, 111 N. E. 878; Kostuch v. St. Paul Street Railway Co., 78 Minn. 459, 81 N. W. 215; McDivitt v. Des Moines Street Railway Co., 141 Iowa, 689, 118 N. W. 459, 462. It may be inferred from circumstantial evidence that a deceased person had knowledge of a rule governing the operation of cars, and that he put some reliance upon it. Boston & M. R. R. v. Rafalko, 228 Fed. 440, 143 C. C. A. 22.

[16, 17] In addition to the presumption, in the instant case, the motorman by the operation of his car gave every indication that it was his intention to comply with the rule. He slowed his car from a rate of speed at which he was coasting toward the car barn, as he approached the crossing. His failure to finally stop, as his handling of the car indicated he would, tended to show negligence on his part. Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 159 Cal. 494, 503, 115 Pac. 320. Ross was entitled to act upon the belief that the operator of the street car would, upon his part, obey the rules of the company, and run the car at the speed which was customary at the particular place, and that he would give the usual warnings and signals, and take the usual precautions to avoid injury to others. He was not, in law, bound to believe that the car, provided he saw it some distance away, would not check its speed as it drew near the intersecting crossing. Scott v. San Bernardino Valley Ry. Co., 152 Cal. 604, 610, 93 Pac. 677.

[18] Under the circumstances of this case, we do not feel that it can be said, as a matter of law, that the motorman ought not reasonably to have expected that persons might attempt to cross the track at a point which would in fact be dangerously near, but which to them would not appear so. The circumstances might be such as to charge him with knowledge of this likelihood. Due care would be required of him in such case, to anticipate such probability, and the results reasonably arising from the consequences of his own action. It should have been left to the jury to say whether or not the manner in which he operated the car at the Ashby crossing was such that he should have assumed that persons might ignorantly attempt to cross in front so near the approaching car as to make a collision probable. Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 131, 138, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059; Runnels v. United Railroads, 175 Cal. 528, 533, 166 Pac. 18; Drouillard v. Southern Pacific Co., 36 Cal. App. 447, 451, 172 Pac. 405; Haughey v. Pittsburg Ry. Co., 210 Pa. 363, 366, 59 Atl. 1110; Phillips v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co., 77 Wis. 349, 46 N. W. 543, 9 L. R. A. 521; Tegels v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 120 Minn. 31, 138 N. W. 945.

[19] The plaintiff's son being dead, and there being no eyewitnesses to the accident, the plaintiff was compelled to rely upon the motorman, Serpico, who was also a defendant in the action, to establish the circumstances surrounding the accident. He did not appear at the trial in person, but his deposition was read in evidence. Therein he testified that when his car reached the car barn immediately after the accident, a shoe, admitted to be one the deceased was wearing, was found back of the pony truck of the car. Serpico testified that at that time, "I was so nervous and mixed up—I know something had happened. I don't know if I picked up the shoe or the conductor give it to me, * * * I put it in a garbage can what the city uses; * * * it has a tin lid that lifts up and down. * * * After it was in there of course it was out of sight." When this testimony was offered the court sustained the objection of the defendants that it "bore no relation whatever to the case," and excluded the testimony from the jury. Only this general objection was made. We think this was error. Serpico was a defendant, and the employé of his codefendant. A strong inference arising from his action, and certainly a most plausible explanation of his conduct, is that he was attempting to conceal evidence, which in his mind had an important bearing upon the "something" that had happened. His conduct was indicative of a belief, and in the nature of an admission, that his cause could best be served by suppressing the evidence of the injury. Testimony showing, or tending to show an attempt on the part of a party to a suit to cover up, conceal, or otherwise prevent pertinent facts from being presented to the court or jury is competent and proper. Such efforts may be shown, not as part of the res gestæ, but in the nature of an admission, the effect of which is a matter for the consideration of the jury. Silva v. Northern Cal. Powder Co., 32 Cal. App. 139, 146, 162 Pac. 412; Clark v. Tulare Dredging Co., 14 Cal. App. 414, 437, 112 Pac. 564.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; GOSBEY, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 116

LAMPTON v. DAVIS STANDARD BREAD CO. et al.

SAME v. DAVIS STANDARD BREAD CO.

(Civ. 3298.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 9, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸705(1)—Driver of vehicle must be on alert.

The driver of a vehicle must proceed carefully, and be on the alert lest he collide with others.

2. Municipal corporations ⟸705(3)—Driver near schoolhouse required to exercise greater care than usual.

The proximity of the place where defendant was driving to adjacent school grounds, and the hour at which children might with certainty be expected to be on the street, imposed on him a greater degree of caution than ordinary circumstances would require; what would be but ordinary negligence in reference to a grown person would be gross negligence as respects a child.

3. Evidence ⟸123(11), 244(11)—Conversations with defendant employé admissible, not as res gestæ, but as admissions.

In an action against a company and its employé for injuries to a schoolboy when a horse driven by the employé ran him down, testimony as to conversations with defendant employé shortly after the accident held not admissible as part of the res gestæ, nor as against the employer, but admissible as evidence against the employé under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, being admissions concerning the occurrence.

4. Evidence ⟸146, 222(10)—Admissible evidence not excluded because of collateral effect; admissions of one defendant not excluded because not binding on other.

Statements made by defendant employé in conversations after the accident sued for, not binding upon defendant employer, though binding upon the employé, could not properly be excluded, as admissible evidence cannot be excluded because having an ulterior or collateral effect detrimental to a party.

5. Evidence ⟸215(1)—Photograph of statement made at police station by defendant admissible as admission.

In action against a company and its employé for injuries to a child run down by a horse driven by the employé, photographic copy of detailed statement, made by the employé at the police station after the accident, held admissible against him as his admission.

6. Appeal and error ⟸883—Defendants, not taking advantage of offer to dismiss as to one, cannot complain of refusal to rule on motion.

Where plaintiffs' counsel offered to dismiss the case as against one of the two defendants, but defendants did not take the opportunity and file written consent, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 2, but remained silent until after adverse verdict and judgment, they cannot complain of prejudicial error in the trial court's action in refusing to pass on plaintiffs' alleged motion to dismiss, not being given an exception by section 647.

7. Guardian and ward ⊂⊃130—Averment of official capacity of guardian suing for child held sufficient.

In a child's action for injuries by his father as guardian, allegations of complaint that the father was the duly appointed and qualified guardian of the person and estate of the minor held a sufficient averment of the official capacity of the guardian, in the absence of special demurrer, which, being admitted by answer, had effect of stipulation of fact rendering allegation of more specific facts unnecessary.

8. Guardian and ward ⊂⊃130—Denial of appointment and qualification of guardian held insufficient to raise issue.

Where defendants denied the appointment and qualification of plaintiff guardian "for lack of information and belief," thereby placing their denial on such ground as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 437, the denial was insufficient, and the appointment of the guardian, being a matter of public record, was not put in issue, but stood admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Actions by Bill Lampton, a minor, by his guardian, W. W. Lampton, against the Davis Standard Bread Company and Harry Graham, and by W. W. Lampton against the Davis Standard Bread Company. From judgments for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hickcox & Crenshaw and E. R. Young, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Allen W. Ashburn and Newlin & Ashburn, all of Los Angeles (J. W. McKinley, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The above-entitled cases were tried together before a jury. One is a suit against both defendants, for damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff Bill Lampton, who sues by his general guardian, W. W. Lampton. The other is a suit by the father against the bread company alone, to recover money for doctor's bills, hospital expenses, and other expenditures, due to the injury.

The accident occurred while the plaintiff, aged seven years, was on his way to the public school located at the corner of Tenth and Valencia streets, in Los Angeles, a portion of the grounds running through to Grattan street, upon which the accident happened. Plaintiff was proceeding northerly on the west side of that street, and in crossing the roadway was struck by a wagon, belonging to the defendant Davis Standard Bread Company, driven by the defendant Harry Graham. At the time the accident occurred Graham was driving at a trot, at about eight miles an hour, but was not looking ahead. The plaintiff was knocked down and seriously injured. One of the horses stepped on his head, breaking the skull, from which pieces of the bone had to be removed. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for $8,000, in the suit by the minor, and for $597.75 in the suit by the father. The defendants moved for new trials, which were denied, and then appealed, it being stipulated that both cases may be heard and determined by this court on the same record.

Appellants contend that the evidence does not establish negligence on the part of either of the defendants. The defendant Harry Graham, an employé of the other defendant, the bread company, was engaged in his usual vocation of delivering bread at the time of the accident. He had passed over this particular route twice daily for seven months, and was familiar with the fact that there was an obstruction at this particular place which would render it impossible for him to see a person who was about to step from the sidewalk into the street. He was also aware of the fact that, at that particular time of the day, the children from the nearby school were at their noon recess, and were apt to be in and about the spot where the accident occurred. At the time, so he testified in his deposition, which will be referred to later, he was not looking ahead, but was looking to the right of the wagon, intending to stop and inquire as to the wants of a customer who had called to him. He did not see the boy until one of his horses had knocked him down and stepped on his head. When asked why he did not see the boy he testified:

"It was not my habit to notice people on the sidewalk, and immediately before the accident three poles at the side may have obstructed any view that I might have had of him."

[1] The driver of a vehicle must proceed carefully, and be on the alert lest he collide with others. Bauhofer v. Crawford, 16 Cal. App. 676, 678, 117 Pac. 931; Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 610, 93 Pac. 677; Wistrom v. Redlick Bros., Inc., 6 Cal. App. 671, 673, 92 Pac. 1048.

[2] The proximity of the place where Graham was driving to the adjacent school grounds, and the hour, at which children might, with certainty, be expected to be using the street, imposed upon him a greater degree of caution than he might be required to use under ordinary circumstances. That which would be but ordinary negligence in reference to a grown person may be gross negligence as respects a child. Schierhold v. N. B. & M. R. Co., 40 Cal. 447, 454. The jury was instructed with particularity on the law applying to the facts surrounding the accident. The court used rather more than usual care in the matter, and we are satisfied that the verdict accords with the law and the evidence.

When the case came on for trial the defendant Graham was a soldier with the overseas forces in France. In anticipation of this fact the defendants, on stipulation of the parties, procured his deposition as to the accident, and the manner in which it occurred. With the consent of the defendants, the plaintiff offered, and read in evidence, Graham's testimony taken in that manner. A part of his statement of the occurrence has already been quoted in substance, or in the exact language used. Appellants now complain of the action of the trial court in admitting the testimony of two witnesses, who related certain conversations had with defendant Graham, shortly after the accident, to the effect that—

"Mrs. Bergman (a customer) had called to him, and he looked around to answer her question, and while he was looking around he ran over the child, and that was how it happened. He did not see the boy."

[3] The conversations were not part of the res gestæ, and were not admissible on that theory. They were relevant and admissible as evidence against the defendant Graham, being declarations and admissions concerning the happening for which he was responsible. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2; Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 140 Cal. 563, 574, 74 Pac. 147. Furthermore, the statements made by Graham, in the conversations with the two witnesses, were almost word for word the same statements he made when giving his deposition, in explanation of how the accident occurred.

[4] While these statements made by Graham in these conversations were not in the least binding upon the defendant bread company, the court could not properly exclude them for that reason. It is a well-established rule that if evidence is properly admissible upon the issue presented it cannot be excluded because it may have ulterior or collateral effects detrimental to one of the parties. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 562, 147 Pac. 238; Keyes v. Geary St., etc., R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 437, 441, 93 Pac. 88. In the last case noted certain statements of the gripman, following the accident, were admitted for the purpose of impeaching his testimony given at the trial. The court held that as the statements were properly admitted for that purpose, they could not be excluded because they also tended to show negligence on the part of the defendant, his employer. The exact question now raised in this case was well considered in that decision. See, also, Voorman v. Voight, 46 Cal. 392, 397, to the effect that evidence inadmissible against one defendant may be received in the action against another party. The appellant does not appear to have made any effort to have the trial court limit the effect of the declarations made by Graham, as it would no doubt have done, by proper instructions, if so requested. No error resulted in these admissions.

[5] There was attached to the deposition of defendant Graham a photographic copy of the detailed statement made by him at the police station after the accident. Over the objection of the defendant bread company it was admitted in evidence. Graham identified this statement, in his deposition, and testified to its veracity, and to the genuineness of the writing and his signature thereto. For the same reasons that the conversations, already alluded to, are admissible, this statement was properly submitted to the jury.

During the course of the argument of plaintiff's counsel, he remarked:

"Just to show that we are willing to do the right thing, we will dismiss the case, with your honor's permission, against the defendant Harry Graham at this time."

[6] The court refused to rule on the suggestion at that time, and, after the jury had retired, again declined to do so, giving no reason for not so doing. Appellants did not join in, and took absolutely no part in this proceeding. The record contains no evidence that any dismissal of the action was ever entered. Appellants now ask a reversal of both judgments, claiming prejudicial error in the court's action in refusing to pass on the alleged motion to dismiss the damage case against defendant Graham, but cite neither law nor authority in support of their proposition. We see no ground for appellants' contention. The dismissal, if there was one, was not had "upon the written consent" of the defendant, as required by section 581, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that provision it was ineffectual. If it be contended that the dismissal was attempted under subdivision 4 of said section 581, which provides that an action may be dismissed by the court, when upon the trial and before the final submission of the case the plaintiff abandons it, the dismissal was ineffective for any purpose until made by order of the court and entered upon the minutes. The proposal may have come from the respondent's counsel in such manner, and under circumstances, as not to amount to an abandonment of the case as to Graham. It is possible, and quite probable, as suggested by appellants in their brief, that the purported dismissal was staged "for the purpose of influencing the jury." Had the defendants been vigilant in seizing the opportunity then presented to take advantage of the tentative advantage offered by the incident, they should have promptly filed their written consent to the dismissal, in the one instance, or have insisted upon an order of court and entry in the minutes, in the other. Not having pursued their ostensible advantage, and having remained silent until the opportunity offered was swept away by an adverse verdict and judgment, appellants are not in position to complain. They were not given an exception to the court's refusal to pass upon the motion, by section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as claimed by them, and to which action, so far as the record discloses, they gave their consent.

[7] Appellants make the final objection that the plaintiff totally failed to prove the appointment and qualification of the guardian of the minor. There is no testimony as to the fact. The allegation of the complaint is "that W. W. Lampton is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian of the person and estate of said minor." This was a sufficient averment of the official capacity of the guardian in the absence of a special demurrer, and, if admitted in the answer, had the effect of a stipulation of the fact, which rendered the allegation of more specific facts unnecessary. Collins v. O'Laverty, 136 Cal. 31, 33, 68 Pac. 327; S. F., etc., Land Co. v. Hartung, 138 Cal. 223, 230, 71 Pac. 337. The defendants denied the appointment and qualification of the guardian for lack of information and belief.

[8] Assuming that they thereby placed their denial "upon that ground," as required by section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such a denial was insufficient, and the appointment of the guardian, being a matter of public record, was not put in issue, but stands admitted. Mulcahy v. Buckley, 100 Cal. 484, 487, 35 Pac. 144; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 54, 50 Pac. 1066; Mendocino County v. Peters, 2 Cal. App. 24, 28, 82 Pac. 1122.

Each of the judgments appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 147

HENNING v. WUEST. (Civ. 3307.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 10, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⊂⊃419(15)—Parol evidence admissible to show note was for indemnity against loss on accommodation note.

In an action on a note, evidence was admissible to show an agreement between plaintiff and defendant by which the former signed with others a note to a bank in consideration of the defendant guaranteeing him against loss thereby by giving the note in suit and other facts tending to show that accommodation maker had not suffered loss.

2. Stipulations ⊂⊃17(3)—That renewal note was for balance due held binding, and to preclude contrary findings.

Where parties in an action on a note stipulated that a new note "was given as a renewal on the amount remaining due" on the original note, the stipulation was binding, and precluded a finding that the old note had been paid by the renewal note.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by E. J. Henning against A. Wuest. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. H. Wylie, C. A. A. McGee, of Oakland, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $5,750, alleged to be due on a promissory note executed and delivered to him by the defendant and E. A. Edmonds. Judgment was entered for the defendant. Motions were made for a new trial, and for the entering of a different judgment, on the ground that the facts found were not sufficient to support the conclusions of law. Both motions were denied, and the appeal is from the judgment.

The defendant interposed as a defense, and the court found, that on April 28, 1914, H. B. Tanner and John A. Watson, with the plaintiff as an accommodation maker, made and delivered a promissory note to the Marine National Bank of San Diego, payable 60 days after date, for the sum of $5,750; that thereupon, and on the same day, defendant and Edmonds executed and delivered to plaintiff the note sued upon, also payable 60 days after date, to guarantee plaintiff against all liability by reason of his having joined, as accommodation maker, in the note of Tanner and Watson to the bank; that the promissory note executed by Tanner and Watson to the Marine National Bank was paid in full and discharged by another note for the sum of $4,600, executed October 13, 1914, signed by Tanner and wife, Watson and wife, and plaintiff, payable 90 days after date, and certain payments of cash on account of principal and interest; that the defendant had no knowledge of the making of this last note; that he did not consent to the execution and delivery of the latter note as a renewal of the note of April 28, 1914; that the execution of the said renewal note altered the obligation of the defendant upon the guaranty to plaintiff, and suspended and impaired his rights in respect thereto. It was further pleaded and found that no liability on the part of plaintiff to pay the note to the bank ever attached, and that plaintiff never paid anything by reason thereof, and suffered no loss or detriment by reason of being an accommodation maker thereon.

[1] The appellant concedes in his brief that—

"If appellant paid no money and suffered no loss on account of his accommodation making of the note to the bank, and respondent's contention as to the alleged agreement be true, then appellant should not recover."

He complains, however, of the action of the lower court in admitting parol evidence to show the nature of the real agreement between plaintiff and defendant, and of the alleged alteration of the defendant's liability by the giving of the new note to the bank. He also contends that the findings are contradictory, and not fortified by the evidence, and do not support the conclusions of law.

The court did not err in admitting the parol evidence tending to prove that there was an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the former agreed to, and did, sign the note to the bank with Tanner and Watson, in consideration of the defendant guaranteeing him against loss by reason of his so doing. The admission of such evidence did not violate the rule which forbids the introduction of parol evidence to contradict or vary a written contract. If the note, executed by the defendant, was given to secure plaintiff against loss, by reason of his so acting as an accommodation maker on the note to the bank, and the note was paid, and he suffered no loss or detriment, or if the liability of the defendant was in any way affected by some act of the plaintiff, the note of the defendant was discharged, and parol evidence was admissible to prove the facts. Howard v. Stratton, 64 Cal. 487, 488, 2 Pac. 263. It was proper to show the circumstances under which the note was made, and if the facts were as claimed by the defendant, and found by the court, then defendant's parol contract was executed, and the note paid and satisfied. Schultz v. Noble, 77 Cal. 79, 81, 19 Pac. 182.

[2] There is ample evidence to support the lower court's finding that the note executed by Edmonds and defendant was given to guarantee plaintiff against liability by reason of the note executed to the bank on April 28, 1914. We are at a loss, however, to account for the finding that that note was paid in full by the note of October 13, 1914, and certain payments of cash on account of principal and interest. This finding accords with the allegation of the answer, but there is no evidence to that effect. On the contrary, the stipulated fact, elicited by counsel for the respondent, is that the note of October 13, 1914, "was given as a renewal on the amount remaining due on the note executed * * * the 28th day of April, 1914, for $5,750," or, as again stated, "a renewal note of this prior obligation." This stipulation was binding upon the parties, and precluded any finding in opposition to the stipulated facts. If this finding was upon such a material issue as to be determinative of the action, inasmuch as it was contrary to the admission of the parties, the court below should have granted the motion for the new trial. Haese v. Heitzeg, 159 Cal. 569, 574, 575, 114 Pac. 816; Carpentier v. Small, 35 Cal. 346, 354–359.

We think this finding was most material to the case. The respondent seeks to avoid liability on either of two grounds: First, that the appellant suffered no detriment because the obligation which rendered him liable was fully paid and discharged; and, second, that if it was not so discharged the obligation was so altered and changed, without his consent, upon a renewal being had, as to release him from liability as a guarantor. The lower court has found, contrary to the stipulated fact, that the original obligation was paid, which is not so. It has made no finding that the note was ever renewed. It has found that the defendant had no knowledge of the making of the note of October 13, 1914, which fact was entirely immaterial if the old note was thereby paid, as found by the court. In view of the probability of a retrial of the action, we may remark, in passing, that this finding is contrary to the evidence addressed to the fact. It has further found that the defendant did not consent to any renewal of the note of April 28, 1914, to the Marine National Bank, nor to the making of the note of October 13, 1914, as a renewal of the former instrument. This finding is likewise utterly immaterial, in the absence of any finding that there was a renewal, either with or without the knowledge and consent of the defendant, and in the face of the contrary finding that the new note and the cash payments paid and discharged the old obligation.

The only support in the findings for the conclusions and judgment of the lower court rests upon the finding that the note of April 28, 1914, was paid and discharged, which is contrary to the stipulated facts. The motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 122

CALIFORNIA NAT. SUPPLY CO. v. BLACK et al. (Civ. 3207.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 9, 1920.)

1. Corporations ⊂=430—Agent may not represent both parties without their full knowledge and consent.

Where the agent of plaintiff corporation was at the same time agent and stockholder of a defunct corporation, whose stockholders are defendants, and his own interests were adverse to plaintiff's, his actions as to any dealings had with plaintiff are not binding on it, unless it had full knowledge of and consented to the agent representing both parties.

2. Corporations ⊂=422(1)—Representation of agent construed not to mean shares were fully paid up.

An agent's representation to plaintiff, his principal, that he also represented a corporation whose stockholders are defendants and incidentally himself, and that they had sold 300,000 $1 shares for $40,000, construed not to mean that the shares of stock had been fully paid up, or that creditors in good faith could not resort to the unpaid balance in an action against stockholders.

3. Corporations ⊂=428(1) — Knowledge of agent of two corporations held not chargeable to one of them.

Where a stockholder and officer of a defunct corporation, whose stockholders are being sued, was agent therefor as well as for plaintiff corporation, conditions held such that the fact that he knew all about a transaction on both sides was not sufficient, under the law, to charge the plaintiff with such knowledge.

4. Corporations ⊂=228—Stockholders liable to corporate creditors where stock not paid for in full.

The fact that defendants owned stock not paid for in full, as set forth in plaintiff's complaint, fixed their liability in an action by the corporation's creditor, so that the trust fund theory is applicable.

5. Corporations ⊂=228—Persons holding stock not fully paid up may not avoid liability to creditors.

Where stock of a corporation is issued without being fully paid up, the unpaid amount, so far as the corporation's creditors are concerned, is money due from the stockholders, and no subterfuge or device making it appear as fully paid up, when it is not, will enable the stockholders to avoid liability.

6. Mines and minerals ⊂=104—Stockholders of mining corporation liable on stock not fully paid.

The rule of law that stockholders are liable to a corporation's creditors for the amount not paid on stock issued applies to mining corporations as well as others.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by the California National Supply Company against George Black and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Flint & Jutten and H. S. MacKay, Jr., all of Los Angeles, and Wm. G. Griffith, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Charles U. Armstrong, of Santa Maria, and Canfield & Starbuck, of Santa Barbara, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. According to the complaint in this action, plaintiff secured a judgment in the sum of $4,777.88 for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by it to the Cat Canyon Oil Company, against that company, previous to the commencement of this action; that an execution was thereafter duly issued and returned by the sheriff satisfied to the extent of $1,937.65, and no more, leaving a balance of $2,869.93 thereon unpaid and unsatisfied at the time of the commencement of this action; and that on two occasions subsequently executions were issued, and the sheriff of Santa Barbara county attempted to levy on property of the Cat Canyon Oil Company for such latter amount, but that upon each occasion the execution was returned wholly unsatisfied.

It is alleged that the Cat Canyon Oil Company was incorporated and organized with a capital stock of $500,000 divided into 500,000 shares of the par value of $1 each. It also is alleged, "on information and belief," that prior to July 25, 1910, a certain lease of certain described land had been given by one M. J. McCroskey, as lessor, to L. M. McCroskey, as lessee, giving the latter the right to drill and to exploit the same for oils and minerals; that thereafter, and prior to July 25, 1910, this lease was assigned to one George Black, one of the defendants here; that on this latter date the value of the interest of the lessee in the lease was not to exceed the sum of $10,000; and that the directors of the Cat Canyon Oil Company knew this to be a fact at that time. It further is alleged, "on information and belief," that on July 25, 1910, the directors of the Cat Canyon Oil Company agreed with said Black that his interest in said lease should be transferred to that corporation, and in consideration therefor the latter would issue to N. B. Barker the remaining 499,975 shares of its said capital stock; 25 shares having previously been issued, 5 shares to each of the five directors of said corporation. This agreement was carried out. But it is alleged "that the value of all the consideration received by said corporation for the issuance of said 499,975 shares of its capital stock was not, at any time, in excess of the sum of $10,000; that as incidental to said issuance of said 499,975 shares of said capital stock by said corporation and the directors thereof said corporation and said directors did assert, as a fact, that said 499,975 shares and all thereof were fully paid upon the issuance thereof as aforesaid;" that said directors knew said shares were not fully paid, inasmuch as the total consideration for the issuance thereof was property of a value not to exceed the total sum of $10,000; and that all of this was done fraudulently and with intent to defraud the public, and particularly the then and future creditors of the corporation.

The complaint further sets forth, on information and belief, that the defendants herein "have continuously been and now are the owners and holders in fact and according to the books and records of said Cat Canyon Oil Company, of the respective number of shares * * * set opposite their respective names, to wit, George Black, 9,500, L. B. Coblentz, 9,000, W. C. Oakley, 9,000, H. H. Jessee, 3,000, Frank Jessee, 3,000, Perry Jessee, 3,000, C. U. Armstrong, 9,000, and C. F. Black, 7,000"; and that the Cat Canyon Oil Company has at no time received, on account of said shares, any "thing of value or consideration other than $^{52500}/_{499975}$ of the sum of $10,000," which latter sum was the value of said lease.

Plaintiff asks the court to determine "the amount paid to the Cat Canyon Oil Company for the issuance from its treasury of each of the shares of its capital stock owned and held by the defendants herein, and that plaintiff have judgment against each of the defendants for the sum of $2,869.93, * * * but not to exceed the amount due from each defendant upon his subscription to the capital stock of said corporation."

A demurrer, general and special in terms, was interposed to the complaint, and by the court overruled. Defendants, except for the formal parts thereof, deny each and every material allegation of the complaint, and by way of separate and further defense allege: (1) That the cause of action set up in the complaint is barred by the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 337, subdivisions 1 and 4 of section 338, subdivision 1 of section 339, section 343, and section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state; (2) that of the sum prayed for there has been paid by Joseph P. McDonnell the sum of $664.02, and by Theodore R. Finley the sum of $562.23; (3) that there was, when this action was commenced, and now is, another action pending between this plaintiff and certain of these defendants for the same cause of action as herein set forth; (4) that for value received the said L. M. McCroskey assigned, etc., all his right, title, and interest in and to said lease and option to George Black, one of the defendants herein, which lease, together with the assignment thereof, was thereafter duly recorded, and, on July 25, 1910, was in full force and effect and of great value, to wit, "$100,000 or more"; (5) that the Cat Canyon Oil Company was an oil mining corporation, and organized for that purpose, that it had no land to operate or drill upon for oil, that with full knowledge of all the stockholders and directors thereof the said corporation duly and legally purchased said oil lease and option from said Black at the reasonable, actual, and agreed value of $100,000, and agreed to give and did issue and deliver to him and his associates in payment therefor 100,000 shares of the capital stock of said company, as fully paid, and no more, and that at the time said lease was sold to the Cat Canyon Oil Company the said corporation did not owe the plaintiff anything; and (6) that one Joseph McDonnell was a stockholder, director, and secretary of the Cat Canyon Oil Company at all times set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and at all times during its corporate existence, and at the time of the sale of the McCroskey oil lease to the Cat Canyon Oil Company the said McDonnell was also a sales agent and officer of the plaintiff herein, and knew of all the facts and details of said sale or exchange, as already set forth, that plaintiff well knew said facts to be as aforesaid at the time it extended credit to the Cat Canyon Oil Company, viz., that said stock was so issued to defendants and sold at par value and issued as fully paid up stock, and that plaintiff did not look to the said stock or the holders thereof, but to the corporation, the Cat Canyon Oil Company, and its property assets, in extending said credit.

Upon the issues thus presented, the cause went to trial to the court without a jury. After due deliberation thereon the court found in favor of defendants, and judgment, from which this appeal is taken, was entered accordingly.

The evidence shows, among other things, that the defendant George Black, on or about July 10, 1910, made an offer in writing by the terms of which, if accepted, he agreed to exchange, "in full payment for the entire capital stock" of the Cat Canyon Oil Company, "excepting the shares subscribed by the incorporators," a certain lease, with option to purchase, which he held, of certain lands described therein. If accepted, according to the offer so made by him, "the entire capital stock, except the shares subscribed, is to be issued as follows: 499,975 shares par value of $1 each to be issued to N. B. Barker, assistant secretary, N. B. Barker to issue said capital stock as follows: Geo. Black, 100,000 shares; T. R. Finley, 25,000 shares; Jos. McConnell, 25,000 shares; N. B. Barker, 349,975 shares. N. B. Barker then to issue to treasury account 200,000 shares; Hopkins, Moltman & Robbins, 50,000 shares; J. H. Robbins, trustee, 99,975 shares, which is to be reissued in connection with the sale of the treasury stock. * * *" This offer was duly and legally accepted by the Cat Canyon Oil Company "in full payment for all the unsubscribed shares of the capital stock of this corporation," the 499,975 shares of said stock were issued in accordance with the directions of the offer, being evidenced by certificate of stock No. 6, and the reissue of the stock, as set forth in the offer, was made by the assistant secretary accordingly.

Appellant urges that originally the stock held by each of these defendants was a part and parcel of said certificate No. 6, and that "the issuance to N. B. Barker of the 499,975 shares, in consideration of the transfer of the lease, was a subterfuge or device to make it appear as though the entire capital stock of the corporation was fully paid, or, in other words, that the corporation had received money or money's worth to the full par value of the stock." In the absence of evidence showing that the plaintiff knew of these facts before the credit was extended, we think this argument is sound. Did the plaintiff, therefore, have such notice?

[1] The rule is that an agent may, with their full knowledge and consent, represent both parties to a contract, and his contract under such circumstances bind each within the scope of his employment. "But where an agent, without the full knowledge and consent of his principal, represents the adverse party in a transaction, his contracts relating thereto are voidable at the option of his principal." 2 C. J. 838. And for the same reason the agent cannot, except with his principal's full knowledge and consent, assume any duties or enter upon any transaction concerning the subject-matter of the agency in which he has individual interests, or represents interests, adverse to those of his principal. Brown v. Spencer, 163 Cal. 589, 126 Pac. 493; Smith v. Goethe, 147 Cal. 725, 82 Pac. 384. "He cannot, without the knowledge and consent of his principal, represent himself and the principal, where third interests conflict; he must not put himself into such a position that his interests become antagonistic to those of his principal." 2 C. J. 694. Public policy demands that this be so, that all temptation to neglect his principal's interests may be removed from the agent.

In the case at bar, the witness McDonnell was the agent of the plaintiff. He was at the same time the agent of the defunct corporation, having been its secretary during the life of that corporation. He was also a stockholder thereof. McDonnell was therefore attempting to represent the plaintiff here, the defunct corporation, and his own interests as a stockholder. The interests of the defunct corporation and his own were adverse to those of the plaintiff; and unless the record here brings him within the rule above enunciated, his actions in reference to any dealings had with this plaintiff may not be binding upon it.

[2] On August 5, 1910, without the authority of his principal, the plaintiff corporation, McDonnell sold and delivered to said defunct corporation, Cat Canyon Oil Company, supplies, etc., to the extent of $2,046.60. On the 13th of the same month the treasurer of the plaintiff corporation wrote to McDonnell, among other things, as follows:

"I have asked you twice for a report on this account now, and of course unless I get satisfactory information and know that the company is all right, financially, we will not take their business. So if you want their business, the quicker it is made satisfactory to the treasury department the better."

On the 17th of the same month McDonnell answered this letter, purporting to give the treasury department of the plaintiff corporation the information sought. So far as material here, we quote from such answer as follows:

"I own one-tenth interest in this company for getting them the property, and as I do not have to put up a dollar and as I am secretary, it is of double interest to me to see that I am protected. We sold 300,000 shares of stock for $40,000, to be paid for not less than $5,000 per month. Hopkins, Maltman & Robbins are very well thought of as brokers in San Francisco and throughout the country, and I am sure that with the payments started they will be kept up. At any rate they have got to be kept up, for as soon as they stop work stops."

[3] This is the only testimony, so far as we have been able to learn from the record, and we have read the whole of it, disclosing any information about the Cat Canyon Oil Company to the plaintiff. This letter reveals to the plaintiff corporation that its agent, McDonnell, was representing both parties, and incidentally himself, so far as his interests were concerned; but it shows nothing else. We do not think the reference to the sale of "300,000 shares of stock for $40,000" can be legitimately construed to mean "fully paid up," or that creditors in good faith could not resort to any unpaid balance on the stock issued for any unpaid balance thereon. The evidence, on the other hand, discloses without question that this same McDonnell knew all about the whole transaction before, at the time of, and ever since the incorporation of the Cat Canyon Oil Company, as well as the issuance of the 499,975 shares of stock in exchange for the lease. The par value of the shares so issued was $1 each, or a total of $499,975. There is evidence that the defendants, and each of them, believed that the property was worth "at least $100,000." Assuming that among themselves it was binding as "fully paid up," this is not the case as to creditors. "The question concerns creditors only. As to them the corporation is presumed to have sought credit based upon its supposed capital * * * actually paid in or due from its stockholders. Public policy requires that the fact whether a particular creditor did trust the corporation on that basis should not be inquired into." Vermont, etc., Co. v. Declez, etc., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143.

The evidence discloses the duplicity of McDonnell, not only in his dealings with plaintiff, but with his associates and fellow stockholders in the defunct corporation. There is no doubt but that he deliberately kept the facts above recited from the plaintiff. As to his associates, we cite but one instance to show his attitude to them. In a letter written by him to the plaintiff he says, among other things:

"I would suggest that upon receipt of this letter you immediately write Mr. Finley, Santa Maria, telling him that you had heard from me regarding this account, and that it is absolutely certain that the account be paid by January 1st. Make the letter good and strong; that will make him get in the harness and get in the money. * * * Make the letter strong enough so there will be no doubt left as to your intentions."

Under these conditions we do not think the fact that McDonnell knew all about the transaction on both sides is sufficient, under the law, to charge plaintiff with such knowledge.

[4] There is no merit to the point urged by respondents that the trust fund theory does not apply to a person who has not subscribed to or purchased stock. The fact that defendants owned the stock set forth in plaintiff's complaint fixed their liability. Vermont, etc., Co. v. Declez, etc., Co., supra.

[5, 6] The evidence here, giving it such construction as will be the most favorable to respondents, shows that the stock was actually sold at much below its par value. And this, in reality, is the question upon which the case turns. The fact is, as disclosed by the record, that the stock owned by defendants is a part of the 499,975 shares transferred in accordance to Black's offer, by direction of T. R. Finley, to N. B. Barker. Where the stock of a corporation is issued without being fully paid up, "the amount remaining unpaid is, so far as its creditors are concerned, deemed to be money due from the stockholders. Such a creditor, if the corporation becomes insolvent, may apply, in equity, to have the fund so deemed to be due to the corporation collected and applied upon his debt. The fact that the stock is issued as fully paid up does not estop or bind the creditor, and in such a case, if it is not fully paid up, the creditor may prove the fact and recover enough of the portion that is unpaid to satisfy his debt. No subterfuge or device by which it is made to appear as fully paid up when it is not will enable the stockholder to avoid this liability." Herron Co. v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265. This is conceded by respondents to be a correct statement of the law; but in their opinion it does not apply to a mining corporation, nor to one who has not subscribed to or purchased stock. This is only another way of arguing that incorporators of mining companies should be permitted to violate the law, while conceding that all others should be held to strict accountability. We know of no law, and none is called to our attention, supporting the application of such double standard. As we have seen, the contention is untenable. In our opinion the reasoning of the Supreme Court in the case just cited is applicable on every phase of the case at bar. We think that case determinative of the points raised on this appeal.

No other point raised, under these considerations, needs discussion.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WELLER, J.

(48 Cal. App. 151)

GIFFEN et al. v. CHRIST'S CHURCH. (Civ. 3299.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 11, 1920.)

1. Specific performance ⟸36—Action lies against religious society failing to perform contract.

When a religious corporation neglects or refuses to carry out its contractual obligations by failing or refusing to do or perform certain acts which lie within its power, an action against it for specific performance may be successfully invoked.

2. Religious societies ⟸20—Cannot contract for sale of land without first obtaining court order.

A valid sale of real property by religious corporation may not be made until an order of court authorizing such sale is first had and obtained, under Civ. Code, § 598, although the provisions of the statute are not mandatory upon the court, but allow it sound discretion to deny the order.

3. Courts ⟸481—Specific performance cannot be decreed where inconsistent with a former order in force.

While an order of the superior court granted under Civ. Code, § 598, permitting a religious corporation to sell property to one other than plaintiff, exists, the order prayed for, compelling such society to specifically perform a contract to transfer the property to plaintiff, cannot be made.

4. Judgment ⟸512 — False testimony not ground for collateral attack.

A court order, under Civ. Code, § 598, permitting a religious corporation to transfer property to a certain party, cannot be annulled for fraud by a decree of specific performance of a contract to convey to another, since if the former was granted on false testimony that would not justify a collateral attack, in the absence of a showing of lack of jurisdiction.

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

5. Appeal and error ⟸843(2)—Unnecessary questions need not be determined.

Where the court, under Civ. Code, § 598, granted an order directing a conveyance from a religious society to one other than plaintiff, the order was, in effect, a denial of the petition, so far as plaintiffs appellants are concerned, so that it is unnecessary on their appeal to determine the validity of the order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Giffen and another against Christ's Church, a religious corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young, W. G. Van Pelt, and Bertin A. Weyl, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. T. Quinn, T. A. Williams, Overton, Lyman & Plumb, and Wm. B. Himrod, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to compel the specific performance of an agreement to convey real estate. At the commencement of the trial defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the second amended complaint failed to state a cause of action. The objection was sustained, and, plaintiffs having declined to amend, judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, from which plaintiffs appeal. The sufficiency of said complaint is therefore the only matter to be considered.

The following are substantially the facts upon which plaintiff's cause of action is based: On July 1, 1918, pursuant to a resolution of its board of directors, respondent, a religious corporation, entered into a written agreement with appellants, whereby it agreed to sell appellants certain real property for the sum of $5,000, subject to incumbrances amounting to $65,000. Thereafter, on July 1, 1918, respondent petitioned the superior court of Los Angeles county, in accordance with section 598 of the Civil Code, for leave to sell and convey said property. On July 12, 1918, after due notice, said petition came on regularly for hearing, and an order was granted by the court directing the sale to be made, but to a person other than appellants and for a consideration other than that stated in the petition. It is alleged in said complaint that at all times subsequent to the 1st day of July up to and including July 12, 1918, respondent, by and through its officers and agents, represented to appellants that said agreement would be carried out, but that said representations were false, and that between said 1st day of July, 1918, and the 12th day of July, 1918, with the intention of avoiding said agreement the officers of said respondent negotiated with another purchaser for the sale of said real property and fraudulently concealed from the court the existence of said written agreement between appellants and respondent, and fraudulently represented to said court that respondent was free to accept a bid from a proposed purchaser other than appellants. It is further alleged that the negotiations between the officers and agents of respondent and said other purchaser were concealed by them from the directors of respondent, and that said directors never authorized or directed the sale of said property to any purchaser other than appellants. It is further alleged that, unless otherwise decreed, said officers and agents will execute and deliver to said other purchaser a deed to said property. Said complaint also embodies the usual allegations necessary to be made in the statement of a cause of action for specific performance of an agreement to sell land, by alleging adequacy of consideration, the performance by appellants of all matters and things required of them to be performed, and their willingness and ability to complete the agreement.

The prayer of said complaint is:

"That a judgment and decree be made and entered in this case requiring defendant to apply to the court in which said petition to sell and convey said property is filed, for an order setting aside the order heretofore made, and the making and entry in said proceedings of an order granting leave to sell and convey said property in accordance with said petition and in pursuance of said contract between plaintiffs and defendant, and that said defendant be further required to fully carry out its said contract with the plaintiffs and to make and execute a grant deed conveying said property unto said plaintiffs," and for general relief and costs.

[1, 2] It is the contention of appellants, first, that the action is one for specific performance, and that under the facts alleged in said second amended complaint specific performance may be decreed; secondly, that the order to sell to another was obtained by fraud; and, thirdly, that the provisions of section 598 of the Civil Code limit the power of the court to either grant or deny the petition as filed, and do not authorize the court to direct a sale to a purchaser other than the one named in the petition, or for a different consideration.

It is doubtless the law, that when a religious corporation neglects or refuses to carry out its contractual obligations by failing or refusing to do or perform certain acts which lie within its power to perform, an action for specific performance against it may be successfully invoked. Bowen et al. v. Trustees of Irish Presbyterian Church, etc., 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 245; Congregation Beth Elohim v. Central Presbyterian Church, 10 Abb. Prac. (N. S. N. Y.) 485; 34 Cyc. 1162; in the Matter of the Reformed Dutch Church, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 237. But we cannot agree with appellants' contention that under the facts stated in their complaint such a case is here presented, for the reason that under all of the authorities cited a valid sale may not be made by such religious corporation until an order of court authorizing such sale is first had and obtained. Dudley v. Congregation of Third Order of St. Francis, 138 N. Y. 451, 34 N. E. 281. Such are the plain provisions of section 598 of the Civil Code of this state, and such is the effect of the decisions of the other jurisdictions above cited, construing statutes of similar character. The provisions of the statutes upon which those cases are founded, as well as those of our own statute, are not mandatory upon the court, requiring that the court shall in all cases grant an order to sell. The court may, in the exercise of sound discretion, deny such order. Bowen et al. v. Trustees of Irish Presbyterian Church, supra; 34 Cyc. 1162, 1163.

[3] Appellants are, then, in the beginning, confronted with the order of the superior court of Los Angeles county, duly made upon proper petition and notice, directing that the property in question be conveyed by respondent to another purchaser. If the lower court thereafter, in the face of that order, decreed specific performance to appellants, it would have brought about the anomalous situation of having the superior court of Los Angeles county in one proceeding direct that respondent execute and deliver a deed to the property in question to one purchaser, and at the same time having the same court, although a different department thereof, direct that respondent execute and deliver a deed to said property to another purchaser. This, of course, the law will not permit, and it is quite obvious that while the order granted by the superior court in the proceeding instituted under section 598 of the Civil Code remains in force specific performance in this action cannot be decreed.

[4] Appellants seek to have such order annulled for fraud, but the manner in which said order is being attacked, that is, through the medium of a judgment sought to be obtained in this action for specific performance, is clearly collateral, and therefore unavailing. Baldwin v. Foster, 157 Cal. 643, 108 Pac. 714; Estate of Ryan, 177 Cal. 598, 171 Pac. 297. Neither does the fact that the order may have been granted on false testimony justify a collateral attack upon said order, in the absence of a showing of lack of jurisdiction. Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; Roundtree v. Montague, 30 Cal. App. 170, 157 Pac. 623; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 Pac. 317.

[5] It is not necessary to consider and determine the remaining contention urged by appellants, namely, that the provisions of section 598 of the Civil Code do not authorize the court to direct a sale of the property of a religious corporation to any other purchaser than the one named in the petition and in the resolution adopted by said religious corporation. We are here concerned only with the issues between appellants and respondent, and since the court in the special proceeding under said section 598 granted the order directing the conveyance to be made to a person other than these appellants, it was, in effect, a denial of the petition in so far as appellants are concerned (Estate of Bradley, 168 Cal. 655, 144 Pac. 136), and whether or not the order is valid in so far as it directs a conveyance to such other purchaser is not material here.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 103

GIANELLI et al. v. GLOBE GRAIN & MILLING CO. (Civ. 2167.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 8, 1920.)

1. Sales ⇐199—Title held to have passed to buyer.

A contract for the sale of hay, containing the words "hereby sell," but providing that seller should deliver whenever buyer should arrange time therefor, and for payment of three-quarters of the purchase price almost immediately, held an executed contract, so that the title passed to the buyer.

2. Evidence ⇐457—Parol evidence of circumstances admissible to show meaning of "f. o. b."

In an action for buyer's refusal to take a part of hay sold because of subsequent damage, parol evidence held proper to bring before the court all facts and circumstances characterizing the transaction culminating in the written agreement, not to alter or modify its terms, but to show what the characters "f. o. b." as used in the writing were intended by the parties to mean, and whether they were to control in determining whether the agreement was an executed or an executory sale.

3. Sales ⇐199—Purchaser's agreement to deliver not controlling as to passing of title.

The fact that the seller of goods or commodities agrees to deliver the same to the purchaser at some point is not necessarily controlling in determining whether the parties intended that an immediate transfer of title should be effected.

4. Sales ⇐218½—Evidence held to show sale of hay was executed, not executory.

Evidence held to show an absolute sale of hay so that the title passed to the buyer, the contract being executed and not executory, in view of Civ. Code, § 1140.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by A. E. Gianelli and another against the Globe Grain & Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton (Clarence E. Fleming, of Stockton, of counsel), for appellant.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, J. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $1,590 defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Plaintiffs were the owners of a tract of land, situated near Stockton, upon which, in the season of 1918, they had grown and harvested a crop of hay amounting to 330 tons. The hay was baled, and was in one stack on the premises, each bale, with the exception of 80 tons, being tagged with the weight. On August 8, 1918, J. E. Morgan, of Stockton, and G. A. Morgan, of Los Angeles, representing the defendant, called upon the plaintiff, Barmann, and had a conversation with him regarding the securing of an option on the hay or the purchase thereof. Barmann informed the Morgans that he preferred to sell the hay rather than to give an option upon it and, after some conversation, the following contract was written and signed by the parties:

"Stockton, Aug. 8, '18. I hereby sell to the Globe Grain & Milling Co. three hundred and fifty ton (350) more or less No. 1 barley hay for twenty-three dollars ($23.00) f. o. b. cars or warehouse; same to be decided upon. The amount of seventy-five per cent. to be paid on or before the 12th of Aug.; the balance of twenty-five per cent. to be paid on completion of hauling and delivering, together with weight, on or before sixty days. Globe Grain & Milling Co., J. E. Morgan. Barmann & Gianelli, by H. W. Barmann. J. E. Morgan."

Six thousand dollars, approximately 75 per cent. of the purchase price, was paid to plaintiffs on August 14, 1918, and, at the same time plaintiffs assigned to defendant an insurance policy for $7,000 covering the hay. It appears that, on the night of the 11th of September, before the hay had been delivered, half an inch of rain fell, and in the next few days there were four inches of rain. The hay was badly damaged, and defendant refused to accept any damaged hay, but expressed its willingness to take the undamaged hay. Plaintiffs agreed to haul the undamaged hay if defendant would segregate what it considered damaged from the undamaged hay. This defendant refused to do, and plaintiffs commenced the action for the balance of the purchase price.

[1] The controversy herein arises over the question whether the transaction evidenced by the above instrument involved a sale of the hay or an executory contract for the sale of said property, the appellant's position being that, under the terms of said writing, the title to the hay was not to pass to the purchaser until the completion of delivery on board of cars or at a warehouse, to be later designated by defendant; and that, no such delivery having been made, although, as is the claim, notice of and demand for such delivery was duly given and made, the title to the hay remained in the vendors, and that therefore they must stand any loss or damage which occurred by reason of the rainstorm referred to. On the other hand, the plaintiffs contend that the transaction constituted an absolute sale of the hay, and that title to the property immediately passed to the defendant upon the execution of the writing above quoted herein.

We think the words of the writing evidencing the transaction involved herein clearly import an absolute sale of the hay, and that the legal effect of said writing, although signed by the defendant as well as the plaintiffs, is that of a bill of sale. The instrument sets forth definitely the property sold —that is, the kind and the number of tons of hay sold—and expressly states that the vendors "hereby sell," not "hereby agree to sell" the hay to the purchaser at a specified price. Moreover, the language of the writing, it will be noted, clearly implies that the hay, although thus purchased outright by the defendant, was to remain on the premises of the plaintiffs until such time as the defendant might itself determine whether the hay should be placed or stored in some warehouse designated by it or put on board of cars for shipment. This matter was solely to be determined by the defendant, and it is obvious that the hay could not be delivered until the defendant had made a decision as to which of the two different places provided for in the writing at which it should be delivered for it by the plaintiffs. Indeed, the plaintiffs were without any right or authority to deliver the hay except at one or the other of the places to be finally designated by the defendant, although the former could have compelled the latter to remove the hay from their premises if it had been permitted to remain there for a longer period than was consistent with the convenient use by the plaintiffs for their own purposes of the particular portion of the premises where the hay was allowed by them to remain after the transaction and pending its delivery to the place designated by the defendant.

There is still another consideration of potent significance in establishing that the transaction was intended by the parties to constitute an absolute sale, and that title to the hay should immediately vest in the defendant, and that is in the fact that the writing above reproduced herein provided that a very large proportion of the purchase price—in fact, the larger proportion thereof—should be paid within four or five days after the execution of the instrument. It is not at all likely that, had the contract been intended or understood to be merely executory and its consummation dependent upon delivery of the hay by the sellers to the purchaser, the defendant would have bound itself to pay three-quarters of the purchase price within so short a time after the transaction and before (as we shall later see was true) the place of delivery was designated by the defendant. Referring to the circumstance of the payment down of a large amount of the purchase price of personal property as one shedding some light on the nature of the contract involving a transfer of such property—that is, upon the question whether the contract involves an absolute sale or is only executory, Williston, in his work on Sales (1909 Ed.) p. 368, says:

"If the buyer pays the price, or a large portion of it, it is evidence not so strong as delivery, but still entitled to great weight, that immediate transfer of the property is intended. The weight to be given such evidence will be diminished if the portion of the price paid is not large. It is to be observed that though payment of the price is important evidence of an intention to transfer the property immediately, nonpayment of the price is little, or no evidence, of an intent to retain the ownership."

[2] But if there be doubt as to the scope and effect of the writing or as to whether it was intended as an executed or only an executory contract, or one merely for the sale in the future of the hay, such doubt will be readily dissipated upon a consideration of the parol evidence allowed by the court, disclosing the facts and circumstances leading to, surrounding, and attending the execution of the writing. But in this connection, we may first well consider the contention of counsel for the defendant that evidence extrinsic to the writing itself is incompetent, and therefore inadmissible for the purpose of showing what the parties meant or intended by their agreement. This position is based upon the well-established rule that, where parties have reduced the terms of an agreement into which they have entered to writing, all their prior and contemporaneous oral negotiations appertaining to the agreement are to be ordinarily presumed to have been merged in the writing, and that the terms of the agreement cannot be varied or changed or modified or even explained by parol testimony.

The specific contention is that the characters "f. o. b.," as used in contracts for the sale of personal property, are in commercial circles always understood to mean that title to the thing which is the subject of such a contract does not pass until the thing or property is delivered by the seller to or on board the cars, or, as in this case, until so delivered either at a warehouse or on board the cars. In other words, it is the contention that those letters or characters as used in commercial contracts for the sale of goods or commodities have a definite, fixed, and well-understood meaning, that their signification as so used is as above given, and that therefore there cannot properly be admitted to prove the meaning of those characters or to show that, as used in a particular contract, they do not mean what they are in the law merchant commonly understood to mean when so employed, any testimony other than the agreement itself, but that the courts may and must take notice of their meaning or signification when so used. Some cases from other jurisdictions are cited as in support of this view. Without entering into an examination herein of the cases named by counsel, we affirm only an obvious proposition when we observe that words or characters having a definite and well-understood meaning when used in certain contracts may nevertheless be used in a contract in such manner or in such connection with other words or language therein employed as expressing the terms of the agreement of the parties thereto as to make such contract itself ambiguous or uncertain as to its meaning, scope, and effect, or, in other words, render the intent of the parties to such contract vague and uncertain; and, where the intention of the parties to a written contract is not made clear by the written instrument itself, or is so obscured by the language of the writing, even though phrased in words which themselves, or taken alone, bear a fixed, definite, certain, and a common and well-understood meaning, it is proper to receive evidence for the purpose of explaining what the parties meant by the language employed in such contract to express their agreement. In this case, the parties appear from the face of the writing itself to have "struck a bargain" by agreeing upon a sale of the hay and the terms of the payment therefor, but they, notwithstanding, inserted in their written agreement the characters "f. o. b," in a connection which might possibly have the effect of throwing a little—we think very little, if any—doubt upon what they really intended to effect by their agreement. It was proper, therefore, to allow parol evidence for the purpose of bringing before the court all of the facts and circumstances characterizing the transaction culminating in the agreement and the writing evidencing its terms, not for the purpose of altering or modifying the terms thereof, but only to show what the characters "f. o. b.," as therein used, were intended by the parties to mean, or whether they were to control in determining whether the agreement was an executed agreement of sale or only an executory agreement for the sale of the hay.

[3] It has repeatedly been held in this state that the fact that the seller of goods or commodities of any character agrees to deliver the same to the purchaser at some point is not necessarily controlling in determining upon a construction of the contract for their sale, whether the parties intended by their agreement that an immediate transfer of title should or should not then be effected. In Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, the agreement provided for payment for the oranges, which were the subject of the contract, "as soon and at the time of delivery." In that case the trial court allowed parol proof to show what the parties understood and intended that the nature of the contract should be; that is, whether it involved a present sale and transfer of title, or merely an agreement to sell, with the intention that title in the vendee should vest only upon delivery by the vendor. It was held that the trial court made no error in admitting the evidence thus referred to; and, furthermore, the court held, in the language following this, that the contract upon its face clearly indicated that an absolute sale was thereby effected:

"Nor do we wish to be understood as holding that the title to the crop did not pass as soon as the contract was executed. The agreement, in form, imports a present sale; the thing sold was in existence, and was identified and separated from other things. Under section 1141 [1140?] Civ. Code, it would seem that title passed at once, and that the oranges remained on the trees at the risk of the buyer."

In Fiddyment v. Johnson, 18 Cal. App. 339, 123 Pac. 342, the agreement involved the sale of hay, and the facts of the transaction therein are so near identical with those of the present case that it would be difficult to differentiate the two upon any logical line of demarcation. It was there held that the fact that the seller was required by the contract to deliver the hay was not controlling, citing Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45, where the seller was to haul and deliver at a specified point, which was held not a controlling factor determinative of the question whether the contract involved an executed or present sale and transfer of title to the vendee or merely executory in its nature. See, also, Greenbaum v. Martinez, 86 Cal. 459, 25 Pac. 12.

It is held in all of the above cases that whatever may be the general trade meaning of the phrase "payable f. o. b." or other trade phrases peculiar to commercial contracts or the characters "f. o. b.," the fact remains that such trade or commercial signification or meaning is always controlled by the express contract of the parties, and that parol evidence may be received to show what effect such phrases or characters have on such contracts as in fixing the nature, scope, or effect thereof, or as in disclosing the intention of the parties as to such scope and effect.

It follows from the foregoing considerations that the action of the trial court in allowing parol evidence of the circumstances attending the making of the agreement involved herein was free from error; and, as before declared, a consideration of the evidence so admitted will readily demonstrate that the said agreement or contract involved an absolute sale of the hay, and that, therefore, the title to said property passed to the defendant eo instante upon the execution of said agreement. The testimony so referred to was (for the plaintiff) mainly that of H. W. Barmann, one of the plaintiffs, and is as follows, given synoptically, though somewhat extendedly:

"A. E. Gianelli, the other plaintiff, and myself own a tract of land situated about four miles west of Stockton on the lower division of Roberts Island. In the season of 1918 we grew and harvested a crop of hay on this land. This hay was harvested, baled, and stacked in one large stack on the premises adjoining the Jacobs or Holt road. Every bale was weighed as it came from the hay press on the field, and every bale, with the exception of 80 tons was tagged. On the 8th day of August, 1918, there were 330 tons of hay in the stack, less one-fifth of a ton. It was separated from everything else. On that day Mr. J. E. Morgan, of Stockton, and Mr. G. A. Morgan, of Los Angeles, called upon me in regard to selling my hay. We talked for about half an hour. No one else was present. Mr. Morgan's wife was in his automobile, but she did not enter into our conversation. Both of the Mr. Morgans and I looked at the hay; they examined it very carefully, asked me as to its quality and uniformity in the stack and so forth. They both seemed to be very much pleased with the quality of the hay. They told me that the United States government was opening bids for the purchase of a large quantity of hay, on the following Monday, I believe, and asked me if we would be willing to give them an option for the purchase of this hay. I told them that I didn't think so, that an option would not be satisfactory to me. I felt that the hay was to be sold outright to avoid any damage—any possible damage from rain or otherwise. We spoke of what the hay would bring. As we were speaking of the price, the point came up as to whether I could deliver the hay for them. I told them I didn't want to deliver the hay, because it was a lot of bother, and I wanted to sell it as it was, and not be bothered with it. They told me that they had no organization to look after such things as hauling hay, and so forth, and could not be bothered with the same. I consented, and said that in that event I could probably deliver the hay to them. It was agreed that the price to be paid for the hay was $23 a ton, which would net me practically $22 a ton, inasmuch as the hauling would cost $1 a ton. We then spoke of payments. We spoke as to how much money we would want, or I would demand at that time. I told them I would need most of the money at that time. They asked me if 75 per cent. would be sufficient and meet our needs at that time, that being about the sum of $6,000. I said yes, I thought that would be satisfactory for the initial payment, and as to the other payment they asked me if 60 days from date would be all right for the second payment, in case they did not haul the hay before that time. Mr. Morgan asked me if they could leave the hay on the ranch for a period longer than 60 days in case they wished. I told them it made no difference to us, they could leave the hay there until next winter, and we would not charge them storage for the same, provided we didn't need the land or the space. That being agreed upon, Mr. Morgan from Los Angeles, instructed his brother to draw up a bill of sale for the hay."

[4] Thereupon the writing evidencing the agreement of the parties and above quoted herein was prepared by one of the Morgans, and signed by both the parties to the transaction. The witness (Barmann), continuing further, testified:

"The next time I saw Mr. Morgan was on the 14th of August. Inasmuch as the payment of 75 per cent. on the purchase price was due on the 12th of August by the terms of the bill of sale, I went to the office of Morgan & Miller on the 14th of August to get the 75 per cent. payment for the hay. Mr. Morgan at that time wrote out a check payable to our order for $6,000, and gave me the same. He also asked me to have the insurance assigned to them, inasmuch as they had bought the bay, which I told him I would do. The hay was insured for about $7,000. I then went to the Bank of Italy, and deposited our check for $6,000. I went to Mr. Wurster, and asked him for the policy. Mr. Wurster gave me this insurance policy, which we had had at the Bank of Italy. I took the insurance policy, and started over to Gianelli's office. I met Mr. Morgan on the sidewalk in front of the Bank of Italy, and told him it had been made out for about $7,000, and asked him if he wanted more insurance on the hay. He said no, that sum would be all right. I delivered the policy to Mr. Truett, and he in turn assigned the policy to the Globe Grain & Milling Company, and the policy was delivered to the Globe Grain & Milling Company. I saw Morgan & Miller once or twice before the 31st of August, and asked them if they had been successful in selling this hay to the government, and as to when they would want the hay hauled."

Barmann stated that on the 31st day of August he called on and saw Morgan, and said to him that, they (the plaintiffs) having finished hoeing their beans, they then had nothing to do, and would like very much to remove the hay from the ranch. Morgan replied that he was writing to Los Angeles, and hoped that "they could move it very soon." The next time the witness saw Morgan was on the 11th day of September, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon at his (Morgan's) office, and at that time Morgan instructed the witness to deliver the hay to the Dickinson-Nelson Warehouse in Stockton, "and that we could start hauling." Morgan said to Barmann that one Hickey desired to secure the work of moving the hay, and both Morgan and the witness thereupon went together to the office of Hickey. The witness continued:

"I asked Mr. Hickey what he would charge to haul this hay to the warehouse in Stockton, and he told me it would cost $1 a ton to deliver the same. I wanted to see several other parties regarding the hauling, and went to Russell Bros. to see them. They had gone home, so I went to the office of Russells the next morning at 8 o'clock, and saw Mr. Russell. It was then raining. It had rained half an inch, on that night of the 11th of September. Russell told me he was very busy, and he would rather I would have Hickey haul it. I went to Hickey's office, and as he was not in I wrote a note, telling him to haul the hay as soon as possible. It then rained about four inches in the next few days. I saw Mr. Morgan on the morning of September 12th, and told him I had seen Mr. Hickey, and had told Hickey to haul the hay, and I told Morgan, in case he saw Hickey before I did, to tell Hickey to commence hauling the hay.

"I saw Mr. Morgan again on September 13th, and we talked over about the rain and so forth, and Mr. Morgan said it was not advisable to haul the hay until things dried off. On the following Monday, September 16th, I was out on the ranch and got on top of this stack of hay and examined it by taking a couple of bales from the top to see how far the moisture had penetrated the stack of hay. At that time the moisture had gone through at least two bales—the top two bales—two layers of hay were saturated with water. I telephoned Mr. Morgan, and told him that the hay was very wet, and told him that in case I owned the hay I would remove the two bales which were saturated with water to prevent the same from percolating through the whole stack. Mr. Morgan came out and looked at the hay, and told me to remove the top two bales of hay from the stack and pile the same to one side. That same evening, about 5 o'clock I went to Mr. Morgan's office in Stockton again, and told him that, inasmuch as he had instructed me to move the top bales off, and so forth, I told him I wanted him to give me a statement of that part, in writing. Mr. Morgan told me he could not give me anything in writing without taking the matter up with the Los Angeles office. I therefore went to the office of Mr. Morgan on the morning of September 17th, and asked him for the order. He told me he could not give me this in writing. Mr. Morgan instructed me to haul the good hay which had not been damaged. I therefore arranged with Mr. Hickey to have trucks down there at once to haul the hay which had not been damaged, and notified Mr. Morgan of the same. * * *

"On the 17th—I have this on September 17th—I have this memorandum in my handbook; 'Morgan instructs me to start hauling hay which is undamaged, but will not give order to remove wet hay from stack to find further damage!' * * *"

The testimony of Barmann was corroborated in all material particulars by that of J. E. Morgan, who, testifying for the defendant, declared that the former first said they would let the defendant have an option on the hay at $23 per ton, to which proposition the brother of J. E. Morgan replied that it was not advisable to take an option, but that it would be better "to take the hay as long as we could get the time for storing or loading the hay out. We told Mr. Barmann," Morgan continued, "we would let him have what money he needed as an advancement on the hay. He spoke about getting about three-quarters of the approximate weight, which was about 350 tons, or, in other words, about $6,000 which was satisfactory."

That the foregoing testimony unmistakably shows that an absolute sale of the hay was effected by the transaction between the parties, and that the title to the hay then and there passed to and vested in the defendant, there is no reasonable ground for doubting. The parties agreed to a present transfer, and the property which was the subject of the agreement was itself identified, being separated from all other hay or "things." When those conditions arise and exist, a sale and the transfer of title to the thing sold are effected. Civ. Code, § 1140; Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 348, 40 Pac. 534; Scribner v. Schenkel, 128 Cal. 255, 60 Pac. 860. "When the terms of sale are agreed on, and the bargain is struck, and everything that the seller has to do with the goods is complete, the contract of sale becomes absolute, without actual payment or delivery, and the property and risk of accident to the goods vest in the buyer." 2 Kent's Commentaries, p. 492; Browning v. McNear, 158 Cal. 525, 527, 528, 111 Pac. 541. Here, as we have seen, everything that the plaintiffs had to do with the hay after the transaction or before its execution was complete, except that, when called on to do so by the defendant, they were to deliver the hay to some place designated by the latter. The proportion of the purchase price as agreed upon and specified in the written contract was paid by the defendant to the plaintiff at the time designated in said contract, and before any of the hay was delivered. Furthermore, the plaintiffs, at the request of the defendant, assigned to the latter the policy of insurance previously issued to and taken out by plaintiffs to indemnify them against loss in case of the destruction of the hay.

The fact, manifestly, is that the contract here involved was, in a technical or strictly legal sense, a bargain and sale, as known to the common law; for, as we have pointed out, the evidence unquestionably shows that everything was done that the plaintiffs were required to do with the hay, except the delivery thereof, which act rested entirely with defendant. In other words, upon reaching an agreement as to the terms of the convention by the parties, a bargain having thus been struck, title to the hay necessarily and immediately passed to the defendants. It was, in brief, under the evidence and under the law (section 1140, Civ. Code) clearly an executed and not an executory agreement or contract. See Benjamin on Sales (4th Ed.) pp. 309, 310; Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., 29 Cal. App. 52, 57, 155 Pac. 134, 136.

The conclusion from the foregoing views is necessarily that "the title and the risk of accident" to the hay vested in the defendant upon the completion of the transaction evidenced by the writing to which the parties subscribed, and which is above reproduced herein, and that the findings of the court are well supported, and that they likewise support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

48 Cal. App. 93

POTTER HUFFMAN LAND & LIVE STOCK CO. v. WITCHER. (Civ. 2121.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 7, 1920.)

1. Judgment ⊂⊃251(1)—Court may adjudge matter in issue, though not prayed for in complaint.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, in default cases the demand limits plaintiff's recovery, but where the prayer of the complaint did not specifically ask judgment as to ownership of a water right, but there was an answer and contest raising such issue, it was proper for the court to adjudge the water right between the parties.

2. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃152(8)—Evidence held sufficient to show irrigation right to water from user.

In an action involving water rights, evidence held to show that plaintiff's predecessors in interest had acquired the right by using the natural flow of water from a canyon for irrigating a certain ranch during the irrigation season for over 40 years, during which time no one else had any claim thereto, or interfered with their use thereof.

3. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃152(8)—Evidence held to show that appropriator of water was acting as agent for another.

In an action involving water rights, evidence held to show that the party appropriating water for use on a particular ranch located the same in his own name as agent of the plaintiff company's predecessor in interest.

4. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃152(8)—Evidence held to show that purchaser had notice of water rights of another.

In an action involving water rights, evidence held sufficient to sustain the court's finding that the defendant had full notice and knowledge of the rights of plaintiff's predecessor in and to a certain reservoir at the time he received the instrument of title from the party who had located the same as agent for plaintiff's predecessor.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸156(5)—Purchaser of water rights held to have had notice of adverse claim.

Where defendant was given sufficient information to place him on inquiry as to plaintiff's rights long before transfer of water rights to him, he was not an innocent purchaser without notice, in view of Civ. Code, § 19, since he had readily accessible means of acquiring knowledge which is equivalent to notice or knowledge of such rights.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; C. A. Raker, Judge.

Action by the Potter Huffman Land & Live Stock Company against W. V. Witcher. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jamison & Wylie and Daly B. Robnett, all of Alturas, for appellant.

Chas. W. Kitts, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Modoc county adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of a certain water right, reservoir site, and right of way described in the complaint, and also adjudging that a certain instrument in writing, executed by one Ed Ivory, Jr., to defendant and set out in the complaint, conveyed no right, title, or interest in said water right, reservoir site, and right of way.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner and in possession of a certain tract of land described in the complaint as the "E" or Ivory ranch, in Clover Swale, Modoc county, together with the right to construct and maintain a reservoir on sections 2 and 11, township 43 north, range 10 east, M. D. M., and a right of way therefrom down what is known as Weller canyon to the said "E" ranch; that this reservoir site and right of way was located, appropriated, and secured for the purpose of impounding winter water draining from Antelope plains and delivering the same to and upon said "E" ranch, during the irrigating season to be there used for irrigating the crops thereon; and that at all times since the selection thereof they have been appurtenant to the said "E" ranch.

The said ranch for many years prior to October 8, 1915, was owned by the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company (a corporation) and its predecessors in interest, and the plaintiff through certain mesne conveyances has succeeded to its title thereto, together with all water and reservoir rights, etc., connected therewith.

The complaint further alleges that for more than 20 years continuously, next preceding the year 1912, the said corporation had claimed, appropriated, taken, and used all the natural flow of water from sections 2 and 11 and surrounding lands known as Antelope plains, draining off through Weller canyon during the irrigating season of each year, to wit, from June 1st to October 15th for irrigating said "E" ranch.

This allegation of the complaint was specifically denied by the defendant, and in addition thereto the defendant avers the facts to be that the defendant is the owner of 160 acres of land that is riparian to the waters flowing from said Antelope plains, through said Weller canyon, and that for a period of 50 years prior to the commencement of this action the defendant and his grantors have irrigated the tillable portions of said lands from the waters flowing through said Weller canyon during the irrigating season of each and every year.

Upon the issue thus formed the court found: That for more than 20 years continuously next preceding 1912 the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company and its predecessors in interest had claimed, appropriated, taken and used all the natural flow of water from sections 2 and 11, township 43 north, range 10 east, M. D. M., and surrounding lands known as Antelope plains draining through said canyon during the irrigating season for irrigating said ranch and ever since and including the year 1912 plaintiff and its predecessors have so taken and used all of the natural flow of said water, and for a period of more than 28 years preceding the commencement of this action the said waters and the whole thereof were and are necessary and indispensable to the proper irrigation of said lands.

The court further found:

"That the defendant is the owner of 160 acres of land known as the Redding Field which adjoins the said 'E' ranch on the south, through which the water course flowing through the said 'E' ranch continues and through which water course and over said land, the drainage from said 'E' ranch passes. That for a long period namely 40 years prior to the commencement of this action the water which drained upon said premises from said 'E' ranch had been used from time to time as desired in irrigating said lands. That at no time were the possessors and occupants of the 'E' ranch ever asked to or compelled or did they, during the irrigating season, allow any portion of the water of said Weller canyon which could be used in irrigating on said 'E' ranch, pass the boundaries thereof to said defendant's land. That the only water from said Weller canyon ever used on said Redding Field was such as was voluntarily permitted by the owners and occupants of said 'E' ranch to flow onto said defendant's premises."

The appellant claims that the court erred in finding and decreeing that the plaintiff is the owner of all the natural flow of the water of Weller canyon. That this is an action to quiet the title of plaintiff as against defendant to the reservoir and the right of way described in the complaint. That there was no prayer in the complaint that the court should decree anything else to the plaintiff than the said reservoir and right of way, and that the said findings are not supported by the evidence.

[1] It is true that the prayer of the complaint in this action does not specifically ask for judgment as to the ownership of the water right, but it was not necessary that it should, in order to warrant the court in granting the relief that it did in that respect. Section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint; but in any other case, the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue."

In default cases the demand limits plaintiff's recovery (Staacke v. Bell, 125 Cal. 309, 57 Pac. 1012; Brooks v. Forington, 117 Cal. 219, 48 Pac. 1073), but in contested cases the demand does not so limit the recovery, and the court may grant the plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue, although not specifically prayed for (Dennison v. Chapman, 105 Cal. 447, 39 Pac. 61; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 33 Pac. 786; Hurlbutt v. N. W. Spaulding Saw Co., 93 Cal. 55, 28 Pac. 795; Cassinella v. Allen, 168 Cal. 677, 144 Pac. 746; Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 97 Pac. 672; Fox v. Hall, 164 Cal. 287, 128 Pac. 749; Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 111 Pac. 360; Faulkner v. First National Bank, 130 Cal. 258, 62 Pac. 463; Poledori v. Newman, 116 Cal. 375, 48 Pac. 325). It was said by this court in Haight v. Stewart, 36 Cal. App. 514, 172 Pac. 769, that:

"It is * * * well settled in procedural law that a party is not only entitled to any and all relief which is appropriately within the scope of his pleading, but may be awarded such relief upon any substantial legal or equitable ground coming within the fair and reasonable import of the averments of his pleading."

The allegations of the complaint and the denials and averments of the answer, as above stated, clearly raised an issue as to the ownership of the water rights in Weller canyon, and it became necessary for the court to find the facts in reference to such rights and to adjudicate as to the ownership of the same.

[2] We are of the opinion that the evidence is ample and sufficient to sustain these findings of the trial court as to the ownership of the said water rights. It appears that the Ivory family settled on the "E" ranch in 1872, being 46 years before the trial of this action. In 1904 they organized the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company. All the officers and shareholders of the company were members of the said family. Ed Ivory, Jr., became the general manager of the company at the time of its organization, and continued as such until it was dissolved, and during this time he generally attended to its business. From the date of the articles of incorporation to October 8, 1915, the said company occupied and claimed said ranch. As to the use of the water on the "E" ranch, Ed Ivory, Jr., testified as follows:

"Q. During this period was part of it irrigated? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long prior to 1904 had the lands there been irrigated? A. They had been irrigated as long as we owned it. Q. How long had your folks owned it? A. I do not know. Q. Were you born there? A. Yes, sir. Q. They were irrigated as long as you can remember? A. Yes, sir. Q. And always have been irrigated since you can remember? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did they get the water to irrigate those lands with? A. There were springs in the canyon and in the spring of the year we got the overflow of Antelope plains. Q. Did you use the water that came down out of the canyon? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you use it all? A. Yes, sir; we used it all, it ran over the ground. Q. How did you use that water; was it by permission of anybody or did you rent it from somebody? A. No, sir; we just used it. Q. Did you claim it as your own? A. I do not know as we claimed it could not get away from there. Q. You just took it and used it? A. Yes, sir. Q. For 40 years or more the Ivory family has used that water? A. Yes, sir. Q. And nobody else claimed it or used it, did they? A. No, sir. Q. You took it all, except in the winter season, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did this water that came from the canyon come from? A. It comes off of the Antelope plains and the country surrounding that. Q. That canyon is Weller canyon, is it not? A. Yes, sir. Q. Weller canyon is the outlet of Antelope plains, where it runs out to the river, is that right? A. Yes, sir."

He further stated that the water of Weller canyon was a good stream in the early part of the season, but goes down later, and ceases to run in July or August. Mrs. Mary E. Ivory testified that she had resided on the "E" ranch for 46 years; that during that time the waters of Weller canyon were used for irrigating said ranch, and that no one ever interfered with them in the use of said water, nor made any claim thereto, until the defendant started trouble; that they claimed the water during all that time for the irrigation of the "E" ranch; that they used the water for the irrigation of crops raised there, which crops consisted of hay, grain, and a garden. Thomas H. Ivory testified that the waters of Weller canyon that drain from Antelope plains were necessary for the lands of the "E" ranch; that he had irrigated the property a good many years, and found that the water would dry up too early to even make a thorough crop.

It appears from the foregoing evidence that the natural flow of the waters of Weller canyon were used by the Ivory family in irrigating the "E" ranch, during the irrigating season, for a period of over 40 years, and that during this time nobody else made any claim to the said waters, or interfered with them in their use of the same. This evidence as above stated, in our opinion, fully sustains the said findings of the trial court.

[3] As to the reservoir site and right of way described in the complaint, it appears from the record that in the year 1913 Ed Ivory, Jr., made application to the United States Land Department for the location of said reservoir site and right of way therefrom down Weller canyon to the "E" ranch which application was approved by the United States Commissioner on May 25, 1914. Prior to this, on October 15, 1912, the said Ed Ivory Jr., had appropriated for this reservoir 1,000 miners' inches of water, measured under a 4 inch pressure, flowing in Weller canyon during the period of melting snow; said water to be restrained by means of a dam, at the point at which this notice of appropriation was posted. On December 27, 1915, the said Ed Ivory, Jr., by an instrument in writing, set out in the complaint, conveyed all his title and interest in said reservoir and reservoir site to the defendant, for the stated consideration of $250, and on August 7, 1916, he filed with the United States Land Office his relinquishment of said reservoir. On the same day Mary E. Ivory, his mother, filed with the department an application "for a reservoir and canal identical with that theretofore granted to Ed Ivory, Jr." The Land Department refused to approve either of the applications, for the reason that prior to August 7, 1916, said Ed Ivory, Jr., had conveyed said reservoir to the defendant.

On this feature of the case two questions are presented: (1) Did Ed Ivory, Jr., act as trustee or agent for the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company, in locating and securing the right to the reservoir site and right of way therefrom, described in the complaint; and (2) Did the defendant take the agreement of December 27, 1915, from Ed Ivory, Jr., with notice that the said reservoir and right of way had been located for the use and benefit of the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company?

1. The court found that the plaintiff was the owner of the "E" ranch, together with the right to construct and maintain a reservoir and the right of way therefrom down Weller canyon to the said ranch; that the reservoir site, water right, and right of way described in the complaint were located, appropriated, selected, and secured for the purpose of impounding the winter water draining from Antelope plains and delivering the same upon the said "E" ranch during the irrigating season, to be used thereon for irrigating the crops thereof, and at all times since the selection thereof have been appurtenant to the said ranch; that Ed Ivory, Jr., located the said reservoir site, water right, and right of way as the manager of the said Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company, and that the costs, charges, and expenses of making said location, survey, and application were paid out of the funds of the said company; that he continued as a director and general manager of the said company until October 8, 1915, though he performed no duties as manager after April, 1913.

The foregoing finding is fully supported by the evidence. Ed Ivory, Jr., testified that he made the said water appropriation on October 15, 1912, to secure the water for irrigating the "E" ranch; that he located in his own name for the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company and in the performance of all acts he was acting for the said company as its general manager; that he made the application for the reservoir site, and had a survey made for the benefit of the company, and all the costs and expenses of the same were paid out of the funds of the said company; that when he filed on the same he intended it for the said ranch. It is true that he did testify that the expenses were charged up against his salary. How they were so charged he does not state. The court, however, upon sufficient evidence, found that he did not pay any portion of said costs and expenses.

[4] 2. As to the defendant having notice at the time he took the agreement of December 27, 1915, the court found:

"That at the time of making and delivery of the instrument of December 27, 1915, and at the time of the payment of the consideration specified therein, the defendant knew that the said Ed Ivory, Jr., had made such location, survey, and application, and had secured the right from the United States to said water, water right, dam, reservoir site, and right of way, and then held the same as the general manager of, to, and for the use and benefit of the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company, and that the company had paid all the expenses incurred in securing the same; and that Ed Ivory, Jr., had no right, title, or interest of his own therein."

The defendant was a neighbor and for over 30 years had an intimate acquaintance with the Ivory family and the "E" ranch. He was a witness at the trial of this action, and while on the witness stand he made the following admission:

"Q. Did you have any knowledge or notice at the time you contracted for this reservoir from Ed Ivory, Jr., that the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company had any rights in this reservoir? A. Well I was told by Mr. Ivory that he had filed on it first for the Land & Live Stock Company, but his father objected to his taking it for the company, and he then took it for himself individually."

Ed Ivory, Jr., stated as a witness that two years before the making of said agreement he told the defendant about this reservoir, and what a good thing it would be; that they went down to the reservoir site together, and he told the defendant that there was more water than the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company needed for their ranches, and he told him that he had located for the "E" ranch. The said witness further stated that he knew of some work being done there by the defendant during 1915, and prior to the conveyance of December 27, 1915. "I talked to Mr. Witcher about it, and we were going to construct the dam; he was going to furnish the money, and I was to be superintendent of the work, and the water was to be divided between him and the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company." Work was commenced, but was suspended by the defendant upon Mrs. Mary E. Ivory threatening to commence an injunction suit. The defendant admitted that in 1915, before he purchased, that he had two interviews with Ed Ivory, Sr., and Mrs. Mary E. Ivory about this reservoir; that in one of these interviews he offered to construct the reservoir, and they could take their own time to pay for their proportion of the cost at 6 per cent. interest, and they were to have a half interest in the reservoir.

There is other and additional evidence in the record bearing upon this question, but it is unnecessary to review the same, as we are of the opinion that the foregoing is ample and sufficient to sustain the finding of the court as to the defendant having full notice and knowledge as to the rights of the Ed Ivory Land & Live Stock Company in and to said reservoir at the time he received the instrument of December 27, 1915.

[5] The defendant was not an innocent purchaser without notice; he was given sufficient information to place him on inquiry long before the transfer of December 27, 1915, and was therefore chargeable with notice of all facts which he might have ascertained by inquiry. "Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact." Section 19, Civ. Code. A party having readily accessible means of acquiring knowledge of a fact, which he might have ascertained by inquiry, is equivalent to notice and knowledge of it. Montgomery v. Keppel, 75 Cal. 128, 19 Pac. 178, 7 Am. St. Rep. 125. The law inputes knowledge of facts to one who has sufficient means of knowledge to put him upon inquiry. San Diego, etc., Co. v. La Presa School District, 122 Cal. 98, 54 Pac. 528.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

183 Cal. 447

ROTH v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 1001.

(Sac. 2824.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1920.)

1. Judgment ⊂⊃715(3) — On amendment of plans judgment annulling assessment was not conclusive on question of sufficiency of plans.

Where an assessment of benefits by a reclamation district had been annulled because the plans were incomplete and uncertain, an amendment of the plans to meet those objections before a reassessment of the benefits prevents the judgment of annulment of the first assessment from being conclusive on question of the sufficiency of the plans and specifications to sustain the reassessment.

2. Judgment ⊂⊃720—Annulling reclamation assessment for want of benefits conclusive after amendment of plans.

Where an assessment of benefits by reclamation district was annulled on the ground that the lands assessed received no benefits from the district the judgment was conclusive as to benefits in suit to contest reassessment of the same lands for the same improvements, even though the plans for the work had been made more detailed and specific before the reassessment.

3. Judgment ⊂⊃714(1)—Finding of want of benefits from reclamation district held not conclusive against reassessment.

A judgment, annulling assessment of benefits by a reclamation district was based on findings that the five tracts of land not benefited contained 116 acres, is not conclusive in suit to contest reassessment of benefits against the tracts which contained 181 acres, since the acreage not included in the first finding may have received benefits sufficient to sustain the reassessment.

4. Appeal and error ⊂⊃1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence not reviewed.

Findings based on conflicting evidence cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

5. Drains ⊂⊃83 — Evidence held to sustain findings of benefit in suit to annul reassessment.

In a suit to annul reassessment of benefits by reclamation district, testimony by two owners of land in the vicinity as to the benefits the land in controversy derived from the improvements held sufficient to sustain a finding of benefits.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by C. F. Roth against the Reclamation District No. 1001. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellant.

A. C. McLaughlin, of Yuba City, W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and C. F. Metteer, of Sacramento, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff brought this action under section 3462, Political Code, to have an assessment made by the board of supervisors of Sutter county for and on behalf of reclamation district No. 1001 annulled on the grounds, among others, that the plans for the improvement contemplated by the reclamation district were insufficient, and that the lands of the plaintiff were not benefited thereby at all, or in proportion to the assessments made thereon. The assessment complained of is a reassessment, made by authority of section 3466½, Political Code, which authorizes such reassessment, in place of an invalid assessment, "for the purpose of charging said land with its proper proportion of the cost of reclamation." Plaintiff claims that, even if the reassessment was thus authorized, the questions involved in his attack upon such reassessment have been already adjudicated in his favor in the previous suit in which the assessment was annulled; that therefore the decision of the trial court holding this reassessment to be valid is against such conclusive evidence. Judgment having been rendered sustaining the reassessment, plaintiff appeals. The respondent, reclamation district No. 1001, was organized by an act of the Legislature in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 831). The plans for the reclamation were formulated and filed with the board of supervisors, and subsequently from time to time amendments to that plan were filed. Finally it was determined by the board that the expense of the reclamation would be $851,730, and an assessment therefor was levied and paid and the money expended. It was found that an additional assessment for $500,000 was necessary to complete the work of reclamation and provide for a deficit of $466,866.47, and more detailed plans for reclamation were adopted, and an assessment therefor levied upon the lands of the district. All said assessments were paid with the exception of that of the plaintiff and two others, who filed objections to the assessment with the board of supervisors, and upon such objections being overruled began an action in the superior court under section 3462, supra, to have said assessment annulled. Judgment was therein rendered, annulling the assessment of the plaintiffs therein. No appeal was taken and the district proceeded to secure a reassessment, under section 3466½, Political Code, which reassessment plaintiff now seeks to have annulled.

[1] Plaintiff relies upon the proposition that in his first contest of the assessment it was conclusively adjudged that the plans for the work were so incomplete and uncertain as to invalidate the assessment, and also that certain tracts of his land were found not to be benefited by the assessment. Respondent relies upon the point that subsequent to the annullment of the assessment, supplemental explanatory and more detailed plans and specifications were filed with the board of supervisors by which the matters, uncertain in the first plans and specifications, were made definite and certain, and that therefore the first decision is not res adjudicata; and that the decision of the trial court in this case in favor of the sufficiency of the new plans, being supported by the evidence, should be sustained, and, further, that the evidence in this case supports the finding of the court that the lands of the plaintiff were benefited to the amount of the assessment. The assessment, declared invalid in the first action, was identical in amount with the assessment now under consideration, upon each and every parcel of land owned by the plaintiff. The estimated expenditures proposed by the amended plans relied upon by the respondent are exactly the same to a cent upon every one of the numerous items contained in the original estimate upon which the $500,000 assessment was levied. There was no change whatever in the plan of improvement. The amendments, or supplements to the plans, filed with the supervisors, merely amplified the description of the work contemplated by the original plan and assessment for the purpose of making the same more definite. The nature of these changes can be illustrated by one or two instances. The original estimate contained the following items:

"Over cross canal: 561 ft. 20-foot trestle at $9 per ft., $5,049.00."

The supplemental report contained the following explanation thereof:

"Over cross canal: 561 feet 20-feet trestle, $5,049.00. The above item of trestle covers one-half of trestle over cross canal in the northwest corner of section 9, township 11 north, range 4 east, known as May bridge, also one-half of trestle known as Bennett bridge, all as shown on map filed April 8, 1914. The cost of the other half of these bridges to be borne by Reclamation District No. 1000."

The original estimate contained the following item:

"10 or more bridges over canal at $75.00 each (call it), $1,001."

The revised estimate contained the additional statement:

"The above bridges are structures 18 feet long, one to be placed over each tract of land cut in two by said interior drainage canal at a point to be selected by the owner."

—and refers to a map for more definite location. The amended specifications contained 12 different items in which similar indefinite statements in the original specifications upon which the original assessment was based were amplified and explained. A further difference may be illustrated by the description of the right of way of an interior drainage canal. In the original specifications the description is as follows:

"Right of Way—Interior Drainage Canals:—Right of way to be purchased after Sept. 1, 1914, north of Burns property and paralleling the Feather river practically 5 miles of right of way, 50 feet wide; 30.3 acres at $75. $2,270.00."

In the supplemental specifications this right of way is described as follows:

"Strip of land 50 feet wide beginning at the quarter corner between sections 10 and 11, township 11 north, range 3 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and extending thence northerly 5 miles, paralleling Feather river and as indicating on map showing amended plan of reclamation district No. 1001, filed with board of supervisors of Sutter county, April 8, 1914, containing 30.3 acres, at $75.00—$2,270.00."

The character of these items sufficiently illustrates the fact that on the trial of this action the court was dealing with a very different situation with relation to the certainty of the plans and specifications and the location of the work than was before the court upon the first contest, and that the decision upon the first trial that the plans were insufficient and indefinite in the description and location of the work proposed to be done is therefore not controlling in the present action. The decision of the trial court in the first case may have been based upon the very uncertainties thus corrected by the amended plan. We conclude, therefore, that the question as to the sufficiency of the plans and specifications was open for the adjudication of the trial court in this action.

[2] It is contended that the first adjudication is conclusive upon the question of benefits, and that therefore the reassessment must be held invalid. The judgment in the first case annulling the assessment is based entirely upon the insufficiency of the plans. It is there adjudged:

"That the plans of reclamation upon which the assessment referred to herein were based are illegal and invalid, and the said assessment in so far as it affects any of the land of plaintiff described in said complaint is hereby decreed invalid, and the said assessment is hereby annulled."

It was, however, found by the court:

"That a portion of plaintiff's land included in tracts Nos. 698, 703, 704, 705, and 706, as described on the last assessment list of the district, and containing about 116 acres, was not benefited in any manner or at all by the work done or provided to be done under said plans of reclamation; that since the construction of said cross canal by defendant, said tracts of land above described have been affected with underground seepage therefrom, which never before affected said lands, to such an extent as to render it impossible to raise any crop thereon."

The amount assessed upon these tracts in the original assessment and in the reassessment are as follows: Tract No. 698, $1,183; 703, $730.92; 704, $1,183; 705, $895.70; 706, $1,651.98. In the case at bar, however, the court found that—

"The amount charged and levied upon each and every tract of land in said district assessed was proportionate in every instance to the whole expense and to the benefit which would result from said work of reclamation; and the amount of the charge so levied upon said tracts of land belonging to the plaintiff was in every instance in proportion to the whole expense and to the benefits which would result from said works of reclamation. That the assessment levied upon the lands of plaintiff was proportionate to the whole expense and to the benefit which would result from said works of reclamation."

It was also found by the trial court that—

The "reassessment was based upon the report and plan under and upon which the assessment now under consideration, namely, said subsequent assessment, was based, and contains no items or item of work or expense that was not included in the former assessments of the lands of said district; and the plan and report under and upon which the assessment herein referred to, namely, said subsequent reassessment, was based, is not a different, but the same, plan and report upon and under which the other lands of said district were assessed," etc. "That, however, before making said subsequent reassessment, and after the 5th day of October, 1914, the plans used in making such general assessment of the lands of said district had been and were elaborated, and in many cases made more specific and certain in matters of detail. * * * That the plans * * * under which the said subsequent reassessment was made * * * were not different plans either as to the extent and location of certain works of reclamation or otherwise, in substance or in any way, except in said matter of more specific certainty and elaboration. * * * No tract of land owned by plaintiff * * * has been assessed for any sum greater than the benefits which will be derived from the works of reclamation and the amount or sum apportioned to each and every of said tracts is not in any instance in excess of the benefits which will accrue thereto."

The court also included in its findings an interpretation of the effect of the previous decree annulling plaintiff's assessments as follows:

"And said court by its decision found that the lands of the plaintiff herein, who was the plaintiff in said action, had been assessed on said assessment list dated the 11th day of February, 1915, in excess of the benefits derived to said land by the said works of reclamation, and that the said assessment had not been made upon any valid or sufficient plan of reclamation * * * and said assessment was by the judgment of said court * * * declared invalid. * * *"

While, as we have held above, it is obvious that the judgment based on findings that the plans of reclamation are invalid for uncertainty is not conclusive as to the effect of amended plans in which items are specified with greater certainty, it is equally obvious that a mere increase of certainty in plans which the court is able to say are, notwithstanding such charges, still the same plans, would not increase or alter the benefits to be received by the lands of the plaintiff. In other words, as the court found in the first instance that 116 acres of plaintiff's land was not only not benefited but was actually damaged by the improvement made and contemplated, a more perfect description of the contemplated work which damaged plaintiff's land would not be a basis for a conclusion that the land was benefited, particularly as the work had actually been completed before the first case was tried, and its effect on plaintiff's land already clearly ascertained and shown. The difference between the situation at the first trial and upon the trial of this action is not in a change of plan or of result, but merely in a description of the means by which the result was or is to be achieved.

[3-5] The difficulty in applying the doctrine of res adjudicata grows out of the form of the finding as to the matter of benefits. The five tracts of land, described in the findings as containing 116 acres which were not benefited at all, contained 181.59 acres. So far, then, as the finding is concerned, each one of these tracts may have contained an acreage which was benefited to the amount of the assessment, in which case it is well settled that the assessment would not be invalid. Reclamation Dist. v. Hershey, 160 Cal. 692, 694, 117 Pac. 904; Reclamation Dist. v. Birks, 159 Cal. 233, 240, 113 Pac. 170. The finding, therefore, cannot be considered as an express finding that any one of the five tracts of land described therein was not benefited at all. If we should divide the 116 acres equally among the five tracts of land, it would leave 15.12 acres in each tract benefited by the improvement. Nor would it follow that because certain portions of the land were affected by seepage that such land was not benefited by the improvement, for, as contended by the engineers in this case to be the fact, it might be possible to reclaim such flooded portions of the land by a small additional expenditure. For the foregoing reason the question of benefits was open for adjudication in the last case. The findings against the appellant, being based upon conflicting evidence, cannot be reviewed by us. There is ample testimony to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that such lands were assessed in proportion to benefits. Some of this testimony is pointed out by the District Court of Appeal, First District, and we quote from its opinion as follows:

"* * * It is quite plain, we think, that the direct testimony of witnesses called by respondent is abundantly sufficient to sustain the finding of the lower court. Mr. John Burns, who owns the adjoining place and has lived there for 60 years, testified strongly as to the enhancement of the value of the land due to its reclamation. It is true that he was a little indefinite as to the amount of increase to be apportioned to each particular tract of appellant's land, but as we understand his testimony, it is to the effect that 264 acres of the 379 acres were increased in value to the extent of $25,000, in round numbers, whereas the amount of both assessments on the whole tract was $27,356.44. In his estimates he excluded the timber lands, consisting of 114 acres or thereabouts. This portion of the land, however, was covered by the testimony of one J. R. Caldett, who owns a large farm in the neighborhood, and who has resided there for nearly 40 years. He testified that the timber land was worth about $20 an acre before reclamation and $150 an acre afterward. * * * Another witness, Mr. George B. Green, seems to have covered the whole tract of land. He testified that a portion of it was worth $5 to $10 per acre before reclamation and $100 afterward, another portion $35 to $40 before reclamation and $200 thereafter, and the balance of the land was increased from $100 or $150 to $250 or $300 per acre."

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J; LENNON, J.; OLNEY, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 524

In re ABBEY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6418.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1920.)

Wills ⇐118—Request to sign as "subscribing witness" is acknowledgment of signature.

Where testatrix had signed her will before the witnesses entered the room, her request to them to sign as subscribing witnesses, which they did immediately beneath her visible signature, was an acknowledgment of the signature on the will as her own, since they could not become subscribing witnesses unless she signed in their presence or acknowledged her signature.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Subscribing Witness.]

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Harriet S. Abbey, deceased. From an order revoking probate of will the proponents of the will appeal. Reversed.

A. L. Abrahams and P. B. D'Orr, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from an order revoking the probate of the will of Harriet S. Abbey, upon the finding that the testatrix did not sign the will in the presence of either of the subscribing witnesses and did not acknowledge her signature to them. The facts concerning the execution of the will are undisputed, and the sole question raised by the appeal is whether this finding is sustained by the evidence. The will was prepared by an attorney some months before it was signed. It is conceded for the purposes of the appeal that the will was not signed by the testatrix in the presence of either subscribing witness, although both subscribing witnesses signal the usual attestation clause, stating that the will was signed by the testatrix in their presence, and made affidavit to the same effect at the time of the probate of the will. The sole witness on the revocation of the will was the attorney who prepared it, assisted in its execution, and as executor thereof presented it for probate. He testified that on March 7, 1918, the testatrix sent for him to attend to having the will executed; that she produced the document and affixed her signature while only the two were present. The witnesses were then asked by the attorney to come into the room. "They came into the room, and I, as I remember it, held the will then, she having signed it, in my hand and said, 'Mrs. Abbey, this is your will, is it?' She said, 'Sure,' and I said, 'Do you wish these gentlemen to sign as subscribing witnesses?' She said, 'Sure, I do.' They turned right near the bedside there, and then they affixed their names in her presence and in the presence of each other." The signature of the testatrix is on the same page as that of the subscribing witnesses, and no doubt the signature was visible to the subscribing witnesses at the time each signed the will. The request that these persons sign the will as "subscribing witnesses" was in effect an acknowledgment of her signature to them for only by signing the will in their presence, or by acknowledging the same in their presence, could they become subscribing witnesses. The word "subscribing" in the request is therefore very significant, for the word assumes that the signature appended to the will is her signature, and hence amounts to an acknowledgment of such signature as her own. Under similar circumstances, as to one witness, the other having seen the testator sign the will, it was held by the Court of Appeals of New York that the declaration by the testator that the instrument was his will was a sufficient acknowledgment of his signature to the same, as well as a publication of the will. Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416. See, also, Matter of Will of Phillips, 98 N. Y. 267, and Matter of Hunt, 110 N. Y. 278, 18 N. E. 106; Matter of Akers, 173 N. Y. 620, 66 N. E. 1103; affirming 74 App. Div. 461, 77 N. Y. Supp. 643.

Decree reversed.

We concur: OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 454

BRIMBERRY v. DUDFIELD LUMBER CO. et al. (S. F. 8968.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1920. Rehearing Denied Sept. 2, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸706(7)—Contributory negligence of motorcyclist held for jury.

In an action for injuries to a motorcycle in collision with an automobile, contributory negligence in driving at an excessive rate of speed and in driving on the wrong side of the street held for the jury.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

3. Master and servant ⟸302(1)—Negligence of automobile driver held imputable to employer.

Where an employé, after having driven an automobile furnished him by employer to a customer for purpose of having check payable to employer countersigned as directed when he left employer's office for the day, drove back toward the office to procure his overcoat, instead of driving directly home, the employer was liable for his negligence while returning to the office, though his trip to obtain the signature was not in the line of his usual duties.

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by John H. Brimberry against the Dudfield Lumber Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John G. Jury and Louis Oneal, both of San Jose, for appellants.

Norman E. Malcolm, of Palo Alto, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $1,200 against the defendants, Dudfield Lumber Company, a corporation, and Joseph A. Jury, and in favor of the plaintiff, John H. Brimberry, in an action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by him as the result of negligence on the part of defendant Jury in the course of Jury's employment by the defendant corporation. The record before us is presented under the alternative method.

The following facts are undisputed: Jury was the secretary of the Dudfield Lumber Company, whose offices were in the city of Palo Alto. He testified that prior to December 11, 1917, the company had purchased an automobile, which was registered in his name and turned over to him for his use. On the last-mentioned day, about 4:30 p. m., Jury left the office of the company in the automobile, and drove to Camp Fremont to have a check countersigned at the office of the Lindgren Construction Company at the camp. He returned from the camp to Palo Alto via the state highway. On arriving at the intersection of the state highway with University avenue, at the entrance to Stanford University, he collided with a motorcycle, on which the plaintiff and one Leslie C. Kees, both sergeants in the United States army, were returning from Mayfield to Camp Fremont. By the force of the collision the plaintiff was thrown from the motorcycle and suffered the injuries for which he now seeks damages.

The cause was tried before the court without a jury. The court made findings of fact and conclusions of law, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendants in the sum of $1,200.

1. We shall first consider appellants' contention:

"That the decision is against law," in that "the evidence conclusively shows negligence on the part of the respondent, and that his said negligence was a proximate and contributing cause of the injuries sustained by him, and that therefore the court erred in giving judgment for the respondent herein."

In this connection we shall also consider the following four propositions advanced in appellants' opening brief:

(1) "The evidence is insufficient to justify the decision that the motorcycle driven by plaintiff and Leslie C. Kees was driven on the right side of the state highway, * * * or that 'the plaintiff or * * * Kees proceeded carefully or with due care to drive said motorcycle across said intersection.' "

(2) "The evidence is insufficient to justify the decision 'that the plaintiff and * * * Kees were not operating and driving said motorcycle * * * in a careless, negligent, and imprudent manner,' or 'that they were not going at a rate of speed greatly in excess of that which was reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of said highway.' "

(3) "The evidence is insufficient to justify the decision 'that said collision and all injuries and damage suffered by plaintiff as a result thereof were not wholly or in any way due to want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff, or to plaintiff's own negligence, or to the negligence of his associate and companion, * * * Kees.'"

(4) "The evidence was insufficient to justify the decision 'that there was no want of care and no contributory or any negligence of the plaintiff whereby the injuries and damage suffered by the plaintiff were brought upon himself.'"

It is well to call attention to the fact that at the point where the collision occurred the state highway, about 60 feet wide, runs northwest and southeast; that at the intersection University avenue, about the same width, runs northeast and southwest; that, owing to the wide entrance to the University grounds and the curve of University avenue, the crossing or intersection presents an open road space about 200 feet in diameter; that about 30 feet west of the concrete curb along the eastern side of this open area, and running parallel to said curb, are the tracks of the Peninsular Railroad, which runs between Palo Alto and Mayfield, and at this point turns from University avenue into the state highway; that about 2 feet northeast of the property line on the northeast side of the highway, and 34 feet northwest of the property line on the northwest side of University avenue, is a "trolley pole"; and that between this pole and the intersection of the two roads is a rough, unpaved area, across which, it appears, it was customary for vehicles to pass when making the turn from University avenue to go north on the highway.

Kees, the driver of the motorcycle, testified that, as he was returning from Mayfield to Camp Fremont on the right-hand (east) side of the highway, he approached the intersection at a speed of about 25 miles an hour; that he noticed a Ford car coming toward the intersection along University avenue, and that he thereupon slowed down to a speed of not more than 12 miles an hour in order to allow the Ford car to pass in front of him, at the same time swerving "a little bit to the right"; that the Ford car passed across the highway in front of him and went "out into the University grounds"; that, after the Ford car had passed in front of him, he saw Jury's car coming down the highway, but that, inasmuch as Jury was looking "out University avenue as though he was going to turn in that direction and follow the Ford," he took no further notice of Jury and proceeded north on the east side of the highway; that, just as the witness "neared the corner of the property line of University avenue with the state highway," Jury made a sharp turn toward him, "cutting several feet from the center of the intersection," so that the witness, "not having time enough to turn to my left and give him the wrong side of the road," set his brakes, and "was compelled to swerve more to the right to avoid a head-on collision"; that immediately thereafter the car which Jury was driving struck the rear wheel of the witness' motorcycle on the left-hand side, throwing Sergeant Brimberry off, so that he rolled about 20 feet, to "within a few feet of the trolley pole"; and that he could not state how fast Jury was traveling at the time of the collision.

Miss Cornelia Kempff testified that at the time of the collision she was driving her automobile west on University avenue, intending to turn north into the highway, in order to return to her home in Atherton; that she was driving near the center line of University avenue, for the reason that "it was a little bit rough" near the trolley pole; that before she reached the intersection a Ford car, going in the same direction, passed her on her right and "started to crowd in ahead, so I swerved out a little bit to make my turn"; that she saw the plaintiff and Kees, just as another car passed in front of them; that they were traveling on the right-hand side of the highway—"in fact, they were a little too much to the right, if anything"; that at the time of the collision the front wheels of Jury's car were in the rough space near the trolley pole, and she thought the rear wheels were there also; that plaintiff was thrown from the motorcycle and "rolled two or three times before he stopped" near the trolley pole; and that she had told Jury he "was on the wrong side of the road."

Plaintiff corroborated the foregoing testimony. He declared that at the time of the collision Jury "was not going very fast or very slow, and we were not going very fast either," and that he did not see Jury's car until after the Ford car had passed in front of the motorcycle. On this point Jury testified that as he approached the scene of the collision traveling south on the west side of the highway, he noticed a Ford car coming out of University avenue across the highway, and that the driver of the Ford car "seemed to hesitate as to what way she was going"; that because of this seeming hesitation he "naturally slowed up and kept on to the extreme right until she passed out of my way"; that just as the Ford car passed across the highway the motorcycle on which plaintiff and Kees were riding at a speed of "about 35 miles an hour, I imagine, * * * shot around the back of the Ford"; that the plaintiff and Kees were traveling on the west side of the highway; and that he first saw the motorcycle when "it swept around in back of the Ford." On cross-examination he said that the reason he thought the plaintiff's speed was 35 miles an hour was because "they came around back of that machine at an angle of 35 degrees."

Mrs. Anabel Titchworth, a witness for the defense, testified that at the time of the collision she, with two other women, was driving a Ford car west on University avenue at a speed of about 12 miles an hour; that as she reached the highway she saw the motorcycle "zigzagging all over the highway, and that frightened me"; that she thought the motorcycle was going "two or three times faster than I," and that it did not slow up on reaching the intersection; that she was "too frightened" to notice any other details of the collision; that the reason why she thought the motorcycle was traveling fast was that "it looked to me as if they were going to run into me"; and that she could not state what direction the motorcycle took after it passed behind her car. Mrs. Isabella Telmont and her daughter Irma, witnesses for the defense, who were in Mrs. Titchworth's car at the time of the collision, corroborated the latter's testimony.

Bruce Hight, a witness for the defendants, testified that just prior to the collision he was driving a delivery car west on University avenue at a speed of about 25 miles an hour; that he passed Miss Kempff's automobile on University avenue before he arrived at the intersection; that he was about 120 feet east of the intersection when he first saw plaintiff and Kees on the highway about 75 yards south of the center of the intersection traveling "not under 30 miles an hour, either on the center [of the highway] or over it—on the left"; that the motorcycle passed in front of him and just behind Mrs. Titchworth's car; that he turned south on the highway, and did not see, but heard the crash of, the collision; that he immediately turned around and drove back to the intersection; and that he saw the motorcycle about eight feet south of the trolley pole lying in a pool of gasoline. On cross-examination he admitted that he was not certain whether, at the time when plaintiff and Kees crossed the intersection, they were on the west side of the highway; that when he reached the intersection of the northwest property line of University avenue with the highway the plaintiff and Kees were "about the center of the paved part of the highway; * * * they had already started to swing out on account of the Ford—to their right"; and that he did not know at what rate of speed they were traveling when they crossed the intersection after they had passed in front of him.

[1, 2] From this summary of the testimony it is clear that, with respect to the points urged by appellants, including the speed at which the motorcycle was traveling at the time of the collision, the care or lack of care with which Kees was driving the motorcycle, and the side of the highway upon which plaintiff and Kees were traveling, the evidence is involved in substantial conflict. First, with regard to appellants' claim of contributory negligence: As to the speed and the manner in which he was driving the motorcycle, Kees stated that he was "going 10 or 12 miles an hour"; he having slowed down from 25 miles an hour. The plaintiff testified somewhat indefinitely that the motorcycle was "not going very fast, either." On the other hand, Jury stated that it was moving "about 35 miles an hour"; admitting, however, that he had not seen the motorcycle until it swept around in rear of Mrs. Titchworth's car. Mrs. Titchworth stated that the plaintiff and Kees were "zigzagging all over the road," and were going "two or three times faster than I was"; but she also testified that she was "too frightened," and thought that the motorcycle was going to run into her machine. Hight said he thought the speed of the motorcycle was about 30 miles an hour. As to the course of the motorcycle with reference to the center line of the highway, Kees said that he approached the intersection on the right-hand side, and later swerved "a little bit more to the right." He was corroborated on this point by Miss Kempff and the plaintiff. And Jury stated that at the time of the collision the motorcycle was on the west side of the road. Mrs. Titchworth said she could not state what direction was taken by the motorcycle after it passed in back of her car. Hight declared that the point at which he saw some gasoline spilled and at which he thought the collision took place was about "8 feet south of the telegraph pole," which would be on the east, or right-hand, side of the highway. Thus, on each of the questions involved in the issue of contributory negligence, there was a substantial conflict in the evidence. The findings, therefore, negativing contributory negligence, will not be disturbed.

2. Appellants' second contention is that—

"The evidence is insufficient to justify the decision 'that the wrongful and negligent acts of the defendants brought about said injuries and damage to the plaintiff,' or that * * * 'Jury operated * * * said automobile carelessly or negligently at said intersection,' * * * or that he 'did negligently drive said automobile far to the left of the center of said intersection, cutting the corner thereof short,' * * * or that by reason of any careless or negligent acts of said defendant said collision occurred."

It is not necessary again to review the evidence, in order to point out that each of these questions of fact is involved in conflict. We think this is abundantly clear, and that the findings are amply supported by the evidence.

3. Since we have reached the conclusion that the findings negativing contributory negligence and holding that the defendants were guilty of negligence which caused the injuries to plaintiff are supported by the evidence, it only remains to consider appellants' final contention:

"That, under the evidence, the judgment herein against the Dudfield Lumber Company, under the rule of respondeat superior, was, as a matter of law, clearly and wholly erroneous."

The court found:

"That at all times mentioned in the complaint the said Joseph A. Jury was engaged in the business of the Dudfield Lumber Company as an employé of said company, and said Jury, at the time of the infliction of the injuries on plaintiff herein mentioned, was riding in and driving the automobile and that said automobile was * * * owned by defendant Dudfield Lumber Company, * * * and was at the time of the infliction of these injuries in use by said Jury in and on the business of said company."

The defendant Jury was made a witness for the plaintiff. Regarding the events of December 11, he testified on direct examination:

"Q. What time did you leave the Dudfield Lumber Company's office that afternoon? A. That afternoon I left about 4:30. Q. Where did you go? A. I was on my way home. Q. Where do you live now? A. Mayfield. * * * In receiving a check from the Lindgren Company, Mr. Gowing neglected to countersign it, and the bookkeeper handed the check to me, and said: 'You might run around by Camp Fremont and have Mr. Gowing countersign this check and bring it to me in the morning.' Q. Did you do that? A. I did. Q. What was that check for? A. For material furnished. Q. Purchased from the Dudfield Lumber Company? A. Yes. Q. And then you had gone up to Camp Fremont to get this check countersigned? A. Yes, sir. Q. And were returning from Camp Fremont at the time of the collision? A. I was on my way home then. Q. You use this machine in going from your office to your home, do you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. Every day? A. Yes, sir. Q. And in the scope of your employment; that is a part of the way you get to and from your business, is it not, by the use of this machine? A. Yes."

Upon cross-examination the witness gave the following testimony:

"Q. When this check was signed were you through with your work for the day? A. I was; yes. Q. You were through with your work for the day at the time you left the Dudfield Lumber Company about 4:30, were you not? A. I was. Q. Except the getting of this signature on the check? A. Yes, sir. Q. Were you on the business of the Dudfield Lumber Company at the time of this collision? A. No, sir. Q. The Dudfield Lumber Company had nothing to do with it? A. Not a thing."

Jury was next called as a witness for the defense, and testified as follows on cross-examination by the plaintiff's attorney:

"Q. Where were you going? A. I was going into Palo Alto. * * * Q. Then you were not going on into Mayfield? A. I was on my way home. In going into Palo Alto I had forgotten my overcoat, was going in after my overcoat. Q. You intended to turn into University avenue to go to Palo Alto? A. Yes."

And on redirect examination he testified:

"Q. When you were going back to get your overcoat, Joe, you were not in the business of the Dudfield Lumber Company, were you? A. No, sir."

Kees, when asked, if, at the time of the accident, Jury was going to the office of the Lumber Company, answered, "He apparently was."

Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, vol. 1, § 147, lays down the rule that—

"Where a servant is allowed by his master to combine his own business with that of the master, or even to attend to both at substantially the same time, no nice inquiry will be made as to which business the servant was actually engaged in when a third person was injured by his negligence; but the master will be held responsible unless it clearly appears that the servant could not have been, directly or indirectly, serving his master in the act, the negligent performance of which caused the injury."

See, also, Patten v. Rea, 2 C. B. (N. S.) 606, 140 Eng. Rep. 554.

In Rahn v. Singer Mfg. Co. (C. C.) 26 Fed. 913, it was said:

"In order to fix the responsibility of the defendant, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the servant, for whose tort he seeks damages, was, at the time of the commission of the tort, engaged in executing specific commands of the defendant. It is enough for him to prove that the servant was acting within the general scope of his employment, but this much is necessary. If the usage of the parties, under the servant's contract of hiring, was of such a character that it allowed the servant to attend to his duties on such terms as suited his convenience, and at the time of the commission of the tort he was engaged in his own private business, but at the same time was pursuing the defendant's business in the service for which he was employed, the defendant would still be liable."

[3] In our opinion, the principle announced in these authorities is applicable to the facts of this case, and clearly the testimony of Jury himself that the automobile was purchased by the company, and was used by him both in the service of the company and on his own business, that his trip to Camp Fremont was for the purpose of having a check countersigned for the company, and that he intended to proceed to Palo Alto to get his overcoat, is sufficient to sustain the finding that at the time of the collision he was acting in the course of his employment.

Appellants contend further:

"That the having of the particular paper countersigned was not within his general employment. It was an isolated—a single—act, * * * a mere matter of convenience, a mere accommodation."

In Chamberlain v. Southern California Edison Co., 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25, the plaintiff had been injured through the negligence of one Rosso. It appeared that Rosso was the driver of an automobile truck for the defendant and was regularly engaged in distributing supplies, but that at the time of the injury he was, pursuant to the orders of defendant's storekeeper, towing an automobile belonging to a fellow employé. The court said:

"It makes no difference that Rosso's usual employment was the distribution of supplies. His business was to operate his motor truck under the orders of his superior, and that was exactly what he was doing at the moment when his carelessness caused the injury to plaintiff."

Here, too, the employé had undertaken the trip to Camp Fremont on business of his employer, although such business was not in the line of his usual duties.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to discuss appellants' point that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the automobile used by respondent was the property of the defendant corporation.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.

WILBUR, J. I concur in the judgment against the Dudfield Lumber Company, for the reason that at the time plaintiff was injured Jury was returning to the office of the Dudfield Lumber Company from an errand for the defendant company on which he was sent by the bookkeeper. The court, having decided against the credibility of his testimony as to the manner in which the accident occurred, was therefore also justified in disregarding his statement that he merely turned aside to the office for his overcoat while returning to his own home, and in concluding that he was merely completing a journey to and from the office on the business of the company. As to the other points in the case, I concur with Justice LAWLOR'S conclusions.

SHAW, J. I dissent. In my opinion Jury was not in the service of the company and was not its agent for any purpose at the time of the accident. The fact that he had been in its service during the preceding part of that day does not compel the conclusion that he was in its service at that time. The fact that he was then driving an automobile belonging to the company did not, under the circumstances appearing, make him its servant or agent. He was not driving it for or on behalf of the company, nor in its work or service. He lived at Mayfield, and worked for the company as its secretary at its office in Palo Alto. He used the car after office hours in the evening and before office hours in the morning in going to and returning from his home in Mayfield. This was with the consent of the company, but not by its direction, nor in the transaction of its business. In contemplation of law he merely borrowed the car for his own use in so doing. He was not hired either to go to his home from the office in the afternoon, at the close of his work for the day, or to go from his home to the office in the morning to begin his work for the day, or to use the car in going or coming. That formed no part of his service; while so going and returning he was not in the service or under the employment of the company, and for his negligent acts in so doing the company was in nowise liable.

Ordinarily he ceased to be in the service of the company the moment he left its office for his home. On the day of the accident, as he was about to leave for home, he was directed to go to Camp Fremont, which was in the opposite direction from his home, and there get a check countersigned, which he was to keep and bring to the office the next morning. While on his way to Camp Fremont, and while engaged in getting the check countersigned, he was doubtless in the company's service. But when that task was completed his service for the company ceased for the day, so far as his goings and comings were concerned, and the company then ceased to be liable for his negligence in driving the car. It was no concern of the company how or by what route or means he got from Camp Fremont to his home, or whether he got there at all. It so happened that Camp Fremont was on the state highway a mile north of Palo Alto, while Mayfield was on said highway a mile or more south of Palo Alto. Consequently in going home from Camp Fremont on the highway he had to pass through Palo Alto. If he had been turning into Palo Alto for groceries to take home, it would be conceded that the company would not be liable. If he had been directed to take a check to Los Altos, and after doing so had gone to his home, without passing Palo Alto, the same result would follow.

Apparently, according to the majority opinion, the company's liability depended on the direction he had to go to get the signature. There is no evidence that he was intending to call at the office of the company on its business on his return from Camp Fremont. He had not been directed to do so, and as it was 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he had already left the office for the day, no reasonable inference to that effect is deducible. It is said he was going there for his overcoat. The evidence shows merely that he was turning down University avenue toward "Palo Alto" in order to get his overcoat, which he had forgotten. It does not show that the overcoat was at the office. But it is immaterial where it was. The company did not engage him to look after his own clothes, and it was not liable for his negligent acts while he was doing it. The decision appears to be contrary to all authority. See 2 Mechem on Agency, §§ 1896 to 1909, where the exact question is extensively treated; also Mauchle v. Panama P. I. E. Co., 37 Cal. App. 715, 174 Pac. 400; Slater v.

Advance T. Co., 97 Minn. 305, 107 N. W. 133, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; 2 Cor. Jur. 853; 20 Am. & E. Ency. of Law, 178; 26 Cyc. 1536; 6 Labatt on M. & S. §§ 2274, 2283.

183 Cal. 472

ELLIOTT v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 4979.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1920.)

1. Eminent domain ⟸293(1)—Count alleging diversion of storm waters by county in connection with protection district held sufficient.

A count, alleging that county wrongfully and unlawfully, by certain concrete conduits and ditches constructed by the county in connection with a protection district, diverted storm waters from their previous course across plaintiff's land without plaintiff's consent, damaging the land, without alleging that the county was authorized to form such protection district under Act March 27, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 247), held to state a cause of action against the county; an allegation as to the right to form a district being unnecessary, since it is a matter of law that a county has such power.

2. Eminent domain ⟸293(1)—Count alleging overflow from negligent construction of conduit in protection district held to state cause of action.

Count alleging that county in connection with a protection district changed the course of storm drain so that the water came within 75 feet of plaintiff's land and so negligently constructed concrete conduit that it broke, causing overflow of and damage to plaintiff's land, held to state cause of action against county, without allegation that the county under Act March 27, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 247), was authorized to form such protection district, since the county has such power as a matter of law.

3. Counties ⟸146 — Municipal corporations ⟸745½—Not responsible for negligent acts of officers acting ministerially.

A county or municipal corporation is not responsible for the negligent acts of its officers, acting ministerially in pursuance of statutes imposing duties directly upon them, whereby injury is caused to persons or property; the right of action in such cases being solely against the officer whose negligence caused the damage.

4. Appeal and error ⟸1170(3) — Defect in complaint cured by findings.

In an action against county for diversion of water on breaking of negligently constructed conduit, failure of complaint to show clearly that the conduit was made for public purposes held cured by the findings and by Const. art. 6, § 4½.

5. Eminent domain ⟸285 — County is liable for damage from public works, where compensation has not been paid.

Where property has been damaged by works constructed by county for public purposes, and no compensation has been provided or paid in advance, as required by Const. art. 1, § 14, the county is liable for the damage, and under Pol. Code, § 4003, subd. 1, may be sued therefor.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Della B. Elliott against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Roy V. Reppy, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles H. Mattingly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment. The record on appeal consists of the judgment roll alone.

The first count of the complaint alleged that certain storm waters, prior to the injury complained of, had always flowed in a westerly direction, in a course a mile north of plaintiff's land, and not over, through, or across said land; that in February, 1914, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully and without plaintiff's consent, by certain concrete conduits and ditches constructed by it in 1913, in connection with a protection district known as the San Fernando Protection District, diverted said storm waters from their previous course over, through, and across the plaintiff's land, whereby said land was damaged by reason of the ditches and gullies washed therein by said storm water, in the sum of $2,000. It also alleges the filing of a claim with the board of supervisors and the rejection thereof. The second count, in addition to the allegations aforesaid included in the first count, alleges that the alteration in the course of the storm drain, made in connection with the protection district, changed the course so that the storm water came within 75 feet of the plaintiff's land, and that, in constructing said artificial water course, defendant negligently failed to make it sufficient and adequate to carry the waters diverted into the same, and used inferior, defective, and inadequate materials, and that by reason of all these acts of the defendant the said concrete conduit broke at a point 75 feet from plaintiff's land, in consequence whereof the waters were diverted over, across, and through plaintiff's land to its damage as previously stated. The answer consisted solely of a denial of the material allegations of the complaint.

The findings state that prior to the alterations made by the defendant the course of the storm waters in question was not nearer than one mile from plaintiff's land; that in 1912, under and in pursuance of the act of March 27, 1895 (Stats. 1895, p. 247), the defendant formed a protection district, called the San Fernando Protection District; that in carrying out the objects of the said protection district defendant, by means of a dam, headworks, tunnel, and concrete conduit constructed for that purpose, diverted said storm waters over, through, and across plaintiff's land, by reason whereof the same was damaged in the sum of $300; and that the said dam, headworks, concrete conduit and tunnel were erected under plans and specifications furnished by the defendant.

[1-4] Each count of the complaint states a cause of action against the defendant. It is true, as pointed out in Sievers v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 648, 47 Pac. 687, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153, that a county or municipal corporation is not responsible for the negligent acts of its officers acting ministerially in pursuance of statutes imposing duties directly upon them, whereby injury is caused to persons or property, the right of action in such cases being solely against the officer whose negligence caused the damage. But the complaint alleges that the acts which caused the injury in the present case were the acts of the county itself. It alleges that it was done in connection with a certain protection district. The act of 1895 provides that the county may form protection districts and through that agency may construct works for the control of surface water and storm water to protect lands liable to injury therefrom. An allegation to that effect is not necessary, since it is a matter of law that the county has such power. The findings show more clearly than the pleading that the new conduit for the water was made for public purposes. If the complaint is defective in that respect the defect is cured by the findings and by section 4½, article 6, of the Constitution. Cutting P. Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 695, 75 Pac. 564; Vallejo, etc., Co. v. Reed, 169 Cal. 545, 147 Pac. 238.

[5] The case, therefore, is one wherein property has been damaged by works constructed for public purposes, and no compensation has been provided or paid in advance, as required by the Constitution. Article I, § 14. In such cases the rule is well established that if the property is not condemned by legal proceedings and the damage paid in advance before the construction of the works, the county is liable for the damage resulting therefrom, and an action will lie against it for the recovery thereof. Tyler v. Tehama, 109 Cal. 621, 42 Pac. 240; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 789, 127 Pac. 50; Sala v. Pasadena, 162 Cal. 717, 124 Pac. 539; Spangler v. San Francisco, 84 Cal. 12, 23 Pac. 1091, 18 Am. St. Rep. 158. An action may be maintained against a county for any damages arising from an injury for which such county is legally liable under this section of the Constitution. Pol. Code, § 4003, subd. 1.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.

183 Cal. 398

HEINE PIANO CO. v. BLOOMER et al.
(S. F. 8703.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 28, 1920. Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸2—Order refusing new trial not appealable, where notice filed after passage of act abolishing such appeals.

Where an appeal was prosecuted under the alternative method, notice being filed after the amendment of 1915 to Code Civ. Proc. § 963, the appeal from the order refusing new trial must be dismissed.

2. Justices of the peace ⟸133—Where justice refused to vacate satisfaction of judgment for want of jurisdiction, subsequent order vacating on merits invalid.

Where a justice of the peace declined to vacate the satisfaction of a judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, a subsequent order, denying the motion on the merits, is invalid, for the law does not authorize the correction of judicial errors under the guise of correcting clerical errors, and where a court determines it is without jurisdiction any further order is a nullity.

3. Justices of the peace ⟸133—Order denying motion to vacate satisfaction not a conclusive adjudication.

As Code Civ. Proc. § 1911. declares that only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears on its face to have been so adjudged or which was actually and necessarily included, a judgment of a justice, denying plaintiff's motion to vacate satisfaction of an earlier judgment on ground of want of jurisdiction, is not a conclusive adjudication against the right to vacate.

4. Judgment ⟸883(14)—Judgment denying right of set-off not a conclusive adjudication.

An order of justice court denying plaintiff's motion to offset a judgment in its favor, which had been indorsed as satisfied against a second judgment, held not a conclusive adjudication preventing subsequent action; it appearing that the order was based on the justice's want of jurisdiction to vacate the satisfaction of the earlier judgment.

5. Equity ⟸46—Equitable remedy lies where no adequate relief at law.

Where the law does not furnish adequate relief, equitable remedy may be invoked.

6. Justices of the peace ⟸133—Court of equity may vacate satisfaction of a judgment of justice.

Where a justice of the peace refused to vacate satisfaction of a judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, a court of equity may grant relief, as the legal remedy is inadequate, the case being one where the court in which action was pending was unable, by reason of its jurisdiction, to grant the relief.

7. Justices of the peace ⟸133—Satisfaction of judgment vacated where property not subject to execution.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 708, declaring that, if a purchaser at a sheriff's sale fails to recover possession because the property was not subject to execution, the court having jurisdiction must revive the original judgment, satisfaction of a judgment of a justice should be canceled where execution was levied on land belonging to defendant, but which had recently been homesteaded; it not appearing that plaintiff was aware of that fact, and this is so regardless of any constructive notice.

8. Judgment ⟸883(11)—Defendant held plaintiff in another action, so first judgment might be offset against second.

Where plaintiff sought to offset a judgment of justice court in its favor against an adverse judgment, evidence held to show that the defendant in the first action was the real party plaintiff in the second, although the litigation was carried on in the name of another.

9. Judgment ⟸883(8)—Failure of plaintiff to counterclaim not laches preventing setting off one judgment against another.

Where plaintiff recovered in justice court a default judgment for over $300, and execution was levied against the homestead property of the debtors, held that, though Code Civ. Proc. § 855, authorizes counterclaim in justice court, the failure of plaintiff to plead his judgment against an action for the benefit of the defendants in the first was not laches which would prevent the offsetting of one judgment against the other, for satisfaction of the judgment would first have to be vacated, etc., and, for that matter, the amount exceeded the amount which a defendant may plead as counterclaim, etc., in justice court.

10. Justices of the peace ⟸133—Plaintiff not guilty of laches in sale of land on execution so as to preclude vacation of satisfaction.

As laches is a matter to be determined from all of the facts and circumstances of the case, plaintiff, who recovered a judgment in justice court and had execution levied on land belonging to the defendants, but as to which one of the defendants only shortly before filed a homestead declaration, will not be denied relief by way of vacating the satisfaction of the judgment on the theory that plaintiff's failure to discover the homestead declaration of which it had constructive knowledge was laches.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Suit by the Heine Piano Company against J. M. Bloomer and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Bloomer and certain others appeal. Affirmed.

G. C. Ringole, of San Francisco, and H. A. I. Wolch, of Turlock, for appellants.

Charles F. Hanlon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, the Heine Piano Company, a corporation, and against the said defendants, G. C. Ringolsky, Frank T. Deasy, James G. Conlan, Robert W. Dennis, and Kohler & Chase, a corporation, in an action brought: (1) To vacate the satisfaction of a judgment rendered in favor of the present plaintiff and against defendants Charles and Laura Olson in an action—hereinafter referred to as action 76831—in the justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco, and to revive said judgment; (2) to have said judgment "offsetted * * * against the judgment in action 85133 [in said justices' court] to the extent that one judgment equals the other"; and (3) to restrain defendants from issuing execution in action 85133. Judgment was entered on November 8, 1917, granting the relief prayed and continuing the action for further proceedings as against defendants J. M. Bloomer, Charles and Laura Olson, John Doe, Richard Roe, Cornelius Coe, and Henry Hoe. Defendants Bloomer, Ringolsky, Deasy, Conlan, Dennis, and Kohler & Chase prosecute this appeal, the record of which is presented under the alternative method.

[1] These last-named defendants also appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial, but, inasmuch as the notice of appeal was filed after the amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appeal from the order refusing a new trial must be, and is hereby, dismissed. Roberts v. Colyear, 179 Cal. 669, 180 Pac. 937; Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 Pac. 712; Marsh v. Lapp, 180 Pac. 533.

On May 25, 1915, plaintiff commenced action 76831 against the Olsons for the sum of $250, alleged to be owing at the time by them to the Heine Piano Company. On June 28, the Olsons having failed to appear, judgment by default was entered against them for $303.65, which sum included costs. On June 30, "without the consent or knowledge of or any notice other than constructive notice to the plaintiff," Laura Olson executed and recorded a declaration of homestead and a homestead lien on the land upon which they were residing on Rhode Island street in San Francisco. On November 29 a writ of execution was issued in action 76831 to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and, by virtue of that writ, on December 27, the sheriff sold said Rhode Island street property to one A. G. Mitchell, who is admitted to have been plaintiff's agent in the transaction. On January 12, 1916, the writ of execution was returned, satisfied.

On March 17, 1916, action 85133 was commenced against the plaintiff in the justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco in the name of Miss J. M. Bloomer, who, it appears, was a stenographer in the office of G. C. Ringolsky. The plaintiff in that action, as assignee of the Olsons, alleged that the Heine Piano Company was indebted to Laura Olson in the sum of $250, "for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered." The action went to trial, and on September 27 judgment was rendered in favor of Miss Bloomer and against the Heine Piano Company for $259.95. An appeal from that judgment was taken by plaintiff herein, but, an exception to the sureties having been filed and the said sureties having failed to justify within the time allowed by law, on December 22 the appeal was dismissed. A petition to the District Court of Appeal for a writ of review was denied.

On March 19, 1917, Mitchell having in the meantime transferred to G. O. Heine, plaintiff's president, all the right, title, and interest which he had acquired in or to the Rhode Island street property at the execution sale, said Heine, in behalf of the plaintiff, executed a deed conveying back to the Olsons all the right, title, and interest which either he or the corporation had in said real property.

On March 22 plaintiff moved in the justice's court, where the judgment in action 76831 had been rendered for an order vacating, canceling, and setting aside the satisfaction of said judgment, on the ground that the entry of satisfaction was a mistake, the execution having been levied upon real property which was exempt as a homestead, and on the further ground of ignorance on the part of the plaintiff of the existence of such a homestead at the time of the execution sale.

On March 27 Heine Piano Company moved in action 85133 for an order offsetting the judgment in that action against the judgment in action 76831 on the grounds that Miss Bloomer, in whose name the judgment in action 85133 stood, was not the real party in interest but was the Olsons' assignee for collection only, that the Olsons were the true owners of the Bloomer judgment, and therefore that their judgment, being less than that in action 76831, should be offset and canceled.

On April 3 defendant Deasy made an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831, the order reading in part:

"Thereupon defendants object to further hearing herein on the ground that the issues raised by said motion involve a decision on the title to real estate of which this court has no jurisdiction. * * * The court does now sustain said objection, and on the ground of lack of jurisdiction denies the plaintiff any further hearing on its said motion." (Italics ours.)

On April 4 defendant Conlan made a second order in action 76831, denying plaintiff's motion to vacate on the merits. This last order was entered on April 5. On April 4 defendant Conlan denied the motion made by plaintiff in action 85133 to offset that judgment against the one in action 76831. On the same day plaintiff commenced this action.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case defendants moved for a nonsuit, but the motion was denied. The contentions made by appellants in their opening brief are the same as the grounds urged for a nonsuit:

"(1) The matters in issue at bar were previously determined by courts of competent jurisdiction, and hence are to be treated as res judicata. (2) The complaint does not show any equity. (3) The plaintiff * * * was guilty of laches in asking for the relief prayed."

[2] 1. In support of their first contention appellants assert:

"That all of the matters and showing made in the justice's court and upon which the justice of the peace based his decision were the same as the facts alleged in this action."

First, as to the order denying the motion to vacate the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831. Even if the correctness of the statement just quoted be assumed for the purposes of this discussion, it is not decisive of this question, for appellant's position ignores the fact that the order denying the motion was not the order entered on April 5, which purported to deny the motion without stating the grounds, but was the order made and entered on April 3, in which the court refused to grant the motion because of lack of jurisdiction. In other words by the making of the order of April 3 the power of the court to rule on the motion to vacate became functus officio. As is said in Freeman on Judgments, section 70:

"The law does not authorize the correction of judicial errors under the pretense of correcting clerical errors. * * * It is certain that proceedings for the amendment of judgments ought never to be permitted to become revisory or appellate in their nature; ought never to be the means of modifying or enlarging the judgment or the judgment record, so that it shall express something which the court did not pronounce, even though the proposed amendment embraces matters which ought clearly to have been so pronounced."

See, also, Byrne v. Hoag, 116 Cal. 1, 47 Pac. 775; First National Bank v. Dusy, 110 Cal. 69, 42 Pac. 476; People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 77 Pac. 651; Dunsmuir v. Coffey, 148 Cal. 137, 82 Pac. 682; Takekawa v. Hole, 170 Cal. 323, 149 Pac. 593; Suttman v. Superior Court, 174 Cal. 243, 162 Pac. 1032.

In Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. 849; Sutherland had recovered judgment against Weimmer and his wife after a trial in the justice's court. Three weeks after such judgment was rendered the court, upon motion of the defendants Weimmer, entered an order "that said judgment is hereby set aside and vacated." It did not appear that plaintiff had notice of this motion or was present when it was heard. On a writ of review sued out by Sutherland in the superior court, the justice's order vacating the judgment was held void. On appeal it was said:

"Justices' courts have no power to review their own judgments, unless by some method expressly provided by law. * * * Section 925 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: 'Justices' courts being courts of peculiar and limited jurisdiction, only those provisions of this Code which are in their nature applicable to the organization, powers, and course of proceedings in justices' courts, or which have been made applicable by special provisions in this title, are applicable to justices' courts and the proceedings therein.' It is therefore argued * * * that by virtue of said section 925 all the broad powers granted to courts of record by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be exercised by justices' courts. * * * It will be observed, however, that the section expressly preserves the notion of the 'peculiar and limited jurisdiction' of these courts, and, moreover, that its general character is negative rather than positive. The grant is somewhat in the shape of a parenthesis in a clause of limitation. If, therefore, that part of the Code which expressly deals with proceedings in justices' courts prescribes the powers of those courts in relation to a general subject about which the powers of courts of record are expressly prescribed in another part, then we think that the powers of the justices' courts with respect to that subject are to be looked for in the former and not in the latter provision. Now, the power in question here—i. e., the power to relieve from a judgment taken through surprise, excusable neglect, etc.—is expressly given to courts of record by section 473, and is expressly given to justices' courts by section 859. * * * But * * * section 859 confines the power in justices' courts to cases of a 'judgment by default.' * * * We think, therefore, that the latter section is determinative of the question here involved, and not section 473."

See, also, Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. 366; Simon v. Justices' Court, 127 Cal. 45, 59 Pac. 296. In our opinion the only effective action taken by the justices' court on plaintiff's motion to vacate the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831 was the order of April 3, and the order subsequently entered on April 5 was a nullity.

[3] As to the effect of this order as res judicata on the plaintiff's rights, section 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares:

"That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto."

In Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, it was held that where a suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction or was disposed of on any ground not going to the merits of the action, the judgment rendered was not a bar to another suit. This rule finds support in 7 Encyc. Evid. 811:

"If it appears that a suit has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the judgment of dismissal will be no bar to another action brought in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter."

See, also, Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183, 9 Pac. 176, 12 Pac. 449; 23 Cyc. 1150; Laguna Drainage District v. Charles Martin Co., 5 Cal. App. 166, 172, 89 Pac. 993; Shively v. Eureka Tellurium, etc., Co., 5 Cal. App. 236, 243, 89 Pac. 1073. As already shown, the order of April 3 stated that the plaintiff's motion to vacate the satisfaction of judgment was denied by reason of want of jurisdiction. Inasmuch as this order—and not the order of April 5—represented the court's ruling on the motion to vacate, we think it clear that the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to have the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831 vacated is not res judicata.

[4] We now turn to a discussion of the effect of the order denying the motion to offset the judgment in action 85133 against that rendered in action 76831. That order reads in part:

"* * * It appearing to the court that the judgment in action 76831 * * * has been heretofore satisfied and discharged, and it further appearing to the court that the said J. M. Bloomer has no legal or equitable interest in or to said judgment, * * * the court hereby orders that the motion be, and the same is hereby, denied."

It is at once apparent that the basis of the court's ruling in this instance, as well as in the case of the motion to vacate, was lack of jurisdiction, for at the time the motion to offset was made the judgment in action 76831 had been marked "satisfied," and had not been revived, so that there was no existing judgment in action 76831 which could be offset against the judgment in action 85133. It must be held, therefore, under the rule already referred to, that neither the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to have the satisfaction of its judgment vacated, nor the question whether plaintiff is entitled to have that judgment offset against the one in action 85133, is res judicata.

[5, 6] 2. We shall next consider appellants' second contention that "the complaint does not show any equity." The claim is made in their brief that—

"The court lacked jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues in this case. * * * A court of equity cannot assume the powers of appellate jurisdiction to review the errors of the lower court."

In stating the rule on this point we cannot do better than quote from Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 607, 614:

"The power of one district court to restrain proceedings in another, in cases where an adequate relief can be as well had in the court in which the proceedings are pending, is denied by the former decisions of this court. * * * The only case in which it will be allowed is where the court in which the action or proceeding is pending is unable, by reason of its jurisdiction, to afford the relief sought."

See, also, Anthony v. Dunlap, 8 Cal. 26; Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401; Crowley v. Davis, 37 Cal. 269; Kelley v. Kriess, 68 Cal. 211, 9 Pac. 129; Gregory v. Diggs, 113 Cal. 196, 199, 45 Pac. 261. And in Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 48, the court said:

"Before the case can be considered as beyond the reach of a court of equity, it must be made to appear that the legal remedy would be adequate and complete."

And in Merriman v. Walton, 105 Cal. 403, 38 Pac. 1108, 30 L. R. A. 786, 45 Am. St. Rep. 50:

"The rule under which a court of equity declines to interfere until after the application for relief has been made to the court in which the judgment was rendered has no application when relief has been sought and denied in that court. The denial of that court to grant that relief gives to the court of equity the same authority to interfere as if the other court were powerless to render aid."

In the case at bar the plaintiff moved in action 76831 to vacate the satisfaction of judgment, but that motion was denied, as we have seen, because of lack of jurisdiction. Plaintiff also moved in action 85133 to offset the two judgments, but this motion was also denied. Under the authorities we have cited, the plaintiff having exhausted his remedy at law, the superior court, as a court of equity, had jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues raised in the complaint.

[7] We shall next consider the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to the relief granted, and in this connection we shall first inquire whether he was entitled to a decree vacating the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831. The rule is thus stated in the note to Sturdivant v. Ward (Ark.) 134 Am. St. Rep. 36:

"We cannot suggest a better solution [of this question] than the general adoption of some such declaration of the law as has been enacted in California. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 708. * * * 'If the purchaser of property at sheriff's sale * * * fail to recover possession * * * because the property sold was not subject to execution and sale, the court having jurisdiction thereof must * * * revive the original judgment.' * * * The section has been construed and applied in the well-known case of Cross v. Zane, 47 Cal. 602, and followed in Hitchcock v. Carruthers, 100 Cal. 100, 34 Pac. 627, and Merguire v. O'Donnell, 139 Cal. 6, 96 Am. St. Rep. 91, 72 Pac. 337. In those cases it was held that, as the section was remedial in its character, it was to be liberally construed, and that, if the property sold was not the property of the defendant in the execution, it amounted to a sale of property not subject to execution and sale within the intent of the statute, and the purchaser was entitled to the remedies afforded by the act."

And in Scherr v. Himmelmann, 53 Cal. 312, it was held:

"Where a party causes an execution to be issued on a judgment, and it is levied on property which turns out not to have belonged to the judgment debtor, such party is entitled to bring an action in equity for the purpose of reviving the original judgment."

The facts in the instant case clearly fall within this principle. It is conceded that the sale of the Rhode Island street property, as a result of which the judgment in action 76831 was marked "satisfied," was void because it had already been homesteaded. Waggle v. Worthy, 74 Cal. 266, 15 Pac. 831, 5 Am. St. Rep. 440; Sanders v. Russell, 86 Cal. 119, 24 Pac. 852, 21 Am. St. Rep. 26; City Store v. Cofer, 111 Cal. 482, 44 Pac. 168; Powell v. Patison, 100 Cal. 236, 34 Pac. 677; Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 Pac. 551, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47. But it is contended by appellants that at the time of the sale the plaintiff had either actual or constructive notice that the Olsons had declared a homestead upon the property, and, therefore, that it is not entitled to have the satisfaction vacated. This same contention was made in Cross v. Zane, 47 Cal. 602, referred to in Sturdivant v. Ward, supra, where the judgment creditor had caused execution to be levied upon an interest which he believed the judgment debtor had in certain real property. He subsequently ascertained that said debtor had no interest in the property, and petitioned to have his judgment revived in accordance with section 708. The defendant argued:

"That the plaintiff, being fully informed of what he was buying, made a mistake of law, against which he was not entitled to relief in a court of equity after so long a delay."

The court, nevertheless, held, as we have seen, that the statute was to receive a liberal construction, and the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. In view of these authorities, we are not disposed to hold, even if the plaintiff here is to be charged with notice of the recordation of the homestead declaration at the time of the execution sale, that it is not entitled to the remedies afforded by the statute. Under the ruling in Scherr v. Himmelmann, supra, the plaintiff is plainly entitled to the aid of equity in order that the judgment may be revived.

[8] Now, as to whether plaintiff was entitled to have that judgment offset against the one in action 85133. Appellants claim "that Kohler & Chase, the assignor of Bloomer, has been and still is the real and beneficial owner of the Bloomer judgment," and that the court's finding that the Olsons were the owners thereof is without support in the evidence. Upon this point Mrs. Olson testified that she had purchased a piano from Kohler & Chase on the installment plan, and that she had assigned her cause of action against the plaintiff to Kohler & Chase upon the understanding that if anything was recovered upon said cause of action "that money would go off the piano." She did not claim that she was to be given unconditional credit for the sum alleged to be due and owing from the Heine Piano Company, but only for such amount as Kohler & Chase might recover. In our opinion the court was justified in finding that the Olsons, and not Kohler & Chase, were "the real and beneficial owners" of the claim, the latter merely having the legal title for the purposes of suit.

3. Appellants insist that plaintiff was guilty of laches:

[9] (1) "In its defense in action 85133. * * * In the answer nothing was alleged by way of defense or counterclaim setting forth the judgment in action 76831." There are two answers to this contention. Section 855 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the answer to a complaint in a justice's court may contain a denial, "and also a statement * * * of any other facts constituting a defense or counterclaim, upon which an action might be brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, or his assignor, in a justice's court." (Italics ours.) At the time of the commencement of action 85133 plaintiff's claim against the Olsons was a "satisfied" judgment, and, until that "satisfaction" was vacated, plaintiff had no counterclaim "upon which action might be brought." And, too, as heretofore noted, the amount of the judgment in action 76831 was $303.65, a sum in excess of the jurisdiction of the justice's court. Malson v. Vaughn, 23 Cal. 61. It is clear that the plaintiff was not guilty of laches in action 85133 in not pleading his claim against the Olsons.

[10] (2) Appellants claim that plaintiff was negligent in not consulting the records of the county recorder "to learn whether or not the real property of the Olsons was homesteaded before they proceeded to sell the same." Laches is a matter to be determined from all the circumstances of the case. As already pointed out, appellants have admitted that "plaintiff had no knowledge of the fact that any such declaration was recorded." We cannot hold that plaintiff was guilty of laches in not earlier seeking to vacate the satisfaction of the judgment.

Since the matters here in issue are not res judicata, and equity will relieve the plaintiff from the "satisfaction," it follows that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.

(183 Cal. 497)

WOODS LUMBER CO. v. MOORE.
(L. A. 6055.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1920.)

1. Corporations ⊜447—Have implied power to make contracts reasonably tending to advance authorized business.

Under Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 8, empowering corporations to make contracts essential to the successful prosecution of their business, a corporation has implied power to make all contracts reasonably expected to advance its business or which can directly promote its business.

2. Corporations ⊜484(3)—Whether contract of guaranty will advance corporate business is generally for officers, not courts.

The question whether a contract of guaranty is one which will advance the business of a corporation is primarily for the officers of the corporation and the courts will hold such contracts executed by the officers ultra vires only when they clearly appear to be so as a matter of law.

3. Corporations ⊜484(3)—Authority to guaranty contract of another to whom corporation was selling goods is implied.

A corporation engaged in the business of supplying costumes for theatrical productions has implied power to guarantee a contract by a motion picture producing company for lumber necessary to produce a film, for which the first corporation had contracted to furnish the costumes.

4. Corporations ⊜484(3) — Furnishing material in reliance on guaranty is sufficient consideration.

The furnishing of material to another corporation in reliance on the guaranty of defendant that the material would be paid for is sufficient consideration for the guaranty, if any is necessary to make it binding.

5. Corporations ⊜416—Liable for contract of guaranty authorized by managing officer.

A corporation is liable on a contract of guaranty executed by its secretary under instructions from its president, who was the general manager of its business, and held out by it as authorized to transact its business though it had passed no resolution authorizing the contract.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the Woods Lumber Company against the Goldstein Company, in which W. H. Moore, Jr., as trustee in bankruptcy of the Goldstein Company, was substituted as defendant. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Adams, Adams & Binford, G. Harold Janeway, Hunsaker & Britt, Le Roy M. Edwards, and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. W. Clapp, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment. The plaintiff sued to recover of Goldstein Company, as guarantor, the sum of $2,845.55 owing to plaintiff from Continental Producing Company for building materials and merchandise bought of plaintiff by said Continental Company. The guaranty contract alleged to have been executed by Goldstein Company is as follows:

"Jan. 6, 1917.

"Woods Lumber Company, Beverly Hills, Calif.—Gentlemen: This is to confirm conversation Mr. Woods had with R. Goldstein on the afternoon of the 4th inst., guaranteeing the payment of all bills which you have or will have against the Continental Producing Co., 650 S. Broadway St., city.

"Yours very truly,

"Goldstein Company, Los Angeles, Inc.,

"By L. C. Armbrust, Secretary."

Goldstein Company was the original defendant, but during the pendency of the action it was adjudged a bankrupt and the defendant, Moore, was appointed trustee in bankruptcy and substituted as defendant.

The answer alleged that the guaranty contract above set forth was given without consideration and for accommodation only; that the officer of defendant corporation that executed the same had no authority to do so, and that the guaranty of said Continental Producing Company's debts was not within the scope of the Goldstein Company's business. The court below made findings to the effect that the guaranty contract was given for a valuable consideration; that the officer who executed it was duly authorized to do so, and that the making of said guaranty contract was within the scope of the said Goldstein Company's corporate powers.

The appellant claims that the evidence shows: (1) That the contract of guaranty was not within the scope of the powers of the corporation as set forth in its articles, nor in direct furtherance of its business, and consequently that it is ultra vires; (2) that the said Goldstein Company received no benefit from the making of said guaranty, and is therefore not estopped to assert that it was ultra vires; (3) that the officers who executed the contract had no authority to bind the corporation thereby.

The articles of incorporation of Goldstein Company stated that—

It was incorporated "to manufacture, * * * buy, sell, lease, or otherwise acquire, and generally deal in all kinds of goods, wares, merchandise, and property of every class and description; to construct, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire, * * * operate, maintain and conduct theaters, concert halls, and amusement places of all kinds and descriptions; to manage theatrical, concert hall and vaudeville companies of all kinds; * * * and to purchase, own, produce and present theatrical plays, operas and exhibitions of all kinds."

The principal business in which the Goldstein Company was engaged at and before the making of this guaranty was the selling and renting of costumes to persons engaged in the operation of theaters or shows and to persons engaged in the manufacture of films for moving picture shows. The Continental Producing Company was engaged in manufacturing films for the production by moving pictures of a play entitled "the Spirit of '76." On May 31, 1916, the Goldstein Company and the Continental Producing Company entered into a contract whereby the Goldstein Company agreed to sell and furnish to the Continental Company the costumes and other similar articles necessary for the production of this film. The contract price the Goldstein, Company was to receive therefor amounted to $8,300. In producing the film it was necessary for the Continental Company to buy a large amount of lumber and building materials for the erection of structures to be shown in the pictures. The Woods Lumber Company had arranged to furnish such materials to the Continental Company, as required. Robert Goldstein was president of the Goldstein Company and the principal stockholder therein. L. C. Armbrust was the secretary. Goldstein was also a stockholder in the Continental Company. Although the evidence is conflicting on the subject, it is sufficient to show that Goldstein was at that time acting as the manager of both companies, and was actively superintending the work of the Continental Company in producing the films, and was also controlling the operations of Goldstein Company. Woods Lumber Company began furnishing building materials to the Continental Company in September, 1916. Payments were made from time to time, but in the latter part of December the Continental Company was delinquent in payments. Thereupon W. E. Woods, manager of the Woods Lumber Company, informed Goldstein that the Woods Lumber Company would give the Continental Company no further credit, and would furnish it no more materials, unless Goldstein Company would guarantee the payment of the bills of the Continental Company for materials to be furnished to it by Woods Lumber Company. Goldstein Company was at that time financially interested in the success of the proposed moving picture then being made by the Continental Company, by reason of the fact that if the Continental Company was unable to go on with that enterprise, it would not order any more costumes from the Goldstein Company under the contract aforesaid. This, at least, was a fair inference from the evidence. Goldstein, in reply to the statement by Woods, said his company would execute such guaranty. In pursuance of this promise and by order of Goldstein to Armbrust, the secretary, the guaranty contract above quoted was executed by the secretary and delivered to Mr. Woods for the Woods Lumber Company. The evidence is in conflict on these points, but there is substantial evidence to the effect stated. Thereafter the Woods Lumber Company, on the faith of this guaranty, furnished materials to the Continental Company to the amount herein sued for, and the indebtedness thereby created was not paid.

1. The articles of incorporation of Goldstein Company gave it power to make films for moving picture plays, and to exhibit them to the public and also to build structures for the purpose of making such films. This fact, however, did not empower it to guarantee the obligations of other persons or corporations engaged in such business. It was not authorized to make contracts of guaranty as an independent business. It had no express power to make such contracts. The guaranty in question can be upheld as binding upon it only upon the theory that under the circumstances existing at the time it was within its implied powers.

[1] A corporation engaged in carrying on a business which it is authorized to do by its articles and the law under which it is organized has implied power to make all contracts which are "essential to the successful prosecution of the business" (Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 8; Bates v. Coronado B. Co., 109 Cal. 163, 41 Pac. 855; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kiser, 91 Ga. 636, 18 S. E. 358) or the making of which is an appropriate means by which it may be "reasonably expected that the business in which the corporation is engaged will be advanced" (Depot R. Synd. v. Enterprise Brewing Co., 87 Or. 560, 170 Pac. 294; 171 Pac. 223, L. R. A. 1918C, 1001) or which are "necessary and helpful to the conduct of its authorized business" (Timm v. Grand Rapids Br. Co., 160 Mich. 371, 125 N. W. 357, 27 L. R. A. [N. S.] 186), or which tends directly to promote the business authorized by its articles, and which it is doing (Kraft v. Brewery Co., 219 Ill. 205, 76 N. E. 372; Central L. Co. v. Kelter, 201 Ill. 503, 66 N. E. 543; Blue Island Br. Co. v. Fraatz, 123 Ill. App. 26; Horst v. Lewis, 71 Neb. 365, 98 N. W. 1046; 103 N. W. 460).

[2] The question whether or not a contract of guaranty comes within the reasons above mentioned is one which is to be primarily "determined by the corporation, or those to whom the management of its affairs is intrusted." Bates v. Coronado B. Co., supra. The court cannot determine that it is beyond the powers of the corporation, unless it clearly appears to be so as a matter of law. With respect to the means which the corporation may adopt to further its objects and promote its business its managers "are not limited in law to the use of such means as are usual or necessary to the objects contemplated by their organization, but, where not restricted by law, may choose such means as are convenient and adapted to the end, though they be neither the usual means, nor absolutely necessary" for the purpose intended. Winterfield v. Cream City Brewing Co., 96 Wis. 239, 71 N. W. 101.

For illustration: A sawmill corporation may guarantee bonds of an auxiliary railway corporation formed to build a railroad penetrating the country from which the sawmill company expected to obtain its timber. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kiser, supra. A brewing company can lawfully guarantee the payment of rent of a saloon keeper who has agreed to sell the beer of the brewing company exclusively, or the rent of a hotel which was one of the brewing company's customers, or the bond required by the state law of a liquor dealer who was one of its customers, or notes of a saloon keeper to obtain money from a third person for the erection of a saloon building in which he had agreed to sell exclusively the beer of the guarantor, or when by such contract the brewing company creates for itself a new customer and an additional outlet for its product. Depot R. Synd. v. Enterprise Brewing Co., supra; Winterfield v. Cream City Br. Co., supra; Timm v. Grand Rapids Br. Co., supra; Kraft v. Brewery Co., supra; Blue Island Br. Co. v. Fraatz, supra; Holm v. Lipsius Br. Co., 21 App. Div. 204, 47 N. Y. Supp. 518; Koehler v. Reinheimer, 26 App. Div. 1, 41 N. Y. Supp. 755; Horst v. Lewis, supra; Miller v. Northern Br. Co. (D. C.) 242 Fed. 164; McQuaide v. Enterprise Br. Co., 14 Cal. App. 315, 111 Pac. 927. A lumber company may become surety on the bond of a building contractor to induce him to purchase of the lumber company the lumber used in such building. Central L. Co. v. Kelter, 201 Ill. 503, 66 N. E. 543.

There is a seeming conflict of authority on this subject, but, except for a few cases, it is more apparent than real. In the following cases the guaranty was not shown to be directly connected with or beneficial to the authorized business carried on by the company, and the question of implied power was not discussed. Elevator Co. v. Memphis R. R. Co., 85 Tenn. 703, 5 S. W. 52, 4 Am. St. Rep. 798; Lucas v. White Line Tr. Co., 70 Iowa, 541, 30 N. W. 771, 59 Am. Rep. 449; Norton v. Bank, 61 N. H. 589, 60 Am. Rep. 334;

Wheeler v. Home Sav. Bank, 188 Ill. 34, 58 N. E. 598, 80 Am. St. Rep. 161; Bank v. Winchester, 119 Ala. 168, 24 South. 351, 72 Am. St. Rep. 904; Morgan v. Missouri, etc., Co., 50 Tex. Civ. App. 420, 110 S. W. 978. There are other "border line cases," where it was held that benefit from the guaranty was too remote or too indirect to justify the conclusion that it was within the implied powers. The following are of this class: The fact that the operation of a railroad and a street car line would each tend to increase the population of the city and the business over each road did not authorize either company to guarantee the bonds of the other. Northside R. Co. v. Worthington, 88 Tex. 562, 30 S. W. 1055, 53 Am. St. Rep. 778. A railroad company cannot make a guaranty to enable a hotel company to build a summer hotel on its line merely because the guests of the hotel would probably travel on the railroad and increase its business and profits. Western, etc., Co. v. Blue Ridge Co., 102 Md. 321, 62 Atl. 351, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, 111 Am. St. Rep. 362. A brewing company could not erect a building for a boarding house and saloon for rent, in order that the saloon keeper might buy its beer. U. S. Br. Co. v. Dolese, 259 Ill. 274, 102 N. E. 753, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898. A few cases are directly contrary to the weight of authority. Twiss v. Guaranty L. Ass'n, 87 Iowa, 730, 55 N. W. 8, 43 Am. St. Rep. 418; Anheuser-Busch v. Heistand, 177 Fed. 197, 101 C. C. A. 367; Davis v. Old Colony Co., 131 Mass. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 221. In each of the other cases the doctrine of implied powers was recognized. In Best Br. Co. v. Klassen, 185 Ill. 37, 57 N. E. 20, 50 L. R. A. 765, 76 Am. St. Rep. 26, where the benefit to the corporate business was held to be too remote, the court said that the question as to such contract being within the implied powers was one to "be determined according to the facts of each case," and that such guaranty must be a means tending directly to promote the corporate business, "and not amounting to a separate unauthorized business." The doctrine we are following was thus recognized.

[3] The case presented by the record comes clearly within the principle of the first-mentioned cases. The Goldstein Company was in the business of selling theatrical costumes, and had a pending contract with the Continental Company for the sale of a large amount of such costumes, presumably for a good profit. It was directly interested in the continuance of the business by the Continental Company, and in the success of the enterprise of producing the proposed play. The circumstances are such as to create the inference, which the court might reasonably have drawn, that the payment of the expenses of the Continental Company in producing the film for the play, including the price of the costumes aforesaid, was very largely dependent upon its completion and its successful production. The expressed purpose of the lumber company to refuse further credit to the Continental Company threatened to stop the entire enterprise, both that of the Continental Company in manufacturing the film and that of the Goldstein Company in selling the costumes therefor. The manager of the company reasonably concluded that this could only be prevented by making the guaranty in question. In a business view the guaranty appeared to be essential to enable the Goldstein Company to obtain payments upon its contract with the Continental Company. It was to be reasonably expected that the making of the guaranty would advance the business of the Goldstein Company, and would secure to it the payment of the debt that would be due to it from its customer, the Continental Company. It was a thing helpful to the conduct of its business, and tended directly to promote the same. All of these things are held in the foregoing cases to be sufficient to bring the contract of guaranty within the scope of the implied powers of a corporation. We are of the opinion that the guaranty was a valid contract of the Goldstein Company.

[4] 2. It is apparent from what we have said that the Goldstein Company had what it deemed to be good reason to expect a substantial benefit from the making of the guaranty. As we have held that it had implied power to do so, under the circumstances, it is not necessary to consider the question whether or not the benefit was sufficient to create an estoppel to prevent it from asserting that it was ultra vires. If any consideration was necessary to make the guaranty binding, the selling of more lumber by the plaintiff to the Continental Company, in reliance thereon was sufficient for that purpose. Civ. Code, secs. 1605, 1606, 2792.

[5] 3. Under the circumstances shown by the evidence, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the guaranty contract was directly authorized by the board of directors of Goldstein Company, or that it was ratified by them. It was signed by the secretary by the direction of R. Goldstein, the president and business manager of the corporation; the man who, apparently, had the power to direct and control, and who did direct and control, its affairs and business. Woods knew this, and relied upon it in accepting the guaranty and furnishing the lumber in reliance upon it. The authority of an officer or agent of a corporation to make contracts in its behalf may be shown by proof of conduct, and without resort to the minutes of its board of directors, or even where the minutes do not speak on the subject. "It may be shown by evidence that the person does business for the corporation and on its behalf, as agent, with the knowledge and acquiescence of its directors. * * * The company, in such a case, is bound by his acts * * * within the scope of the business intrusted to him." Venice v. Short Line, etc., Co. (App.) 181 Pac. 658. "If a corporation allows its officers to conduct its business and third persons act upon the apparent authority thus shown, it cannot defeat the rights of such persons arising from transactions done and completed under such ostensible authority by failing to enter upon its minutes any order giving its officers authority to act." Fowler Gas Co. v. Weber, 181 Pac. 663, citing Fresno, etc., Co. v. S. P. Co., 135 Cal. 202, 67 Pac. 773; Blood v. La Serena L. Co., 134 Cal. 370, 66 Pac. 317; Crowley v. Genesee M. Co., 55 Cal. 276. We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: OLNEY, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 566

In re MINTABERRY'S ESTATE.

BICKMORE v. GRIFFIN.

(Sac. 3030.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators ⊂⊃32(2)—Relative can name nominee only when such relative is personally competent to qualify.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1383, providing that, when letters of administration have been granted to any other person than the surviving husband or wife, child, mother, brother, or sister of intestate, any one of them who is competent, or any competent person at the written request of any one of them, may obtain the revocation of the letters and be entitled to the administration, only authorizes any of the relatives named to act through a nominee when such relative is personally competent to qualify as administrator.

2. Executors and administrators ⊂⊃32(2)—That person appointing nominee is surviving wife is immaterial, if she is not personally competent.

The mere fact that an administration of a decedent's estate involves the right of a surviving wife, claiming a superior right of nomination by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, subd. 1, does not entitle her nominee to apply for revocation of letters granted to one not in the preferred class, when such wife is not personally competent to act as administratrix.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. M. Rector, Judge.

Petition by Edward Bickmore for the revocation of letters of administration issued to W. M. Griffin, public administrator in the matter of the estate of Juan Mintaberry, deceased. From a denial of the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

William T. Hawkins, of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. J. Griffin and Hugh K. Landram, both of Merced, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the petition of Edward Bickmore for revocation of letters of administration issued to W. M. Griffin, public administrator of Merced county, in the matter of the estate of Juan Mintaberry, deceased, and praying for issuance of letters to himself.

The petitioner is the nominee of the widow of the decedent, who is a resident of the state of Nevada and therefore personally disqualified. The application for such change of administrators was made under section 1383 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides as follows:

"When letters of administration have been granted to any other person than the surviving husband or wife, child, father, mother, brother, or sister of the intestate, any one of them who is competent, or any competent person at the written request of any one of them, may obtain the revocation of the letters, and be entitled to the administration, by presenting to the court a petition praying the revocation, and that letters of administration may be issued to him."

[1] The trial court in denying the prayer of the petitioner held that this Code provision only authorizes any of the relatives named to act through a nominee, when such relative is personally competent to qualify as administrator. Such must be held to be the proper construction of the statute in view of the decision of this court in Estate of Martin, 163 Cal. 440, 125 Pac. 1055. In the Martin Case revocation was sought by the nominee of a nonresident brother. The court there says:

"The right to obtain such revocation is solely for the benefit of the relative. It is limited by express terms in the first instance to such of the designated relatives as are themselves competent, and the words 'at the written request of any one of them' may well be construed as referring solely to those described in the last preceding clause, viz.: 'Any one of them who is competent,' thus giving the competent relative the right to act either directly or through a nominee."

So construing the section, this court denied the right of the nominee of the nonresident brother to petition for revocation of letters and to succeed to the administration, under the terms of this section of the Code.

[2] Appellant seeks to avoid the application of the construction adopted in Estate of Martin, supra, for the reason that the present case involves the right of a surviving wife, claiming a superior right of nomination by virtue of the preference given by subdivision 1 of section 1365, Code of Civil Procedure. This cannot be done without doing violence to the plain language of section 1383. Standing by itself, section 1383 clearly places the surviving husband or wife upon the same footing as the child, father, mother, brother, or sister in the matter of petitioning for revocation, and there is no such relation between the two Code sections cited as to justify reading into the latter an exception in favor of a husband or wife which cannot apply to the other relatives therein named. Obviously, either all or none are required by section 1383 to be qualified in person to act as administrator before naming a substitute.

As suggested by counsel for appellant it may be an unreasonable rule which permits the nonresident husband or wife to nominate a representative on an original application for letters of administration, but denies such privilege in the matter of revocation, where a stranger to the estate or a public administrator may have taken advantage of the nonresidence of the husband or wife to slip into the office unobserved; but the whole matter of representation of the estate is one of statutory regulation, and the Legislature has a wide discretion in determining the conditions to be imposed. It would perhaps be equally inconsistent to permit a nonresident brother or sister, father or mother, of decedent to compel a revocation of letters through a nominee when not permitted to act through such nominee on an original application for letters. We are compelled to accept one or the other horn of the dilemma.

On the authority of the Estate of Martin, supra, the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(183 Cal. 486)

SINCLAIR v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (S. F. 9554.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 5, 1920.)

1. Elections ⇐126(1)—Statute requiring affidavit of candidate at primary election mandatory.

Direct Primary Law, § 5, subd. 4, and section 6, requiring candidate for Congress to file affidavit at office of the secretary of state specified period before day of primary election, is mandatory, and, on a candidate's failure to file affidavit within required time, secretary of state was without power to certify his name as a candidate, under section 10.

2. Mandamus ⇐74(3)—Court cannot by writ of mandate relieve primary election candidate from default as to affidavit.

Where candidate for nomination failed to file affidavit within required time, the court was not empowered to grant relief from his default, under Direct Primary Law, § 27, by writ of mandate requiring secretary of state to file affidavit and certify petitioner's name to be printed on ballot; such section having reference only to errors or omissions of those charged under the law with duties relative to the matter of primary election, and not to the failure of the candidate or those proposing him as a candidate to comply with mandatory requirements of the statute.

In Bank.

Mandamus by Bentley W. Sinclair against Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State. Proceeding dismissed.

Wright & McKee, Eugene Daney and Heskett, Sample & Harden, all of San Diego, and Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb and Robert W. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate requiring the secretary of state to receive and file the affidavit made by him for the purpose of conforming to the requirements of subdivision 4 of section 5 of the Direct Primary Law (St. 1911, p. 773) as a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative in Congress from the Eleventh congressional district, and to certify his name to the county clerks of the counties of the congressional district to be printed on the ballot to be used at the primary election to be held on August 31, 1920, as a candidate for said nomination.

[1] It is conceded, as it must be upon the admitted facts, that the petitioner failed to conform to a mandatory requirement of such law with relation to such affidavit, in that he failed to present such affidavit at the office of the secretary of state for filing "on or before the thirty-fifth day prior to" the day of the primary election. Subdivision 4, § 5 and section 6 of the Direct Primary Law. In view of the provisions of the law, the secretary of state could not properly receive the affidavit, which was not tendered to him for filing until after the latest date for filing had passed, and unless such an affidavit be on file the secretary of state cannot certify the name of petitioner as a candidate. Section 10, Direct Primary Law.

[2] Conceding the failure of petitioner to conform to this mandatory requirement of the law, relief from his default is sought by him at the hands of this court. We are forced to the conclusion that the courts have no power to grant relief in such a matter. Section 27 of the Direct Primary Law, the only provision authorizing any review by a court, is, to our minds, reasonably susceptible of no other construction than that it is inapplicable to any failure of the candidate or those proposing him as a candidate for nomination to comply with mandatory requirements of the law essential to his candidacy. It has to do solely with errors or omissions of others charged under the law with duties relative to the matter of the primary election, and the relief expressly provided for therein is an order requiring "the officer or person charged with such error, wrong or neglect to forthwith correct the error, desist from the wrongful act or perform the duty."

The order to show cause is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and SHAW, WILBUR, LAWLOR, LENNON, and OLNEY, JJ., concur.

183 Cal. 506

DAVENPORT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY. (L. A. 6361.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 11, 1920. Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1920.)

1. Corporations ⟸668(15)—Service on officer of foreign corporation which does not do business within the state is invalid.

In order that service of a foreign corporation made on an officer within the state be valid under Code Civ. Proc. § 411, the corporation must transact within the state some substantial part of its ordinary business by its officers or agents appointed for that purpose.

2. Appearance ⟸9(5)—Securing an order extending time to plead held not "general appearance."

The securing by defendant's attorneys of an order extending the time for defendants to plead is not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, a "general appearance" which submits defendants to the jurisdiction of the court notwithstanding failure to secure legal service upon them.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Appearance.]

3. Appearance ⟸9(1)—Act manifesting intention to submit to jurisdiction of court is "general appearance."

An act of defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in action to obtain a ruling or order going to the merits of the case is a general appearance, which waives objection to the services of process, though such act is not a demurrer, answer, or written notice of appearance, which are specified means of appearance under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014.

In Bank.

Petition for mandamus by Don Davenport against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Imperial. Writ denied.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, and Hocker & Austin, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the superior court of Imperial county to order the clerk of said court to enter the default of each of two corporations, namely, Franco-American Vineyard & Wine Company and El Progresso Inter-California Canning Company, defendants in an action in said court wherein Don Davenport is the plaintiff.

The claim of the plaintiff is that each of said defendants has been duly served with the summons issued in said action, and has also entered a general appearance therein; that the time for answering or demurring has expired; that no answer or demurrer has been filed; and that notwithstanding these facts the court refuses to direct the clerk to enter either default.

[1] 1. The complaint in the action was filed and the summons was issued on February 19, 1919. On February 20, 1919, an attempted service of said summons was made on one Peter Barnes, as president of said Franco-American Vineyard & Wine Company and as secretary of said El Progresso Inter-California Canning Company, at Calexico, in Imperial county, near the Mexican line, by delivering to him there the proper papers for that purpose. At that time the said Peter Barnes held said offices in said respective corporations. No other service was ever made or attempted upon either defendant. Both of said corporations were foreign corporations, the first named being an Arizona corporation, and the second a corporation organized under the laws of Mexico. Neither of them has ever at any time done business within this state, or anywhere else except Mexico, and neither of them was at that time doing any business in this state.

In order to justify a finding that a foreign corporation is so far engaged in business in this state that a valid service of summons upon it in an action in this state, under section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may be made upon its agent within this state, "the corporation must transact within the state some substantial part of its ordinary business by its officers or agents appointed and selected for that purpose." "Legal service of process upon a corporation, which will give a court jurisdiction over it, can be made only in the state where it resides by the law of its creation, or in a state in which it is actually doing business at the time of service, in the manner prescribed by the statutes of that state or of the United States." Doe v. Springfield, etc., Co., 104 Fed. 687, 44 C. C. A. 128; Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 2 Cal. App. 585, 84 Pac. 289. It follows, therefore, that the attempted service upon the two corporations by service upon Barnes as president and secretary, respectively, of said corporations, was ineffectual for any purpose.

2. The proposition that said defendant corporations had entered a general appearance in said action so as to waive the service of summons upon them is not sustained by the record. On March 1, 1919, after the attempted service aforesaid, Messrs. Conkling and Brown obtained from the judge of the said court an order that the defendants have 20 days' additional time in which to plead to the plaintiff's complaint. Notice of this order was served on the plaintiff's attorneys on March 2, 1919. Thereafter, on March 11, 1919, the said attorneys for defendants served upon plaintiff's attorneys a notice that on March 14, 1919, the time being shortened to 2 days for that purpose, the defendants would move the court for an order to quash and set aside the pretended service of summons theretofore made in the action as aforesaid, and that said motion would be made upon the grounds above stated, that both defendants were foreign corporations, and that neither of them had ever done any business within this state. Thereafter, on March 22, 1919, the motion was regularly heard, and the court thereupon made an order setting aside and quashing the said service of summons upon said defendants.

Thereafter the plaintiff filed with the clerk an order from plaintiff to him to enter the default of said defendants upon the ground that their time for answering the complaint had expired, and in pursuance of said order the clerk, on March 31, 1919, made an entry of the default of said two corporation defendants. Thereafter, on April 25, 1919, the said attorneys for said defendants, upon notice duly given, moved the court to set aside the said default so entered by the clerk, upon the ground that the said defaults were entered by inadvertence and mistake of the clerk, that no summons had ever been served upon defendants, and that there was no authority or warrant for entering such defaults. The court sustained the motion and made an order setting aside said defaults. Afterwards, on October 17, 1919, pursuant to notice to the defendants' attorneys, plaintiff moved the court to enter the defaults of said defendants, based upon the claim that defendants had entered a general appearance in the action, which motion the court denied. Upon this order the present proceeding for a mandamus is based.

[2] The order given by the judge to the defendants' attorneys extending the time within which the defendants might plead to the complaint in the action therein did not, under the circumstances of this case, have the effect of a general appearance in the action and did not authorize the court to proceed to enter default against said defendants. "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." Code Civ. Proc. § 1014. Section 525 of the old Practice Act was identical with the above-quoted passage of section 1014. In Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 299, the court said on this point:

"We have no doubt that the written notice of appearance provided for in the section is a document to be drawn up especially for that purpose."

The point decided in that case was that the service of a notice of appeal by the attorney who represented some of the defendants, but did not represent Jones, the party concerned, although the notice purported also to be in his behalf, did not operate as a general appearance in the action. In Powers v. Braly, 75 Cal. 238, 17 Pac. 197, after two stipulations extending the time to answer had been made between the attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant, a motion by special appearance to strike out the complaint and dismiss the action was presented and an order extending time to plead was obtained. The court held, referring to section 1014, Code of Civil Procedure, that there was no general appearance. In Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 305, 45 Pac. 471, referring to this question, the court said:

"Section 1014 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines what shall constitute an appearance. A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him, and he can appear in no other way. This statute was intended to settle all disputes upon the subject. There can be no chance for argument about equivocal acts. * * * The occasion for a rule was to dispose of questions upon which there might be dispute."

In Anderson v. Nawa, 25 Cal. App. 153, 143 Pac. 555, the giving of a notice to dismiss the action because of delay in serving the summons was declared not to constitute a general appearance. See, also, Waters v. Central T. Co., 126 Fed. 469, 62 C. C. A. 45, Benedict v. Arnoux (Sup.), 38 N. Y. Supp. 882, Bell v. Good (City Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 695, and Paine L. Co. v. Galbraith, 38 App. Div. 68, 55 N. Y. Supp. 971, each holding that the obtaining of an order extending the time to plead is not a general appearance under a similar provision of the New York Code.

The cases cited to the contrary are Roth v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 604, 82 Pac. 246, Cooper v. Gordon, 125 Cal. 296, 57 Pac. 1006, and California, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 65, 108 Pac. 882. In the Roth Case a stipulation between the respective attorneys, made the day after the service of summons, extending defendant's time to plead, was held to be a "virtual appearance" and sufficient to prevent a dismissal of the action, under section 581, subd. 7, of the Code as amended in 1897 (St. 1897, p. 98), after the lapse of three years. In Cooper v. Gordon two stipulations, each granting plaintiff the right to have judgment entered in his favor at any time and providing for a stay of execution thereon upon certain conditions, were held to estop the defendant from moving to dismiss the action, and to be, in effect, an answer admitting the truth of the complaint. In California, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, a letter of defendant's attorney to plaintiff's attorneys, asking a stipulation for further time to answer, in order to avoid the filing of a demurrer, and the making of a stipulation giving time to answer as requested, followed by an application to the court, based on an affidavit showing cause, for a further extension, which the court granted, were held to amount to a general appearance. In each of these cases the court was considering the effect of stipulations between the attorneys for the respective parties, and it was, in effect, determined that the stipulations under consideration, under the circumstances there appearing, showed an intent to appear generally and not specially. The construction of section 1014 in Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, supra, was directly recognized as correct in the Roth Case.

[3] The statement in the above-quoted passage from the Vrooman Case, that a defendant "can appear in no other way" than by demurrer, answer, or formal written notice, is doubtless too broad. An act of a defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that action for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case, as, for example, a motion to strike out part of the complaint, or the making of stipulations, as in the cases above mentioned, which may reasonably be construed to imply that the court has in that action acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, will be equivalent to an appearance, although not strictly in accordance with the terms of section 1014. But the securing of the order extending time to plead was not an act of that character, and the rule of section 1014 should be applied to this case.

Under all these circumstances we are of the opinion that the defendants did not enter an appearance to the action, and that the application for an entry of the default based on the supposed appearance was properly denied by the court below.

The application for a writ of mandamus is denied.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 466

ROLLAND v. PORTERFIELD. (L. A. 6064.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence are conclusive.

2. Appeal and error ⟹931(1) — Reasonable inferences to be indulged in support of findings.

All reasonable inferences are to be indulged in support of findings.

3. Evidence ⟹570, 574—Expert and nonexpert testimony, of equal weight and conflict, must be determined by jury.

There is no distinction between expert testimony and evidence of other character as regards the weight to be given the testimony in a particular case, and, where there is a conflict between scientific testimony and testimony as to the facts, the jury or trial court must determine the relative weight thereof.

4. Witnesses ⟹317(1)—Trial court may disregard testimony of witnesses as incredible.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, it was within the province of the court to determine to what extent the falsity of certain testimony, which the evidence was sufficient to satisfy the court was false, affected the credibility of other statements of same witnesses concerning contemporaneous occurrences.

5. Bills and notes ⟹517—Evidence held to justify finding that note was forged.

In an action on note involving issue of whether note had been forged, evidence held to justify finding for defendant.

6. Executors and administrators ⟹221(6)—Evidence held insufficient to prove loan.

In an action against an executrix, evidence that plaintiff had made certain payment to testator held not sufficient to prove a loan; the presumption, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 7, being that the money was due testator.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by Lordy Rolland against Pearl Morgan Porterfield, executrix of the estate of Alfred E. Blake, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Rogers and Richard Kittrelle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John G. Harrah and Rush M. Blodget, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against the executrix of the estate of Alfred E. Blake, deceased, to recover the sum of $5,500. The complaint contains two counts. The first count is based upon a promissory note for $5,000 alleged to have been "made, executed, and delivered" by decedent. The second count seeks to recover the sum of $500, alleged to have been loaned to decedent by plaintiff. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff on both counts of the complaint, and plaintiff appeals upon the ground that the findings and judgment of the trial court are not supported by the evidence. The position of appellant is predicated upon the proposition that there is no conflict whatever in the evidence, and that all of the evidence supports the allegations of the complaint.

The promissory note for $5,000 is written on the back of an old photograph of the mother of decedent, and is in the following words:

July 13, 1917.

"I, Alfred E. Blake, do hereby acknowledge a debt for loans and very kind services from Lordy Rolland to me, the debt I owe is $5,000 thousand dollars gold American coin to be paid at my death. Alfred E. Blake."

It is an admitted fact in the case that the words above italicized are in a different handwriting from that of the rest of the note. In support of the allegations of the execution and delivery of this note, two witnesses testified that the following events occurred in their presence: On the evening of July 13, 1917, the date of the note, the witnesses were, together with decedent, at the home of plaintiff. Decedent requested a piece of paper, pen, and ink, which were brought. Instead of using these, however, he took up the photograph of his mother which was standing on the table, removed it from its frame, and, after erasing, with a moistened handkerchief, some writing on the back of the photograph, handed it to plaintiff with directions to write on the back thereof at his dictation. When plaintiff had finished writing, decedent signed his name on the back of the photograph, returning it to plaintiff with instructions to keep it. It was also stated that decedent did not request plaintiff to do the writing until he had himself started to write and found there was insufficient ink in his fountain pen, thus accounting for the first few words of the note in decedent's handwriting. One of these witnesses, Clinton Marr, a boy employed to wheel decedent about in a wheel chair, testified that about a month later plaintiff gave him the same picture, which had in the meantime been replaced in its frame, and told him to take it to decedent. According to the further testimony of this witness, decedent, upon receiving the photograph, called plaintiff on the telephone, telling her that she should have kept the picture, because it was her only protection, and that she must come over and get it. The picture remained at the home of decedent until his death, October 31, 1917. Thereafter it was given by defendant to plaintiff upon the latter's request. Three other witnesses testified that decedent had told them, at different times, that he had borrowed quite a sum of money from plaintiff and that he had given her a note therefor. One of these witnesses stated that plaintiff was worried about some loans she had made to decedent, and, at her suggestion, he mentioned the matter to decedent. During the ensuing conversation, so the witness stated, decedent said that he had borrowed $5,000 from plaintiff, but that she was protected by a note. In response to an inquiry from the witness as to why decedent had borrowed money from the plaintiff when he had property of his own, the answer of decedent was, as quoted by the witness:

"Well, you borrow it from the bank; something happens to me if this gangrene sets in on me again; they will take my property and everything away from me; that is the reason. Why should I go to the bank and borrow money when I have friends to help me out of my difficulty?"

The above testimony in favor of plaintiff may be resolved into the three following fundamental factors, namely: (1) That two witnesses saw plaintiff write on the back of the photograph on July 13, 1917, in the presence of decedent and at his dictation; (2) that thereafter the same witnesses saw decedent sign his name on the back of the photograph and deliver the same to plaintiff; (3) that decedent made statements to certain persons that plaintiff had loaned him $5,000, and that she was protected by a note from him.

[1, 2] As stated in Hoppe v. Robb, 1 Cal. 373, and repeated in nearly every subsequent volume of the California Reports, the findings of the trial court upon conflicting evidence are conclusive, and all reasonable inferences are to be indulged to support the findings. It therefore remains to be determined whether there was any conflicting evidence on these salient points to support the finding of the trial court that:

"It is not true that within the county of Los Angeles, state of California, on the 13th day of July, 1917, or at any other place, or at any other time, or at all, that the said decedent, Alfred E. Blake, made, executed, and delivered, or made, executed, or delivered, his promissory note in words and figures as set out in paragraph II of plaintiff's complaint in this action."

[3] In behalf of defendant a handwriting expert testified, giving in full the reasons upon which his opinion was based, that the words above italicized could not have been written on July 13, 1917, and that they had, in his opinion, been written approximately ten years ago. In derogation of this testimony appellant cites the statement in Grigsby v. Clear Lake Water Co., 40 Cal. 405, to the effect that expert witnesses "are generally but adroit advocates of the theory upon which the party calling them relies, rather than impartial experts, upon whose superior judgment and learning the jury can safely rely." Whatever the individual opinion as to the value of expert testimony, it has been clearly settled in this state that, as regards the preference or weight to be given the testimony in any particular case, the law makes no distinction between expert testimony and evidence of other character, and that, when there is a conflict between scientific testimony and testimony as to the facts, the jury, or trial court, must determine the relative weight of the evidence. Estate of Blake, 136 Cal. 306, 68 Pac. 827, 89 Am. St. Rep. 135; Watson v. Watson, 58 Mich. 507, 25 N. W. 497. Moreover, the note itself, which was offered and received in evidence, affords, by reason of the relative position and condition of its parts, intrinsic evidence amply sufficient to warrant a person, even in the absence of any scientific testimony on the question, in concluding, from ordinary observation, that the name of decedent and the words "July 13" were written on the back of the photograph before the rest of the writing was placed there.

[4] Appellant contends that, in view of the fact that there is no dispute that the signature appearing on the back of the photograph is the signature of decedent, and in view of the direct testimony that decedent delivered the note to plaintiff in the presence of two witnesses after the plaintiff had written thereon, the note must be held binding upon the estate of decedent, and the time when the signature was placed on the back of the photograph is immaterial. This assumes that the testimony as to the delivery of the note under the above-mentioned conditions is uncontradicted and entirely trustworthy, which is not the case. If the evidence adduced by defendant as to the relative date of the signature of decedent was sufficient, in the mind of the trial judge, to disprove the direct and positive statements of the two witnesses in behalf of plaintiff that they saw decedent sign his name on the back of the photograph under the described circumstances, it was exclusively within the province of the same judge to determine to what extent the falsity of this part of the testimony of the two witnesses affected the credibility of the other statements of the same witnesses concerning contemporaneous occurrences, namely, the writing by plaintiff at decedent's direction and the delivery of the note to plaintiff by decedent. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3; Robinson v. Robinson, 159 Cal. 203, 113 Pac. 155. Furthermore, the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses on this phase of the case is not entirely uncontradicted by defendant's witnesses; for a witness for defendant testified that, four nights before decedent's death, she examined this particular photograph, among others on decedent's desk, and, although she had the picture out of its frame and looked at the back of it, she noticed no dark writing, such as that claimed to have been written by plaintiff, but only light writing, such as the name of decedent. She also testified that all of the other pictures of decedent which she saw at that time bore his name on the back, and that her attention would have been attracted by any heavy writing such as that now appearing on this photograph. Counsel for appellant observe that this testimony is indefinite and unsatisfactory, in that this witness did not testify that there was, in fact, no writing on the back of the photograph other than the name of decedent. It may be pointed out in reply that the testimony in behalf of plaintiff in identification of the handwriting other than decedent's was equally indefinite and uncertain; for there was no testimony that the words claimed to have been written by plaintiff and now appearing on the back of the photograph were the ones which were written at decedent's dictation. On the other hand, both of plaintiff's witnesses who claim to have seen the delivery of the note testified that they did not hear what decedent dictated to plaintiff and that they never saw what was written by plaintiff. One of these witnesses stated that she did not know whether or not the writing which is now on the back of the photograph is the same writing that was there when she saw decedent sign his name. The testimony of the other witness is silent on this point. There must also be taken into consideration the testimony of defendant that her attention was not called to the writing on the back of the photograph at the time that plaintiff asked defendant for the picture, but that, subsequent to decedent's death and a few days after she had given the photograph to plaintiff, the latter for the first time showed her the writing on the back thereof, and, upon being told by defendant that it was not in decedent's handwriting, said:

"I know it is not, I have just written that. * * * It is just a copy of what was on there."

In contradiction of the testimony of witnesses as to statements made by decedent that he had given a note to plaintiff for money borrowed by him, there stands the testimony of defendant that decedent had stated to her that he did not owe any one a cent and that there were no debts against his estate.

[5] From the foregoing analysis of the evidence adduced upon the whole case it is evident that the finding of the trial court, if not unavoidable, was at least justifiable.

[6] Upon the issue of the loan of $500 there was simply the testimony of the boy, Clinton Marr, that, when plaintiff told him to take the photograph to decedent, she also gave him a handkerchief which, plaintiff stated to witness, contained $500. When this was delivered to decedent, he remarked that he had not seen so much money for a long time. There is an entire absence of testimony as to the purpose for which this money was sent to decedent. It is a presumption "that money paid by one to another was due to the latter," and such a presumption is satisfactory if uncontradicted. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 7; Fox v. Monahan, 8 Cal. App. 707, 97 Pac. 765. The testimony of witnesses as to decedent's statements that he had borrowed money from plaintiff cannot be considered as relating to the $500 loan; for they all include the statement that decedent had given plaintiff a note for the money borrowed, whereas the $500 loan is claimed to have been unsecured by note. Obviously these statements were introduced in support of the action on the $5,000 note. Even if this evidence could be considered as relating to the $500 loan, it is contradicted by the testimony of defendant above referred to, namely, that decedent told her he owed nothing.

The evidence supports the findings, which, in turn support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 576

CROUCH et al. v. WILSON et al.
(L. A. 5338.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 19, 1920.)

1. Fraud ⟸45—Cross-complaint held not defective in failing to state knowledge of falsity.

In an action on a note given for purchase price of a stallion, a cross-complaint for fraud, alleging that every one of the representations made by plaintiff was wholly false, and were personally known to the plaintiff to be untrue, held not open to the objection that there was no direct allegation that the representations were actually known by the plaintiffs to be untrue.

2. Fraud ⟸45—Cross-complaint held not defective, as not showing in what respect representations were false.

In an action on notes given for the purchase price of a stallion, wherein defendants interposed fraud and claimed damages for false representations, cross-complaint held not defective as failing to allege in what respect the representations were false or fraudulent.

3. Sales ⟸52(7)—Evidence in action for price of stallion held to sustain findings of fraud.

In an action on a note given for the purchase price of a stallion, wherein the defense of false representations as to the value and history of the stallion was interposed, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding of fraud in that the stallion delivered was not the stallion in fact purchased.

4. Sales ⟸120—Purchaser of stallion under guaranty held entitled to rescind without suing on guaranty.

In an action on a note given for the purchase price of a stallion, wherein the defense of fraud was interposed, that the sales agreement provided for rescission by the purchaser by a return of the stallion did not make it necessary for defendants to bring action on the guaranty; the claim of fraud going to the very inception of the guaranty contract.

5. Sales ⟸124—Offer to rescind, failing to expressly offer to return property purchased, held insufficient.

Where note was given for the purchase price of a stallion, an offer to rescind held insufficient, where it did not appear that the defendants offered to return the stallion to the plaintiff.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by J. Crouch and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of J. Crouch & Sons, against John T. Wilson and others, with cross-complaint by defendants. From a judgment that neither plaintiff nor defendants take anything by the action, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiffs.

Jones & Weller, and Simms & Fulwider, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs and cross-defendants J. Crouch and G. R. Crouch, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of J. Crouch & Son, from a judgment in favor of the defendants and cross-complainants, John T. Wilson, J. O. Jennifer, F. L. Troxel, B. F. Ermel, and P. L. Lopez, in an action to recover upon certain promissory notes executed and delivered by the said defendants, in which action they filed a cross-complaint, alleging that the notes had been given as the price of a stallion purchased from the plaintiffs, and that said sale had been procured by fraudulent representations, and praying the rescission of the contract, the cancellation of the notes and damages in the sum of $1,950. The record on appeal is presented under the alternative method.

Plaintiffs were engaged in the business of importing Percheron horses from France and selling them in this country. Their principal place of business was in the state of Indiana, but they maintained branches in various states for the purpose of the delivery to their agents and sale of the animals. In 1911 the California branch was located at Sacramento, and was in charge of J. F. Campbell. Harry Kenah was the local agent of the plaintiffs at Santa Ana. After some negotiations between Kenah and the defendants, the latter formed a syndicate or association under the name of the San Fernando Horse Breeders' Association. On January 8, 1912, defendants agreed to purchase from plaintiffs a Percheron stallion named "Epinal" for the sum of $4,000, and the defendants jointly executed three promissory notes aggregating that amount, which notes are those upon which plaintiffs have brought this action. On the same day plaintiffs executed this guaranty:

"We have this day sold the imported Percheron stallion Epinal No. 65631 to the San Fernando Horse Breeders' Association, * * * and we guarantee the said stallion to be a satisfactory, sure breeder, provided the said stallion keeps in as sound and healthy condition as he now is and has proper care and exercise. If the said stallion should fail to be a satisfactory, sure breeder with the above treatment, we agree to take the said stallion back, and the said horse company agrees to accept another imported draft stallion of equal value in his place, the said stallion * * * to be returned to us at Sacramento, California, in as sound and healthy condition as he is now by April 1, 1913."

Defendants admitted the execution, delivery, and nonpayment of the notes, and filed a cross-complaint, alleging that the plaintiffs represented to them that the stallion was valuable for breeding purposes; that he was a thoroughbred Percheron stallion, registered and bred in France and known as "Epinal"; that to the personal knowledge of plaintiffs he had been stood and proven to be a sure "foal-getter" in France; that he had never been stood in the United States; and that he had just been imported and brought "practically direct" to California. The cross-complaint further alleged that such representations were made to induce defendants to purchase the stallion; that the defendants relied solely on these statements, and were induced thereby to purchase him; that each of the representations was false, and was known to the plaintiffs to be false; that defendants did not discover the stallion was not a sure breeder until July, 1912, and did not discover he had been stood in this country and proven worthless, or that he had been in this country for two years prior to the sale, until December, 1912, and that in July, 1912, and continuously thereafter until February, 1913, defendants repeatedly requested plaintiffs to rescind the contract and to accept the return of the stallion. The cause was tried by the court without a jury. The court found that each of the alleged misrepresentations had been made by Kenah as agent for the plaintiffs; that all of the representations were known by Kenah to be false, and were made for the purpose of inducing defendants to purchase the stallion; that in fact the stallion had been in the United States for more than two years; that he had been tried as a "foal-getter," and had been proven to be totally barren and worthless for such purposes; that defendants "had repeatedly requested the plaintiffs to rescind said contract and to accept the return of said stallion"; that "plaintiffs at all times refused to rescind said transaction or to accept the return of said stallion"; and that the horse was not worth the sum of $4,000, or any sum in excess of $200. The judgment was that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants take anything by the action. It is from this judgment that the plaintiffs appeal.

Appellants contend: (1) That the cross-complaint lacks certain necessary averments to state a cause of action for rescission; (2) that the cross-complaint is insufficient, in that the defendants, having elected to rescind the contract, "are bound by their election, * * * and cannot now stand upon any claim for damages"; (3) that "the evidence was wholly insufficient to support the findings of the court as to fraud at the inception of the contract"; (4) that, inasmuch as the guaranty provided, in the event Epinal should not prove to "live up" to the terms of the guaranty, that plaintiffs should exchange the stallion for another, "the defendants * * * must abide by its terms and be bound by the remedy which it provides for a breach"; and (5) that "there is in the correspondence [between the parties] * * * no expression of intention * * * to rescind the contract of sale, no offer to return the horse."

[1] 1. As to the alleged defects in the cross-complaint. The transcript on appeal was prepared in typewriting, as provided in sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. Appellants did not print in their opening brief any portion of the pleadings. Section 953c. Respondents called attention to this omission, and now claim that the sufficiency of the cross-complaint should not be considered. Their brief was filed subsequently to the amendment of section 953c (Stats. 1919, p. 261), of which no notice was taken, and the appellants have not replied. We have, however, examined the transcript. The position of appellants is: First, that "primarily there is no direct allegation that the representations were actually known by the plaintiffs to be untrue." Paragraph 6 of the amended answer and cross-complaint alleges "that each and every one of the representations so made * * * by the said J. Crouch & Son * * * was wholly and entirely false and untrue, and were * * * personally known by the said plaintiffs * * * to be untrue." The cross-complaint is not open to the objection urged.

[2] Appellants also claim:

"Nor is there any allegation in the cross-complaint showing in what respect such representations were false or fraudulent."

But paragraph 6, after asserting the falsity of the representations and the scienter of the plaintiffs, also alleges:

"That in truth and fact the said stallion had been in the United States for more than two years, and that the said fact was then and there well known to the said plaintiffs, and that in truth and fact the said stallion had prior thereto been stood and tried as a 'colt-getter' or breeding stallion in the United States, and had been proven and demonstrated by actual experience that he was totally barren and utterly worthless for said purposes."

It plainly appears from these allegations wherein the representations made by Kenah on behalf of appellants were false.

2. Appellants' contention that defendants "cannot now stand upon any claim for damages" is disposed of on the ground that the judgment appealed from is that neither party take anything by the action. No judgment for damages was rendered.

3. We now turn to a discussion of appellants' claim that the findings of fraud are not supported by the evidence. At the trial respondents undertook to prove that appellants did not deliver to them the registered Percheron stallion Epinal, but that instead appellants delivered to them a grey Percheron stallion registered under the name of "Francinette," which had been formerly owned by McLaughlin Bros., a firm in Oakland and competitors of appellants, and which had, several years before, been stood in Los Angeles and found worthless for breeding purposes. On this point respondent Wilson testified:

"He [the stallion] has turned whiter; as he grows older he turns white. He is not quite as fleshy as he was a couple of months ago; he weighs a couple of hundred or one hundred and fifty pounds less. * * * When we purchased him he was a dapple grey horse, and he has faded out considerably now, and has turned grey. * * * Q. What is the difference between the appearance of that quarter crack [in the hoof of the stallion] as it now exists compared with when you first saw the horse? A. It is practically the same. * * * Q. Was there any evidence of his having suffered a recent injury at the time you bought the horse? A. No, sir. * * * I regarded it as an injury the colt had sustained when it was very young."

W. S. Magill, a veterinary surgeon, testified that he had known the stallion which was delivered to respondents for four years; that when he first saw him he was a

"dark, dapple grey. He is now grey, not a white, but a grey, changing to white. The process has been gradual. * * * The deformity was a depression in the left front hoof caused by a crush received in some manner when he was very young, a colt or a foal, perhaps. * * * It was not a wire cut or a quarter crack. * * * A groove in the hoof. It come from an injury from a crush. * * * And the other deformity in the hind leg, that would come from colthood too, from being foaled. * * * Both of these were that way when he was foaled."

W. J. Crouch admitted that he had not noticed any quarter crack or depression in the hoof of the stallion, Epinal; that no such deformity existed in the horse appellants had purchased in France.

George W. McElroy testified that he was engaged in farming in Illinois; that in 1908 he had purchased from appellants a grey Percheron stallion named Epinal; that he kept the horse three years; that during that time "Epinal was a satisfactory and sure colt-getter"; and that he had no quarter crack or groove in his hoof.

L. Goodin testified that he lived in Los Angeles and had been breeding stallions in California for more than 30 years; that he had examined the stallion delivered to respondents; that he had seen him in 1911 and had had charge of him at that time; that this stallion was then known as "Francinette"; that he was positive this was the same horse; that Francinette had been stood repeatedly, but had failed to beget any colts; and that in September or October, 1911, he had been returned to McLaughlin Bros. of Oakland.

L. A. Lanning, one of the owners of the stallion, Francinette, testified that the stallion in possession of the respondents was the same horse that he had bought under the name of Francinette on April 29, 1911, and had kept about five or six months; that "he was a horse when we bought him in the neighborhood of 2,140 pounds, but he is much whiter now than he was then, and he is much thinner than he was then. * * * He has a quarter crack on his left front forefoot, had when we had him. * * * He is a kind of a peculiar horse in his going, in his travel; when we shipped him to Oakland, I led him down behind the wagon to the depot, and he is a horse that you cannot walk him, he is a horse that will trot, and I led him yesterday from my place to Dr. Connolly's, and it is the same horse, exactly."

Guy Goodin and L. E. Wood corroborated the testimony of L. A. Lanning.

[3] Appellants introduced evidence tending to show that the Percheron stallion Epinal was purchased in France and shipped by them to Indiana; that he was subsequently sold and delivered in 1908 to McElroy, who stood him and bred him satisfactorily for three years; that, upon McElroy's trading him back to appellants, he was shipped to California in the latter part of 1911 and sold to respondents in 1912. It is unnecessary to refer to the remainder of the evidence introduced by appellants further than to say that it created a conflict. It clearly appears that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings.

4. We shall next consider appellants' contention that the respondents did not rescind in accordance with the terms of the contract. In this connection appellants take the position that—

"The representations being in regard to matters relating to his previous record and ability, they could not be held to change or modify the express contract which followed, and which contained a more positive assertion of his present capacity."

Union Investment Co. v. Rosenzweig, 79 Wash. 112, 139 Pac. 874, as a similar action. We quote from the opinion:

"On the delivery of each of the horses the vendors sent to the vendees a writing guaranteeing that the stallion described therein 'would get sixty per cent. of the producing mares with foal, with proper care and handling,' and, if he did not do so, that they would replace him with another stallion of the same breed and price. The writing also contained the further provision to the effect that the foregoing was the only contract, guaranty, or representation made by the vendees. * * * The appellant contends that the remedy of the respondents was confined to the terms of this bill of sale or guaranty, and that they cannot be heard to urge any defense to the note itself. But the defense to the note was fraud in its inception, and, because of the fraud a want of consideration for the note, and clearly under this defense the respondents were entitled to show the worthless character of the horses for the purpose for which they were purchased, notwithstanding the terms of the guaranty may have included another remedy. In other words, the guaranty was accepted on the theory that the vendors of the horses were acting honestly and in good faith, and, when the respondents discovered otherwise they could lawfully repudiate the transaction."

[4] We think that the discussion in that case is plainly applicable to the facts herein. The guaranty was part of the contract which the respondents here seek to rescind. To say that they must comply with the terms of the guaranty in order to have their remedy for the alleged fraud, is, in effect, to take the position that the respondents are bound by the very contract which they seek to avoid. Such position cannot be upheld. Appellants cite on this point the case of First National Bank v. Hughes, 5 Cal. Unrep. 454, 46 Pac. 272. But in that case the ground of the attempted rescission was the breach of a warranty, and it was held, in accordance with section 1786 of the Civil Code, that the breach of a warranty did not entitle the buyer to rescind an executed sale. There was no allegation or proof of fraud in that case. Here, the ground of rescission is the fraudulent representations of the appellants. As we have seen, the court found that the whole transaction was fraudulent. The misrepresentations were made to induce the respondents to enter into the contract and to accept the guaranty. The guaranty must therefore be regarded as part of the scheme to defraud and deceive respondents. The object of reducing contracts to writing is to prevent, not to promote or protect, fraud.

5. We shall next consider appellants' fifth contention. The court found, as above shown, that the respondents offered to return the stallion, but that appellants had refused to accept it. This presents the question whether this finding is supported by the evidence. The correspondence to which appellants refer consists of three letters. On June 28, 1912, respondent Ermel wrote to Campbell:

"We regret to advise you that we have learned that the grey stallion Epinal No. 63631 is not as he was represented to us. We have discovered that he is a barren horse and must ask that you come down here at your earliest convenience and straighten the matter out."

Campbell replied on July 9, stating that, as far as he knew, the horse was "just as he was represented to be," and asking Ermel "to take the matter up with J. Crouch & Son." Accordingly, Ermel wrote to appellants under date of July 13, inclosing a copy of Campbell's letter, "the horse is entirely unsatisfactory and not as represented, and we would like to have the matter adjusted at once." To this appellants replied on July 17 that they were prepared "to live up to the guaranty to the letter"; that they were "much surprised that he [the horse] has not proven satisfactory." On August 7 Joseph P. Keogh, respondents' attorney, wrote to Campbell that—

Respondents had been led to believe that the stallion delivered to them by appellants was not Epinal, but "a horse that was sold to some other people in this section of the country, and was returned by them * * * to McLaughlin Bros., * * * as a barren horse and utterly worthless for the purpose for which it was sold. * * * Will you kindly advise me by return mail whether or not you will adjust this matter with my clients and return to them the notes they signed? If this matter is not adjusted satisfactorily by the 19th day of this month, I shall advise my clients to institute suit to rescind the contract, on the ground of fraud and to recover the damages which they have sustained to date."

[5] No other evidence was received to prove an offer to return the stallion. It is true that at the trial it was stipulated by appellants that Ermel, who could not be present in court, "would testify that he * * * personally offered to return to the plaintiffs the said stallion; * * * and that the said plaintiffs refused to accept said return." But it appears that the "offer" to which Ermel "would testify" was contained in his letters to Campbell and to the appellants, which we have just quoted. Acording to the findings the stallion was not worth "any sum in excess of $200." This amounts to a finding that the horse had a value of $200. It was incumbent upon the respondents, seeking rescission of their contract of purchase, to allege and prove that they had returned, or offered to return, to appellants everything of value which they had received under the contract. Section 1691, Civ. Code; Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 589, 593; Gamble v. Tripp, 99 Cal. 223, 226, 33 Pac. 851; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 Pac. 369; 52 Pac. 797. This was not done. There is in the letters from Ermel to appellants and their agent no offer to return the stallion, but only an expression of dissatisfaction with the procreative qualities of the horse, a statement that respondents believed fraud had been perpetrated upon them, and a request for an "adjustment" of the matter. In our opinion appellants' contention that the evidence does not support the finding that respondents offered to return the stallion must be sustained. It follows that respondents have failed to prove one of the essentials of rescission, and, on that theory of the case, the judgment that plaintiffs take nothing cannot be upheld. It is alleged, however, in paragraph 1 of the answer that the notes sued upon herein were given "wholly and entirely without consideration." The findings of fraud, already set forth, and the particular finding as to the value of the stallion, show that there was a failure of consideration for the notes, except to the extent of $200.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment on the findings in favor of the plaintiffs for $200, without costs, and that defendants take nothing by the action. It is further ordered that respondents recover of appellants their costs of appeal.

We concur: SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.

183 Cal. 548

COUGHLIN v. GREAT WESTERN POWER CO. (S. F. 8723.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1920. Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⟸9—Judicial knowledge that electric current would jump 1 inch, to grounded metal, rather than 21 inches, to defendant's hand.

It is a scientific fact, of which we take judicial notice, that if a 22,000-volt wire had been surcharged with a sufficient voltage to jump for the distance of 1 inch, such additional voltage would have been discharged into the ground wire at that distance, rather than to ground through the hand of plaintiff at 21 inches, and, moreover, where there were iron beams in a substation 12 inches from the wire, which were connected with the corrugated iron surface connected with the ground, this would receive the charge, before it would have jumped 21 inches to plaintiff.

2. Master and servant ⟸278(11)—Evidence held insufficient to establish gross negligence as to operator of electric substation.

In an action based on gross personal negligence, within the Roseberry Act, brought by an electric substation operator, alleging injury by a current of electricity which jumped to his hand from a live 22,000-volt uninsulated wire, while he was cleaning a dead wire with a rag, evidence held insufficient to support a finding of gross negligence of defendant in failure to furnish a safe place to work.

Lennon and Lawlor, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by William E. Coughlin against the Great Western Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Guy C. Earl and W. H. Spaulding, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

O'Gara & De Martini, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the lower court for damages sustained by him November 3, 1913, by the short-circuiting of a 22,000-volt current through his body while he was engaged in the work of cleaning certain bushings and wires in an electric substation operated by the defendant, his employer. Defendant appeals.

[1, 2] At the time of the injury the Roseberry Act (Stats. 1911, p. 796) was in force, and both plaintiff and defendant had elected to be bound by the provisions thereof. Plaintiff, however, ignored the compensatory provisions of that statute as therein authorized, in cases of gross personal negligence, and brought this action, in which the jury found as a fact by necessary implication that the defendant was guilty of such gross personal negligence. Unless such negligence has been proved, the plaintiff cannot recover. The claim of negligence is based upon the failure of the employer to furnish a safe place to work. Briefly stated, the admitted facts are as follows:

In the substation were three stationary transformers, by which electricity entering at 100,000 volts was transformed by induction into a current of 22,000 volts. To prevent the grounding of the high-voltage current, insulators, called bushings, extended 4 feet 6 inches above the upper surface of the transformers, which surface was 11 feet 5¼ inches above the floor of the substation. In order to prevent the current from leaking over the surface of these bushings, it is necessary to clean the surface thereof of dust and other accumulations about once a month, and for this purpose the current was shut off from the 100,000-volt circuit. Plaintiff was engaged in cleaning this surface and the uninsulated copper wire leading therefrom at the time of his injury, and for that purpose the current had been shut off from the high-voltage circuit. The injury resulted from the short-circuiting through his body of the 22,000-volt current coming from a station bus distant from the wire being cleaned, at its closest point, between 28¼ and 31 inches. It was unnecessary to clean the surface of the copper wire, as the purpose of the cleaning was to avoid the danger of short-circuiting the current over the surface of the bushing. The plaintiff had been working in the substation a month, and knew the voltages carried by the respective wires, and believed that the arcking distance from the 22,000-volt wire was only three-eighths of an inch. He had arranged the switches at the substation to shut off the current on the 100,000-volt wire and retain the current on the 22,000-volt wire, and at the time he was engaged in cleaning the former the 22,000-volt wires were "hot." The arcking distance of a 22,000-volt current to ground under the most favorable conditions is 1.2 inches.

Assuming that it was properly a part of the duty of the employé, not only to clean the bushing, but the copper wire arising therefrom, the question at issue resolves itself into this: Was it negligence to so arrange the substation that a man was required to clean the wire distant 28¼ inches from an uninsulated wire carrying a current of 22,000 volts? It must be obvious that such a wire could be cleaned by wiping it with a rag, without bringing any part of the body sufficiently near the station bus to produce an arc. If this was a usual place in which a workman was required to perform duties which would distract his attention from the perils involved in working in proximity to an uninsulated high-voltage wire, and there was a possibility of contact by reason of unconscious or involuntary action, it might readily be concluded that a finding of gross negligence by the jury was sustained by the evidence. But this was not a place where workmen were usually required to work. At most but once a month were they called upon to perform this service, and then under conditions which necessitated their careful attention to the condition of the various wires in the substation. To have come in contact with the 100,000-volt wire, or within arcking distance thereof (10¼ inches), meant instant death. It is evident that a man, engaged in the occasional task which occupied the plaintiff, would naturally be alert to the peril of his position.

At this point it is well to give the plaintiff's statement as to the conditions attending his injury. He testified that the current jumped across a space of 21 inches to the back of his hand. If this were a contestable fact, we would have to assume the correctness of this testimony in determining the question of defendant's negligence. But it is a scientific impossibility for a current of that voltage to jump through the air for that distance, and it is shown that a lightning arrester with a perfect ground reached within one inch of the wire. It is a scientific fact, of which we take judicial notice, that if a 22,000-volt wire had been surcharged with a sufficient voltage to jump for a distance of one inch, such additional voltage would have discharged into this ground wire at 1 inch, rather than to ground through the hand of the plaintiff at 21 inches. Moreover, the iron beams of the substation were within 12 inches of the 22,000-volt wire, and connected with the corrugated iron surface of the substation so as to form a perfect ground, and this would receive the discharge before plaintiff could have been injured as he states. Plaintiff testified that the rag in his hand was moist and dirty; that he had been flipping the rag about in an endeavor to clean the 100,000-volt wire at a point higher than he could reach, and for the purpose, also, of shaking the dust out of it.

It is defendant's contention that his injury resulted from the rag coming in contact with the 22,000-volt wire, and thus forming an arc which, once formed, may extend a distance of 2 or 3 feet. If the injury thus resulted, it is evident that it was occasioned by the carelessness of the plaintiff rather than the gross negligence of the defendant. In determining the credibility of the plaintiff's testimony, we may freely concede that he testified with the utmost good faith. It is doubtful if any one who has survived a stroke of lightning or a short-circuit from a high-voltage wire could either observe, or, if he did, could remember, the circumstances. But if we assume that his testimony is absolutely true, and that the current did leap over this intervening space of 21 inches, without short-circuiting into the lightning arrester or any of the nearer metal conductors in the building, it would at once follow that this extraordinary violation of all known rules of the conduct of electricity of that voltage was such as no human being could anticipate, and the failure to anticipate it could not be considered negligence. The defendant, in arranging its substation, was only bound to make provision for those laws of nature of which one of ordinary prudence engaged in a like enterprise would be required to take notice. Whether, therefore, we regard the circumstances detailed by the plaintiff as an inherent impossibility, or as an extraordinary and unprecedented electrical phenomena, the defendant cannot be held guilty of gross negligence in the arrangement of its electrical devices in the substation.

A good deal is said in the evidence and in the briefs concerning the distance which should be maintained between wires carrying a 22,000-volt current and those carrying 100,000-volt current. This testimony has no significance in this action, for the reason that such testimony is directed to a condition where both wires are charged with the current they are designed to carry, and has no relevancy to a situation where the 100,000-volt wire is "dead." We have therefore directed our attention to that situation. It is proper to say that the testimony of an expert witness to the effect that it was customary and desirable that a partition should be placed between wires carrying these voltages, and that such partitions would have made the place a safe one in which to work, has no significance, other than to point out the fact that, if there had been a partition between the plaintiff and the 22,000-volt wire, he would not have been injured. This, of course, is a self-evident fact. Mr. Van Norden, an electrical engineer, was asked his opinion as to what precautions could be made which would make the situation perfectly safe to a man working where plaintiff worked. He replied:

"The only safe method of construction in a point of that kind, and I think it is general practice, would be to have a barrier or cell wall outside of the 100,000-volt line to protect the 100,000-volt line from any possible circuit that might be near it. In other words, there should have been a barrier between the 100,000-volt line and the 22,000-volt line."

He further testified that the ordinary form of barrier is a thin reinforced concrete wall, and that the practice was to place each 100,000-volt transformer in a separate cell, or the three in a single cell; that is, a room closed at both ends, at the back and top, and open in front. It developed, however, that the reason this witness considered the place where plaintiff was working dangerous was because:

"It is always dangerous to work within reaching distance of a 22,000-volt line, because a man might unconsciously put his hand out, or his coat might fly out, or in this case the rag that was in the man's hand, the point of the rag might fly out, as he moved around unconsciously, and either come very close to the wire, or actually strike it, in which case there is no question but he would get a short-circuit falling down into his hand, and hence over his body—as it probably was in this case, because, if it had gone through his body, it probably would have killed him—down through his shoes, and into the transformer, and to the ground.

"Q. Then, as I understand it, it is because the man might come close to the 22,000-volt wire? A. He might; if he was constantly keeping his presence of mind, he might work up there every day for years, and not actually come close enough to get a shock off of that wire. Then, again, in an unconscious moment, he might do it. It does not seem to me that there is any particular question of negligence; it might be unconscious."

In response to a question of a juror, this witness also testified that the accident would have been impossible if such a barrier had been erected between the two wires. The arcking distance of a 22,000-volt current having been established by expert testimony, the question as to whether or not plaintiff was working in a safe place was not a question for an expert witness, and although the evidence came in, in the first instance, without objection, motion was made to strike it out. It is sufficient, however, to say that the witness do no more than to call the attention of the court and jury to the obvious fact that a man working within 31 inches of a live wire might carelessly or thoughtlessly come in contact with it. Whether or not this constituted either negligence or gross negligence was a question of law and fact. Where, as here, all the facts are either shown without dispute, or by scientific principles of which the court takes judicial notice, the question of whether or not the evidence was sufficient to support a finding of gross negligence is a matter of law for the court.

In the view we take of the case it becomes unnecessary to determine whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, or that the defendant was guilty of lack of ordinary care; for we hold, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff failed to establish that gross negligence upon which his cause of action was predicated. For the same reason it is unnecessary to determine whether such negligence is personal, within the meaning of the Roseberry Act, supra, and it is unnecessary to pass upon the question of whether the defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk are available under the Roseberry Act, in cases based upon the gross personal negligence of the employer.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; SHAW, J.

LENNON, J. I dissent. In this action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while in the employment of the defendant, a corporation engaged in the business of generating, transmitting, and distributing electricity for lighting, heating, and power purposes, the prevailing opinion reversed the judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the theory that the evidence adduced upon the whole case did not support the finding of the jury, implied from their verdict, that the defendant was guilty of gross negligence in the maintenance and operation of that part of its power plant where the plaintiff was injured during the course of his employment. The prevailing opinion holds that defendant corporation was not guilty of gross negligence. I cannot concur in this conclusion. The facts of the case, as I find them from a perusal of the record, are these:

Along defendant's main transmission line, which carries electricity at 100,000 volts from its generating plant or power house in Butte county to San Francisco Bay, are several substations. These substations are installed for the purpose of reducing the voltage carried by the main transmission line for distribution from the substations for commercial use in the surrounding districts. At the time plaintiff was injured he was employed as an operator at one of the substations of defendant located at Isleton, Cal. It is the duty of an operator in such a substation to watch the apparatus and keep it in proper working condition. In this substation, where plaintiff was employed, were three transformers, standing in a row, north and south. They were 11 feet in height, 6 or 7 feet in diameter, and consisted of coils of copper wire in a metal casing, into which the electricity was carried at 100,000 volts by means of wires connected with the main transmission line. After being reduced in voltage, the electricity was carried from the transformers at 22,000 volts by wires issuing from the covers of the transformers. The covers of the transformers, which were of boiler iron, were rounded, sloping from the center toward the edges, the only flat portion of the surface being a manhole cover about 18 inches wide and 2 feet long. Upon the top of each transformer, projecting at an angle therefrom, and close to the edge of the transformer shell, were two bushings, 4½ feet in height and about 10 inches in diameter at the bottom, tapering toward the top. The purpose of these bushings, which were made of fiber rings alternating with fiber discs, was to insulate the 100,000-volt wires so as to prevent the electricity running to ground over the metal shell of the transformer. There were also two smaller bushings, for the purpose of insulating the 22,000-volt wires issuing from the tops of the transformers; but they are of no importance for the purposes of this case. In addition to the connection with the main transmission line, the several substations were also electrically connected between themselves, so that, in case of a shutdown at any one substation, electricity could be fed to the district thus affected from other substations.

It was the custom to shut down the substations once a month in order to clean the apparatus of the substations, and this was ordinarily done after midnight, when the demands for electricity were at a minimum. There were three operators at defendant's substation at Isleton—Dorman, the chief operator, Post, and the plaintiff. It was arranged to have a general cleaning of this substation after midnight, November 3, 1913, and plaintiff, in compliance with a direction from Dorman, opened the switches for the purpose of shutting off the current from the wires leading into and out of the substation. All of the wires and apparatus in the substation were thus entirely freed from electricity, with the exception of the station bus, which consisted of three parallel wires near the roof and about 20 feet from the ground, running east and west (at right angles to the row of transformers) across the south end of the building, and feeders dropping therefrom into oil switches set on the shelf against the south end of the building. This station bus was fed from other substations and carried electricity at 22,000 volts. No cleaning was to be done on the station bus, and it was left charged in order to furnish electricity to the neighboring towns and light for the substation while the high-tension bank was shut down during the cleaning process. After the substation was thus shut down, the three operators went upon the roof of the building to clean some of the apparatus. They then began to work inside the building, and Dorman told plaintiff to "take No. 3," meaning thereby to clean the bushings and wires on the top of the transformer furthest toward the south, known as "No. 3." Plaintiff, standing on the top of the transformer, cleaned its north bushing, and then proceeded to work on the south bushing. After cleaning the south bushing, he began to dust the wire above the bushing. He had a cotton rag, about 2 feet square, and with this rag reached up as high as he could to clean the upper part of the wire, and then, holding the greater part of the rag in his hand, wiped down the wire. Just as he was dropping his hand to his side, the back of the hand was struck by a flash from a live 22,000-volt wire of the station bus, which was just to the south of the transformer upon which plaintiff was standing. The electricity severely burned the back of his right hand and right forearm, and passed through his body, burning the sole of each foot. The shock threw him off the transformer to the floor beneath.

On the night in question there was "a very heavy fog, everything was just wringing wet," and this condition prevailed inside as well as outside the substation, owing to the doors of the substation being left open for ventilating purposes. At the time he was injured plaintiff was 21 years of age, and had been working at Isleton about a month. Although he had worked in electricity to some extent before coming to Isleton, he had no experience with high voltage, other than one month's work as an operator at defendant's substation at Cowell. The jury rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for damages in the sum of $6,735.83. On defendant's motion for a new trial, the court made an order granting the new trial unless plaintiff stipulated to deduct from the damages awarded the sum of $1,735.83. This was consented to by plaintiff, and the motion for a new trial was thereupon denied, whereupon the defendant appealed from the judgment.

It is contended by appellant, and the prevailing opinion holds, that gross negligence has not been proven. The distance between the dead 100,000-volt wires, which plaintiff was cleaning, and the nearest point of the live 22,000-volt wires of the station bus, was 28¼ inches, according to appellant's measurements; 31 inches, according to the estimates of witnesses for respondent. Plaintiff's hand, owing to the thickness of the rag he held and the movement in dropping his hand to his side, was about 21 inches from the nearest live wire at the time it was struck. It is pointed out by appellant that it was testified to at the trial by the expert witnesses, including those who testified for plaintiff, as well as those called by the defendant, that the arcking distance of 22,000 volts of electricity is, under no conditions, more than 1.2 inches; that is to say, the air space across which a current of electricity will jump in its effort to reach the ground is ordinarily less than 1 inch, and, under any circumstances, never greater than 1.2 inches. Opposed to this expert testimony is the testimony of the plaintiff that the current "jumped right over through the air, and it caught me on the back of the hand." It is further pointed out that, since electricity seeks the path of least resistance, and there were other conductors nearer the wire than plaintiff's hand, had the electricity jumped from the wire, it would have done so, not a distance of 21 inches to plaintiff's hand, but to the conductor, the shortest space from the wire, such as the lightning arrester outside the substation.

The theory is advanced by appellant, in support of the contention that the evidence fails to show any negligence on the part of the company, that, since plaintiff's hand was admittedly 21 inches away from the live wire at the time it was struck, plaintiff must have carelessly brought his rag, by shaking or otherwise, or some other conductor, within an inch of the live wire, and thus drawn an arc. It is further argued that, if the 22,000 volts did arc 21 inches directly to the back of plaintiff's hand, the occurrence was so unheard of and opposed to every known principle of electricity that it was purely an accident, and not a danger which appellant was required to guard against in providing for the safety of its employés. However that may be, and assuming that 22,000 volts could not jump 21 inches, there is no reason thus presented for disturbing the verdict in this case. There were no special findings, simply a general verdict in favor of plaintiff. "It is, of course, the duty of this court to treat all of the facts brought, out by the evidence which are necessary to support the verdict as having been found to be true by the jury" (Clark v. Tulare Dredging Co., 14 Cal. App. 414, 429, 112 Pac. 564, 570), and, conversely, the verdict of the jury cannot be assumed to be based on inherently improbable testimony, if there is other testimony sufficient to support the verdict.

Plaintiff's action was based upon the alleged personal gross negligence of defendant in maintaining a live 22,000-volt wire in too close proximity to the place where plaintiff was required to work, because of which plaintiff was injured by a current of electricity which "jumped and passed" from the said live wire "and came against and in contact with plaintiff's right hand and arm." Consistently with these allegations of the complaint, plaintiff might have drawn an arc by a close approach to the live wire with his rag, and the arc having once been formed, it could, according to the testimony of the expert witnesses, be extended for 2 or 3 feet. The jury was entitled to infer, from the evidence adduced upon the whole case, that this was the manner in which the current "jumped and passed" to plaintiff's hand, despite plaintiff's general statement that the spark jumped directly to the back of his hand. Follmer v. Rohrer, 158 Cal. 755, 112 Pac. 544; Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 Pac. 1157; Lynch v. Lynch, 22 Cal. App. 653, 135 Pac. 1101; Turner v. Bush (App.) 185 Pac. 190. It is not, therefore, essential to the general verdict in favor of plaintiff to assume that the jury found that the electricity jumped directly through the air and, without the aid of any intervening substance, the entire 21 inches to the back of plaintiff's hand.

Moreover, there was, in my opinion, evidence tending to show the existence of gross negligence, irrespective of the question of the arcking distance of the 22,000 volts of electricity. While the employer is not an insurer of the safety of his employés, he must furnish a place to work in which is "reasonably safe, having regard to the character of the work itself." Spivok v. Independent Sash & Door Co., 173 Cal. 438, 440, 160 Pac. 565, 566. The jury, when arriving at a general verdict, were warranted in taking into account the dangerous nature of electricity, the high voltage which the wires carried, the youth of plaintiff, his inexperience in high-voltage work, and the fact that he had never before performed the particular duties upon which he was engaged at the time of his injuries. It further appears that at least one expert witness, a consulting engineer, testified that, although 22,000 volts could not arc over 1.2 inches, the place in which plaintiff was working was not a safe working distance from the live wires, and that, under the circumstances, 28¼ inches, or even 31 inches, was in dangerous proximity to the 22,000-volt wire, because of the likelihood that a person working in that position would come sufficiently close to the live wire to produce a short circuit. It was stated by this witness, and others, that the only safe method of construction in a situation of that kind was the erection of a concrete barrier in the form of a concrete wall about the transformers; that this was the general practice; that the wires were thus property protected in other substations belonging to the defendant; and that this "barrier should be there for a twofold purpose—one for operating purposes, and the other for the safety of anybody working in the cell." There was testimony, and it is conceded, that if the barrier had been erected in this case the occurrence now under consideration could not have happened. The evidence also shows that the standard distance between 100,000 and 22,000 volt wires is between 36 and 42 inches; but in one or two cases, where there were building difficulties, as at Isleton, this distance was cut down. There is also evidence that, by installing a switch at a cost of less than $100, it would have been possible to render the substation entirely free from current by shutting off the current from the station bus and obtaining light for the substation from a small transformer house outside the substation.

While most of the evidence above set forth was by no means uncontradicted, the weight of the testimony was, of course, to be determined by the jury. Viewing the record as a whole, and irrespective of any conclusion this court might reach from the same evidence, it cannot be said that the jury was unwarranted in concluding that, even assuming that the electricity could not directly arc a distance greater than 1.2 inches, defendant failed to exercise the required degree of care for the safety of its employé in requiring him, under the above-described conditions and in an inconvenient location such as that presented by the transformer cover, to work within 28¼, or 31, inches of a live 22,000-volt wire and unprotected therefrom.

This, I take it, must be so in keeping with the rule generally accepted and uniformly invoked in the admeasurement of the degree of care required of electric companies for the safety of their employés, and which is to the effect that, while such companies are not required to operate their plants to the point of perfection in so far as concerns the material construction of the plant or the character of the apparatus and appliances, for the reason that they are not insurers of their employés against accident, nevertheless they are obligated to use reasonable care; that is to say, such care as, under all the circumstances, would obviously be required in a given situation in the construction, maintenance, and operation of their plants. Falling short of this, they will generally be held responsible for resultant injuries to employés. It is a reasonable corollary of this rule that the degree of care to be employed by electrical companies in the maintenance and operation of their plants varies with the degree of danger dependent upon a particular situation, for obviously a prudent person, individual or corporate, must augment the character and quantity of the care according to the contingencies of differing and varying situations. Thus, if the danger of injury to an employé is but slight, as, for instance, in a situation involving the likelihood of contact with transmission wires carrying merely a harmless current of electricity, as do ordinary telephone and telegraph wires, ordinary care only will be demanded of the company in the maintenance and operation of such wires. On the other hand, where the transmission wires are heavily loaded with high voltage, a very high degree of care—indeed, the highest degree of care commensurate with human prudence and caution and consistent with the practical conduct of business—is required to guard against accident or death which inevitably follow contact with such high-voltage wires. Crosswell on Electricity, § 234; Curtis on Electricity, § 405. The rule is, perhaps, better stated in the case of Uggla v. West End Street Ry. Co., 160 Mass. 351, 35 N. E. 1126, 39 Am. St. Rep. 481, where it is said:

"The vigilance and attention required must conform to the nature of the emergency and the danger to which others may be exposed, and is always to be judged of according to the subject-matter, the danger and force of the material under the defendant's charge."

This being so, then the question of whether or no the required care has been used, is, in the majority of cases, necessarily one for the jury, except when the court can say positively that no reasonable man would have acted in the manner complained of, or that a reasonable man must have acted in the manner complained of. Lee v. Electric Light Co., 140 Pa. 618, 21 Atl. 405; Southwestern Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Woughter, 56 Ark. 206, 19 S. W. 575.

With this rule in mind, and having in mind, also, the facts above referred to, namely, the high voltage, the insecure footing afforded by the cover of the transformer, the youth and inexperience of plaintiff, among other circumstances, I cannot concur in the conclusion of the prevailing opinion that the corporation defendant was not guilty of negligence in the maintenance of its plant, or that part of its plant in which the plaintiff was injured while at work for the defendant. And surely, if in keeping with that rule it can be fairly said, as I think it can be so said, that the corporation defendant was, under all of the circumstances of the shown situation, negligent in not making a known highly dangerous place reasonably safe to work in with the means at hand to do so, then in view of the further fact that the expenditure of the paltry sum of $100 by the corporation defendant was all that stood between the plaintiff and reasonable safety from serious injury, it is not difficult to see and rightly say that the corporation defendant was indeed negligent out of all measure and beyond all allowance; in a word, that it was guilty of gross negligence.

I would find no difficulty in demonstrating that such gross negligence was the personal negligence of the corporation itself. But, in view of the fact that the prevailing opinion rests a reversal of the judgment solely upon the ground that the evidence shows no gross negligence on the part of the defendant, it would be an idle act to discuss the question of personal negligence or any of the several other questions involved upon the appeal.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent. I am in accord with the opinion of Mr. Justice LENNON, and shall confine myself to some additional observations. The main opinion rests upon a negative answer to the question:

"Was it negligence so to arrange the substation that a man was required to clean the wire distant 28¼ inches from an uninsulated wire carrying a current of 22,000 volts?"

This conclusion is arrived at by a line of reasoning that we will take judicial notice that it is a "scientific impossibility" for a current of 22,000 volts to "jump" a distance of 21 inches; that this was not the place where the plaintiff was usually required to work, and that the known proximity of the wires made it imperative for him to "be alert to the perils of his position"; that, inasmuch as he admitted "flipping" the cleaning rag about in order to reach higher on the wire which he was wiping, and also to shake the rag free from dust, "it is evident" that the injury was occasioned by his carelessness rather than by any negligence of the defendant; that, moreover, in view of the "scientific impossibility" already referred to, it cannot be considered negligence for the defendant to fail to provide against such an extraordinary violation of all known rules of the conduct of electricity as the "jumping" of the current over a space of 21 inches; and, finally, again calling attention to the "scientific principle" that electricity will not "jump" a distance of 21 inches, it is declared that the evidence does not sustain the implied finding that defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to provide a safe place for the plaintiff to work.

May we take judicial notice that a 22,000-volt current will not "jump" 21 inches? The general rule as to when a court will take judicial notice is stated in Dunphy v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 118 Mo. App. 506, 523, 95 S. W. 301, 306:

"Courts should observe the utmost caution to avoid assuming knowledge of natural facts and laws that are beyond the scope of common positive knowledge." (Italics mine. See, also, 124 Am. St. Rep. 21, note.)

This rule is thus expressed in 15 R. C. L. 1127:

"Judicial notice will be taken of scientific facts which are universally known, * * * but they must be of such universal notoriety and so generally understood that they may be regarded as forming part of the common knowledge of every person. * * * Cognizance may not be taken of scientific matters of uncertainty or dispute or of insufficient notoriety." (Italics mine.)

And in Curtis, The Law of Electricity, p. 3, it is said:

"So dangerous a force as electricity must legally be considered in the same class as high explosives and other treacherous and destructive agents. * * * The power and manifestations of which are fully comprehended only by experts."

See, also, Brown v. Consol. Light, etc., Co., 137 Mo. App. 718, 109 S. W. 1032; Campbell v. United Ry., 243 Mo. 141, 147 S. W. 788.

Several witnesses did testify that they had never known a current of 22,000 volts to "arc" more than 1.2 inches, but Reuben D. Bennett, an electrician, stated:

"Electricity is an unknown quantity. They presume that it will 'jump' so far. It never acts the same twice; there is no knowing how far it will go."

I do not think that the "arcking" distance of 22,000 volts has been proved to be so invariable as to attain the certainty of a scientific fact, or that it is a matter of such common knowledge, or so generally understood, as to entitle it to recognition under the theory of judicial notice.

The majority opinion, in discussing the plaintiff's duties in the cleaning of the transformer, states that—

"It was unnecessary to clean the surface of the copper wire, as the purpose of the cleaning was to avoid the danger of short-circuiting the current over the surface of the bushing."

The evidence was in conflict on this point. There was some testimony that it was unnecessary to clean the wires, but the chief operator at the substation testified that it was the practice to wipe the wire, as well as the bushing, and the plaintiff stated that such was the practice, and that on the occasion in question he had been ordered by the chief operator to clean the wire. It seems to me, from this state of the evidence, that the jury may have found that it was customary to clean the wire, or, at any rate, that the plaintiff, in cleaning it, acted under the instructions of one in authority.

I am particularly impressed by the evidence from which the jury may have decided that the injury was the result of a false policy of economy in failing to erect a concrete wall between the station bus wires and the transformer. The complaint alleged that defendant's attention had, prior to the time when plaintiff was injured, been repeatedly directed to the dangerous proximity of the 22,000-volt wire. The chief operator testified that, in a conversation with defendant's electrical engineer, who controlled and supervised changes in substation construction, said, referring to the spot, where plaintiff was injured:

"'We have one awfully dangerous place to work here,' and I showed him this bus, how close it was to the 100,000, and where we had to get up in there to work. * * * I told him it was absolutely unsafe. * * * He says: 'I know it is pretty close. This place is not arranged just as we would like to have it, but we have not got money to spare now to make any changes.'"

This witness testified that he had had similar conversations with the superintendent of substations and the superintendent of operations, both of whom acknowledged to him that the place was unsafe, but said that the company could not afford to install safety appliances. As Mr. Justice LENNON points out, the expenditure of $100 would have rendered the place safe. The defendant was under the duty of providing a reasonably safe place for the plaintiff to work, and it must be implied from the verdict, and the order refusing to grant a new trial on the claim of insufficiency of evidence, that the defendant failed to perform this duty. There is nothing in the Roseberry Act to indicate that the term "personal gross negligence" implies that actual knowledge of the dangerous condition of the premises must be brought to the attention of the officers of a corporation before the failure to remedy such condition becomes the negligence of the corporation.

I therefore conclude that it cannot be held, without invading the province of the jury, that, upon the application of the theory of judicial notice, or otherwise, "the plaintiff failed to establish that gross negligence upon which his cause of action was predicated," nor that the plaintiff was careless in wiping the wires, nor that the defendant was not guilty of personal gross negligence in failing to provide a barrier between the station bus wires and the transformer.

183 Cal. 476

THOMPSON v. KOELLER et al. (L. A. 5371.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 4, 1920.)

1. Bills and notes ⊂⊃489(1)—Complaint on note unconditional on face need not allege extrinsic condition and fulfillment.

In an action to recover on a note unconditional on its face and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure it, plaintiff need not allege the existence or fulfillment of a condition to the obligation, but if such condition is pleaded by defendants, he may, under the Code provision, that matter in the answer is denied, prove fulfillment of the condition without variance from his cause of action as alleged.

2. Executors and administrators ⊂⊃227(1)—Claim need not state extrinsic condition to liability on unconditional note.

A claim against a decedent's estate on a note unconditional on its face need not allege the existence and fulfillment of an extrinsic condition to the liability of decedent on the note.

3. Executors and administrators ⊂⊃227(1)—Claim need not state facts with particularity of complaint.

A claim against the estate of a decedent need not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, prescribing the requisites of such a claim, state the facts on which the claim is based with the particularity required in complaint to recover on those facts.

4. Executors and administrators ⊂⊃227(2) — Claim on note to secure another note need not set out secured note.

Where decedent had given a note absolute on its face to secure the payment of a note by third parties, the payee of decedent's note need not set out the secured notes in the claim against decedent's estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1497, requiring a copy of an instrument on which the claim is founded to accompany the claim.

5. Appeal and error ⊂⊃762—Points first advanced in appellant's reply brief need not be discussed.

Points for reversal, which are advanced for the first time in appellant's reply brief, need not be discussed by the Supreme Court.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Walter M. Thompson against Frederick Koeller and others. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendants Frederick Koeller and another appeal. Affirmed.

Waldo M. York and J. H. Ryckman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an appeal by the two principal defendants from a judgment against them foreclosing a mortgage upon real properly given to secure a note for $2,000. The facts are:

The note and mortgage were executed by the defendant Frederick Koeller and his wife, Louise Koeller, the latter of whom subsequently died and the administrator of whose estate, Walter H. Richards, is the other of the appealing defendants. The note and mortgage by their terms denote an absolute obligation to pay on the part of the Koellers, but were in fact given as collateral security for the payment of certain notes of third persons given the plaintiff for the purchase price of certain tractors which such persons were buying from him, and which he was willing to sell to them on credit secured by the Koeller note. These notes were not paid, and the purchasers of the tractors came into default upon them in an amount in excess of the Koeller note, with the result that the obligation of the latter, which in its inception was conditioned upon such default, became unconditional.

In this situation, Mrs. Koeller having died, the plaintiff presented to the defendant Richards as administrator of her estate a claim for the amount due on the note, specifying that the claim was upon the note, a copy of which was attached, and that the note was secured by mortgage, a copy of which was likewise attached. The claim, however, did not specify that the note had been given as security, and in particular did not set out copies of the notes for which it was security. The administrator neither allowed nor rejected the claim, and the statutory time for him to act having expired, the plaintiff brought the present action.

The plaintiff's complaint was in the usual form of a complaint in a foreclosure suit, setting out the note and mortgage in full, and alleging presentation of the claim against Mrs. Koeller's estate. The complaint, however, like the claim, did not set out that the note had originally been given as security. The only substantial defense pleaded in the defendants' answers was that the note had been so given, coupled with the averment that the notes of the third persons evidencing the primary obligation to the plaintiff had been discharged. At the trial the plaintiff introduced the note and mortgage in evidence, the note being overdue by its terms, testified that nothing had been paid upon it, and rested. The defendants then proved that the note had been given as collateral security, and rested. The plaintiff then sought to introduce evidence of the default on the notes which the note in suit had been given to secure. To this the defendants objected. The trial court, however, permitted the evidence, and at the conclusion of the trial found that the Koeller note had been given as security, but that default had been made upon the notes it was given to secure in an amount larger than the amount of the Koeller note, and gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The principal points made by the defendants on appeal are two. It is claimed first that the court should not have permitted the plaintiff, after the defendants had shown that the note in suit had been given as security, to prove the default in the obligations secured. The contention of the defendants is not a mere procedural one, as to which there could be no reasonable question, that the court might not in its discretion permit the plaintiff to reopen his case after he had once rested. Their contention goes much deeper, and is essentially that the evidence introduced made out a cause of action at variance with that alleged in the complaint. The particular point is that the complaint, in alleging merely the execution and maturity of the Koeller note and that it was unpaid, without alleging that it was given as security, sets out an unconditional obligation, while the proof showed a conditional obligation, that is, one conditional in its inception on a default upon the notes it was given to secure.

The second contention of the defendants is based upon much the same proposition. It is that the claim presented against the estate of Mrs. Koeller was insufficient, in that it, like the complaint, failed to set out that the note had been given as security, and in particular failed to set out copies of the notes whose payment it secured.

In support of both contentions, the defendants rely upon Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown, 170 Cal. 600, 150 Pac. 985. In support of the first, they rely particularly upon the following language from the opinion in that case:

"It needs no citation of authority to sustain the rule that in a suit against a surety the principal obligation and its nonpayment must be clearly set forth because the surety's liability is only conditional. But there is ample authority well illustrated by the following citations [citing a number of authorities]."

[1] Now there can be no question as to the correctness of the rule so laid down in a case where the instrument upon which the suit is brought is by its own terms conditional. If such an instrument is set forth in the complaint, or it otherwise appears from the allegations of the complaint that the obligation sued on was conditional, as, for example, if it appear that the note was given as security, the complaint plainly does not state a cause of action unless it also alleges the happening of the condition necessary on the face of the complaint to entitle the plaintiff to recover. None of the cases cited in Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown as authority for the rule goes any further than this.

But such a rule has no application whatever to a case such as the present, where the instrument sued on is unconditional by its terms, and the condition to which it is subject is created by extrinsic facts entirely. In such a case, although the instrument may be set out in full in the complaint, there is nothing to show that the obligation is not absolute, and the complaint states a good cause of action. As a defense the defendant may allege and show, as the defendants did here, that the obligation was in fact conditional. When the defendant does this, however, he does not make out a variance between the instrument sued on and the one shown by the proof. The instrument shown by the proof is identical with the one pleaded. The facts which the defendant pleads and proves are by way of confession and avoidance of the case alleged by the complaint, not by way of denial of it. That this is so is demonstrated by the fact that the defendant cannot truthfully deny the facts alleged in the complaint, and in particular the fact of the execution of the exact instrument sued upon. The matter alleged in the answer, to wit, that the obligation of the instrument sued on was conditional, being by way of confession and avoidance, the plaintiff might at common law in turn avoid the effect of the matter so alleged by the defendant by replication or reply, alleging that the condition set forth in the defendant's plea or answer has in fact occurred, so that the existence of the condition in the first instance is no longer a defense. Under our system of pleading, there is no replication, but when new matter is pleaded in an answer by way of confession and avoidance, the plaintiff may by his proof either take issue as to its truth, or may avoid it by the showing of still further facts which destroy its validity as a defense. This is exactly what was done in the present case. The plaintiff proved the note which was overdue by its terms, and that nothing had been paid on it. By so doing he made out a prima facie case. The defendants did not deny this or controvert it in any way. They showed merely that payment of the note was conditional because it had been given and accepted as security. This was a good defense, unless there had been a default in the obligation secured, and even then was a good defense, except to the extent of such default. The plaintiff then by way of proper replication to this defense showed that a default on the principal obligation had in fact taken place, and to an extent in excess of that sought to be recovered on the security. The effect of this proof was to show, not that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on a different cause of action from that pleaded in his complaint, but that the defense which the defendants pleaded was not a good defense, that the contingency upon which the defendants were liable upon the note sued upon had in fact occurred.

The identical question under discussion was presented and decided in McGue v. Rommel, 148 Cal. 539, 83 Pac. 1000. There an action had been brought upon a promissory note absolute by its terms, as was the note here. But the obligation upon the note was in fact conditional, since it had been given for the last payment upon the purchase price of certain real property, and our decisions are that in such a case it is a condition precedent to a recovery upon the note that a deed to the property be tendered the vendee. The identical point was made that is made here, that the complaint should have alleged the sale agreement so as to show the conditional character of the obligation on the note, and the tender of a deed so as to show the happening of the condition. Upon this point the court said, in language which might well be used in deciding this case (148 Cal. 545, 83 Pac. 1002):

"On the authority of Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83 (33 Pac. 757, 37 Am. St. Rep. 23), it is said that the complaint is defective because it contains no averment of the agreement of sale and tender of a deed in compliance with its conditions. Some expressions in the opinion in that case imply that a complaint upon a promissory note in the usual form, good upon its face, can be rendered defective by reference to affirmative allegations in the answer. If this were correct, the defendant in such a case would, logically, be entitled to judgment upon the pleadings by reason of allegations in the answer, which by law are deemed controverted (Code Civ. Proc. § 462), and of the truth of which there is no evidence. This would be contrary to long-established rules of pleading and evidence. The decision cannot be given such effect. The course of pleading and procedure in such cases is well established, and it was followed in the case at bar. The defendants in their answer alleged the execution of the agreement showing the concurrent conditions necessary to be performed, and alleged nonperformance by plaintiff. Upon the trial plaintiff introduced in evidence the note sued on. This established all the allegations of the complaint upon which issue was taken, and he thereupon rested his case. Without further evidence he would have been clearly entitled to judgment for the amount of the note. The defendants, in support of the affirmative allegations of the answer, then introduced the agreement, and proved that the note was given as evidence of the debt for the price of the property. Naftzger v. Gregg is perhaps authority for the proposition that upon this being shown the burden lay upon the plaintiff to prove an offer to perform by tendering a conveyance sufficient to transfer the interest agreed to be sold. This we need not determine, for, as above stated, the evidence of such tender was sufficient, and upon this appeal it is immaterial which party introduced it."

See, also, Bank of Paso Robles v. Blackburn, 2 Cal. App. 146, 83 Pac. 262.

An examination of the opinion and also of the record in Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown shows that upon the point under discussion it is not in conflict upon its facts with McGue v. Rommel and the views we have just expressed. The complaint set out the note, and as a part of the note a statement written on its face that it was security for the payment of another note. There was no allegation, however, of a default upon the note secured. In other words, the complaint set forth in effect a conditional obligation, and failed to allege the happening of the condition which alone would entitle the plaintiff to enforce the obligation, and therefore necessarily failed to state a cause of action. But such was not the case here. Here the complaint did state a cause of action, and the evidence which the plaintiff introduced after the defendants had rested was by way of proper replication in avoidance of the defense made. The plaintiff had a positive right to introduce such evidence, and the action of the trial court in permitting him to do so must be affirmed.

[2] Upon the second point made by the defendants, that the claim presented against Mrs. Koeller's estate failed to state that it was upon a note given as security or to set out a copy of the notes secured by it, the reliance of the defendants is also, as we have stated, upon the authority of Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown. And upon this point we can see no distinction between it and the present case. The very point of the decision there was that, where a claim is presented against an estate upon a note given as security for another note, the claim must contain a copy of the latter as well as the first. The claim in the present case is of just that character, and did not contain copies of the notes secured. The decision goes upon the principle, which it declares, that—

"The rule with reference to the presentation of claims is as rigid as the rule of pleading applying to a complaint."

Now, in the first place, it is evident upon a brief consideration that the rule actually applied in Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown is even stricter than the rule it states. It was not necessary for a valid complaint in that case that it set out a copy of the note for which the note sued on was given as security, or even to state its terms with any particularity. The only bearing of that note on the case was on the point of a default having occurred upon it, so that the condition upon which the note in suit was payable had in fact occurred. When the decision requires a copy of the note secured, as well as of the note on which the claim is based, to be attached to the claim, it requires more than would be required of a complaint, and goes further than the principle upon which it proceeds, that the sufficiency of a claim is to be tested by the rules as to the sufficiency of a pleading, and is in fact at variance with and opposed to that principle.

[3] In the second place, that principle is itself opposed to repeated statements by this court upon the very point. In Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 250, 88 Pac. 911, 916, it is said:

"It is not required that a claim against an estate should state the facts with all the preciseness and detail required in a complaint, and the sufficiency of such a claim is not to be tested by the rules applicable to pleadings. It should of course, as said in McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 83 (42 Pac. 466), 'sufficiently indicate the nature and amount of the demand to enable the executor and judge in probate to act advisedly upon it,' and this, we think, the claim in question did."

In Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 689, 126 Pac. 978, 981, the claim as presented was anything but sufficient as a complaint, but the court said:

"The purpose of presenting a claim is to advise the party against whom the claim is presented of its nature. The Code nowhere defines the precise form of such a claim. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1493, 1497, 1502. In Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238 (88 Pac. 911), it is said: 'A claim against an estate is not required to state the facts with all the preciseness and detail required in a complaint, and its sufficiency is not to be tested by the rules of pleading.' Assuming that the presentation of a claim against the estate of Marre was necessary under the circumstances here shown, we are clear that the claim which was in fact presented was sufficient to comply with the law, to convey notice of the nature of the claim, of the circumstances out of which it grew, and its approximate amount, which manifestly was all that could be stated."

The spirit of these decisions at least also appears in the opinion denying rehearing in Raggio v. Palmtag, 155 Cal. 797, 806, 103 Pac. 312, and the rule they lay down was again expressly stated in Western, etc., Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 196, 135 Pac. 496, 501, thus:

"It is claimed that the complaint does not state a cause of action, in that it does not show the presentation of a proper claim against the estate of deceased. No objection in this regard was made until long after the commencement of this action, and until long after the time for the presentation of claims had expired. We think that there is no force in the claim so made. To our minds, the claim presented was based upon the cause of action here asserted, and sufficiently showed the nature of plaintiff's demand to give the executors such information as was necessary to enable them to act upon it advisedly. It is not fatal to such a claim, especially in the absence of a demand for further particulars, that it is not drawn with the precision which would render a complaint good against a special demurrer."

None of these decisions is referred to in Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown, and apparently were not called to the attention of the court. In the subsequent case of Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 705, 174 Pac. 305, the court again repeats their language as stating the established law of the state, and makes no reference to Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown. Now that the question is before us again, we can but conclude that the rule of the decisions mentioned is in truth the established law of the state, and that Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown should be overruled as contrary thereto. This conclusion is strengthened, if possible, by the fact that this rule is in accord with the requirements of the Code, while that of Stockton Savings Bank v. McCown is not. The whole matter of the presentation of claims against the estates of decedents is purely statutory and dependent upon the Code provisions, and there is not a word in the Code to the effect that a claim against an estate should set forth the facts upon which it is based with the precision and detail of a pleading. In fact, as was said in Thompson v. Orena, 134 Cal. 26, 29, 66 Pac. 24, 25:

"Not even the particulars of a claim already due and not contingent [the plaintiff's claim here was of that character] are required to be set out by the provisions of the section cited" (section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., prescribing the requisites of a claim).

[4] The object, indeed, of requiring the presentation of claims is very different from the object of a pleading in a contested matter. As stated in Preston v. Knapp, 85 Cal. 559, 561, 24 Pac. 811, 812, it is "to save to estates of deceased persons the costs and expenses of useless suits, suits to recover what would have been allowed and paid by the executor or administrator without suit." To subserve this object, both the Code and our decisions require, in the language of McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 83, 42 Pac. 466, 468, quoted in Pollitz v. Wickersham, supra, and repeated in effect in Elizalde v. Murphy, supra, and Western, etc., Co. v. Lockwood, supra, that the claims "sufficiently indicate the nature and amount of the demand to enable the executor and judge in probate to act advisedly upon it." If a claim meets this general requirement, it is sufficient, unless it fails to meet some particular requirement of the Code. There are a number of such requirements, such, for example, as that prescribing the character of affidavit by which the claim must be supported, but the only one material here is the provision of section 1497, Code of Civil Procedure, that "if the claim be founded on * * * an * * * instrument, a copy of such instrument must accompany the claim." It has been held that if this provision is not complied with, a claim founded on a written instrument is defective. Estate of Turner, 128 Cal. 390, 60 Pac. 967. In the present case, as we have stated, copies of the note and mortgage executed by Mrs. Koeller were attached to the claim against her estate. The question is, Should there also have been attached copies of the notes which her note and mortgage were given to secure? It seems to us that it hardly requires argument to show that the claim against Mrs. Koeller's estate is not "founded," as that word is used in the Code, on the notes of third persons which she never executed, but upon her own note, which she did execute. Putting it succinctly, it may be said that, while Mrs. Koeller was liable through her own note for the notes secured thereby, she was certainly not liable on them. The liabilities on the two are quite distinct and run against different parties, and the liability of Mrs. Koeller was founded on her own note, and not on notes to which she was not a party, even though her note was given to secure those. The claim against her estate was therefore not deficient in not setting out copies of those notes.

[5] There are a number of other points because of which the defendants and appellants ask for a reversal. They are all, however, of a minor character, and advanced for the first time in the appellants' reply brief. In view of this latter circumstance (Phelps v. Mayers, 126 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 1048; Hibernia, etc., Society v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 578, 96 Pac. 9, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129), we feel under no necessity for discussing them further than to say that we have looked at them and find none of them good ground for reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 543

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LAND CO. v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (L. A. 5772.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1920.)

1. Taxation ⟸543(6)—Complaint in action to recover taxes paid under protest held sufficient.

A complaint, under Pol. Code, § 3819, to recover taxes paid under protest alleging plaintiff's land, worth 80 cents an acre, was assessed at $1.50 per acre, also a systematic, willful, and intentional undervaluation of the lands of others, and their assessment at not to exceed 25 per cent. of true value, and that the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, by competent evidence without substantial contradiction, had full knowledge of such facts, and arbitrarily refused to equalize plaintiff's assessment with the others, held to state a cause of action, when construing the allegations liberally with a view to substantial justice, as required under a general demurrer by Code Civ. Proc. § 452.

2. Taxation ⟸537—Willful refusal to reduce excessive valuation held fraud entitling plaintiff to recover excess taxes paid.

Where plaintiff's property was assessed at nearly twice its real value, while other property was assessed in pursuance of a systematic, willful scheme, at not to exceed 25 per cent. of its real value, which was shown to the board of equalization by evidence without substantial contradiction, the board should have reduced plaintiff's valuation and its willful refusal would seem to constitute "fraud" or something "equivalent to fraud," entitling plaintiff to recovery under Pol. Code, § 3819, for excess taxes paid under protest.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pacific Land Company against the County of San Diego. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Henly C. Booth, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. F. Schuermeyer, Dist. Atty., and H. V. Mather, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action brought under section 3819, Political Code, to recover taxes for the year 1917–18 paid by plaintiff under protest. A general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained, and judgment was thereupon entered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from such judgment.

[1] The theory of the complaint is that the assessment of plaintiff's lands in said county upon which the tax was based was in part void, because the property was deliberately assessed at considerably more than its actual cash value, while all other property in the county was assessed systematically at not exceeding 25 per cent. of its actual cash value. According to the allegations of the complaint, plaintiff paid the whole tax under protest that the portion of the assessment in excess of a valuation of $17,790 was illegal and void, and this action was duly brought to recover the alleged tax paid on such excess valuation.

The complaint alleges the assessment of plaintiff's lands on the assessment book for the year 1917–18 at the uniform valuation of $1.50 per acre, "irrespective of the proportion of fair cash value borne by said lands to each other regarding said lands as parcels by government subdivisions," and that the same were not at any time mentioned in the complaint "of a value in excess of 80 cents per acre, treating said lands as an entirety." It further alleged due application by plaintiff to the board of supervisors of the county sitting as a board of equalization for a reduction in the valuation, and the denial, after hearing, of such application. It was further alleged "that it is true and it was shown to said board of equalization by competent evidence without substantial contradiction" that at the time said lands and all other lands in the county were assessed and equalized for the fiscal year 1917–18, there existed "a systematic, willful and intentional undervaluation of lands assessable by the county for the purpose of assessment upon the said county assessment roll, said undervaluation being at a percentage of true value, not to exceed twenty-five per cent. (25%) for said fiscal year 1917–18"; "that the assessment and the equalization of said lands [plaintiff's lands] were each made arbitrarily and capriciously and without regard to their value, and without regard to and greatly in excess of said ratio of twenty-five per cent. (25%) so willfully, intentionally, and systematically adopted"; and "that said board of supervisors did not, as such board of equalization, during said month of July, 1917, or at all, change said ratio of not to exceed twenty-five per cent. (25%) so systematically, willfully, and intentionally adopted and carried out," nor change "the assessment made, as aforesaid, by said county assessor, and shown on said assessment book, so as to equalize the said assessment on said plaintiff's lands with the remaining assessments in said county." It was further alleged that such order denying plaintiff's application "was made with full knowledge of all the facts hereinbefore pleaded, and was made arbitrarily and capriciously, and without regard to said facts, and in disregard of the evidence then before said board showing said facts, which evidence was without substantial conflict or contradiction."

Construing these allegations liberally, with a view to substantial justice between the parties, which we are required to do as against a general demurrer (section 452, Code Civ. Proc.), they substantially state the following case: Plaintiff's lands in San Diego county had an average value of not to exceed 80 cents per acre, and were assessed upon the assessment roll at a uniform valuation of $1.50 per acre. At the time of this assessment there existed in the county "a systematic, willful and intentional undervaluation of lands * * * for the purpose of assessment upon the * * * county assessment roll, at a percentage of true value not to exceed 25 per cent." This scheme was carried into effect on the assessment roll for the year with regard to the lands other than plaintiff's. All these matters were made to appear to the board of supervisors sitting as a board of equalization, "by competent evidence without substantial contradiction," and "without substantial conflict or contradiction;" but said board, with full knowledge of all such facts and without regard thereto, arbitrarily refused to equalize the assessment on plaintiff's lands with the remaining assessments.

Taking these to be the facts, as we must for the purposes of the demurrer, we are satisfied it must be held that plaintiff has stated a good cause of action. We do not understand it to be disputed that, as said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Township of Wakefield, 247 U. S. 350, 38 Sup. Ct. 495, 62 L. Ed. 1154, "it must be regarded as settled that intentional systematic undervaluation by state officials of other taxable property in the same class contravenes the constitutional right of one taxed upon the full value of his property." This statement finds ample support in the authorities, and was recognized by this court in L. A. Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 168, 121 Pac. 384, 386, where we said:

"This is as true where the injurious effect so produced is caused by inequality of valuation as by any other cause, for, as said in Judson on Taxation, p. 608, 'it is obvious that where taxation is upon property that requires valuation, inequality of taxation is produced as surely by inequality of valuation as by inequality of the rate of tax.'"

[2] It must be conceded, of course, that it is thoroughly settled in this state that to our county boards of equalization has been confided the duty of determining "the value of the property under consideration for assessment purposes upon such basis as is used in regard to other property so as to make all the assessments as equal and fair as is practicable," and that in discharging this duty "the board is exercising judicial functions, and its decision as to the value of the property and the fairness of the assessment so far as amount is concerned constitutes an independent and conclusive judgment of the tribunal created by law for the determination of that question," adjudicating necessarily that "the property is assessed at the same value proportionately as all the other property in the county," and that this adjudication "cannot be avoided unless the board has proceeded arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers, * * * or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board," and that "mere errors in honest judgment as to the value of the property will not obviate the binding effect of the conclusion of the board." Los Angeles Gas & E. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra. In this case, however, the complaint substantially charges that the property of plaintiff was assessed at nearly twice its real value, while the other property in the county was assessed, in pursuance of a "systematic, willful, and intentional" scheme to so do, at not to exceed 25 per cent. of its real value, and that all this was shown to the board of equalization by evidence without substantial contradiction or conflict, which means, of course, that there was no evidence sufficient to give lawful support for a conclusion to the contrary, and that the board "with full knowledge" of these facts, and "without regard to said facts, and in disregard of the evidence, arbitrarily denied plaintiff's application for relief." In other words, the board of equalization, with the facts alleged proven before them, and with full knowledge of the existence of those facts, refused to take any action other than to deny plaintiff's application. It seems to us that in such a situation there is to be found the "something equivalent to fraud" that it was said in Los Angeles Gas & E. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, might entitle the taxpayer to relief in the courts, regardless of the denial of his application by the board of equalization.

It is not claimed that there was any actual fraud in the sense that there was any corrupt intent on the part of the board. Indeed, the complaint alleges that a majority of the members voting for the denial of the application stated at the time that, while the assessment was unjust, they deemed it proper for the validity of the assessment to be settled by the courts. But, according to the allegations of the complaint, there was a deliberate refusal by the board to so adjust the assessment values that plaintiff's lands would be assessed upon the same basis of valuation as the other lands in the county, the members knowing that as the assessment stood it was not upon the same basis, plaintiff's lands being assessed at nearly double their value, while the other lands in the county were assessed at only one-quarter of their value. With this knowledge it was the plain duty of the board to so reduce plaintiff's assessment valuation that its lands would be assessed upon the same basis of valuation as all the other property in the county, provided that basis was allowed to remain for such other property. Its willful refusal to do this, notwithstanding its knowledge of the facts, would seem to constitute "fraud," or "something equivalent to fraud," within the meaning of those terms as used in the decisions relative to review of the action of assessing officers, entirely regardless of the motive actuating the members of the board. The effect of this refusal to perform this duty was to allow an assessment to remain, which, in the words of the Supreme Court of the United States in Greene v. L. & I. R. R. Co., 244 U. S. 499, 519, 37 Sup. Ct. 673, 61 L. Ed. 1280, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 88, constituted "a fraud upon the fully assessed property"—in this case upon the more than fully assessed property. An entirely different situation would be presented here, if the complaint did not show that the board had denied plaintiff's application with full knowledge of all the facts alleged.

We are satisfied that the facts alleged, if proved, would require a conclusion that the assessment of plaintiff's lands was invalid to the extent claimed, and that plaintiff's remedy was that given by section 3819, Political Code, viz. payment of the invalid tax under protest and an action to recover the same within the time specified therein. This, as we have already noted, is such an action. It follows, from what we have said, that the demurrer should have been overruled, with leave to defendant to answer.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J,; OLNEY, J.; LAWLOR, J.

183 Cal. 153

Application of HERMAN.

Appeal of HARBISON.

(L. A. 6147.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 14, 1920.)

1. Action ⟸20—Proceeding for establishment of newspaper as one of general circulation a "special proceeding."

A proceeding by a publisher of a newspaper to have its standing as one of general circulation, as defined in Pol. Code, § 4460, ascertained and established, is a "special proceeding" within Code Civ. Proc. § 23, and not an "action" as defined by section 22.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Action; Special Proceeding.]

2. Newspapers ⟸1(5)—Supreme Court has jurisdiction of appeal in special proceeding for establishment of standing of newspaper.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court from judgment in a special proceeding by a publisher of a newspaper to have its standing as a paper of general circulation, as defined in Pol. Code, § 4460, ascertained and established.

3. Appeal and error ⟸151(2)—Contestant of newspaper publisher's application for establishment of paper as one of general circulation entitled to appeal.

Contestant of newspaper publisher's application to have its standing as one of general circulation, as defined in Pol. Code, § 4460, ascertained and established, held a proper party to the proceeding, and one aggrieved by judgment for the publisher entitling him to appeal, though without pecuniary interest, in view of sections 4458–4462.

4. Appeal and error ⟸843(2)—Point of unconstitutionality of statute not involved in case will not be considered.

Question whether a valid judgment rendered in a proceeding to have the standing of a newspaper as one of general circulation within Pol. Code, § 4460, established, is conclusive or prima facie evidence of status of newspaper when in a future action the sufficiency of publication of notice or process is controverted cannot arise on appeal by contestant of the publisher's application for establishment of standing of paper; point whether provisions of section 4462 for such establishment are constitutional being abstract.

5. Newspapers ⟸1(5)—Determination by superior court that evidence shows newspaper one of general circulation conclusive unless unsupported.

Under Pol. Code, § 4462, it is for the superior court on the publisher's application to determine from the evidence whether a publication is a newspaper of general circulation as defined in section 4460, a determination which is conclusive on appeal unless it appears, as a matter of law, the evidence is insufficient to support the finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Newspaper of General Circulation.]

6. Newspapers ⟸3(2)—Newspaper held not for dissemination of intelligence of general character; "newspaper of general circulation."

Newspaper published at a county seat held not for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, so that the contents did not come within the description of Pol. Code, § 4460, defining newspapers of general circulation for the purposes of publication of notices and official advertising.

7. Newspapers ⟸3(2) — What Legislature meant by "newspaper of general circulation."

By the term "newspaper of general circulation," as used in Pol. Code, § 4460, the Legislature had in view a publication to which the general public would resort to be informed of the news and intelligence of the day, editorial opinion, and advertisements, to render it probable that notices or official advertising published therein would reach the public.

8. Newspapers ⟸3(5)—"Bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers" to newspaper of general circulation defined.

The term "bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers," as used in Pol. Code, § 4460, specifying the requirements of a newspaper of general circulation for the publication of notices and official advertising, means a real, actual, genuine subscription list containing only the names of those paying in good faith regularly for their subscriptions, the assumption, in the absence of legislative specification of numbers of subscribers required, being that it meant the words "bona fide" were to be taken according to common acceptation.

9. Newspapers ⟸3(5) — Newspaper's list a "bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers."

List of subscribers to county seat newspaper, including banks, creameries, produce markets, and others, some 25 subscribers in various lines of business, the paper having circulation in a number of towns and cities, held a "bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers" as required by Pol. Code, § 4460, to render the newspaper one of general circulation for the publication of notices and official advertisements.

10. Newspapers ⟸3(2)—County seat newspaper held one devoted to interest of and published for particular class; "newspaper of general circulation."

Newspaper published at county seat held one devoted to the interest and published for the entertainment of a particular class, so as not to be one of general circulation for the publication of notices or official advertisements as defined by Pol. Code, § 4460, though circulated in a number of cities and towns through three counties, and among at least ten professions, trades, and callings.

Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

In the matter of the application of Basil W. Herman, publisher, to have the standing of the Daily Bulletin of San Bernardino, Cal., as a newspaper of general circulation, as defined in section 4460, Pol. Code, ascertained and established, contested by R. C. Harbison and others. From the judgment so establishing the status of the paper, the named contestant appeals. Reversed.

McNabb & Hodge, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Bledsoe & Phipps, of San Bernardino (Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, of counsel), for respondent.

George D. Squires, of Redwood City, amicus curiæ, for California Press Ass'n.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by R. C. Harbison, one of the contestants in the above-entitled matter, from a judgment in favor of the applicant, Basil W. Herman, to the effect that the Daily Bulletin, published by said Herman, "is a newspaper of general circulation as that term is defined in title 5 of the Political Code [sections 4458–4462], * * * and entitled to print publications, notices by publication, official advertising, or public or legal notices." The appeal is presented under the alternative method.

Respondent has drawn his petition in conformity with the provisions of section 4462. The material allegations of the petition are as follows:

"That your petitioner, Basil W. Herman, at all times herein mentioned has been, and is now, the publisher of the said the Daily Bulletin, a newspaper printed and published in the city of San Bernardino; * * * that the said the Daily Bulletin at all the times herein mentioned has been, and is now, a newspaper published for the dissemination of local and telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character; that said newspaper at all the times herein mentioned has had, and now has, a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers; that said newspaper was established on the 23d day of June, 1916; * * * that said newspaper has been established, printed, and published at regular intervals, every day except Sunday and legal holidays in the city of San Bernardino * * * for more than one year next preceding the filing of this petition, to wit, from June 23, 1916, to the present date, September 12, 1917; and that said newspaper is not now, nor has it ever been, devoted to the interests, or published for the entertainment or instruction of a particular class, profession, trade, calling, race, or denomination, or for any number of such classes, professions, trades, callings, races, or denominations."

Separate contests to this petition were filed by the appellant and W. S. Conger and O. M. Cannon, respectively. Each of the answers put in issue all of the material allegations of the petition.

Two contentions are made by respondent in his supplemental brief:

(1) That "the provisions of section 4462 * * * furnish * * * an exclusive remedy for the setting aside of such a judgment as was rendered herein," and a fortiori there is no appeal; and (2) that "the appellant herein has no right to appeal because he is not 'aggrieved' by the judgment under section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

1. The Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"Sec. 22. An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Sec. 23. Every other remedy is a special proceeding."

[1] It was said in the case of In re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 387, 49 Pac. 354, 356, citing the sections just quoted:

"It may be said, generally, that any proceeding in a court which was not under the common-law and equity practice either an action at law or a suit in chancery is a special proceeding."

In our opinion this is a special proceeding.

2. We shall next consider whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal in a special proceeding. The statute authorizing the proceeding does not provide for an appeal. Neither the former nor the present Constitution has ever in express terms, conferred upon the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in such cases. Appellate jurisdiction is, however, conferred by section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution upon the District Courts of Appeal. The decisions upon the question whether this court has appellate jurisdiction in special proceedings are not in complete accord. There are, on the one hand, Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35, Bixler's Appeal, 59 Cal. 550, and In re Curtis, 108 Cal. 661, 41 Pac. 793, each of these cases holding that this court has no such jurisdiction. The last-mentioned case, however, was a quasi criminal action brought under section 772 of the Penal Code, and the decision turned upon the summary character of the proceeding, the court saying:

"These proceedings are intended to be summary, and, as the Legislature has made no provision for a review of the action of the superior court, its judgment is final."

See People v. McKamy, 168 Cal. 531, 143 Pac. 752.

Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249, 70 Am. Dec. 717, on the other hand, an action for divorce, held that the court is vested with—

"appellate jurisdiction in all cases, provided that, when the subject of litigation is capable of pecuniary computation, the matter in dispute must exceed in value [the sum fixed by the Constitution of 1849] unless the question of the legality of a tax, toll, impost, or municipal fine is drawn in question."

This case was affirmed on this point in Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82, which was an election contest.

In Stockton, etc., R. R. Co. v. Galgiani, 49 Cal. 139, the appeal was from a judgment of the county court confirming the report of commissioners in a proceeding to condemn land. An objection to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was interposed, but the court said on that point:

"Whether, under the provisions of article 6, § 4, of the Constitution, an appeal lies to this court in special cases cannot be considered at this day as an open question. In Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82, and Day v. Jones, 31 Cal. 263, this point was directly presented and decided. In numerous other instances this court has entertained jurisdiction in special cases. * * * In view of these cases we do not think a reconsideration of the question at this time would be profitable, and hold that this court has jurisdiction of this appeal."

Justices Crockett and Wallace, who concurred in the Houghton Case, also concurred in the Stockton Case.

[2] Other cases in which this court has exercised such jurisdiction are In re Market Street, 49 Cal. 546; Loomis v. Andrews, 49 Cal. 239; S. P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 49 Cal. 396; N. P. R. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 50 Cal. 90; Wilmington, etc., Co. v. Dominguez, 50 Cal. 505; Delphi School District v. Murray, 53 Cal. 29; San Jose v. Freyschlag, 56 Cal. 8; and Lord v. Dunster, 79 Cal. 477, 21 Pac. 865. And, since the decisions in Bixler's Appeal, supra, and In re Curtis supra, it has been held that special proceedings in general are appealable to this court under the provisions of section 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644; People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 261, 92 Pac. 481. The amendment in 1919 of that section took effect on July 22, 1919 (St. 1919, p. 88), subsequently to the date on which the petition for a hearing in this court was granted—June 2, 1919. Before it was amended that section read in part:

"The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction: * * * 4. In all special proceedings."

We think it clear that an appeal lies to this court from a judgment in such a proceeding.

3. In support of the contention that the contestant Harbison has no right of appeal for the reason that he is not an "aggrieved" party, respondent argues that said contestant must show that, if the judgment is allowed to stand, he personally will suffer substantial loss before he is entitled to take an appeal. Section 4458 provides that all publications, notices by publication, and official advertising required by statute to be given or made by public officials shall be given or made only in newspapers of general circulation. Section 4459 specifies the minimum size of type that may be used in printing such publications or notices. Section 4460 defines "a newspaper of general circulation." Section 4461 prescribes a penalty for the violation by a public official of any of the provisions of the three preceding sections. Section 4462 authorizes a proceeding in the superior court whereby a newspaper may "have its standing as a newspaper of general circulation * * * ascertained and established." It is plain that the primary object of this legislation was to provide for adequate publicity for notices required by law to be published. This was sought to be accomplished by providing a method for determining whether publications claimed to be newspapers of general circulation are of the required standard. It is made a matter of concern to the general public. Section 4462 provides that any person may appear and contest the petition to have the status of the newspaper established, and that the decision and judgment of the superior court may be vacated on the motion of any person, whether a party to the original proceeding or not. It is not prescribed that the contestant shall have any pecuniary interest in the proceeding. Any person may appear and show that the newspaper in question is not a proper medium for the publication of legal notices because it does not present any or all of the essential attributes of "a newspaper of general circulation," as that term is defined in section 4460. It was said in the case of In re Marks, 45 Cal. 199, at page 216, discussing an act of the Legislature "to prevent extortion in office and enforce official duty":

"There is nothing, either, in the act which requires that Crane, who preferred this complaint, should aver or prove that he is a party in interest in the strict sense, or has himself sustained any special damage by reason of the official neglect complained of. The purpose of the statute was the wholesome one of authorizing any person who would take the duty upon himself to institute an inquiry into the conduct of certain public officers in the manner pointed out. It is not the personal interest of the complainant which the statute regards, but the higher and more important interest of the people * * * in the honest and faithful discharge of official duties. * * *"

[3] In our opinion, appellant was a proper party to the proceeding. While it is true that, strictly speaking, no judgment was rendered against him in the case at bar, nevertheless, since the public has an interest in the proceeding, and the trial court has decided adversely to the contentions of appellant, he must be regarded as an "aggrieved" party for the purposes of this appeal. Indeed, if the position of the respondent on this point be sound, it is difficult to conceive of a party who would be "aggrieved" in such a proceeding where the original petition had been granted. Even if the contestant were the publisher of a rival newspaper, it could not be said that he had any pecuniary interest which had been directly affected by the decree; any prejudice which he might have suffered would be too incidental and remote. We have examined the cases cited by respondent in which it has been held that, in order that an appeal may be prosecuted, it must be shown by the record that the appellant is an aggrieved party in the sense that he has been deprived of a legal right by the judgment. None of these cases, however, is authority where the right of becoming a party is given by statute, and the public has a direct interest in the controversy.

4. During the oral argument here the point was suggested by one of the justices whether the provisions of section 4462 were not an invasion of the powers of the judiciary by the legislative branch of the government. This question had not been raised by the parties. It was adjudged by the court that—

"The Daily Bulletin * * * is a newspaper of general circulation as that term is defined in section 4460, * * * and is entitled to print publications, notices by publication, official advertising, public or legal notices."

In answer to the above suggestion appellant, in his reply to the supplemental brief of respondent, filed after the oral argument, takes this position:

"We believe the judgment rendered in the proceeding at bar does not conflict with any constitutional provision, if it is construed to be conclusive and binding only on the date rendered and on the publication of notices theretofore published in said paper. * * * This judgment, if allowed to stand, undoubtedly validates any and all legal publications being made in the Bulletin the date the judgment was rendered. As to the validity of notices published after said date we submit the judgment as rendered would have no force whatever. If, however, the Legislature contemplated validating the publication of notices made after such judgment is rendered and until it is vacated, modified, or set aside under * * * section 4462, then we respectfully submit that the portion of the section wherein it is declared 'but all publications made in such newspaper during the period it was adjudged to be a newspaper of general circulation shall be held to be valid and sufficient,' is an invasion by the Legislature of the province of the courts, and is therefore unconstitutional. This portion of the section is, in effect, a legislative declaration, without a hearing, of the truth of facts that may or may not exist, viz. that at any and all times after the judgment is rendered establishing a newspaper as one of general circulation until such judgment is vacated, said newspaper possesses all the requirements set forth in section 4460 as necessary to be proved in order to be declared a newspaper of general circulation."

[4] The respondent has not answered this contention. The question whether a valid judgment rendered in such a proceeding is conclusive or prima facie evidence of the status of the newspaper involved when, in a future action, the sufficiency of the publication of notice or process in said newspaper is controverted, cannot arise here. The point made by appellant presents only an abstract proposition which we do not deem necessary or proper to consider. The rule on this point is thus stated in 12 Corpus Juris, 780:

"The constitutionality of a statute will not be determined in any case unless such determination is necessary in order to determine the merits of the suit in which the constitutionality of such statute has been drawn in question. * * * Where that portion of a statute which is involved in controversy is constitutional and complete in itself, the court will not consider a question as to the constitutionality of another portion of the statute. * * * The question of the constitutionality of the statute will be determined only with reference to the parties who are before the court."

See, also, In re Daniels, 140 Cal. 335, 73 Pac. 1053; In re East Fruitvale Sanitary District Board, 158 Cal. 453, 111 Pac. 368; Brookes v. Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 117 Pac. 433.

The effect of this judgment as evidence of the status of the Daily Bulletin in future proceedings is not involved here. As we have seen, appellant concedes that, in so far as the judgment is binding on the parties and conclusive evidence of the status of the paper on the date such judgment was rendered, "it does not conflict with any constitutional provision." On this assumption the question whether the judgment is conclusive or prima facie evidence of the status of the paper within the meaning of section 4460 is not presented by this proceeding. Section 4462, for the purposes of this discussion, may be divided into three parts: First, that part providing for the determination of the status of a paper in the first instance, where any one, as already shown, may appear and contest the petition; second, that part providing that the decision and judgment in the first instance may be "vacated, modified, or set aside"; and, third, that part which aims to give validity to "publications made in such newspaper during the period it was adjudged to be a newspaper of general circulation." In this proceeding only the first part of the section is involved; for neither in the petition nor in the judgment is it sought to make such judgment conclusive evidence of the validity of publications subsequently made. Our consideration therefore, is necessarily limited to the question whether the finding declaring that the Daily Bulletin is a newspaper of general circulation is supported by the evidence.

5. Appellant contends that:

"The evidence is insufficient to justify or sustain the finding * * * because said Bulletin: (1) Does not disseminate local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character; (2) has not a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers; (3) is published for the entertainment and instruction of particular classes, professions, trades, and callings."

Section 4460 provides in part:

"A newspaper of general circulation is a newspaper published for the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character, having a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers. * * * A newspaper devoted to the interests, or published for the entertainment or instruction of a particular class, profession, trade, calling, race, or denomination, or for any number of such classes, professions, trades, callings, races or denominations when the avowed purpose is to entertain or instruct such classes, is not a newspaper of general circulation."

[5] Under section 4462 it is for the superior court to determine from the evidence whether a publication is a newspaper of general circulation as that term is defined in section 4460. This determination of the evidence is conclusive on appeal unless it shall appear, as matter of law, that it is insufficient to support the findings. The trial court has found "that all the allegations of petitioner's petition are true." We shall first consider the character of the matter contained in the paper. The publisher testified practically in the language of the statute, that "the paper is published for the dissemination of local and telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character." It is to be noted that the statute refers to local or telegraphic news. Both local and telegraphic news are not required, but there must be one or the other and intelligence of a general character. In re Green, 21 Cal. App. 138, 131 Pac. 91. Seven copies of the paper, which the publisher testified were "fairly representative," were introduced in evidence. A few telegraphic items are contained therein, but the publisher admitted they were not originally published in the Bulletin, and had been copied from other newspapers. For instance, the two "telegraphic" items in the issue of September 10 had appeared elsewhere on September 8, and the six "telegraphic" items in the issue of July 27 were published in another paper the day before. It is not suggested that the republication of telegraphic news was based on any arrangement with such other papers. No other kind of "telegraphic" matter appeared in the paper. The only current "news" is court calendars without any description of court proceedings, lists of new suits filed, documents recorded and marriage licenses and building permits issued. The only legal notices which appear to have been published are those of this proceeding. There is no account of local events, casualties, hotel arrivals, or departures, personal items, and the like such as it might be expected would be found in a newspaper published at a county seat. Other than as above indicated there is no evidence of the collection or dissemination of local or telegraphic news or intelligence of a general character. There is but one editorial, and that appeared in the issue of June 25, 1917. The paper chiefly contains matter of a stereotyped nature, tables of temperature and rainfall for a period of 46 years and of altitudes at various points in that section of the state, names and locations of churches, hospitals, asylums, orphan homes, and clubs, the names and addresses of clergymen and others entitled to perform the marriage ceremony, the locations of fire alarm boxes, directories of public offices and officials, local, state, and federal tables of official fees, a directory of business buildings and halls, a list of public parks, and the location of the public library. Except for the belated "telegraphic" matter, the paper does not contain news of a general character in which the public at large would be interested. It is the general custom to publish editorial matter in a newspaper, and yet among the issues of this publication appears only a single editorial, as we have heretofore noted. The caption of the Bulletin declares that this is "the only paper published in the county that publishes an abstract of instruments filed in the clerk's and recorder's offices."

[6] It is clear to us that the purpose of this paper was not "the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character," and that the contents did not come within this description. Respondent relies on In re Green, supra. In that case it was held by the superior court that the Daily Recorder of Sacramento was not a newspaper of general circulation. The judgment was reversed by the district court of appeal. A comparison of these two publications shows a marked difference in purpose and contents. The Sacramento paper, in addition to certain stereotyped matter, contains news accounts of court and other official proceedings, including the activity of the California members of Congress, reviews of court decisions, general advertisements, personal notices and many items of local current events of a diversified character. In short, the paper appears to have been published for the dissemination of news and intelligence of every kind. Nothing in the nature of news, as that term is generally understood, is found in the publication here in question.

[7] By the term "a newspaper of general circulation" the Legislature had in view publications to which the general public would resort in order to be informed of the news and intelligence of the day, editorial opinion, and advertisements, and thereby to render it probable that the "notices or official advertising" would be brought to the attention of the general public. We think that the purpose of the statute would fail of realization if such a publication as the one involved in this proceeding were held to be a newspaper published for the dissemination of news and intelligence of a general character.

[8] The second contention of appellant is that the Daily Bulletin has not "a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers." The statute itself does not specify how many subscribers there must be, but does require a "bona fide" list thereof. It seems to us that the term, as used in this connection, means a real, actual, genuine subscription list which shall contain only the names of those who are in good faith paying regularly for their subscriptions. On this question the court said in the Green Case:

"As to whether it is such a newspaper is manifestly a matter of substance, and not merely of size; and that it is of general circulation must depend largely upon the diversity of its subscribers rather than upon mere numbers."

But it is urged in the brief filed in behalf of the California Press Association as amicus curiæ that—

"The words 'bona fide' * * * mean that the subscription list shall cover a sufficient number of persons in a city or county to constitute an adequate medium for public advertising." (Italics ours.)

Here, as we have observed, the Legislature has not specified the number of subscribers required, and we must assume that it meant that the words "bona fide" were to be taken "according to their common acceptation." Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418, 63 Am. Dec. 139; Gross v. Fowler, 21 Cal. 393; Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 631, 25 Pac. 968. On this point Herman testified as follows:

"Q. State whether or not this 'Daily Bulletin' has now and at all times since June 23, 1916, has had a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers. A. Yes; at all times."

According to his testimony, the list included banks, creameries, produce markets, orange growers, mercantile agencies, real estate dealers and others. After naming 25 subscribers in various lines of business, the witness concluded on this point: "That, I believe, covers it." He further testified:

"The Bulletin has circulated in San Bernardino, in Redlands, in Colton, in Rialto, in Ontario, in Highland, in Victorville, in Pomona, in Los Angeles, and in Riverside."

[9] We are not prepared to hold, in view of the number and diversity of subscribers and the territorial range of circulation, that this would not be "a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers."

[10] In our opinion the paper is, in the language of the statute, "a newspaper devoted to the interests" and "published for the entertainment and instruction of a particular class. * * *" It is true that, as has been shown, the paper circulated in ten cities and towns, scattered through three counties, among at least ten "professions, trades, and callings," but it appears to us that it was published chiefly to meet the needs of persons and concerns specially interested in information of an official nature, and that the other contents of the paper were merely incidental to this object. It may also have been the purpose of the paper to lay a foundation for recognition under the statute.

In view of our conclusion that the paper was not published for the dissemination of news or intelligence of a general character, and that it was published for a particular class, it must be held that the finding is not supported by the evidence.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; OLNEY, J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment on the ground that the evidence shows that the Daily Bulletin was not, at the time in question, a newspaper of general circulation published for the dissemination of news and intelligence of a general character.

I am not certain that the main opinion purports to determine that a judgment given under section 4462 of the Political Code declaring a particular newspaper to be a newspaper of general circulation is binding and conclusive as to the character of the newspaper as of the time it is given. It is my opinion that, in any other action or proceeding in which personal or property rights of persons not parties to the proceeding under section 4462 are involved, the judgment given in a proceeding under that section is of no force or value whatsoever. This question, however, does not appear to be raised by this appeal.

As to the other matters discussed, several of them are admittedly not involved in the question presented. I do not desire to express any opinion upon any of them. It is to be hoped that in the future the Legislatures will refrain from such futile enactments.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (dissenting). I have no disposition to question the correctness of the conclusion of the court that in view of the facts shown by the record the publication here involved did not fully measure up to the requirements of our statutory definition of the term "newspaper of general circulation." However, I do not desire to here express any definite conclusion on that question, as I think it should be held that the "decision and judgment" of a superior court in the proceeding authorized by section 4462, Political Code, is not reviewable on appeal. To my mind the matter is confided entirely and finally to the superior court of the county in which the paper is published, with the result that, in so far as the Legislature had the power to so provide, any notice, etc., published in a paper decided by such superior court to be a newspaper of general circulation, while such decision remains unrevoked by the superior court, must be held, wherever assailed, to have been published in a newspaper of general circulation. I think the manifest purpose of the section was to enable a paper about which some doubt might exist, as to being in fact a newspaper of general circulation, to obtain a certificate of standing, as it were, from the superior court of its county, which would have the effect of validating all pulications therein while such certificate remained unrevoked, in so far as any legal requirement of publication in a newspaper of general circulation is concerned. Whether the Legislature had the power to give such effect to the superior court certificate of standing is another question which is not here involved and which cannot here be effectively decided. Being of the opinion that the intent of the section was to leave the whole matter in the hands of the superior court, and that no right of appeal from the "decision and judgment" given by such court was contemplated. I cannot concur in the judgment of reversal, and think the appeal should be dismissed as being from a nonappealable judgment or order.

48 Cal. App. 276

FOWLER et al. v. THORNBERRY.
(Civ. 3420.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 22, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1920.)

1. Stipulations ⟨⟩14(7)—Stipulation held not to estop plaintiffs from taking advantage of certain evidence.

In an action for breach of contract for the repurchase of certain live stock, a stipulation on motion for change of place of trial that witnesses would testify that they made an examination of the animals, and that it could not be determined from such examination that the animals shown to the witnesses were the same animals sold by defendant to plaintiffs, held not to estop plaintiffs from taking advantage of evidence that the animals were capable of identification by defendant, the stipulation relating only to the particular examination of the animals, and was evidence, but not conclusive proof, of its contents.

2. Sales ⟨⟩153—Offer of registered jennets with registration certificates held sufficient tender.

In an action for breach of contract to repurchase certain jennets, the contract of repurchase providing that the same jennets that were in the original purchase to a number not exceeding nine were to be sold, an offer by plaintiffs of the total remaining number of animals, together with their registration certificates, was sufficient, although they were unable to specify each particular animal according to its certificate.

3. Sales ⟨⟩383—Evidence held to show that purchaser of registered jennets had reasonable means for their identification.

In an action for breach of contract to repurchase certain registered jennets, where the sellers were unable to identify the particular animals covered by the particular registration certificates, evidence held to sustain a finding that the purchaser had reasonable means of identification.

4. Sales ⟨⟩333—Posting of notices for resale of property under execution presumed within township of sale.

In an action for breach of contract to repurchase certain registered jennets, where it appeared that plaintiffs, after defendant's refusal to repurchase, retained the animals to enforce their special lien under Civ. Code, § 3049, gave notice to defendant of the time and place of sale under section 3002, and sold them upon notice of sale of personal property under execution as provided in section 3005, the sale was not void because it did not appear that any of the places where notices were posted was within the township in which the sale took place, since it would be presumed that the law was obeyed, and that notices were posted within such township.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by A. J. Fowler and another against H. B. Thornberry. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and E. F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Kaye & Siemon and Alfred Siemon, all of Bakersfield, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the sum of $4,603.50 and interest, damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiffs because of the failure and refusal of the defendant to accept and pay for eight head of registered jennets.

The defendant, Thornberry, a dealer in live stock, entered into an agreement in writing with the respondents and G. P. Thornburg for the sale by him to them of 10 head of registered jennets, to be brought by Thornberry from Missouri, at an agreed price of $6,000, the respondents and Thornburg to accept such jennets as might be selected by Thornberry as satisfactory stock, the purchase price to be evidenced by promissory notes of different amounts. The jennets were shipped from Missouri by appellant in a lot containing 28 head. Upon arrival at the stockyard at Bakersfield, 10 jennets, identified by means of certain numbers burned into one of the hoofs of each animal, were sorted out by appellant and one of his employés, and were delivered to and were accepted by respondents and Thornburg. Some time later certificates of registration, containing the pedigree of each jennet and its registration number, were issued by the Standard Jack and Jennet Registry of America, and were sent to respondents and Thornburg, with a letter, directing the attention to the hoof numbers, and explaining that by reference to these numbers and the corresponding numbers on the certificates of registration each jennet could be identified.

Subsequently certain controversies arose between the parties regarding the qualities of the jennets for breeding purposes, and also concerning the guaranties made by Thornberry in respect to the foals that would be produced during the breeding season of 1914 and 1915. A new agreement was executed, which, after reciting that the parties desired to set aside all previous agreements, provided that the respondents and Thornburg should pay certain balances upon the promissory notes theretofore executed pursuant to the old agreement, and should sell to appellant a jack colt for the sum of $500. It was further agreed that appellant would, at the option of respondents and Thornburg and on notice, purchase the 9 head of jennets (one having died), or as many as might be living and in reasonably good and sound condition, at the original purchase price of $600 per head, it being specified that this stipulation should include "only the same jennets that were in the original purchase, and not exceeding nine head." In the event respondents and Thornburg exercised their option to sell, appellant was to receive, in consideration of the agreed purchase price, one-half of the colts foaled by the jennets between the date of the new agreement and the delivery of the animals, the method of selection being specified. At the time he signed this agreement, appellant knew from "hearsay," and, no doubt, from familiarity with the industry, that the hoof marks on the animals had become obliterated from being worn off. In due time respondents and Thornburg decided to exercise their option to sell the remaining 8 head of jennets (another one having died), and so notified the appellant.

Appellant and Albert Dill, a stock breeder, and respondent Hadlock went to respondent Fowler's ranch, near Bakersfield, for the purpose of examining the jennets. It was then discovered that 3 of the jennets were dead. Hadlock was unable to identify the remaining 7 head. The parties then went to the office of the attorney for the respondents, who offered appellant the 10 registration certificates theretofore received, and demanded the sum of $4,800. Appellant declared himself ready to buy the jennets, but declined to accept them unless the respondents could identify each one, with reference to the individual registration certificate, stating that as the animals were thoroughbred, buyers would require each to be identified as the one mentioned in her registration certificate. Respondents declared they were unable to identify the animals because the hoof marks which were upon the jennets at the time they were delivered had become obliterated. Appellant then requested respondents to pick out the three registration certificates of the three dead jennets. Respondents were unable to do so or to identify any of the living animals as the ones described in any of the 10 registration certificates. Appellant refused to accept delivery unless there was some means of identification whereby he could perpetuate the pedigree of the jennets and their progeny. Some time later the remaining 7 head of jennets were sold by respondents for the total sum of $220. The present action was then commenced against appellant for recovery for his failure and refusal to accept or pay for the jennets and for damages for the value of the pasturage of the animals from the exercise of the option to the date of the sale.

The parties agree that their respective contentions may be stated as follows: Appellant contends that he agreed to purchase, at respondents' option, the same jennets which were in the original purchase contract, i. e., registered jennets, each one duly identified, and each one accompanied by its registration certificate, together with such of the progeny as he would be entitled to receive under the contract, also identified so as to permit the same to be registered. The respondents contend that they agreed to sell, at their election, the same animals they had purchased from appellant, collectively and regardless of identification or registration, that they tendered or offered to deliver the same animals, and that appellant Thornberry is liable for refusing to purchase them. The principal controversy turns upon the interpretation of the repurchase clause, the question being whether or not identification of the individual animals was a necessary incident and a part of the contract. The lower court has decided that it was not, and has decided in favor of the respondents' theory.

It appears that each of the registration certificates for the respective jennets contained, in addition to the numbers burned upon the hoofs, certain height, girth, bone, and hoof measurements, and a statement of the age of the animal, all of which were required by the rules and regulations of the Jack and Jennet Registry Association, and the lower court found that it would have been, and was, at all times possible for the appellant, or other persons skilled in such matters, to have identified each and every animal from the data given in the registration certificate, with a reasonable degree of certainty. This finding is supported by the testimony of the witness De Ganna, an employé of the appellant, called and qualified by him as an expert, by the testimony of the witness Dill, a breeder of jacks and jennets, also called and qualified as an expert by appellant, and by the testimony of appellant, who was a stock breeder of years' standing, well versed in the details of the business. The respondents and Thornburg knew little, if anything, of such matters.

[1] Appellant contends that the respondents were estopped from availing themselves of the effect of this evidence by a stipulation entered into in connection with the proceedings for a change of place of trial of the action. It was stipulated that in the event the motion was granted, witnesses Dill and De Ganna would testify that they made an examination of the animals on the 1st day of August, 1917, the date fixed by the option for the resale for the purpose of determining whether or not the jennets were the same animals sold by the appellant to the respondents, and "at said time, the defendant and said Albert M. Dill examined certain animals shown by the plaintiff, but that it could not be determined from said examination that the animals so shown to them were the same animals sold by defendant to plaintiffs at the time and in the manner as set forth in said complaint, and the plaintiffs also admit that it is true that it could not be determined from such examination that the animals so shown to said witness were the same animals as were sold by defendant to plaintiff's." We think, however, that the respondents' contention is correct, that a fair reading of the stipulation shows it to relate only to the particular examination of the animals made at that time, and not to any other. Moreover, the stipulation was merely to the effect that the witnesses would, if called, testify as indicated. The stipulation, therefore, became evidence, but not conclusive proof of its contents. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 638, 645; Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279, 358. The authorities cited by the appellant to the contrary only go to the effect that where there has been a stipulation in the course of the trial as to the facts, made as a substitute for evidence, and the findings are contrary to the facts as stipulated, they are unsupported by the evidence. That is not this case.

[2, 3] It would therefore seem that appellant's objection to receiving the animals under the terms of the option was not reasonable. The trial court was correct in concluding that the offer of the respondents to return collectively the same animals received from appellant in the first instance was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the option, notwithstanding the inability of the respondents to specify each particular animal as demanded by the appellant, according to the registration certificate. Appellant agreed to repurchase "the same jennets that were in the original purchase and numbers not exceeding nine." Respondents tendered certain animals and all the registration certificates they had received from appellant with the animals. The court found that the jennets offered to the defendant were the "same identical jennets" sold to plaintiffs by defendant. It also found that appellant had the reasonable means of identification of the animals at hand. Both findings are supported by the evidence and conclude the controversy.

The evidence does not warrant appellant's contention that the time within which he might accept the tender of the jennets on repurchase was extended. He did, apparently endeavor to gain some additional time within which to pay or settle after the 1st of August, but the respondents had given him notice of the exercise of the option long before that date, and the obligation to repurchase the animals was imposed upon him as of that date.

[4] When the respondents tendered, and appellant refused to receive, the jennets under the option of repurchase, the respondents, regarding the transaction as a sale of personal property, retained the animals in their possession in order to enforce their special lien thereon. Civ. Code, § 3049. They subsequently sold them for the sum of $220. They gave actual notice to the appellant of the time and place at which the property would be sold (Civ. Code, § 3002), and sold the animals in the manner and upon the notice of sale of personal property under execution. (Civ. Code, § 3005).

It was proved that notices of the sale were posted in three public places for the required time, but it was not shown that any of the places were within the township in which the sale took place. Appellant maintains that the sale was void for that reason. That contention would be sound if it appeared that the notices were not posted within the township. It does not so appear, and it will be presumed that the law was obeyed in that respect as the court has found. Whether or not the sale was irregular the appellant has suffered no injury. The court found that the jennets were of the value of $220, the exact amount at which they were sold. Under the Civil Code, section 3311, subdivisions 1 and 2, the detriment caused by the breach of appellant's agreement to accept and pay for the jennets was therefore exactly the same whether the property was resold or not.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; WELCH, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 171

JONES v. DELLA MARIA. (Civ. 3195.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 14, 1920.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⟸112(2)—Right to possession is waived by accepting rent accrued pending action.

The right to maintain an action for unlawful detainer after forfeiture of the lease for breach of covenant to give security is waived where the lessor after the action was begun accepted rent, as rent, not as the value of the use of the premises, which had accrued after the action was begun.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟸112(1)—Acts or conduct of landlord may amount to "waiver" of forfeiture of lease.

A "waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants an inference of such relinquishment, and the forfeiture of a lease may be waived by the acts or conduct of the lessor without reference to any act by the lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

3. Landlord and tenant ⟸112(1)—Waiver of forfeiture defeats unlawful detainer though breach continuing.

An action for unlawful detainer is defeated by the waiver of the forfeiture for breach of covenant to furnish security after the action was begun, though such covenant was continuing and was subsequently breached, since the subsequent breach is available only in a new action commenced subsequent thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action for unlawful detainer by James S. Jones against J. Della Maria. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jas. W. Glassford and Hickcox & Crenshaw, all of El Centro, for appellant.

J. Stewart Ross and R. B. Whitelaw, both of El Centro, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action for unlawful detainer, brought under subdivision 3 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment passed for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

The complaint, in the form usual in such actions, alleges a lease of the premises by plaintiff to defendant, under a written lease, for the term of three years and six months from and after October 1, 1916, at a monthly rental of $50. In their lease contract the parties agreed that the lessee should execute a bond in the penal sum of $1,000, with sureties satisfactory to the lessor, to guarantee the performance by the lessee of all his covenants and agreements. Defendant neglected to give such bond, and on November 11, 1917, plaintiff served a written notice demanding that defendant furnish the bond or redeliver possession. Defendant failed to comply with the demand, and plaintiff, on November 26, 1917, brought the action.

[1] At the trial plaintiff testified that in January, 1918, which was after he had commenced this action, he received from defendant rent up to the end of that month. According to this testimony he must have received, in January, 1918, rent for the months of October, November, and December of 1917, and for the month of January, 1918. The only construction of which plaintiff's testimony is susceptible is that the money received by him from defendant during the pendency of the action was paid to and accepted by him as rent due under the lease, and not as the value of the use and occupation of the premises by defendant after forfeiture of the lease.

The acceptance of such rent by plaintiff was a waiver of defendant's forfeiture of the leasehold and of plaintiff's right to maintain this action.

[2] The right to recover possession in an action such as this is based on the idea that the tenant has forfeited his leasehold. Notwithstanding the breach by a lessee of any covenant that he may have made in the lease contract, the lessor may or may not elect to treat the breach as a forfeiture of the lease. Here, by his notice to give the bond or redeliver possession, served November 11, 1917, and by this action for restitution of possession and the cancellation of the lease, plaintiff elected to treat the lease as forfeited. But, notwithstanding this election, he thereafter could waive the forfeiture of the lease and his right to insist thereon as a ground for restitution of possession and cancellation of the lease contract. This plaintiff did by accepting rent for months succeeding that in which he served upon defendant the three days' notice. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right—an election by one to forego some advantage he could have taken or insisted upon. A person who is in a position to assert a right or insist upon an advantage may, by his words or conduct, and without reference to any act or conduct of the other party affected thereby, waive such right. Once such right is waived, it is gone forever; the person who has waived the right will thereafter be precluded from asserting it. "The courts, not favoring forfeitures, are usually inclined to take hold of any circumstances which indicate an election to waive a forfeiture." Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 5 South. 116, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51.

Under section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure the landlord, after giving the three days' notice there provided for, has the right to maintain an action for restitution of possession and cancellation of the lease. The attitude of the landlord, after such notice and the commencement of an action to cancel the lease, is that the tenant no longer is entitled to possession by virtue of the lease contract; that the tenant has forfeited his leasehold. Having elected to treat his tenant as no longer entitled to possession or to any right under the lease, the landlord's course must be consistent with this claim in the further progress of the proceeding that he has instituted. And if thereafter he accept rent accruing subsequently to the demand for possession or accruing subsequently to the commencement of the action, and accept it as rent eo nomine—that is, as payment under the original lease contract—he affirms that the lease is still in existence, and thereby waives the forfeiture that he has elected to enforce. By his own acts he admits the continuance of the lease, and waives any prior forfeiture. A landlord who thus recognizes a lease as a subsisting, operative contract should not be permitted to insist upon a past forfeiture, nor be permitted to assert that the contract is no longer a subsisting lease affording to the tenant all his contractual rights thereunder. Guptill v. Macon, etc., Co., 140 Ga. 696, 79 S. E. 854, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1249, and notes; Kenny v. Seu Si Lun, 101 Minn. 253, 112 N. W. 220, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, and notes, 11 Ann. Cas. 60. See, also, Randol v. Tatum, 98 Cal. 390, 33 Pac. 433.

[3] Respondent seeks to avoid the effect of this waiver of the forfeiture upon the theory that the covenant to give the bond was a continuing covenant and its breach a continuing breach. It undoubtedly is the rule that where the covenant is a continuing covenant and the breach a continuing breach, so that there is a continuing cause of forfeiture, the landlord, by accepting rent that has accrued subsequently to any breach of such covenant, is not precluded from taking advantage of any forfeiture occurring after such acceptance of rent. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384; Jones v. Durrer, 96 Cal. 95, 30 Pac. 1027. But, though the waiver of the breach of a continuing covenant will not preclude the landlord from taking advantage of a cause of forfeiture that occurs subsequently to such waiver, the waiver will discharge any forfeiture occurring previously thereto. Therefore, even if as claimed by respondent, the covenant to give the bond be a continuing covenant and its breach a continuing breach, that fact does not help him here, because where, as here, the forfeiture relied upon as the basis of the landlord's right to maintain the action of unlawful detainer has been waived subsequently to the commencement of the action, it is of no consequence, so far as that action is concerned, that the covenant is a continuing covenant and its breach a continuing breach. Where the covenant is a continuing covenant, and the tenant continues to breach it after the landlord has waived his right to insist upon a past forfeiture of the lease, such continuing breach after such waiver may afford ground for again electing to treat the lease as forfeited by again giving the three days' notice required by the Code, and commencing a new action for restitution of possession and cancellation of the lease, based upon such renewal or continuance of the cause of forfeiture. But until the landlord renews his election to treat the lease as forfeited by giving a new statutory notice, and until he commences a new action to enforce such new cause of forfeiture, the tenant cannot be dispossessed for the past forfeiture that the landlord has waived by conduct that is consistent only with a recognition of the continued existence of the lease contract. In this action plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the right of forfeiture that existed when he commenced his action. But that right he waived, after the action was commenced, by conduct inconsistent with its exercise.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

48 Cal. App. 327

VANCE v. SUPERIOR COURT, LOS ANGELES COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 3384.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 26, 1920.)

Justices of the peace ⊂=84(2)—Objection to jurisdiction over the person waived by general appearance.

Since the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 890, subd. 4, in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 44), so as no longer to provide expressly that objection that the action was brought in the wrong county might be made at the trial, that objection is waived by general appearance in the justice's and superior courts.

Petition by J. A. Vance prayed to be directed to Superior Court, county of Los Angeles, and Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge of said court for a writ of review. Petition denied.

Archie D. Mitchell, of Ontario, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petition is denied. By his general appearance in the justice's and superior court petitioner waived his right to raise the question of jurisdiction. Holbrook v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 589, 39 Pac. 936, does not aid him. That case was decided when section 890, subdivision 4, Code of Civil Procedure, expressly provided that the objection that the action was brought in the wrong county might be made at the trial. In 1905 (St. 1905, p. 44) the section was amended, and subdivision 4 thereof now merely provides that the action may be dismissed "when the action is brought in the wrong county, or township, or city." Since the amendment, the subject of dismissal of such actions has been considered by the Supreme Court, and it has been uniformly held that objection to the jurisdiction of the person must be made by special appearance for that purpose; otherwise it is waived. Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 Pac. 317; American Law Book Co. v. Superior Court, 164 Cal. 327, 128 Pac. 921.

48 Cal. App. 156

BENTE et ux. v. REESE. (Civ. 3117.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. June 11, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 9, 1920.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⊂=33—Reliance on statements by vendor necessary to establish fraud.

Where there was no confidential relation between the parties to a sale of interest in mining claims except long friendship, and the vendor had knowledge of mining which the purchasers had not, the purchasers cannot recover the payments made because of misrepresentations by the vendor without showing that in fact they relied on such misrepresentations.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⊂=44—Evidence held not to show confidential relations warranting recovery of purchase money for misrepresentations.

In an action to recover purchase money paid for an interest in a mining claim, evidence that the purchasers visited the claim with the vendor, and that the latter only represented that he believed valuable ore would be discovered therein because of the proximity of a paying mine, held not to show reliance on confidential relation between the parties, though they were old friends and purchasers who had no knowledge of mining.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by A. E. Bente and wife against Fred Reese. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

W. B. Beaizley, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover the sum of $1,500 received by the defendant to and for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs. Judgment in favor of the defendant, from which judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

An amended complaint was filed at the time of the trial, and by stipulation all of the allegations thereof were deemed to be denied. So far as pertinent to the questions presented here, the material facts alleged by the plaintiffs were that prior to the 23d day of April, 1918, when said money was paid over by the plaintiffs to the defendant, the defendant had represented that he was a mining man with knowledge of mines and minerals and a prospector, and that the plaintiffs believed the said statements; that the plaintiffs and each of them were absolutely ignorant of mines and minerals or anything connected therewith; that shortly prior to the 23d day of April, 1918, defendant informed the plaintiffs that he had options upon mining claims, and sent a plan of said mining claims, showing that they were intimately connected with the Cuddyback quicksilver mine; that the defendant informed the plaintiffs that a one-fifth interest in the said Cuddyback mine had been sold for $70,000; that the defendant also took the plaintiffs to the said quicksilver mine and exhibited the rock and showed the plaintiffs through the said mine and brought to the knowledge of the plaintiffs the high price of quicksilver, and informed the plaintiffs that said mine was producing a flask of quicksilver and over every day; that the defendant informed the plaintiffs that the mining claims held under options by him were in the same kind of ground, and that there was no reason why they should not be able to develop a valuable quicksilver mine upon said grounds; that, believing all the said statements of the defendant, and being absolutely ignorant in respect to mining property or minerals, plaintiffs relied solely upon the judgment, experience, and integrity of defendant, and, so, relying, on the 23d day of April, 1918, purchased a one-half interest in three mining claims for the sum of $1,500; that at said time the defendant well knew that the said mining claims were not worth the amount demanded from the plaintiffs, and that plaintiffs were induced to invest their money with the defendant solely because of their long acquaintance and intimate friendship with each other; that at said time the defendant well knew that the said claims were valueless and without values, and that the defendant made the said representations to the plaintiffs knowing the same to be false, and for the purpose of inducing the plaintiffs to pay to the defendant said sum of $1,500, and that without the said inducement made by the defendant, and without the reliance that the plaintiffs had in the defendant's promises and integrity and knowledge, the plaintiffs would not have so paid the said money; that the plaintiffs went upon the said land and stayed upon the said land "until they were informed that they had been buncoed"; that thereupon the plaintiffs investigated, and from such investigation demanded of and from the defendant the return of the said money, and offered a deed of the said one-half interest back to the said defendant, and in open court tendered to the defendant a deed properly executed, conveying to the defendant the said one-half interest purchased theretofore, which said offer was refused; that the defendant has refused and neglected to pay to the plaintiffs the said sum, or any part thereof, and that the said sum has not been paid nor any part thereof; that the said sum was so paid to the defendant on the 23d day of April, 1918, and a deed for one-half interest in the said three mining claims was executed by the defendant to the plaintiffs on said day; that all of the statements, inducements, and representations made by the defendant were false, fraudulent, untrue, and were known to be so by the defendant at the said time, and were made by the defendant for the sole purpose of inducing the plaintiffs to consummate said purchase.

The findings of fact made by the court concerning the matters before mentioned are the following:

"That defendant did not, on the 23d day of April, 1918, at or within the county of Kern, state of California, or elsewhere, or at any other time, receive from plaintiffs or either of them the sum of $1,500, or any other sum to and for or to or for the use and benefit or use or benefit of plaintiffs, or either of them. That on or about the 23d day of April, 1918, plaintiffs paid to defendant at Tehachapi, Cal., the sum of $1,500, as the agreed purchase price of and for an undivided one-half interest in three certain mining claims situated near said Tehachapi, in Kern county, Cal., and received from said defendant a deed conveying the said one-half interest in said mining claims so purchased. That prior to the payment of said $1,500 and the delivery of said deed, plaintiffs negotiated with defendant upon the said purchase of said interest in said mining claims, and defendant conducted plaintiffs to and upon said mining claims, and exhibited them to plaintiffs, and indicated to them the boundaries thereof. That plaintiffs were given ample time to investigate and consider whether or not they should pay defendant the said sum of $1,500 which was fixed by defendant as the purchase price of a one-half interest in said claims. That after consideration thereof, that said plaintiffs accepted the offer of defendant to sell to them said one-half interest in said mining claims for said sum of $1,500, and so informed defendant, and thereupon, and on or about said 23d day of April, 1918, plaintiffs paid to defendant said sum of $1,500, and received the deed heretofore referred to. That the statements, inducements, and representations made by defendant to plaintiffs respecting the said mining claims were not false, fraudulent, or untrue, nor were they known by defendant to be false, fraudulent, or untrue at the time of the making thereof, nor were such statements, inducements, or representations made by defendant to plaintiffs in and about the purchase of said one-half interest in said mining claims, falsely or fraudulently or untruthfully made by defendant for the sole purpose, or for the purpose, of inducing plaintiffs to consummate the purchase of said interest in said mining claims."

Appellants contend that the findings of fact are totally insufficient; that the evidence is insufficient to support the statements contained in the findings; that the plaintiffs were entitled to a finding under the evidence that the statements made by defendant to the plaintiffs concerning the mining claims were made under confidential relations, and were statements of an expert to one totally ignorant of the subject, and were, as a matter of law, for that reason equivalent to statements of fact; that judgment should be for the plaintiffs. Counsel relies upon the following rule of law as quoted from 20 Cyc. 60:

"Where there exists between the parties some relation whereby the purchaser, being ignorant of the facts, is justified in placing trust and confidence in the honesty and superior knowledge of the vendor, or where, in the absence of any particular relation, special confidence is placed in the vendor on account of his peculiar knowledge and the purchaser's ignorance, the rule of caveat emptor does not apply; and in such cases the purchaser may without further investigation rely on the vendor's statements, even where they might otherwise be deemed mere expressions of opinion or dealers' talk."

[1] There was no legal relation of special trust or confidence between the plaintiffs and the defendant in this case. The parties had been neighbors and friends; the defendant had some experience in the mining business and the plaintiffs had no such experience. These facts were known to all of them. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs had confidence in the integrity of the defendant, but it was further necessary for the plaintiffs to prove, not only that the defendant made false statements to them upon which they were entitled to rely, but also that, without investigating the facts for themselves, they relied upon those statements.

[2] Although we have not been furnished with any definite specification of particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, we have examined the evidence as we find it extensively quoted in the briefs. It appears that immediately before the sale took place, the plaintiffs went to the mining claims, where the defendant was then residing, and remained on the ground several days; that they went upon the claims with the defendant and visited the neighboring Cuddyback mine; that at the time when the sale was made the defendant had not represented, and did not then represent, that quicksilver or the mineral cinnabar had actually been discovered on these claims. The parties plaintiff and defendant alike knew at that time that the claims were mere prospects, and that it was a mere matter of opinion that probably such minerals could be discovered and a cinnabar mine developed on these claims. The defendant did state that the ore was "there some place," and that the dikes or ledge on which the Cuddyback mine was located continued on into these claims, or that "it ran that way." He "worked out the trend of it on the hillside," and so exhibited the territory to the plaintiffs. It is very apparent, even from the testimony of the plaintiffs, that the representations made by the defendant concerning the value and mineral quality of these claims amounted to nothing more than that the defendant believed that probably valuable minerals would be found therein by the processes of development, and that when so found the claims could be sold at a profit. So far as the evidence shows, the defendant may have held and believed in that opinion, and ultimately it may prove to be well founded. It is true that the defendant had only paid $400 or $500 for his options on the claims, and that he was selling a one-half interest therein to his friends, the plaintiffs, for $1,500. While this might be characterized as a very strong draft on friendship, it did not constitute fraud; for the defendant made no representation to the plaintiffs concerning the cost of the claims to him, nor did the plaintiffs make any inquiry on that subject. It is not claimed by the plaintiffs, nor is there any evidence tending to show, that this was a case of a joint purchase of the property by the plaintiffs and the defendant from third parties in which transaction the parties were to pay equal amounts for their equal interests in the property purchased. The plaintiffs merely purchased from the defendant one-half of his interest in the claims at a price fixed by the vendor, which price the vendees were willing to pay.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a finding that the statements made by defendant concerning the mining claims were made under confidential relations; and that the evidence is sufficient to justify the facts as found.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

48 Cal. App. 300

PETERKIN v. RANDOLPH MARKETING CO. (Civ. 2942.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 22, 1920. On Petition for Rehearing July 14, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 20, 1920.)

1. Sales ⟸52(5)—Evidence held to show sale of fruit instead of consignment for sale on commission.

In fruit grower's action for breach of contract involving issue of whether plaintiff's fruit had been sold to defendant or had been shipped on consignment for sale on commission, evidence held to sustain jury's finding that defendant's agent had in fact purchased the fruit.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1002—Finding on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Jury's finding on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

3. Principal and agent ⟸119(1)—Plaintiff, suing on contract made with one known to have been acting as agent, has burden of proving agent's authority.

Plaintiff, having made contract with defendant's agent, knowing agent to have been acting as such, has burden of showing that agent, in making alleged agreement, was acting within the scope of his authority.

4. Principal and agent ⟸155(1)—Principal not liable on agent's contract not within actual or apparent authority.

Defendant, having received fruit shipped by plaintiff without knowledge that it was consigned otherwise than for sale on commission, was not liable to plaintiff on theory that its agent had actually purchased the fruit, in absence of evidence that agent had actual authority to make such contract, or that defendant through its agents had purchased the fruit, warranting conclusion that the making of such contract was within the agent's apparent authority.

On Petition for Rehearing.

5. Appeal and error ⟸768—Court will assume that its attention has been called to all evidence relied on in support of the contentions of the parties.

Where the record is presented in a typewritten manuscript, and that portion thereof upon which the parties rely has been printed in the briefs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, appellate court will assume that its attention has been called, not only to the points relied on, but to all evidence upon which the parties rely in support of their contentions.

6. Appeal and error ⟸832(5)—Rehearing not granted to enable party to present evidence not printed in brief.

Where the portions of the record on which the parties rely have been printed in their briefs, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953–953c, a rehearing should not be granted to enable either party to present evidence not printed in brief, and what in fact constitutes a new record.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by W. H. Peterkin against Randolph Marketing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John H. Miller, of San Francisco, for appellant.

F. C. Drumm, of Orange, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action a judgment was entered upon the verdict of a jury for $1,740.60 in favor of plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

Plaintiff sues for himself and as assignee of one Whiting, both of whom were owners of orange groves upon which, in the fall of 1917, there were crops of fruit ready for market. Defendant was a corporation engaged in the marketing of such fruit. The claims of plaintiff and his assignor, as appears from the complaint, are that they delivered their fruit to defendant for shipment upon an agreement by the latter whereby it guaranteed a price, f. o. b. at Anaheim, of a certain stipulated sum per packed box of oranges, less a certain sum for picking, packing, and commission to be received by defendant; while, on the other hand, defendant asserted the fruit was consigned to it for marketing on a commission basis, without purchase or guaranty as to price at which it was to be sold.

The record is presented in a typewritten transcript, and counsel for both parties, recognizing the rule prescribed by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, have printed in their briefs that portion of the record upon which they rely to sustain their respective contentions.

It appears that defendant's principal place of business was in the city of Los Angeles; that it had a house in Orange county where it received and packed fruit for shipment; that J. C. Gow, who was a soliciting agent, called upon plaintiff and Whiting and solicited the handling and sale of their fruit crop by defendant on commission; as to all of which there is no controversy in the evidence. A conflict, however, arises as to the nature of the oral agreement under which the fruit was delivered to defendant. The testimony of both plaintiff and his assignor tends to prove that Gow came to them with a proposal to ship on consignment, which they declined; that thereafter, in an interview with Gow, he agreed to guarantee plaintiff a stipulated price for the fruit, out of which defendant was to receive 65 cents per box for picking, packing, and marketing. And like testimony was given by Whiting as to the agreement made with Gow. Plaintiff testified as follows: "It is my theory that I sold the fruit to the Randolph Marketing Company"—and, further:

"I considered it a purchase; if the fruit brought more than the price agreed upon, I was to have the excess. * * * It was understood that the fruit was subject to inspection at the other end. * * * If the fruit had been rejected on inspection, it would have reduced my claim."

[1-3] Notwithstanding testimony of defendant contradicting plaintiff's theory as to the meaning of the contract, the evidence of plaintiff tends to prove his asserted theory, and upon such conflict the conclusion of the jury must, as to the nature of the contract made by the defendant's agent, be deemed conclusive. Gow, however, was acting in the capacity of an agent, and while it is conceded by defendant that he was empowered to solicit contracts for consignments of fruit to it, to be picked, packed, and sold on commission, it denies that he had authority, either express or implied, in acting for defendant, to either purchase fruit or guarantee a price at which it was to be sold f. o. b. or otherwise. Since plaintiff and his assignor dealt with Gow, knowing him to be acting as an agent of defendant, the burden was upon them to show that he in making the alleged agreement was acting within the scope of authority conferred upon him so to do. While counsel for respondent concedes that no express power was conferred upon Gow to either purchase or guarantee the price of the fruit delivered to defendant, he nevertheless insists that he was clothed with ostensible authority to make the agreement, and hence, since as claimed it recognized and adopted like contracts made by him with others, defendant is estopped from denying that Gow as its agent was authorized to make the alleged agreements. Conceding this to be the law, our attention is directed to no evidence whatever, either printed in the brief or contained in the typewritten transcript, which in the slightest degree tends to show that defendant had, through its agents or otherwise, purchased fruit at a stipulated price or guaranteed the price thereof, or shipped fruit other than on consignment for sale on commission.

[4] The trial court, in recognition of the law, properly instructed the jury that in order to entitle plaintiff to recover they must find:

"That in the making of said agreements with said Gow as the said agent of the Randolph Marketing Company, the plaintiff and said C. H. Whiting acted in good faith and with ordinary care, and that the making of such agreements was within the actual or apparent scope of the authority of said Gow."

Admittedly there was no actual authority conferred upon Gow to make the contracts, and, as stated, our attention is directed to no evidence tending to show any act on the part of defendant from which the conclusion can be drawn that he had apparent authority to make such contracts for and on behalf of defendant, which, upon delivery of the fruit, received it without knowledge or information that it was consigned otherwise than in the ordinary course for sale upon commission.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [5, 6] Respondent's petition for a rehearing herein is denied. In presenting this appeal both parties, as stated in the opinion, printed in their briefs the portions of the evidence, taken from the typewritten transcript, upon which each of them relied. In his petition for a rehearing respondent does not base his claim thereto upon the fact that in considering the evidence so printed we arrived at an erroneous conclusion, but now for the first time in his petition for rehearing he asks us to reconsider the case upon evidence printed therein to which no reference was made in presenting the appeal. In deciding the case the court, as it was justified in doing, assumed that both parties not only directed our attention to all of the points upon which they relied, but likewise to all the evidence upon which they relied in support of their respective contentions; and having, as we believe, properly decided the case thereon, a rehearing should not be granted to enable either party to present what in fact constitutes a new record; that is, evidence which they did not deem of sufficient importance to print in their briefs as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, which requires one availing himself of the provisions of sections 953, 953a, and 953b, Code of Civil Procedure, in appealing from a judgment or order, to print in his brief such portions of the record as he desires to call to the attention of the court. And where, as in this case, it appears that the parties exercise such right, and submit the appeal, another hearing thereof upon other evidence than that first presented at the hearing should not be granted. Otherwise repeated hearings of the same case must be had by the court.

48 Cal. App. 199

THOMAS v. LAYER et al. (Civ. 3111.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 15, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 12, 1920.)

1. Sheriffs and constables ⊂⊃151—Sureties on bond indemnifying constable liable without demand by indemnitee.

The sureties on a bond given to indemnify a constable against all loss and liability which he might sustain by retaining attached property are liable as soon as the constable's liability is fixed by judgment against him, and no demand is necessary before suit is begun against them.

2. Sheriffs and constables ⊂⊃151—Action on bond indemnifying constable maintainable without appeal from judgment against constable.

A constable may maintain an action on a bond given to indemnify him against liability for retaining attached property without prosecuting an appeal from the judgment rendered against him in favor of the adverse claimant of the attached property.

3. Sheriffs and constables ⊂⊃151—Action on bond indemnifying constable maintainable pending appeal by principal from judgment against sheriff.

A constable may maintain an action on a bond given to indemnify him against liability or for retaining attached property pending an appeal prosecuted by the principal on the bond from the judgment against the constable, especially where it was not shown that there was any merit in the appeal, and it was dismissed before trial of the action on the bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Charles R. Thomas against Adam Layer and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. Franklin Baxter and Thomas A. Sanson, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. H. De La Monte and Rupert B. Turnbull, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment entered against them. The action was brought upon an undertaking given by Wilson, as principal, and Layer and Schenck, as sureties, to indemnify the plaintiff, who was a constable, for a liability which might accrue against him. Wilson was plaintiff in a certain civil action, in which action he required the plaintiff, as constable, to attach an automobile, which automobile was later claimed by a third party. Upon the demand of the third party the constable was about to release the property, when the undertaking was given upon which this action was brought. Because of his retention of the property after the third party's demand, the constable was subjected to a suit, and judgment was recovered therein against him by one Bunnell, who was the third party referred to.

There was evidence showing that, upon this action of Bunnell being brought against the constable, the latter's attorney called upon the appellants to assist in the defense of that action, and it appears that two counsel were employed by one or the other of the sureties (appellants here), and that such counsel did appear at the trial in defense of the action. Appellant Layer, one of the sureties, makes the point here that he was not permitted to take part in the defense of that action; but there was ample evidence before the trial court to entitle the inference to be drawn that he was not only well informed of all of the proceedings in that case, but that the counsel, other than counsel for the constable, did represent the sureties, and both of them, with authority, or at least their consent. After the judgment was rendered in favor of Bunnell against the plaintiff here, execution was taken out and money belonging to the plaintiff was attached, whereupon notice of appeal was given and an undertaking prepared and filed for the purpose of staying execution. On this undertaking Layer signed as one of the sureties, but later refused to justify, and the constable by his own means procured a stay bond and caused the same to be filed. While the appeal was pending in this court and undecided, the plaintiff brought this action to enforce the liability assumed by Wilson and his sureties, the appellants here. Before the action was tried, plaintiff dismissed his appeal in the Bunnell Case in this court and satisfied the judgment below.

[1] Defendants contend that the complaint in this action failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, because it did not allege that demand had been made upon the appellants for the payment of the judgment. Plaintiff in his complaint set out the undertaking executed by appellants, which undertaking, as appears by its terms, was to indemnify the constable against "all loss and liability which he, the said constable, his heirs, executors or administrators, shall sustain or in any wise be put to, for or by reason of the said attachment, seizing, levying, taking, or retention by the said constable, in his custody, under said attachment, of the said property claimed as aforesaid. * * *" By allegations following, the facts that the judgment had been rendered against the plaintiff, the amount thereof, and that the defendants had failed to hold the plaintiff harmless as agreed, and had failed to pay the amount of the judgment, and that the whole amount thereof was unpaid, were set forth. We think it was not necessary to allege, under the terms of the contract of indemnity, that demand had been made upon the appellants before the bringing of this action. The amount of their liability had become fixed by the judgment, and there was no term of the undertaking which relieved appellants from satisfying the judgment until after demand made. Murdock v. Brooks, 38 Cal. 596; Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 538; Coburn v. Brooks, 78 Cal. 443, 21 Pac. 2. The contract here, as before noted, was one of indemnity. In interpreting the liability of sureties under such a contract, the Supreme Court, in Showers v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 270, 22 Pac. 663, said:

"The contract was in substance a contract of indemnity. In form it was to furnish a bond of indemnity. * * * The indemnity was against liability, and hence there was a right of recovery upon the contract as soon as the liability was incurred."

In McBeth & Compton v. McIntyre, 57 Cal. 49, the court said:

"As has been seen already, the indemnity given the constable was not only against actual damage, etc., but also against all liability therefor; and therefore, the moment the judgment was entered in favor of McBeth & Compton against the constable, the latter became liable for the amount of it, and thereupon a cause of action arose in his favor upon the bond."

We quote also from Tunstead v. Nixdorf, 80 Cal. 647, 22 Pac. 472:

"His liability attached the moment he refused, on demand, to surrender the property to the execution debtor, and that liability was fixed and determined by the judgment of McCue against him. The same judgment fixed the liability of the defendants in this action to the plaintiff. * * * It would have been different if the bond had only indemnified the sheriff against actual damages. In such case the sheriff could not recover until he had actually been compelled to pay the judgment recovered against him. Oaks v. Scheifferly, 74 Cal. 478. The bond in suit was security against liability on the part of the plaintiff, and not against actual damages only, and his liability attached under the original execution."

[2] The liability of this constable became determined as to its amount when the judgment of the third party (Bunnell) was entered against him. The constable was not required to take an appeal from that judgment at his own cost and expense; neither was he required to prosecute any appeal taken by him to its conclusion. He had the right to rest upon the judgment and require the principal and sureties on the undertaking of indemnity to pay the amount for which he had become liable, and he was at liberty to bring his action against the principal and sureties without himself first satisfying the judgment. In Showers v. Wadsworth, supra, the court, in addition to the language which we have quoted, observes:

"'The sheriff having made a proper request that the indemnifier should litigate the claims against him, it is immaterial whether the indemnifier did so or not. If he neglected to do so, the judgments would be conclusive against him. 'If, after request, the person indemnifying neglects to defend the person indemnified, a recovery against the latter, suffered by him in good faith, is conclusive in his favor against the former.' Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 5. If he took charge of the litigation, the judgments are equally conclusive. Civ. Code, § 2778; Dutil v. Pacheco, 21 Cal. 442, 82 Am. Dec. 749."

[3] The fact that at the time this action was brought the appeal of the plaintiff Thomas in the Bunnell Case was pending and undetermined, we think did not affect the right of the plaintiff to enforce his claim against the appellants upon the liability assumed under their contract. Moreover, it appears, as has already been observed, that before the trial of this action the appeal of Thomas was dismissed and the judgment of Bunnell was satisfied. It does not appear, if that question is material here at all, that there was any merit in that appeal, or that the judgment as entered in favor of Bunnell against the plaintiff was in any wise improper as to its foundation or amount. We think that the judgment as entered herein is a just one, and we find no error sufficient to sustain appellants' plea for reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

48 Cal. App. 237

PEOPLE v. PORTER. (Cr. 489.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. Rape ⟸53(5)—Evidence held to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to rape.

In prosecution for assault with intent to rape an 11 year old girl, evidence that defendant went to the house where he knew the girl was alone with other children, with no particular business, and his own admission as to his acts, with the exception of the attempt charged, held sufficient with testimony of the girl to sustain a conviction.

2. Criminal law ⟸1159(4) — Testimony of prosecutrix must be given credit on appeal from conviction.

On appeal from a conviction of assault with intent to rape a girl because of insufficiency of the evidence, the testimony of the prosecutrix must be given full credit.

3. Rape ⟸48(2) — Evidence of fact of complaint is admissible, but not details thereof.

In a prosecution for assault to rape, evidence that prosecutrix made complaint after the crime was admissible, but not the details of the complaint, including the name of the party complained against.

4. Criminal law ⟸695(5)—Objection held not to raise point that question to witness as to complaint stated defendant's name.

In a prosecution for assault to rape, an objection to a question as to whether prosecutrix made any complaint with reference to defendant because it was too indefinite and uncertain does not raise the point that the question was improper because it contained defendant's name.

5. Criminal law ⟸1170½(1)—Naming defendant in prosecution as to complaint by prosecutrix held not prejudicial.

The fact that a question as to complaint by prosecutrix after the commission of the offense named defendant was not prejudicial, where there was no pretense that prosecutrix had grounds for complaint against any one else, and the jury would have inferred that complaint was against defendant if his name had not been mentioned.

6. Criminal law ⟸1170½(6)—Witnesses ⟸375—Question as to animus of witnesses held improper, but not error as construed by trial court.

Though a question asked defendant as to why prosecutrix and her mother told the story they did against him was in improper form, it was not prejudicial error to overrule an objection to it after the court had stated that in effect it asked whether defendant knew of any reason why prosecutrix and her mother should have any prejudice against him.

7. Criminal law ⟸366(4) — Evidence held to show defendant was present when declaration of prosecutrix was made.

It was not error to admit testimony as to a declaration by prosecutrix at the time of the alleged offense on the theory of res gestæ, though the witness did not testify that defendant was present, where the witness did state that she heard the voice of a man whom she did not see, and the testimony of prosecutrix showed that defendant was the only man with whom she was talking at that time and place.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Richard Porter was convicted of assault with intent to rape and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for new trial. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin and W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, the prosecutrix being of the age of 11 years. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the motion for a new trial.

[1] The first claim made by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury. With this contention we cannot agree. The mother of the prosecutrix conducted a rooming house in the city of Marysville wherein she resided with her four children. About the 9th of May, 1919, the defendant became a roomer therein, and remained continuously for a short time, and afterwards was there at irregular intervals for a night or two. On the 20th of August, about 8 o'clock in the morning, he returned to the lodging house for the purpose of getting some laundry that he had left there. He met and talked with the mother who, in addition to her duties in connection with the lodging house, was also working in the Marysville Steam Laundry. He asked to see the children, and particularly Elsie, the eldest one. The mother said the children were in bed, and he could not see them then, but must wait until some other time. He insisted upon seeing Elsie, the eldest child, but upon being again informed by her that the children were in bed, and he could not see them at that time, he took his laundry and accompanied the mother down the stairs to the sidewalk, and thence toward the laundry until he came to the telephone station, where he parted with the mother, stating that he was going to telephone. A short time thereafter he left the telephone station and returned to the lodging house. As to what occurred then we have the testimony of the little girl, Elsie, which it is sufficient to quote as follows:

"About 10 minutes after Mr. Porter and my mother left he returned and knocked at the door and said he wanted to come in. I told him he couldn't come in. He said, 'Well, get dressed,' and so I got up and got my clothes and came out, and went out on the porch. He said, 'I hear your mother is going to send you to Grass Valley.' I said, 'Yes, she is thinking of sending us there.' He said, 'I will come up and get you out.' I said, 'You can't get us out.' He said, 'Yes, I can, I know one of the Sisters up there.' I said, 'Do you know the Sister Superior?' He said, 'No.' I said, 'You can't get us out unless you know Sister Superior.' He didn't say anything more about Grass Valley. Then we went in the hall and sat down. He wanted me to sit on his lap, and I said, 'No, I can sit here.' I sat down on a bundle of laundry in front of the telephone. There were two bundles of laundry there, and so I sat down. He wanted me to kiss him, and I wouldn't do it. He said he guessed he would have to go. He picked up his laundry and started down the stairs. I started back to the kitchen, he followed me there. He chased me in the corner and started to unbutton his pants. I pushed away from him, and ran over to the other side of the room. He came right after me, and sat down in the chair by the table, tried to pull me over his lap, just then my sister came out of room 1. He jumped up and ran over to the other side of the house. Then he said he guessed he would have to go. He gave me a dollar. I showed him mamma's new dress. Then he said he guessed he would have to go, and wanted me to kiss him, and I wouldn't do it, so he gave me $1, and said he would give me $5 next time he came in. At the time he started to unbutton his clothes he chased me over in the corner, he started to unbutton his pants I said, 'You let me out.' He said, 'I won't hurt you.' At the time he came over and sat down in a chair and wanted me to sit on his lap his clothes were buttoned. At the time he was sitting on the chair by the table he had hold of my bloomer leg, just had hold of my bloomer at the bottom. He was then trying to pull me over on his lap. Before I started back to the kitchen he got hold of my arm and tried to pull me in room 6, and I said I would tell mamma, and he said 'Oh, no.'"

[2] We cannot say that it is an irrational conclusion from the foregoing that the defendant is guilty as charged. In the testimony of the girl is found at least some evidence of every element of the crime. We must accord, of course, full credit to her statements, and, so reviewing the record, we must hold that the case is governed by the principle announced in People v. Johnson, 131 Cal. 511, 63 Pac. 842, and People v. Moore, 155 Cal. 241, 100 Pac. 688.

Indeed, the situation is fairly disclosed in the following statement of the trial judge in denying the motion for a new trial:

"I am bound by the verdict of the jury, and in that respect at this time I am almost in the same position an appellate court would be, looking at the evidence, if there is evidence there, even though it may be conflicting, that would support the verdict, I am to be bound by that verdict unless I think there has been a miscarriage of justice. The incriminating circumstances of this case it is not necessary to comment on, but they are these: He knew the children were there alone, unprotected; he had been told by the mother he couldn't see them at that time; goes away with her, and then immediately returns; has no business to go up there at all; then according to his own story corroborates every detail of the girl's story, except the incriminating circumstances of unbuttoning his pants and trying to force her into the room 6 with moderate force; he followed her into the kitchen for the purpose of hearing her read a letter; the jury may have wondered why the mail carrier was not produced who delivered that letter; the testimony that he forced her into a corner of the room, unbuttoned his pantaloons, afterwards seizing her by the bloomers—those circumstances were sufficiently incriminating to justify the jury in finding a verdict of guilty of assault, of the crime charged. There are no atrocious details to indicate that he ever had in his mind to use more than moderate force, perhaps overcome resistance by blandishments than any other way, but there was sufficient to indicate his purpose to gratify his passions; I think there is no escape from it."

[3] Appellant claims that the court erred in overruling his objection to the following question:

"I will ask you Mrs. Simmons, if, on the 20th day of August, 1919, in the morning about the hour of 8 o'clock, if Elsie made any reference to the defendant—made any complaint to you with reference to Richard Porter?"

In People v. Wilmot, 139 Cal. 103, 72 Pac. 838, the Supreme Court said:

"The rule enunciated by the authorities generally, and by all the decisions in this state, is in all cases to admit evidence of the fact of complaint, and in no case to admit anything more, * * * for, as said by Greenleaf, 'the evidence when restricted to this extent is not hearsay, but in the strictest sense original evidence. When, however, these limits are exceeded, it becomes hearsay in a very objectionable form.' It is clear that to allow any mere statement of the prosecutrix as to the details of the affair, or as to the name of the person accused by her, to be given in evidence would be to allow hearsay evidence to prove the offense."

It is thus apparent that the only possible objectionable portion of the question was in the use of the name of the defendant. The district attorney so framed the question probably to identify the complaint, in other words, to show:

"That the complaint related to the matter being inquired into, and not to a complaint wholly foreign to the subject." People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 520, 69 Pac. 223.

Manifestly, the question would have been meaningless if it had not been directed to this particular instance, but it would have been better if the district attorney had otherwise identified the complaint and avoided the use of said name. It may be added that the learned trial judge correctly stated the rule as follows:

"You are prevented from going into detail. * * * It may be given in evidence that the complaining witness, shortly after the alleged occurrence, made complaint to some person if that is the fact."

[4] But appellant's counsel failed to point out that specific infirmity in the question. The objection was:

"To which we object as incompetent, immaterial, irrelevant, calls for hearsay testimony, no foundation laid, it is indefinite and uncertain, and particularly we specify the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the question."

There was no suggestion that the question contained too much. Indeed, the principal objection was that it contained too little; that it was too indefinite and too uncertain. A similar objection had been made before, but there was no claim that the question went too far. This particular objection was therefore waived.

[5] We may add that since it was proper to identify the complaint in some manner, it is difficult to see any prejudice in the use of the name of the defendant for that purpose.

There is no kind of pretense that the prosecutrix had any cause for complaint against any one else, arising that day, and if the question had been the entirely proper one, "Did Elsie on August 20, 1919, make any complaint as to the treatment she received that morning?" the jury would naturally and inevitably understand that the reference was to the treatment of her by the defendant. The significance of the interrogatory was indeed not substantially affected by the use of the defendant's name.

[6] Another criticism of appellant is based upon this part of the record:

"Q. Now, Mr. Porter, you state that your relations with this family have always been friendly? A. They have.

"Q. When did they become otherwise?

"Mr. Carlin. Objected to as incompetent, immaterial, irrelevant, not cross-examination; that is an inference to be drawn by the jury to be argued by counsel, and the reasons for it too.

"The Court: Overruled. A. I don't know as they ever did. * * *

"Mr. Manwell: Can you tell this jury here why they (the prosecutrix and her mother) told that story?"

This question was also objected to, but the court overruled the objection, stating:

"He has testified the relationship was pleasant, and the question is cross-examination along that line; if he knows any reason why they should have any feeling to testify against him, that is what it amounts to.

"Mr. Carlin: To such a question I might not object.

"The Court: That is what I take the question means."

The answer was:

"No, I couldn't tell why they told it, I am no mind reader."

The question in form was objectionable. But we think it must be assumed that the witness accepted the court's interpretation of its meaning, and answered accordingly. In other words, the question must have been understood as though the witness had been asked if he knew of any animus or prejudice on the part of said witnesses that might influence their testimony. Appellant, indeed, expressed himself as not averse to a question of that character. Moreover, regardless of this question and answer, it is quite apparent from the testimony of appellant that he knew of no reason why these witnesses should perjure themselves. If he had known of any fact tending to discredit their testimony, of course, he would have mentioned it. Indeed, his testimony uniformly was to the effect that he was upon terms of friendship and intimacy with the whole family of which the prosecutrix was a member. The answer to the question was then simply the conclusion or inference which the jury must necessarily have reached from a consideration of the other testimony of the defendant, that is, that he did not know of any improper motive which might have influenced said witnesses. The question should have been reframed in accordance with the suggestion of the court, but, even if we concede error, we do not think the matter is of sufficient gravity to justify a reversal of the judgment.

[7] Appellant also criticizes the action of the court in allowing Mrs. Simmons to testify that about 8 o'clock in the morning of the alleged assault, while occupying a room in said lodging house, she heard the prosecutrix say: "I am going to tell mamma." An objection was made to the question upon the general ground, and that it was hearsay, and particularly that no foundation had been laid, in that it did not appear that the remark was made to the defendant, or that he was present at the time. Of course, the theory of the prosecution was that the witness heard the remark that was made by the prosecutrix at the time of the alleged assault, and that the testimony as to such declaration was admissible as evidence of the res gestæ. People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 51, 95 Am. Dec. 49. The rule is familiar, and would undoubtedly apply if the identification of the statement was sufficient. This seems to be the gravest question in the case. The witness heard a man's voice, but she did not recognize it as that of the defendant, since she was not familiar with his voice, nor did she see him on that occasion. But it was not required that the whole question of identification should be established by the testimony of this witness. It appears from the testimony of the prosecutrix that she and the defendant were in the hall at or about that time, and that he was the only man with whom she conversed. The jury were entirely justified, from all the circumstances in the case, in concluding that said statement was a part of the conversation with defendant as related by the prosecutrix, and, hence, we think, the court committed no error in admitting the testimony. At any rate it cannot be said that the verdict was influenced at all by said testimony. The jury must have reached their conclusion from a consideration of the testimony of the prosecutrix, and this, as we have seen, is sufficient to establish the crime. No other point demands attention.

The learned counsel for appellant have presented an able and plausible argument in favor of their client, but after a careful reading of the record, we think it must be said that to reverse the case would be to exceed the limits prescribed for the exercise of power and authority by a reviewing court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

48 Cal. App. 70

BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO. v. ARMSTRONG et al. (Civ. 3414.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 4, 1920.)

Municipal corporations ⇐519(6)—Lien under last of successive improvement proceedings paramount.

As between special taxes under successive street improvement proceedings, the lien of the special taxes under the last proceeding prevails.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by the Barber Asphalt Paving Company against Edith R. Armstrong and others. Judgment for defendant and cross-complainant Chester A. Bell, and plaintiff, also a cross-defendant, appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, and Chas. A. Gray, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Richard J. O. Culver, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action against a number of defendants, seeking to quiet its title to certain real property situated in the city of Manhattan Beach. The defendant Chester A. Bell filed a cross-complaint, seeking a like decree, and judgment was entered in his favor. The plaintiff appeals.

The question presented for determination is one arising between plaintiff and cross-defendant Barber Asphalt Paving Company and the defendant and cross-complainant Chester A. Bell. There is no dispute between them as to the facts; the controversy being purely one of law. Each claims title to the property in question by a deed from the treasurer of Manhattan Beach, issued pursuant to a sale after delinquency on a street improvement bond.

The board of trustees of the city of Manhattan Beach initiated certain proceedings for the grading and paving of Highland avenue, under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended). Jurisdiction was duly acquired and the work was ordered. The contract for the work was entered into between the superintendent of streets of Manhattan Beach and the plaintiff, February 5, 1914. The assessment for the work was recorded October 6, 1914. On December 8th following a bond was duly issued against the lot, under the Bond Act of February 27, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 33). No payments of either principal or interest being made on the bond, the lot was sold by the city treasurer on the demand of plaintiff on the 24th day of March, 1916. The certificate of sale was issued, and in due time deeds followed, vesting the title to the lot in plaintiff.

The proceedings, under which the defendant Bell claims, provided for the construction of a sidewalk on Highland avenue, and were also had under the Vrooman Act. They were subsequent in each respective step to those for the paving of Highland avenue, which resulted in the bond sale, by which plaintiff claims. The assessment for the work was recorded December 8, 1914, and the bond was issued January 8, 1915. The city treasurer sold the lot after delinquency in payment, on defendant Bell's demand, April 22, 1916, certificate of sale was issued, and the deed followed in due time.

The sole question for consideration is one of priority between two claimants, each resting his title in a street improvement proceeding. When the appeal in this case was instituted the question was a novel one. Since then, however, the precise point has been passed upon, and decided by the Supreme Court, in Woodill & Hulse Electric Company v. Young, 182 Pac. 422, 5 A. L. R. 1296, in which a rehearing was subsequently denied by the entire court. The question may therefore be deemed settled.

After a thorough examination of the matter, the Supreme Court, in that case, held that there is no such essential or inherent difference in those special taxes, arising under street improvement proceedings, as to deprive their lien of the benefit of a rule accorded to the lien of general taxes. In both instances the taxing power operates in rem, on the property itself, without regard to different or conflicting interests of ownership, and the universal and general rule is that in proceedings to enforce the payment of taxes, the last tax levied, and sought to be enforced, is superior and paramount to the lien of all other taxes, claims or title. Applying this rule, the court held that the last lien in point of time, under street improvement proceedings, must prevail.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; WELCH, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 438

ALEXANDER v. PANAMA MACARONI CO.

(Civ. 3308.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. July 6, 1920.)

1. Principal and agent ⟸23(5)—Evidence held to prove that offer to make brokerage contract had never been accepted.

In an action for breach of contract making plaintiff exclusive selling agent for defendant's goods for specified period, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant's proposal was never accepted.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Finding supported by evidence controlling.

Trial court's finding, supported by the evidence, is controlling.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by William B. Alexander against the Panama Macaroni Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Foster and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rupert B. Turnbull, W. G. Van Pelt, and B. A. Weyl, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This action was brought to recover damages for breach of contract. Judgment was for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

The basis of the appellant's action is a letter dated April 9, 1915, addressed to Alexander-Callen & Co., and signed by respondent, which appellant contends constituted a contract whereby the firm of Alexander-Callen & Co., a copartnership, of which appellant was a member, was made the exclusive selling agent for respondent's goods for a period of 10 years. Said letter reads as follows:

"We hereby agree to make you our exclusive selling agents for ten years beginning today and expiring April 9th, 1925. We will pay you a commission of fifteen cents per case (case contains 24 packages), when goods are introduced and the price of flour is normal. Said commission to be paid at end of each calendar month. We reserve the right to refuse business where customers' ratings do not justify credit. In consideration of the above commissions, you are to show an increase in our sales each consecutive year, unless impossible, such as panic, etc., causing business to decrease generally. We reserve the right to make the selling prices. The idea of this agreement is to work together in good faith, in building up a good business for the factory. We are to be consulted on all matters such as the territories you are to sell in, and how the goods are to be sold."

Respondent denies that said letter constituted the contract between the parties, and claims that it was intended to be, and in fact was, a mere offer which was never accepted by appellant and was by the respondent, on December 2, 1915, withdrawn, and that the only contract ever existing between the parties was an oral one, whereby an agency was continued from month to month, and that on February 9, 1916, said oral agreement was terminated. Respondent also relies upon two other defenses, the first of which is that appellant, at the time said letter was written, was a member of a copartnership, which was, subsequent to the date of the letter and prior to the alleged breach, dissolved by the retirement of one of the members of the firm, which fact, respondent contends, terminated any contract of agency which may then have existed. The other defense is that the creation of the agency as contemplated by said letter was made dependent upon the price of flour being "normal," and respondent claims that at no time since the 9th day of April, 1915, has the price of flour been or is it now normal.

The court found for respondent on all the issues, and is would seem that it is not necessary for us to extend our discussion beyond the defense first mentioned, for the reason that the question of whether or not the parties in fact operated under said offer as contained in said letter of April 9, 1915, as contended by appellant, or whether said offer was afterwards withdrawn and the parties operated under an oral agreement from month to month, as contended by respondent, was purely a question of fact for the trial court, and upon which question the record shows there is a substantial conflict. In support of the conclusions reached by the trial court the evidence shows that at no time during the business relation between the parties did said copartnership sell the goods of respondent pursuant to the terms of the letter of April 9, 1915. Previous to that date respondent paid commissions of 6 and 8 per cent. on sales. After the letter of April 9, 1915, they paid a commmission of only 5 per cent. In said letter the commissions were fixed in the sum of 15 cents per box. On December 2, 1915, respondent wrote to said Alexander-Callen & Co. as follows:

"You have been serving us in the distribution of our goods on a basis of 5% of the sales. At the present time there is no account unpaid between us, other than the current month. On April 9th, 1915, we submitted to you a written offer for you to handle our products on a commission basis of 15c per case (case containing 24 packages). This offer was conditional upon the price of flour being normal, and at no time since April 9th has flour been normal, and the prospects are at the present time that, due to the war troubles in Europe, it will not again reach a normal level for at least twelve to eighteen months. This offer has never been accepted by you, and we hereby withdraw the offer, for the reason that it has not been accepted; for the reason that flour has not been normal, and that there is no immediate prospect of its reaching a normal level; and for the further reason that there has been, since the date of April 9th, a change in the personnel of your company. We hereby withdraw our offer of April 9, 1915."

Notwithstanding that, said copartnership in reply to said letter stated that the terms of said letter were not agreed to, it nevertheless continued to sell the product of respondent under an arrangement different from that stated in said letter of April 9, 1915, until February 9, 1916, at which time respondent informed said copartnership that it would no longer fill any orders received from said copartnership, and that it intended to solicit the trade itself, which it afterwards did.

[1, 2] According to the testimony of William F. Schiffer, who was the president of the respondent company at the time these transactions took place, the said copartnership did not operate under the terms of said letter of April 9, 1915. The price of flour was a matter which seemed to have made it impossible to adopt any definite arrangement for the sale of the goods, and pending such uncertain and unsettled conditions the parties operated under the tentative agreement from month to month, and received a commission of 5 per cent. on their sales. During that period conversations were had between the parties, wherein appellant protested against the low commissions of 5 per cent. and as a result an adjustment was effected whereby respondent contributed toward the payment of the salaries of two members of said copartnership to the extent of paying one of them $25 per week and the other $15 per week for the months of May, June, and July, 1915, besides defraying certain traveling expenses of the members of the firm while selling respondent's goods. This and like testimony shown by the record was sufficient to support the trial court in finding that the proposal contained in the letter of April 9, 1915, was never accepted, and that it was consequently inoperative. Therefore under the established rule the conclusions reached by the trial court are controlling.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 175

McDUFF v. McDUFF. (Civ. 3311.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 14, 1920.)

1. Husband and wife ⟸257, 264—Profits from real estate bought by husband prior to marriage not community where resulting from increase in real estate values.

In an action by husband to quiet title to land purchased with the proceeds of property he had bought before marriage, evidence held to show that the profits on the first transaction were in no sense due to any improvements made through the activities or capacity of spouses, but resulted from the natural enhancement of real estate values, since such profits were not community, and the land was the husband's separate property.

2. Husband and wife ⟸257—Method of computing husband's value of husband's interest in business.

The proper method of determining the value of husband's interest in a business in which he was engaged at the time of his marriage is to allow the usual interest to the husband on the amount invested on the basis of a long-time investment well secured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action to quiet title by William Gilbert McDuff against Sarah Frances McDuff. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 187 Pac. 37.

Nathan Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Percy Hight, of Long Beach, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff against his wife to quiet title to certain real property situate in the city of Long Beach, in which the defendant claims a community interest. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

In the year 1881, four years prior to the marriage of the parties, plaintiff purchased a farm in Kansas for $5,000, paying $2,500 in cash and trading an interest in other property valued at $2,500. The $2,500 in cash was borrowed by plaintiff, and plaintiff gave a mortgage covering the farm to secure its payment. In the year 1913 plaintiff sold the Kansas farm for $11,500, and, after paying off the mortgage, which then amounted to $3,500, received a net balance of $8,000 in cash. Of that sum he invested $4,000 in the property in controversy here, upon which he borrowed $8,500, and erected four houses thereon. Plaintiff is a carpenter and contractor by trade, and contributed some of his time to the construction of the houses.

Appellant contends that part of the profits derived from the sale of the Kansas farm, and with which the purchase of the Long Beach property was made, were the result of the activity, ability, and capacity of plaintiff and defendant, and are therefore community property. The findings and judgment of the lower court are in effect a holding to the contrary, and the only question on this appeal is whether or not there is sufficient evidence to sustain such findings and judgment.

At the time respondent acquired the Kansas farm it was fenced, improved with a dwelling and other structures, a small portion of it was planted to fruit trees and vines, and some of it was covered with a growth of timber. After plaintiff and defendant were married and moved onto the property, no permanent improvements of a substantial character were made. During their occupancy of the property 38 acres were planted to orchard, the cost of the trees being met by increasing the mortgage, but the orchard was an entire failure on account of being destroyed by "borers." The house was destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt with the money received from the insurance, together with $300 more, which plaintiff borrowed from his father. Other farm outbuildings were constructed, but the cost thereof did not exceed $200. They were built with rock obtained on the farm and with lumber cut on the premises by a mill on shares.

[1] It is quite clear from the evidence stated that the activity of the parties added nothing to the value of the property. It is true that from the time plaintiff and defendant moved onto the farm in 1885 until they vacated it in 1905, they worked thereon as farmers usually do, but the proceeds were used, not to improve the property, but to pay the living expenses of the family and the taxes and interest, and at times there was scarcely enough produced by the farm to meet the ordinary expenses, plaintiff being obliged to engage in outside enterprises, the proceeds from which he devoted to the support of his family. After plaintiff and defendant vacated the farm in 1905 it was leased to various tenants for a rental of $500 a year, which was sufficient to pay the interest and taxes without drawing upon the personal earnings of plaintiff or defendant. Upon a full examination of the record it is obvious that the increase in the value of the farm from the time of the purchase in 1881 to the time of the sale in 1913 was due alone to the natural enhancement of real estate values, and not to any improvements made thereon through the activity, ability, or capacity of plaintiff or defendant.

[2] It has been held that the proper method of determining the value of a husband's interest in a business in which he was engaged at the time of his marriage is to allow the usual interest to the husband on the amount invested on the basis of a long investment, well secured. Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Estate of Gold, 170 Cal. 621, 151 Pac. 12. Measuring the instant case by that rule, the allowance of a moderate rate of interest on the sum of $2,500, which represented the net value of the farm at the time of its purchase, for a period of 28 years, would bring the entire investment up to as much as, if not more, than plaintiff received net for the property in 1913, and by such computation no allowance is made for the natural enhancement in the value of the property.

We are of the opinion that there is ample evidence to support the conclusions of the lower court, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 204

McKUNE v. McKUNE. (Civ. 3324.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 16, 1920.)

1. Venue ⟹67—Affidavit of residence held to state fact, not conclusion.

An affidavit in support of defendant's motion for change of venue that defendant was a bona fide resident of another county, where she lived with her child and supported herself, states a probative fact, not a mere conclusion, and is sufficient if uncontradicted.

2. Venue ⟹68—Affidavit denying change of residence held a conclusion.

Where the affidavits in opposition to defendant's motion for change of venue of an action for divorce showed that before the commencement of the suit defendant had left the matrimonial residence, and had gone to another county, where she still remained, a denial in the affidavit that defendant resided in the other county merely stated a legal conclusion.

3. Venue ⟹68—Evidence held to establish change of residence by defendant.

Evidence on a motion for change of venue of a divorce action, which showed that defendant had left her husband's home and had gone to another county, with part of her belongings, five days before the commencement of the action, held sufficient to show residence in the other county, though she had left some of the belongings of herself and infant daughter at her former residence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John T. Nourse, Judge.

Action for divorce by Walter T. McKune against Anita McKune. Defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rohe, Jeffers & Devin, of Los Angeles, and John O'Gara, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel T. Bush and William Sea, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of place of trial from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles. The action is one for divorce, and was commenced on March 7, 1918. Summons was served on March 14, 1918. The motion for change of place of trial was heard and determined upon the affidavits of the parties.

[1] In defendant's affidavit it is stated:

"That at the time of the commencement of this action, and from since the 2d day of March, 1918, and at this time she is a bona fide resident of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, where she now lives with her infant child, and is supporting herself and child by her own efforts and with the aid of her friends, and without any aid or support from her husband, the plaintiff."

There can be little doubt that the above statement is one of a probative fact, and was sufficient of itself, if uncontradicted, to justify the granting of her motion. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 16 Cal. App. 103, 116 Pac. 692. In the case last cited the court had under consideration a similar affidavit, and it was held that, although the allegation may in a sense involve a legal conclusion, nevertheless, on a motion of this character, in the case of the defendant's affidavit, wherein, without qualification, he states his residence to be at a certain place, without giving other facts to support the statement, such allegation should be construed to be and treated as the statement of a probative fact. It follows that, unless the statements of fact in plaintiff's affidavits are sufficient to raise a conflict, the motion of defendant should have been granted.

[2] Plaintiff filed two affidavits. In the second one he specifically denied the statement of the defendant above quoted, and, in addition, set forth facts relating to the defendant's separation from him and her subsequent departure for Los Angeles, in the following manner:

"That on the 27th day of February, 1918, said defendant remained that night in a separate room in the Ford Apartments, where plaintiff and defendant resided, and that on the 28th day of February, 1918, said defendant stayed at the Marshall Hotel, in the said city and county of San Francisco; that at the time said defendant left the apartment occupied by said plaintiff and defendant on the 27th day of February, 1918, said defendant did not remove all her belongings or clothing or wearing apparel, or the clothing or wearing apparel of the child of said plaintiff and defendant, from said Ford Apartments, but left part of said belongings and said clothing and wearing apparel in the apartment occupied by said plaintiff and said defendant, and part in the basement of said Ford Apartments, where said plaintiff and defendant resided, for a long period of time after said defendant left the apartment of said plaintiff and defendant, and during the time up to or about the 2d day of April, 1918, while said defendant was staying, as plaintiff is informed, in the county of Los Angeles."

In the first affidavit of plaintiff it is, among other things, stated that defendant departed for the county of Los Angeles "on or about the 2d day of March, 1918, and only five days before this action was commenced," and that "until the 2d day of March, 1918, Anita McKune, the defendant above named, resided with the plaintiff in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and that said plaintiff and defendant for two years prior to the commencement of this action continuously resided in the city and county of San Francisco." It will thus be seen that the facts are undisputed that the defendant left the apartments of plaintiff on February 27, 1918, with her child, taking part of her belongings with her, and on March 2, 1918, five days prior to the commencement of this action, departed for the county of Los Angeles, where she thereafter continued to reside, and was residing at the time she made her affidavit of residence on April 2, 1918.

In this state of the record we are of the opinion that the defendant's motion should have been granted. It is true that plaintiff specifically denied the statement of defendant that she was a resident of the county of Los Angeles, but such denial amounts to no more than plaintiff's conclusion, which was based upon and must be considered in connection with the other matters stated in his affidavit, which show without conflict that five days prior to the commencement of the action defendant departed for Los Angeles, and that she was actually living there at the time of the commencement of the action and at the time of the making of her affidavit in support of her demand for a change of place of trial.

[3] Respondent contends, however, that defendant's intention to return to San Francisco was shown by the fact that she did not remove all of her belongings from the apartments of plaintiff when she separated from him on February 27, 1918, but only a portion of them, and because she stored the belongings which she had removed in the basement of the apartment house in which plaintiff and defendant had previously lived. We do not believe that the acts of defendant can be so interpreted. It appears that defendant left plaintiff on February 27, 1918, on account of disagreements between them, and within a few days thereafter departed with her child for Los Angeles. The short period of time which elapsed between her departure for Los Angeles and the filing of this motion was scarcely sufficient within which to remove all of her belongings had she been disposed to do so, and the fact that she did not do so cannot be accepted as indicating her intention to return to San Francisco in the face of her sworn declaration that from and after March 2, 1918, she was a bona fide resident of Los Angeles county. The establishment of her residence depended entirely upon her intention, and she knew her intention better than any other person. As was stated in O'Brien v. O'Brien, supra:

"The defendant himself knows better than any other person whether he has established a legal residence in a particular city or county. He knows, or must be assumed to know, what his intention is with respect to becoming or not becoming a resident, in the legal sense, of a place to which he 'moves.'"

Marston v. Watson, 20 Cal. App. 465, 129 Pac. 611, cited by respondent, does not help him. In that case it was held that the affidavit of the defendant, wherein she stated that she was a resident of another county, was a mere conclusion, and should be disregarded, in view of the counter affidavits, showing clearly that at the very time the defendant claimed that she was a resident of such other county she was then, and for some time prior thereto had been, actually living in the county in which the action was brought, and that therefore the statement of the defendant as to her residence was not and could not be true. In the instant case it is undisputed that the defendant, five days prior to the commencement of this action, departed for Los Angeles, where she subsequently actually lived, and on April 2, 1918, the date on which she made her affidavit, was actually living in that county. These facts, coupled with her positive statement that she was "a bona fide resident" of that place during that time, entitled her to a change of place of trial.

None of the other matters set forth in the affidavits are material. They relate to contributions made by plaintiff to the defendant's support while she was separated from him, and to the matter of the convenience of witnesses.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 88

SUTTORI v. PECKHAM et al. (Civ. 3152.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 7, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 2, 1920.)

1. Fish ⊂⊃17—Finding of catching within three miles of shore warranted.

Evidence held to authorize a finding that white sea bass caught with a net, prohibited by Pen. Code, § 636, had been caught within three miles of the shore of Santa Catalina Island, so to make the fishing illegal, giving no title or right of possession to the fish.

2. Fish ⊂⊃17—Catching of fish illegally gives no ownership.

One's catching of fish in certain waters with a net, being prohibited by law and a criminal act, gives him no ownership or right to possession of the fish.

3. Fish ⊂⊃8—State may regulate taking.

The state may regulate the taking of fish in its waters, and make the taking thereof with a net an offense.

4. Trover and conversion ⊂⊃16—Ownership or right of possession necessary for action.

For one to maintain action for conversion he must at the time of the alleged conversion have had the ownership or right of possession of the articles.

5. States ⊂⊃12(3)—Boundaries, and consequent jurisdiction to regulate fishing, embrace three-mile limit around Santa Catalina Island.

The boundaries of California, defined by its first Constitution as extending three miles into the Pacific, "also all the islands * * * along and adjacent to the Pacific Coast," embrace the waters around and within three miles from the shore of Santa Catalina, one of such islands, by St. 1915, p. 589, included in fish and game district No. 20, so that its jurisdiction, under Pol. Code, § 33, coextensive with its boundaries, authorizes Pen. Code, § 634½, and section 636, subd. 7, making it a misdemeanor to fish with a net therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Nick Suttori against J. J. Peckham and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. W. Pendleton and B. M. Marble, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and J. Allen Davis, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for alleged conversion by the defendant of five tons of fish, being the property of the plaintiff. Judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The court found that at the time of the alleged conversion the plaintiff was not the owner of nor was he entitled to the possession of the fish mentioned in the complaint, and that it was not true that at said time, and while the plaintiff was the owner of and entitled to the immediate possession of the said fish, the defendants wrongfully took and carried away said personal property and converted the same to their own use. Appellant contends that these findings are not sustained by the evidence.

All of the fish included in this controversy were white sea bass. According to the testimony produced by the plaintiff, he was the master of a boat called the Jupiter, and on the 25th day of June, 1917, with his crew, he was fishing in that boat at Santa Barbara Island. Off the coast of that island, according to his testimony, he caught four tons of sea bass. Later in the day, and while four miles distant from Santa Catalina Island, he cast his net and caught in it about three tons of sea bass. The run of the tide and the pull of the loaded net drifted the boat to a point which was a mile or less from the shore of the island. At this place the defendant Staples, who was a deputy sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, overhauled the boat, arrested the men, and took the whole outfit to Avalon, Catalina Island, being in the township where the defendant Peckham was justice of the peace. Here the fish were landed. A complaint was filed before the justice, sitting as a magistrate, charging the plaintiff and members of his crew with the crime of misdemeanor, committed by violation of the provisions of section 636 of the Penal Code. The defendants were held to answer, and an information was afterwards filed against them in the superior court by the district attorney, which information was afterwards dismissed by the court. After taking possession of the fish, the defendant Staples telegraphed to the fish and game commissioner at Los Angeles, stating what he had done, and asking what disposition he should make of the fish. The commissioner declined to act officially in the matter, as Staples was not a deputy of the commissioner; but the commissioner conferred with the sheriff, and telegraphed Staples that the sheriff "advised to hold about 100 pounds fish as evidence and return the rest to fisherman." On the same day, June 26th, Peckham, purporting to act as justice of the peace, made an order entitled in the cause pending before him, in which he recited that the fish were liable to spoil unless disposed of, and ordered Staples to ship and deliver the fish to the Los Angeles Examiner, a newspaper in the city of Los Angeles, for free distribution by said newspaper to the poor of said city. Staples then sent to the Los Angeles Examiner the said fish, or so much thereof as was in a condition fit for shipment.

The defendant Staples testified that he only took the fish which he knew were alive when he made the arrest; that they were all alive when he went aboard the boat; that the fish would not live more than 15 minutes after being taken out of the net. James J. Bates, a witness for the defendants, by occupation a fisherman, testified that he had had extensive experience in fishing in the waters of the Pacific Ocean. Concerning the habits of the white sea bass, he stated:

That they are migratory fish. "Ordinarily I would not say that you could find these white bass upon the surface out from the shore three or four miles. * * * I don't think I have ordinarily seen these out at sea. I would not see them more than three miles away from shore ordinarily."

The defendant Staples, testifying concerning the habits of white sea bass, said:

"White sea bass are around the island all summer. I have never seen a school of white sea bass on the surface away from shore."

[1-4] From the evidence thus produced, the court was justified in believing that all of the fish in question had been taken by the plaintiff with a net from the waters of the Pacific Ocean within three miles from the shore of Santa Catalina Island. This fact was sufficient to justify the court in finding that the plaintiff was not the owner nor entitled to the possession of the fish, if the taking of the fish with a net and within three miles of that island was prohibited by law and was a criminal act.

"The fish within our waters constitute the most important constituent of that species of property commonly designated as wild game, the general right and ownership of which is in the people of the state (Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 483, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129), as in England it was in the king; and the right and power to protect and preserve such property for the common use and benefit is one of the recognized prerogatives of the sovereign, coming to us from the common law, and preserved and expressly provided for by the statutes of this and every other state of the Union." People v. Truckee Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 Pac. 374, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183.

Laws regulating the taking of wild game and fish and imposing penalties for the violation of such laws are fully within the legislative power of the state and do not destroy any right of property. Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 69 Pac. 261, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177. It should need no citation of authorities to establish the proposition that no person can acquire title or right of possession to property of the state by the act of taking possession thereof illegally. But the plaintiff cannot maintain this action if at the time of the alleged conversion he had neither ownership nor right of possession in the goods alleged to have been converted. Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 134, 70 Pac. 1080. This brings us to a consideration of the statutes regulating the taking of fish.

[5] The act of taking fish other than with hook and line "within three miles of shore line of Santa Catalina island" is a misdemeanor, according to the provisions of section 634½ of the Penal Code. The act of taking fish with a net within the limits of fish and game district No. 20 is made a misdemeanor by the terms of section 636, subdivision 7, of the Penal Code. In section 21 of the act to divide the state of California into fish and game districts (Stats. 1915, p. 589), it is provided that "fish and game district 20 shall consist of and include the island of Santa Catalina, with the state waters surrounding said island." If the state waters surrounding that island extend three miles from the shore of the island, then the territorial limits described in section 634½ of the Penal Code are identical with district 20.

Appellant, while conceding that the sovereignty of the United States "extends one marine league at sea in all directions from the shore of the island in question," contends that the state of California has no jurisdiction over any of the waters surrounding any of the islands along this coast below low tidewater mark. The boundaries of the state of California, as declared in its first Constitution (Const. 1849, art. 12) and recognized by the act of Congress admitting the state into the Union (Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850, c. 50, 9 Stat. 452), are defined as extending "three English miles" into the Pacific Ocean, "also all the islands, harbors, and bays along and adjacent to the Pacific coast." The sovereignty and jurisdiction of this state extend "to all places within its boundaries as established by the Constitution," subject only to the terms of any cession or law under which any part of such places has been or may be ceded to, purchased, or condemned by the United States. Pol. Code, § 33.

Under these conditions it has been held that a liability created by a California statute for the act of one person causing the death of another was enforceable where the tortious act was committed on a ship at sea 2 miles from the shore of the mainland. The court held that "the jurisdiction of the state of California over the sea is that of an independent nation," and cited authorities to the effect that such jurisdiction extends into the sea to the distance of a marine league. Humboldt Lumber Manufacturers' Ass'n v. Christopherson, 73 Fed. 239, 19 C. C. A. 481, 46 L. R. A. 264.

There appears to have been no decision made hitherto, either sustaining or overruling the contention here made by appellant, viz. that jurisdiction over the waters surrounding any of the islands along the California coast below tidewater mark was never conferred upon the state of California. It is our opinion that the contention so made by appellant is without merit. It has been said that the term "coasts" includes "the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water, although these islands are not of sufficient firmness to be inhabited or fortified." Wheaton's International Law, (8th Ed.) § 178. It is not denied that Santa Catalina Island is within the state of California and is a part of the county of Los Angeles. Every reason which in the nature of things justifies the state in extending its jurisdiction over the subject of fishing rights to the distance of 3 miles from the shore of the mainland equally applies to a like distance from the shore of any island which is a part of the state.

Appellant suggests that subdivision 7 of section 636 of the Penal Code, in so far as it applies to district 20, is unconstitutional and void, on the authority of Ex parte Bailey, 155 Cal. 472. 101 Pac. 441, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534, 132 Am. St. Rep. 95. That decision declared void a municipal ordinance which prohibited the use of fish nets and seines at places less than 1000 feet from any wharf, dock, or pier located in said town. The court held that the evident object of the ordinance was to protect fishing with hook and line from the wharves of the town. For that reason it was decided that the ordinance was an attempted interference with the exclusive right of the people of the state in the ownership of wild game and fish and of the state to the control thereof. The case does not at all sustain appellant's position.

The conclusions above stated render it unnecessary to discuss other grounds of appeal presented by appellant and discussed in the briefs.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

48 Cal. App. 178

GRISWOLD v. FRAME. (Civ. 2814.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 15, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators ⟹52—Evidence held to warrant inference of want of consideration for note.

Evidence that plaintiff's intestate, who was payee of the note sued on, had stated when the note was given that the money delivered to the maker was due him from her as part of their mother's estate, and that the note was taken only to protect her records, held sufficient to sustain an inference that there was no consideration for the note.

2. Evidence ⟹432, 469—Parol evidence admissible to show want of consideration or satisfaction of note.

While no evidence is admissible to prove that a plain and unambiguous written contract was intended to impose a greater or less obligation than its terms import, such evidence is always admissible to show want of consideration or payment or other satisfaction of a promissory note.

3. Evidence ⟹269(2)—Declarations of plaintiff's intestate, showing want of consideration for note given her, are competent.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2, making competent the act, declaration, or omission of a party, declarations of plaintiff's intestate at the time the note sued on was given to her which showed want of consideration for the note are competent.

4. Evidence ⟹220(1)—Declarations of grantor as to intention made in presence of intestate, are competent.

In an action on a note given plaintiff's intestate by her brother, where the defense was want of consideration because the money represented thereby was due maker of the note from the intestate as part of their mother's estate, declarations by the mother, since deceased, as to her intention in granting property to intestate, made in the presence of intestate, are admissible against plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 3, making competent an act or declaration of another in the presence and with the observation of a party and his conduct in relation thereto.

5. Executors and administrators ⟹52—Proof that money represented by note was intended as discharge of obligation or gift shows want of consideration.

Evidence that the money given defendant by plaintiff's intestate, for which he executed the note sued on, was given by the intestate to discharge a moral obligation to distribute proceeds of their mother's estate, or was intended as a gift to defendant, is sufficient to show want of consideration for the note, though it does not establish a legal obligation by plaintiff's intestate to pay the money to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Joseph J. Griswold, as administrator of the estate of Margaret E. Griswold, deceased, against J. M. Frame. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stephen G. Long, of Long Beach, and E. I. Feemster and Middlecoff & Feemster, all of Visalia, for appellant.

Marley Fisher, of Lindsay, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia (D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, of counsel), for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought to recover on a promissory note. Defendant's defense of want of consideration was sustained by the trial judge, and the appeal is taken from the judgment which was entered in his favor.

Margaret E. Griswold was the sister of the defendant. Her first husband, Lumereau, died in the year 1909, and the promissory note in question was made on March 6, 1911, which was prior to the time that the sister married Griswold, who appears here as the administrator of her estate. The promissory note sued upon was among the effects of plaintiff's intestate. In establishing his defense of want of consideration for the making of the note, the defendant, in substance, testified: That prior to the death of his and Mrs. Griswold's mother he had resided in Goldfield. That at the last illness of his mother, who resided with Mrs. Griswold (then Mrs. Lumereau), he was called home to Lindsay, Cal. That just before the death of his mother his sister urged him to buy an interest in a business at Lindsay, and that he replied that it would require $1,000 more than he then had, and that she (Mrs. Lumereau) said:

"'I will get you the $1,000, if you will go in with him,' * * * and I said, 'Well, I have got to go back to Goldfield, and while I am back there I will think it over and write what I will do,' and while I was back to Goldfield I was thinking over that matter, and got the second call that mother was worse, and then I came back. Q. And about when was it that she got the money and let you have it? A. It was some time in March, because I went in with him, I think, on the 1st of April of that year."

He further testified that the money was obtained by Mrs. Lumereau from the First National Bank; that he was present when the arrangements were made for it; that his sister, Mrs. Lumereau, said that she would get the $1,000 and let him have it, because it was coming to him from his mother's estate; that the note in suit was given by him at his sister's request; that "she told me that she would not take a note at all if she didn't have to keep her accounts straight, that she wouldn't exact the note at all, but she had things to attend to, that she had to keep straight, and consequently she thought it best to take a note; she said she would destroy it, or do away with it, when things were straightened up." Witness Reed, cashier of the bank at which Mrs. Lumereau obtained the $1,000 which she delivered to defendant, testified that Mrs. Lumereau obtained the money upon her own note from the bank as a loan; that he asked her what she was going to do with the $1,000 that she wanted to borrow, and she said:

"My brother is figuring on going into business with Mr. Frame—or Mr. Forster, and I want $1,000 to help him pay for an interest, and this, that is the money that I owe him, coming from his mother's estate."

This was all of the testimony covering the immediate transaction touching the giving of the note by Frame to Mrs. Lumereau. It was further shown in evidence that the mother of defendant and Mrs. Lumereau had at one time been possessed of a quarter section of land, one half of which she sold, the remaining half of which she conveyed to Mr. and Mrs. Lumereau by grant deed which instrument of conveyance indicated an intent that the grantees were to take the same as joint tenants with right of survivorship. Another witness, Sims, testified that after Lumereau's death she had a conversation with defendant's mother, in which the defendant's mother stated, in substance, that she had deeded the property to Mr. Lumereau, "and Mr. Lumereau had to take care of her as long as she lived; * * * she told me that herself, that she had deeded them 80 acres to Mr. and Mrs. Lumereau, to take care of her as long as she lived." Another witness, Waltenbaugh, testified that she occupied a close relation of friendship and as a business confidant with defendant's mother and Mrs. Lumereau, and that defendant's mother and Mrs. Lumereau once sent for her after Lumereau's death, and that the mother, in the presence of Mrs. Lumereau, stated that—"She had given Mr. Lumereau a deed to that place, in case she should become a burden in her old age he would record that deed after her death, but if he died first, that deed was to be divided among her four children, provided Jerry ever returned, and, if not, between the three. But if she died first, it was their property, and when she went to sell it, she found he had recorded it without her knowledge or consent and without the knowledge of Mrs. Lumereau."

It is the contention of appellant that all of this testimony given as to statements made by the sister of the defendant (plaintiff's intestate) and the mother of defendant, is hearsay and incompetent. Further, that by his defense and the evidence offered to sustain the same the defendant attempted to vary the terms of a written contract, which the law does not permit to be done.

[1] Leaving aside for the moment a consideration of those questions, and taking the testimony of the defendant in the view that it was competent, in connection also with the testimony of the cashier of the bank, it seems to furnish sufficient to warrant the inference that Mrs. Lumereau, when she delivered the $1,000 to defendant, delivered the money either as a gift to him or in discharge of an obligation which she assumed rested upon her in connection with the distribution of property obtained from her mother. To the statement of the facts as already narrated may be added the further one that plaintiff's intestate, during all of the years which elapsed subsequent to the making of the note, made no demand on the defendant for the payment of any interest.

[2] It is established law that where a written contract is plain and unambiguous in its material terms no evidence can be admitted to prove that it was intended to impose greater or less obligations than those terms import. In other words, no collateral agreement of a different kind may be imposed by parol upon a plainly worded contract. It is always permissible, however, to show the want of consideration for the making of a contract, or that the contract has been discharged by direct payment, accord, and satisfaction, or in any of the several manners by which parties may extinguish their contractual obligations. Cohen v. Goux, 48 Cal. 97, was a case where the defendant sought to show in his own behalf that a note was signed without consideration and as a mere accommodation to the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected that the note carried on its face a consideration and was the best evidence. The objection was sustained. The judgment was reversed, the Supreme Court saying:

"That the defendant was at liberty, as against the plaintiff here, to show want of consideration for the making of the note, and that such want of consideration, if shown, amounted to a full defense to the action, are propositions too plain to admit of discussion."

In Treadwell v. Himmelmann, 50 Cal. 10, the court said:

"The evidence offered by the defendant in support of the special defense set up in the answer was improperly excluded. It did not contradict or vary the written instrument declared upon. On the contrary, the offer was to prove an executed parol agreement, in the nature of an accord and satisfaction. There is no difference in principle between this case and Hapgood v. Swords (2 Bailey S. C. 305), which was an action on a promissory note; and the defense was that at the time of the execution of the note it was agreed by parol that if the defendant would procure a purchaser for certain land of the plaintiff at a specified price, the plaintiff would surrender the note; and the defendant procured the purchaser at the stipulated sum."

The judgment in that case was reversed. In Howard v. Stratton, 64 Cal. 487, 2 Pac. 263, the court briefly disposed of a similar contention by saying:

"The court erred in excluding evidence tending to prove that there was an agreement between Tyson and Stratton, by which the former agreed to let the latter have the rancho on which he lived in consideration of his giving Tyson a home and support during the residue of his life, and that the notes sued on in this action were given by Stratton to Tyson to secure the performance by Stratton of said agreement on his part, and that he had performed the same. The admission of such evidence would not violate the rule which forbids the introduction of parol evidence to contradict or vary a written contract."

See, also, Schultz v. Noble, 77 Cal. 80, 19 Pac. 182.

In Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 228, 78 Pac. 645, evidence as to declarations of a deceased husband was excluded where the wife was seeking to show that the interest of the husband in money deposited in bank had been transferred to her. The court there said:

"But the superior court erred in excluding evidence of the oral declarations of Moses Sprague at and about the time he signed the orders upon which his wife drew the deposits. It does not appear from the bill of exceptions what was the particular reason for these rulings, but in the brief of respondent they are defended upon the ground that the effect of the declarations would be to contradict or vary the terms of the written orders. * * * The question here is not governed by subdivision 4 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but by subdivision 2 of that section."

[3] This decision is very pertinent here as establishing the competency of the evidence as to the declarations of plaintiff's intestate. Subdivision 2 of section 1870, Code of Civil Procedure, referred to in the decision, provides that "the act, declaration, or omission of a party" is competent evidence against him.

[4] The statements of the mother of defendant, made in the presence of plaintiff's intestate, was competent evidence under subdivision 3 of the same section, which provides that testimony is competent of "an act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto." See, also, Rice et al. v. Howland, 147 Mass. 407, 18 N. E. 229; Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1 (16th Ed.) § 284. We have already called attention to the fact that one of the witnesses testified as to such declarations made by the mother with respect to the property that she had transferred to Mr. and Mrs. Lumereau. We do not concede that the testimony of the witness, Sims, as to the conversation with the mother of plaintiff's intestate and without the presence of Mrs. Lumereau, was competent; but that testimony was offered by appellant in rebuttal.

[5] If it were essential to the defense of the defendant to have shown that the Lumereaus were legally bound to account to him for the $1,000 represented by the promissory note as a share of his mother's estate, we would be compelled to say that the evidence was insufficient to establish that legal condition. This for the reason that the deed given by the mother of defendant to the Lumereaus expressed no limitation or condition upon the quality of title conveyed, and because the oral declarations made by said mother after the delivery of her deed and after the death of Lumereau would not be competent evidence to establish the fact claimed. We think, however, that the main question is not to be so resolved; that the question of the intent of plaintiff's intestate when she delivered the $1,000 to the defendant and took the note is to be ascertained. The evidence seems sufficient to show that defendant's sister assumed at least to be under a moral obligation to give this money to the defendant. If the moral obligation existed alone and the legal obligation was absent, then the transaction would result in a gift induced by the view of Mrs. Lumereau that she should provide her brother with the money. If a gift were consummated, then the consideration was that of a gift and there would be left no further consideration to support the promissory note, for the transaction in which it was given would already have been fully executed on both sides. We are satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings, and that the trial judge committed no prejudicial error in the rulings made during the course of the trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

48 Cal. App. 213

WILLIAMS v. STEARNS. (Civ. 2117.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 17, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll, evidence is presumed to support findings.

Where the appeal is on the judgment roll alone, it must be presumed that the findings were sufficiently supported by the evidence.

2. Appeal and error ⟸931(7)—Findings presumed to refer to oral contract so as not to show ratification of written lease.

On judgment roll, appeal from denial of damages for cancellation of a lease, where the court found that the lease was not executed by defendant, but also found that plaintiff entered into possession of the property described in the lease, and that defendant gave notice of termination of the lease contract of a certain date, it must be presumed in support of the judgment that the last finding related to the oral lease alleged in the answer, so that it did not establish a ratification of the written lease.

3. Landlord and tenant ⟸86(1)—Tenant held estopped by representations from demanding a longer term.

A tenant in possession, under a lease giving him the option to have an additional term, who represented to the landlord that he had no further use for the property, and would soon surrender possession, and knew that the landlord, relying on such representation, was negotiating a lease with another for the same property, is estopped to claim the right to a further lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Fred L. Williams against F. L. Stearns. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert L. Williams, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. H. Jamison, Frederick Gros, and C. E. McDowell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover as damages from defendant the difference between the agreed rental value of certain premises in the city of Los Angeles, belonging to defendant, under a so-called option agreement, and the reasonable rent of said premises for a period of two years. From a judgment that plaintiff take nothing by his action he prosecutes this appeal.

There is before us a record, prepared according to the alternative method of appeal, but appellant states that he refers to and relies only upon the following portions thereof: The amendment to complaint, the answer to amendment to complaint, the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the judgment. The appeal is therefore really upon the judgment roll alone.

The basis of the action is a certain "lease contract," dated Los Angeles, June 12, 1916, and addressed to plaintiff at San Francisco. It contains the following provisions:

"Mr. Fred L. Williams, party of the first part, and Stearns Gas Engine Works, party of the second part, hereby agree to the following contract as follows: Party of the second part agrees to lease to the party of the first part the present front office, a space near such office for exhibition purposes, and the machine shop situated and located on premises at 1003 N. Main St., Los Angeles, Cal., for the sum of eighty dollars per month payable as follows: One hundred dollars upon signing this contract, receipt for which is hereby given, sixty dollars on July 12, 1916; this being the date from which said lease shall start; these two payments form the payments for the first and the last month under this lease which is to run for a period of four months from July 12, 1916. All payments thereafter shall be eighty dollars a month in advance.

"The party of the first part shall have the option at any time before the expiration of this lease, to take over the entire lower floor; leasing the same for a period of from two to three years, at the rate of $150.00 a month payable in advance each month, except the last three months of said optional lease, payment for which sha'l be paid on the date of signing the optional lease. This option shall continue as long as this temporary lease."

Provision was then made for the privilege of using certain tools by Williams and the division of operating expenses between the parties, and the instrument proceeded:

"It is understood that either party to this lease may bring same to a close upon one month's notice in writing, and in the absence of such notice it is to be understood that the lease shall continue monthly. The above is to apply only after the four months period covered by this lease, but this lease to continue in the absence of notice monthly."

The instrument was signed:

"Stearns Gas Engine Works, by Francis A. Stearns, Party of First Part. By Fred L. Wiliams, Party of the Second Part."

It was alleged that Francis A. Stearns, who signed said instrument on behalf of the first party, was at the time "made the agent of defendant authorized in writing, subscribed by defendant, to make and sign said lease." It was then alleged that plaintiff entered into possession of said property and paid rent therefor, amounting to $1,163.29, to and including the month beginning with May 12, 1917; that, in reliance upon said contract, plaintiff also expended $150 in making certain improvements on the property; that, on or before May 17, 1917, "pursuant to the terms of said agreement plaintiff elected and orally notified defendant of his election to exercise the option stipulated and agreed to under said agreement to take over the entire floor of the premises described therein," which included the use of certain mentioned personal property, machinery, etc.; that on said date plaintiff notified defendant in writing of his said election, which writing was addressed to "Stearns Gas Engine Works and Francis A. Stearns, Esq.," and stated:

"You and each of you will please take notice that the undersigned, Fred L. Williams, party of the first part, in that certain agreement executed with the Stearns Gas Engine Works, as party of the second part, said agreement in writing being dated June 12, 1916, * * * hereby notifies you that said undersigned hereby exercises his option under the terms of said agreement [stating the terms thereof]. The undersigned does hereby offer to pay said last three months' rental, to wit, the sum of four hundred and fifty dollars, upon the execution of said new lease, together with the first months advance rental, and does hereby request that you execute said new lease with the undersigned at the expiration of the present lease, to wit, on June 12, 1917. * * * This notice confirms oral notice given you prior to receipt of notice of cancellation from you."

Signed by Fred L. Williams.

On the same day the following notice, on the letterhead of the defendant, was served upon plaintiff:

"Mr. Fred L. Williams, Los Angeles, Calif. Dear Sir: According to the terms of our contract of June 12th, we hereby give you notice of the termination of said lease contract. Very truly yours, Stearns Gas Engine Works, F. L. Stearns."

The refusal of defendant to accept said rental or to lease to plaintiff said premises is alleged, and it is then stated:

"That since said notice was served upon plaintiff and not before, defendant has informed plaintiff that said agreement to lease and option to lease was not valid and enforceable for two reasons, namely, that his son, Francis A. Stearns, who signed said agreement was at said time a minor, and, further, was not authorized in writing by defendant to sign said lease; that prior to said information plaintiff had no knowledge or information that said agreement was not, or that defendant claimed that it was not, enforceable and valid"; that had plaintiff been so informed he would not have entered into said lease or expended the money which he did, and that the representations made by defendant that Francis A. Stearns was duly authorized to execute said agreement were false, and made with intent to defraud plaintiff.

The answer specifically denied all the material allegations of the amendment to the complaint. Among such denials were the following: That defendant entered into or executed the written agreement set forth in the complaint and subscribed by Francis A. Stearns as the agent of the defendant; that said Francis A. Stearns was the agent of the defendant or authorized to execute said written agreement for or in behalf of the defendant; that the defendant represented to plaintiff at any time that said Francis A. Stearns was authorized by it to make or enter into said written agreement for or on its behalf; that the plaintiff entered into and took possession of the premises described in said purported written agreement under said agreement or in pursuance of the terms thereof, but alleged in effect that the plaintiff entered into the possession of said premises under an oral agreement between him and the defendant, made on the said 12th day of June, 1916. The answer then sets up the following affirmative defense:

"That on or about the month of January, 1917, plaintiff notified and represented to the defendant that plaintiff would not have any use for the said premises beyond a short time, to complete certain experiments then pending, and would shortly surrender the premises to the defendant, * * * and on the 21st day of February, 1917, the said plaintiff again notified and represented to defendant that plaintiff would shortly surrender the said premises and thereafter a contract for the use of said premises was entered into by this defendant with one B. C. Donnelly; * * * that thereafter and on or about the 5th day of April, 1917, plaintiff notified and represented to plaintiff that he would shortly surrender the said premises to defendant, and thereafter the defendant entered into a further contract with said Donnelly; * * * that throughout said negotiations and at the time of making the aforesaid contracts, plaintiff knew and was informed that the defendant believed and relied on the aforesaid notices and representations made by plaintiff to defendant, and that defendant but for such belief and reliance would not have entered into said negotiations and made the said contracts with said B. C. Donnelly of February 21st, 1917, and April 5th, 1917."

The court found that at the time of the execution of said "lease contract" Francis A. Stearns was not acting as an agent of the defendant, and was not authorized in writing to make said agreement; "that the defendant made no representations to plaintiff that said Francis A. Stearns was authorized to execute said lease, and that said instrument was executed by said Francis A. Stearns without the knowledge or consent of the defendant." It was also found that the plaintiff entered into the possession of the premises and property described in said "lease contract" on or about July 15, 1916, etc. It was then found that the cancellation notice of May 17, 1917, was served upon plaintiff before the latter served the defendant, on the same day, with the written demand for a lease; that plaintiff made no tender of rent for any period of time subsequent to June 12, 1917; "that plaintiff and his workmen ceased work at said premises on or about June 9, 1917, and notified and represented to defendant that he had abandoned said premises and intended to claim no rights therein under the aforesaid lease or otherwise." The court also found to be true the allegations in the answer as to plaintiff, notifying defendant that he would have no further use for the premises and as to the entering into of a contract with said Donnelly. It was further found generally that those allegations of the complaint as to which specific findings were not made are untrue, and that the allegations or denials of the answer as to which like findings were not made are true.

Four points are made by appellant for a reversal of the judgment, to wit: (1) That by reason of service by the defendant of the notice of May 17, 1917, referring to "our contract of June 12th," the defendant ratified the lease contract made by Francis A. Stearns; (2) that until that time and by such purported ratification, any statements made by the plaintiff to the defendant could not operate as an estoppel against plaintiff; (3) that plaintiff did not abandon his rights under the lease contract; (4) that if the acts of plaintiff were sufficient to estop him from demanding any rights as against the defendant under the Francis A. Stearns contract, then the alleged act of the defendant in ratifying said contract operates as an estoppel upon the defendant sufficient to prevent him from taking any advantage of any opportunity to establish an estoppel against the plaintiff, and the matter is therefore set at large.

[1] This being an appeal from the judgment, on the judgment roll alone, the presumption must be indulged that the findings were justified by and derive sufficient support from the evidence. The findings of fact, as made by the court, plainly speak for themselves, and are upon their face decisive of the case against the appellant.

[2] As above shown, the court found that the purported written contract of lease was not executed by Francis A. Stearns by the authority of the defendant, and that the latter made no representation to the plaintiff that said Francis A. Stearns was authorized to make any such contract for or in its behalf; and, while the court found that the plaintiff entered into the possession of the premises and property described in said contract of lease, it did not find, either specifically or otherwise, that the plaintiff entered into and took such possession under or by virtue of said contract or in pursuance of the terms thereof. It is true that the court did not specifically find that the plaintiff entered into the possession of said property under some other agreement of contract between the parties than the written agreement, but it is also true that the answer, in effect alleges that such possession was taken under an oral agreement entered into between the parties on the date of the execution of the purported written contract of lease, and that the court's general finding that all the denials and allegations of the answer were and are true necessarily embraces a finding that possession was taken by the plaintiff under said oral agreement; that is to say, such a finding is necessarily implied from the general finding referred to. It follows, therefore, that the written notice which the court found had been given to the plaintiff by the defendant of the termination of the "lease contract of June 12th" must be understood and construed to refer to the oral agreement, and not to the purported written contract. This view results from the familiar rule that findings must be so construed as to support the judgment if such a course may consistently and reasonably be adopted. "It is elementary," as the Supreme Court says in People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 198, 88 Pac. 899, 901, "that if findings of fact are reasonably susceptible of such a construction as will support a judgment, they must receive that construction rather than one that will not so support it." See, also, Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 242, subd. 6.

The consequence of the situation as to the findings, as above explained, is that the discussion in the brief of the appellant of the proposition that the defendant, by reason of the written notice given by it to the plaintiff of the termination of the lease, ratified the purported written lease, and is therefore estopped from asserting that said writing was executed without its authority, is beside the legal issues presented on this appeal. In other words, the point as to the asserted ratification by the defendant of the alleged written contract, and that the defendant is foreclosed the right by estoppel arising upon and from such ratification to deny for any reason the validity and binding force of said writing, is wholly without pertinency or force under the state of the findings, as we feel that we are required to view them.

[3] The court found, as has been shown, and so found presumptively from sufficient evidence, that the plaintiff, in the months of January and February, 1917, verbally notified the defendant that he would shortly have no further use of the premises, or any portion thereof, and that thereupon the defendant entered into negotiations with the said Donnelly for the leasing of the same to the latter; that the plaintiff was aware of these negotiations with Donnelly, and that the defendant, relying upon the notices so given to it by plaintiff that he intended within a short period of time to vacate and surrender said premises, did enter into contracts of lease with said Donnelly whereby the latter was to take immediate possession of all and every portion of said premises and the machinery and equipments belonging to the business conducted on said premises; that but for the fact that it relied upon said representations and notices by the plaintiff that he intended to quit and surrender to the defendant the said premises and property the latter would not have entered into the negotiations and contracts referred to with said Donnelly; that the plaintiff, after the defendant's transaction with Donnelly, having failed and refused to surrender said property as voluntarily promised by him, the defendant thereupon served upon him the notice of the termination of the lease, which, under the findings, involved a mere tenancy at will, or from month to month. Thus an estoppel arose against any right the plaintiff might otherwise have had to complain of the action of the defendant in entering into a contract with Donnelly whereby it leased the premises and property in question to the latter and in refusing, as a consequence, to make a further contract of lease of said premises and property to the plaintiff. In other words, the defendant, having in reliance upon the statements of the plaintiff that he would within a brief period of time surrender the premises, because he would have no further use therefor, entered into the contracts whereby it leased the premises and property in question to Donnelly, the plaintiff at all times having knowledge of the pendency and prosecution of the negotiations culminating in the said lease to Donnelly, an estoppel was thereby raised against plaintiff to claim the right to a further lease of the premises.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

(48 Cal. App. 135)

FRASCONA v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION. (Civ. 3193.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 10, 1920.)

1. Trial ⟸393(3)—Written findings of fact necessary unless waived.

Where findings were not waived, the trial court must give its decision in writing, including written findings of fact under Code Civ. Proc. § 632.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1071(1) — Failure to make findings of fact ground for new trial or reversal.

The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 632, requiring written findings of fact, is for the benefit of the court and the parties, and failure to make such findings is prejudicial to such parties, and requires reversal.

3. Trial ⟸396(1)—Findings of fact should answer issues made by pleadings.

Where it is not necessary that findings should follow the precise language of the pleadings, it is essential that they be so drawn that the truth or the falsity of every material allegation can be demonstrated therefrom, and the findings must answer the questions put by the pleadings.

4. Negligence ⟸119(4) — Recovery only on proof of act alleged.

Recovery can be had only on the proof of the specific act of negligence alleged.

5. Carriers ⟸322—Finding of careless operation of car supports averment that car started before plaintiff alighted.

Where a complaint alleged defendant's act of negligence in starting the street car before plaintiff alighted, a finding that defendant operated its car in a negligent manner, thereby injuring plaintiff, is insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Mary Frascona against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. E. T. Chapman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant, a common carrier of passengers, while plaintiff was a passenger on one of its street railway cars. The case was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment passed for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The principal question involves the sufficiency of the finding upon the issue of defendant's negligence as alleged in the complaint.

The complaint alleges a specific act of negligence on defendant's part. After alleging that, while she was riding as a passenger on defendant's street car, plaintiff requested the conductor to let her off at the intersection of San Pedro and Sixteenth streets, in the city of Los Angeles, and that the conductor thereupon gave the motorman the signal to stop, the complaint proceeds to allege that—car was suddenly started forward, and this plaintiff was violently thrown upon the ground."

"Said car was brought to a standstill, and while this plaintiff was attempting to step from the bottom step on said car to the ground, said

The answer denies that the car was brought to a standstill; denies that, while the car was standing still, plaintiff attempted to alight; denies that, while plaintiff was alighting, the car was suddenly started forward; and alleges that before the car had reached the customary and usual stopping place at the intersection of Sixteenth and San Pedro streets, and while it was still in motion, plaintiff carelessly and negligently attempted to step on the ground and fell.

There was a sharp conflict in the evidence. Plaintiff and her witnesses testified that the accident happened as alleged in the complaint; while the witnesses for defendant, with equal positiveness, testified that plaintiff stepped from the car before it had come to a standstill.

Instead of a finding showing the truth of the averment of negligence as made in the complaint, we are left to conjecture whether the trial court may not have attributed the accident to some other and wholly different act of negligence. Instead of a finding that the accident happened as specifically described by plaintiff in her complaint, the court's finding of negligence is couched in most general terms. The sole finding upon the issue of negligence is this:

"That defendant corporation operated said street car in a careless and negligent manner, then and there injuring plaintiff, Mary Frascona, and that said carelessness and negligence of the defendant corporation was the direct and proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries."

[1] Unless findings are waived—and here, as the record shows, they were not—the trial court must give its decision in writing, i. e., it must file written findings of fact. Section 632, Code Civ. Proc. The right to findings is a substantial right, as inviolate, under the statute, as that of trial by jury under the Constitution. Bard v. Kleeb, 1 Wash. 370, 25 Pac. 467, 27 Pac. 273.

[2] The Code provision requiring written findings of fact is for the benefit of the court and the parties. To the court it gives an opportunity to place upon record, in definite written form, its view of the facts and the law of the case, and to make the case easily reviewable on appeal by exhibiting the exact grounds upon which the judgment rests. To the parties it furnishes the means, in many instances, of having their cause reviewed without great expense. It also furnishes to the losing party a basis of his motion for a new trial; he is entitled to know the precise facts found by the court before proceeding with his motion for a new trial, in order that he may be able to point out with precision the errors of the court in matters either of fact or law. Bard v. Kleeb, supra; Savings & L. Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 539, 39 Pac. 922; Polhemus v. Carpenter, 42 Cal. 385. "The right to have a material issue presented by the pleadings in a cause determined by a finding of the court is one important to the parties to a suit, and the failure to make such a finding results in prejudicial error, entitling the complaining suitor to reversal." Huntington v. Vavra, 36 Cal. App. 355, 172 Pac. 168. See, also, Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 704, 154 Pac. 835.

[3] While it is not necessary that the findings should follow the precise language of the pleadings, it is essential that they be so drawn that the truth or falsity of every material allegation can be demonstrated therefrom. The purpose of findings "is to answer the questions put by the pleadings." Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 93, 44 Pac. 332. The province of the court is to determine, not to raise, issues. And a finding upon a fact not in issue can form no element in determining the appropriate judgment to be rendered. Commissioners v. Barnard, 98 Cal. 199, 32 Pac. 982. The plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the case as made by his complaint, and not on some other which he might have made.

[4] For these reasons, to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff in an action the findings must be responsible to the issues as tendered by the complaint; and, where specific facts are put in issue, it is the duty of the court to find the facts specifically. "The findings must be specific on the issues presented, and judgment will be reversed if they are not so." Franklin v. Franklin, 140 Cal. 609, 74 Pac. 155. "It is well settled," says the Illinois court in Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Gates, 135 Ill. App. 185, "that the allegations of the declaration and the proof must agree, and that when a specific act of negligence is alleged, the recovery can only be on proof of such specific act, and not on proof of negligence not alleged."

[5] When put to the proof of these elementary rules, the finding of negligence in this case fails to meet the test. The complaint alleges one distinct and specific act of negligence, namely, starting the car before plaintiff had alighted. The finding is not at all specific; it could hardly be more general than it is. It is no more than this: That defendant operated its car in a careless and negligent manner, thereby injuring plaintiff. Such a finding is broad enough to include an almost infinite number of acts of negligence, each differing radically from the specific act alleged by plaintiff as the ground of her action for damages. Having carefully defined and described in her allegation of negligence the particular negligent act with which she charges defendant, we must assume that the latter came into court prepared to meet the charge that it committed that specific negligent act, and not some other act of negligence in the operation of its car that plaintiff might have alleged, but did not. If the judgment against defendant be upheld, it is not entirely beyond the realm of possibility that the trial court did not believe that defendant had been guilty of the precise act of negligence pleaded by plaintiff, but did believe, and intended to find, that in some other and radically different respect defendant had negligently operated its car, thereby causing the injuries.

For these reasons we are constrained to hold that the failure of the trial court to make a finding responsive to the issue as tendered by the complaint was prejudicial error for which the cause must be remanded for retrial.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

48 Cal. App. 263

BANK OF NEWMAN v. MONTEREY COUNTY GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 3404.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 21, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1920.)

Corporations ⟸471—Guaranty held not increase of bonded debt without consent of stockholders.

A contract of guaranty, executed by a corporation, "For value received. M. C. G. and E. Company agrees to and with the holder of this bond and the attached coupons, that if the several sums of money agreed to be paid thereby are not paid in the manner therein stated, as they severally become due, then and in that event the M. G. & E. Company will pay the same," held on its face to have been issued for value received, and not to be an attempt to increase the bonded indebtedness of the guarantor without the proceedings required to be taken by corporations under Civ. Code, § 359, and was valid.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Newman against the Monterey County Gas & Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, and Goldman & Altman, for appellant.

Chickering & Gregory and Thos. H. Breeze, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover upon a certain written agreement executed by the defendant whereby it undertook to guarantee the payment of certain bonds issued by the Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company, a corporation, upon which bonds default in payment had been made by said last-named corporation. The guaranty in question was indorsed upon each of the bonds issued and sold by the Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company, and was in the following form:

"Guaranty of Payment.

"For value received, Monterey County Gas & Electric Company, a corporation, agrees to and with the holder of this bond and the attached coupons, that if the several sums of money agreed to be paid thereby are not paid in the manner therein stated, as they severally become due, then and in that event the Monterey Gas & Electric Company will pay the same.

"This contract is duly authorized by a resolution of the board of directors of the Monterey Gas & Electric Company."

The trial court rendered its judgment in plaintiff's favor for the amount due upon the bonds held by it bearing this guaranty. The defendant has appealed from said judgment, the only contention which the appellant makes upon this appeal being that the guaranty of the said bonds of the Monterey & Pacific Grove Railway Company by the appellant was an attempt to increase the bonded indebtedness of the guarantor; and, since said guaranty was not founded upon the proceedings required to be taken by corporations under section 359 of the Civil Code relating to the creation or increase of a bonded indebtedness, said guaranty was void.

We are unable to agree with the position taken by the appellant in this regard. The guaranty in question appears upon its face to have been issued for value received, and there is nothing in this record to indicate that it was not issued in good faith and in the regular course of the business of the corporation issuing the same. It does not purport to have any relation to any past bonded indebtedness of the appellant, or to have been issued in the form or with the intent of creating or increasing any bonded indebtedness of the corporation; but, on the other hand, it appears as to both its form and substance to belong to that class of written instruments which include promissory notes, checks, bills of exchange, and like obligations of corporations or of individuals issued in the ordinary course of business. The term "bonded indebtedness" has never been held to apply to or include this class of obligations, but as used in the Constitution and statutes has had reference to those more formal transactions of both municipal and private corporations which require such prerequisites as elections, or the express approval of stockholders, in order to their creation, and which when thus permitted take the express form of bonds either secured by liens upon property or payable by means of public taxation.

The Supreme Court of this state in the case of Underhill v. Santa Barbara, etc., Co., 93 Cal. 300, 28 Pac. 1049, in construing the term "bonded indebtedness" as found in section 11 of article 12 of the Constitution having reference to the obligations of private corporations, has held that a note and mortgage issued by such a corporation is not a bonded indebtedness within the meaning of said provision of the Constitution. To hold otherwise would be to extend the language of the Constitution to practically every form of indebtedness which a private corporation could create, and to require in every case the consent of its stockholders to the creation of such indebtedness and to the issuance of the writing which would evidence the same. The only authorities cited by the appellant herein as sustaining its position are those from other jurisdictions wherein by the express terms of their statutes the consent of stockholders is required to guaranties by one corporation of the bonds of another. Such cases are not in point in this state, wherein no such statutory requirement is to be found.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; WELCH, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 298

BOWEN v. HICKEY. (Civ. 3090.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 22, 1920.)

Appeal and error ⊂=1071(1)—Judgment for defendant held justified, notwithstanding erroneous finding.

Where in forcible entry and detainer it appears that on plaintiff's demand defendant surrendered possession, a judgment for defendant held proper, notwithstanding an erroneous finding that in plaintiff's absence defendant unlawfully entered and took possession of the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Forcible entry and detainer by Theodore Bowen against Seth Hickey. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Prescott, of Los Angeles, and Burton E. Hales, of Redlands, for appellant.

F. E. Dunlap, of Los Angeles, and H. F. Bridges, of Sierra Madre, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In this action of forcible entry and detainer, the plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant.

The complaint alleged that on the 23d day of November, 1912, and for more than four years previous thereto, plaintiff was in the peaceable and actual possession and entitled to the possession of the real property described in the complaint; that on the 23d day of November, 1912, during the absence of the plaintiff therefrom, the defendant unlawfully entered upon said land and took possession of the same. On these allegations the court made its findings in favor of the defendant. The evidence is not sufficient to support those findings, but, on the contrary, without conflict, sustains the allegations in the complaint.

The complaint next alleged that on the evening of the 23d day of November, 1912, plaintiff made a demand in writing upon the defendant to deliver up to plaintiff the possession of said premises, but the defendant refused, and still refuses after a period of five days, to surrender possession, etc. The evidence shows, and the court found, that the notice was served as stated. But the court found that—

"Thereupon, pursuant to said demand, defendant surrendered possession thereof to plaintiff, and that defendant does not still unlawfully hold or continue in possession of same, against the form of the statute in such cases made or provided."

The evidence is sufficient to sustain this finding. Immediately upon service of the said notice, the defendant and the persons with him left the premises, taking with them their wagon and implements and everything that they had brought to the land. The defendant testified that it was his intention at that time to surrender possession of the land to the plaintiff, and that he did not at that time give any thought as to his future action with reference to the land. It is true that the evidence further shows that 28 days later the defendant again went into possession of the premises, and still remained there at the time of the commencement of this action on January 13, 1913. It does not appear that any notice demanding possession by the plaintiff was ever served other than the notice of November 23, 1912. At the time of said transactions in November and December, 1912, the plaintiff was occupying a house erected by him on a part of the premises in question, and his occupancy thereof was not disturbed by the defendant. Since the evidence justified the court's finding in favor of the defendant to the effect that he surrendered possession to the plaintiff in response to the notice given, it becomes immaterial that the findings first mentioned were not sustained by the evidence. If those findings had been favorable to the plaintiff, the appropriate judgment nevertheless would have been in favor of the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

⊂=For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

48 Cal. App. 208

SHERWOOD et ux. v. ROBERTSON.
(Civ. 3235.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 17, 1920.)

1. Mortgages ⟸257—Assignee of nonnegotiable note held not bound by equities in favor of mortgagor.

While an assignee of a nonnegotiable note and mortgage takes them subject to all the equities and infirmities which could be urged by makers against the original mortgagee, if the assignee uses proper diligence and makes reasonable inquiry to ascertain what, if any, outstanding equities there are in favor of the mortgagor, and after having used such diligence and made such inquiry he finds no circumstances which would lead a reasonable person to believe that the full consideration had not passed or that equities were outstanding, he takes the paper free from equities which the mortgagor might otherwise have asserted.

2. Estoppel ⟸72——Note and mortgage will not be reformed to detriment of innocent purchaser in view of rule as to two innocent parties.

Where a mortgage in terms secured a straight loan evidenced by a note, while in fact the consideration was payable in installments, as a building was constructed by mortgagor, and the mortgagee sold the note and mortgage for their face value, the mortgagor having notice thereof, but failing to apprise the purchaser that all the consideration had not been paid, the note and mortgage will not be reformed at the mortgagor's instance to express the true consideration, since under Civ. Code, § 3543, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of the third, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer.

3. Reformation of instruments ⟸29—Failure of purchaser of note to make inquiry held not to permit reformation.

Where a mortgagee sold for full value a note and mortgage to an innocent purchaser without notice, and the consideration had not in fact been fully paid to the mortgagor, failure of the purchaser to inquire of the mortgagor as to the amount of advances did not constitute negligence, where mortgagor had an opportunity to explain the condition of the loan to the purchaser before the purchase, and therefore the note and mortgage will not be reformed at the mortgagor's instance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Suit by C. S. Sherwood and wife against Maria Robertson to reform a note and mortgage. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

John B. Haas, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lewis Cruickshank and Vincent B. Vaughan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action instituted by the plaintiffs for the purpose of having their promissory note and mortgage in the hands of the defendant so reformed as to express the amount actually due upon said note and to secure that amount.

The defendant was the holder of said note and mortgage by virtue of an assignment to her of the same from the original payee thereof. The facts attending the execution of these instruments by the plaintiffs are undisputed and may be summarized as follows:

On August 1, 1917, the plaintiffs executed and delivered to one Joseph M. Gore their promissory note for the sum of $2,300 and interest, due three years after date, giving as security for said note their mortgage upon a certain piece of real estate in Los Angeles county, which mortgage was recorded upon the date of its execution. The transaction upon the face of these instruments appeared to be a straight loan of $2,300 to the plaintiffs, but it appeared at the trial that the money for which said note and mortgage were given was to be used by said plaintiffs in erecting two buildings upon the mortgaged premises, and was to be advanced from time to time by the mortgagee to them as the erection of said structures progressed. This plan was carried out to the extent that between the date of said loan and the 15th day of September, 1917, the said mortgagee had advanced on account of said loan the sum of $895. On or about said last-named date said Gore undertook to sell said note and mortgage to the defendant herein, an old lady having some money which she desired to have safely invested. The sale of said securities was being negotiated by one R. W. Martin, who on September 15th took one Arthur J. Madison, a son-in-law of the defendant, to inspect the property which was the subject of the mortgage. They found the plaintiff Mr. Cedric Sherwood upon the premises. As to the conversation which occurred there between Mr. Madison and Mr. Sherwood there is a dispute in the evidence; but Mr. Madison, who was acting as the agent of the defendant, testified that he spent from 15 minutes to half an hour looking over the property after being introduced to Mr. Sherwood by Mr. Martin as a gentleman who was looking at the property with a view to buying the mortgage, and that in the course of that time Mr. Sherwood stated to Mr. Madison that both bungalows were rented to be occupied as soon as completed, and that the property was worth approximately $4,500; and when Mr. Madison stated that the property looked like a nice piece of property, and as it was new was a good loan, Mr. Sherwood answered, "Yes; he thought so." Mr. Martin corroborates that portion of the testimony of Mr. Madison wherein the latter stated that Mr. Sherwood was informed that

Mr. Madison might buy the mortgage if it was all right. Two days later the defendant herself went out to see the property, accompanied by Mr. Martin, and she testified that she was there introduced to Mr. Sherwood by Mr. Martin as a prospective purchaser of the note and mortgage, and that, to quote her own language:

"I said to Mr. Sherwood, 'It looks like a good loan; I have to be pretty careful; I haven't very much money, and I have to be very careful how I let it;' and he said it was a good loan; my money would be safe, and everything was all right. * * * Mr. Sherwood stated that the interest was to be paid on it; I think he said there would be no trouble."

Mr. Martin also corroborated Mrs. Robertson in her testimony to the effect that she was introduced to Mr. Sherwood as "the woman with the money, and if the loan suited her she would possibly buy it." A few days later Mrs. Robertson bought the note and mortgage from Gore, paying to him the full face value thereof. The assignment of the mortgage to her was recorded on September 26, 1917, and on the following day the plaintiffs brought this action to have the instruments reformed.

Upon the trial of the cause the court accepted the statements of Mrs. Robertson and her agent, Madison, as to the substance of the conversations between them and the plaintiff, Cedric Sherwood, who, it is conceded, was acting not only in his own behalf, but as agent for his wife, during the course of these interviews; and the court thereupon made its findings in favor of the defendant, holding that the plaintiffs were liable to her for the full amount of said note and mortgage and were not entitled to have the same reformed.

[1] The plaintiffs upon this appeal attack these findings as unsupported by the evidence in the case, and they also insist that the said decision of the court is against law. The question which is thus presented is one of estoppel. It is conceded by both parties to this appeal that a note and mortgage are to be read together and are nonnegotiable, and hence that an assignee thereof takes them subject to all the equities and infirmities which could be urged by the makers thereof against the original mortgagee. This admitted rule of law has, however, this exception, that if the assignee of the note and mortgage uses proper diligence and makes reasonable inquiry to ascertain what, if any, outstanding equities there are in favor of the mortgagor, and if, having used such diligence and made such inquiry, he finds no circumstances which would lead a reasonable person to believe that the full consideration had not passed for the execution of said note and mortgage, or that there were any equities outstanding in favor of the mortgagor, and if, having used such diligence and made such inquiry with such result, he takes the assignment of said note and mortgage, paying in good faith full value therefor, he takes the same free from such equities as the mortgagor might otherwise have asserted. The respondent herein relies upon this exception to the general rule, and depends upon the evidence of the interviews held between herself or her agent and the plaintiff Cedric Sherwood as sufficient to sustain such exception and to work an estoppel against the Sherwoods to deny their full liability upon said note and mortgage.

[2] In support of this view the respondent cites the case of National Hardwood Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881. We are unable to find any distinction between that case and the case at bar. The facts of the two cases are practically identical; and the Supreme Court in the case before it fully applies the principle of estoppel for which the respondent herein contends, and we can see no escape from the application of that principle to the facts of the case at bar. The cases cited by the appellants from other jurisdictions cannot be held to be availing in the face of the decision of our own Supreme Court upon this subject; and while it is true that the compulsion laid upon the plaintiffs herein to pay the full face of their note and mortgage works a hardship upon them, the adoption of the other view would work a greater hardship upon the respondent, who appears throughout to have acted with the utmost good faith. The plaintiffs at the time of their interviews with the defendant and her agent had their opportunity to enlighten them both as to the extent of the advancements which had been made upon said loan; and, this being so, the rule laid down in section 3543 of the Civil Code that, "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer," is to be given application to the facts of the case at bar. The plaintiffs herein, by giving to Gore their note and mortgage in the form in which these were given, put it in the latter's power to exhibit the same to a purchaser thereof, and to induce the belief in such purchaser that these instruments were good for their full face value. They could easily have avoided this consequence and sufficiently protected themselves and any assignee of their securities by an insertion in their mortgage of a recital showing that the same was given for advances yet to be made. Not having done this, they must be held, as between themselves and this defendant, to be the parties by whose negligence the wrong occurred from which one or the other of them must be the sufferer.

[3] The appellants, however, insist that the respondent herein was also negligent in not requiring from Gore upon her purchase of these securities a statement from the makers thereof as to the amount then due. Ordinarily this might be true; but in the case at bar the necessity for such a statement was obviated by the direct interview with Sherwood and by the opportunity then afforded to him to explain the exact condition of the loan. We are satisfied that the evidence in the case was sufficient to sustain the findings of the court in the defendant's favor, and that there is no error disclosed by the record upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KOFORD, Judge pro tem.

48 Cal. App. 360

SMITH v. ROSS, Sheriff of Santa Barbara County. (Civ. 3360, 3390.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1920.)

1. Justices of the peace ⟸59—Facts conferring jurisdiction must be shown.

A justice's court being one of limited jurisdiction, one relying on its judgment must show affirmatively every fact necessary to confer jurisdiction.

2. Justices of the peace ⟸122(2)—In action on oral contract, summons served out of county not basis for default judgment.

A justice has no jurisdiction of defendant so as to authorize default judgment against him, action being on an oral contract, and service of summons on him being outside the county in which action was brought, which is prohibited by Code Civ. Proc. § 848, in an action in such court, unless on a written contract of a certain class.

3. Justices of the peace ⟸135(4)—Negativing of remedy at law necessary to restrain execution on default judgment without jurisdiction.

Suit to enjoin enforcement of an execution on a default judgment of a justice who had not acquired jurisdiction will, on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law by motion in the justice's court to set aside the execution, not lie, at least in absence of allegation that such motion was made and denied, or of other facts showing special circumstances of fraud or hardship.

4. Pleading ⟸34(4) — Facts presumed stated as strongly as truth permits.

It is to be presumed that the pleader has stated the facts as strongly as the truth will permit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by W. D. V. Smith against James Ross, Sheriff of Santa Barbara County. From an adverse judgment and order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Butcher, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

W. C. Wilde, of San Diego, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered after his refusal to amend his complaint on demurrer being sustained with leave to amend, and also from an order setting aside a temporary restraining order. The judgment must be affirmed on the ground that the complaint did not show sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action for equitable relief by injunction, and this result renders unnecessary consideration of any matters presented by the appeal from the collateral order.

Summarized, the complaint shows that the plaintiff is a resident of the county of Santa Barbara and was never a resident of San Diego county; that he was sued by one Creamer in a justice's court in the latter county, on a claim based on an oral contract, made payable in Santa Barbara; that no part, note, or memorandum of the contract was in writing; that summons in the action was served on the plaintiff in Santa Barbara county; that default judgment was entered in the action; that an abstract of the judgment was filed in the office of the county clerk of San Diego county, and an execution thereupon issued to the defendant sheriff of Santa Barbara county; and that the defendant as such sheriff will, unless restrained by injunction, levy upon property of the plaintiff in Santa Barbara county to satisfy the judgment which the plaintiff alleges to be void. It is further alleged that the plaintiff, in the event of such levy, will suffer great and irreparable injury, and that he has no speedy or adequate remedy at law.

It is provided by section 848 of the Code of Civil Procedure that in a suit in a justice's court the summons cannot be served outside of the county wherein the action is brought except "when the action is * * * against a party who has contracted in writing to perform an obligation at a particular place, and resides in a different county, in which case the summons may be served in the county where he resides."

[1] The justice's court being of limited jurisdiction, one relying on its judgment must show affirmatively every fact necessary to confer jurisdiction. Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401. Under the facts pleaded and assumed for the present purpose to be true, it is shown that the default judgment was entered without jurisdiction of the person of the defendant by service of summons in that action.

[2-4] It does not follow that the plaintiff in the present action stated sufficient facts to warrant the relief demanded in his complaint. No facts were alleged from which the legal conclusion could properly be drawn that he had not a plainer, speedier, and more adequate remedy at law than in equity. Upon authority it was determined in this state as early as 1887 that injunction will not lie to restrain the enforcement of an execution issued on a default judgment in a justice's court in a suit where the justice had not acquired jurisdiction, for the reason that the defendant has an adequate remedy at law by motion in the justice's court to set aside the execution. Luco v. Brown, 73 Cal. 3, 14 Pac. 366, 2 Am. St. Rep. 772. It may be that, if such a motion were made and denied, or other facts were alleged showing special circumstances of fraud or hardship, a court of equity might be moved to grant injunctive relief, but no such facts are set forth in the complaint under consideration as were shown in a case on which the appellant chiefly relies, and which does not sustain his contentions. Newman v. Barnet, 165 Cal. 423, 132 Pac. 588. In that case it was shown on the trial that the plaintiff in equity had applied for relief in the justice's court, and that it was denied. In this case the plaintiff did not allege that he had made any application for the relief the law provides, and under the rule that it must be presumed the pleader has stated the facts as strongly as the truth will permit, the conclusion is irresistible that no such application was made.

The judgment and order appealed from are both affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

48 Cal. App. 343

WILSON v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TERMINAL RYS. et al. (Civ. 3314.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1920.)

1. Release ⟸57(2)—Fraud in securing release for personal injuries may be shown by circumstantial evidence.

In a personal injury action, where plaintiff claimed that signing of a release resulted from misstatements and fraudulent misrepresentations, plaintiff was not required to show a direct connection between one of the parties making such representations and the defendant, but was entitled to prove fraud and conspiracy by circumstantial evidence.

2. Release ⟸17(2)—Defendant may not rely on release secured by misrepresentations of agents or others.

In a personal injury action, whether or not there was any connection between one who by misrepresentation or fraud induced plaintiff to sign a release and defendant street railway's claim agent, the defendant corporation should not be allowed to take advantage of an unfair settlement thus made.

3. Release ⟸58(6)—Whether release for personal injury is tainted with fraud is a jury question.

Whether a release for personal injury is tainted with fraud is a question for the jury.

4. Release ⟸56—Plaintiff may prove that she was a profound neurasthenic when induced to sign.

If plaintiff was a profound neurasthenic at the time of the execution of the release for personal injuries, the release should under the law be scrutinized with even more care than if she were in a normal condition, and she was entitled to prove such physical condition when executing a release which she claimed was fraudulently procured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by Ada P. Wilson against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways and others, in which only the named defendant answered. Directed verdict and judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland, for appellant.

W. H. Smith, of Oakland, and A. L. Whittle, of San Francisco (Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries claimed to have been sustained by her through the negligence of the defendant corporation while she was riding as a passenger on the street car of said defendant corporation. The action was tried by a jury, and the court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which plaintiff appeals.

The defendant corporation was the only defendant answering, and it pleaded a release executed by plaintiff to the effect that she had accepted from said defendant corporation the sum of $200 in full settlement of her claim and had discharged said defendant corporation from further liability. After the jury had been impaneled and sworn, counsel for defendant corporation called the court's attention to the release pleaded in its answer. Plaintiff admitted the execution of said release, but claimed that it was procured through the fraud and conspiracy of the agents of the defendant corporation, and was therefore not binding upon plaintiff. The court thereupon directed that the evidence bearing on said release be first presented. Defendant corporation then offered said release in evidence, after which plaintiff, in support of her claim of fraud and conspiracy, offered certain oral testimony, concerning the activities and declarations to her of one Norwood, whom she claimed had, with the aid of the claims agent of the defendant corporation, fraudulently induced her to settle her claim. The evidence of Norwood's activities and declarations was excluded by the court, upon the ground that there had been no connection shown between said Norwood and the defendant corporation. After having unsuccessfully offered oral testimony on that point, counsel for plaintiff reduced to writing and read into the record a statement embodying the facts and circumstances which plaintiff offered to prove and upon which plaintiff stated that she would rely as showing fraud and conspiracy. The court refused to allow evidence to be introduced in support of said offer, and, on motion of the defendant corporation, directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants, and said verdict was rendered accordingly.

Plaintiff's complaint was filed on September 27, 1917. Summons was served on the defendant corporation on September 29, 1917.

[1] The following, in substance, are the facts which plaintiff offered in writing to prove: On the afternoon of September 29, 1917, the same day on which the summons in the action was served, plaintiff was called to the telephone at her home in the city of Oakland by some person who, after inquiring if she was Miss Wilson, represented himself to be Mr. Carey, one of plaintiff's attorneys. Plaintiff remarked that it did not sound like Mr. Carey's voice, to which said person replied that he had a dreadful cold and was hoarse. He then asked plaintiff what she had said to Dr. Buteau's nurse, to which plaintiff replied that she had told the nurse that she was feeling better. The person then stated that the nurse had so informed him, and that he was afraid that it was damaging evidence against plaintiff, and that if she wanted to drop the case or settle it with the company he would not charge her anything for his services. He then asked if she would settle for $100, to which plaintiff replied that she would not. The telephonic communication then ended. As a matter of fact plaintiff had been examined by Dr. Buteau prior to the filing of her complaint. At the time of said telephonic communication plaintiff was attending her sister, who required almost constant attention, and plaintiff herself was extremely nervous, and afterwards became discouraged with reference to her case because of what had been stated to her over the telephone. On October 10, 1917, said C. J. Norwood, who was a total stranger to plaintiff, called at plaintiff's home and inquired for her, but, finding that she was not in, departed and returned the next day, at which time he stated to plaintiff that he had observed that she had brought suit against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways; that he himself had been in the same accident, but had not yet settled with the company, although he intended to do so. Plaintiff informed him that her attorneys had told her to settle her case, that she would like to settle, and she asked said Norwood to let her know if he settled his case. Norwood stated that he thought he would see what he could do; that he himself had not done anything, but that he did not want to give his case to the lawyers; that he would rather settle with the company; and that he thought he would go down and see them, and he did not want to wait any longer. Norwood then departed, but afterwards, on the same day, telephoned plaintiff that he had settled with the company, and requested the privilege of again calling on plaintiff, stating that he had something to her advantage to tell her. Later in the afternoon he called at her residence and stated to her that Mr. Mills, the claims agent of the defendant corporation, had told him that the attorneys for the company were going to call plaintiff down the next day and take her deposition, and that, since plaintiff's attorneys had released her, if she wanted to settle with the company, she had better go that afternoon; that if she waited until the next day it would be too late; that Mills had told him that he could not do anything afterwards because it would be in the hands of the lawyers. Norwood then, at the request of plaintiff, telephoned Mills and made an appointment with him for plaintiff, and afterwards accompanied plaintiff to the office of said Mills. After conversing with Mills, plaintiff accepted a check for $200 in full settlement of her claim. The telephone message purporting to have come from Mr. Carey was not from Mr. Carey, nor was it from any of plaintiff's attorneys, but plaintiff did not know that she had been deceived until the next day, October 12, 1917.

Plaintiff further offered to prove that the statement made by said Norwood at the time he called on plaintiff on October 11, 1917, to the effect that he had not yet settled with said company was false, and that he had in fact settled with said company in August, 1917, and that prior to visiting plaintiff said Norwood had consulted with said Mills with reference to plaintiff's case and with reference to a settlement of plaintiff's case. Plaintiff further offered to prove by said Dr. Buteau that as a result of the injuries received by her she was a profound neurasthenic and had suffered a severe shock to her nervous system. Plaintiff further offered to prove that at the time she called at Mills' office with Norwood she was in an extremely nervous condition and was depressed and discouraged because of the telephone message that she supposed was from Mr. Carey; that in accepting the check for $200 she did so because of the fact that she believed that she had been abandoned by her attorneys, and because of the statements made to her by said Norwood to the effect that if she did not settle before the following day it would be too late for her to settle, and because of the various matters stated to her by said Norwood with reference to the treatment a Mrs. Marshall had received who had a claim against said company for injuries received in an accident while on a street car of said company, to the effect that Mrs. Marshall had been subjected to X-rays and had been severely examined by the attorneys for the company; that in making the settlement with said Mills plaintiff was ignorant of her rights in the premises and believed that if she did not settle upon that day it would be too late for her to settle, which belief was induced by the statements of said Norwood to her; that upon ascertaining from her attorneys on the following day that they had not withdrawn from her case she authorized them to tender the check back to said Mills and to said defendant corporation; and that said check was, within a few days thereafter, tendered to said Mills and to said corporation defendant, but that said tender was refused.

Plaintiff further offered to prove the main allegations of her complaint with reference to the negligence of said defendant corporation, etc.

The oral proof offered by plaintiff previous to the making of the written offer was, as above stated, excluded by the court, upon the objection of said defendant corporation. Plaintiff was not allowed to testify as to said telephonic communication, nor as to any of the statements made to her by Norwood. Nor was she allowed to give her reasons why she accompanied Norwood to the office of said claims agent, nor the reason for her acceptance of said check of $200 in full settlement of her claim.

Norwood was called as a witness by plaintiff, but the court would not allow plaintiff to examine him as to any of the statements claimed to have been made by him to plaintiff. One of the important points relied upon by plaintiff to show fraud and conspiracy was the asserted false statements of Norwood on his first visit to plaintiff to the effect that he had not yet settled his case with the company, but that he intended to do so, and that he did not want to give his case to the lawyers, but would go down and see the company without waiting any longer. Norwood, while a witness, admitted that he had settled his case with the company several days prior to his first visit to plaintiff, but the court refused to allow plaintiff to interrogate said Norwood with reference to said asserted false statements. In fact, all evidence offered by plaintiff tending to show the activities of Norwood and the statements made by him to plaintiff was excluded.

We are of the opinion that the rulings of the court in this respect constituted error. We are of the opinion also that, had plaintiff been successful in establishing the truth of the facts asserted by her in her written offer, the question of the fraudulent procurement of said release should have been submitted to the jury together with the main issues of the case. The trial court, in excluding this evidence, was evidently acting upon the theory that plaintiff was required to show a direct connection between the supposed agent, Norwood, and the recognized agent of the defendant corporation, Mills. By the adoption of such a rule, however, plaintiff was deprived of the right accorded her by the law, of proving fraud and conspiracy by circumstantial evidence. Maxson v. Llewelyn, 122 Cal. 195, 54 Pac. 732; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177; People v. Kizer, 22 Cal. App. 10, 133 Pac. 516, 521, 134 Pac. 346; Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457; Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 39, 46 Pac. 892; Cassel v. Bullard, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 172, 16 L. Ed. 424; Drake v. Stewart, 76 Fed. 140, 22 C. C. A. 104.

[2] In brief, the substance of plaintiff's proffered proof was that she had been led to believe by trickery that her attorneys had abandoned her case; that through falsehood and deception she had been frightened into the belief that if she did not settle her case that day she could not be allowed to settle it afterwards; that, if she did not settle that day, she would on the following day be subjected to the rigors of severe examination by opposing counsel and perhaps be required to submit to X-ray examination as to her physical condition; and that while she was in that condition of mind she was persuaded to go before the claims agent of the company, where, without the aid of counsel or friend, she was induced to settle for an inadequate and trifling sum.

If the release relied upon by the defendant corporation to defeat plaintiff's action was the product of such methods, plaintiff should have been allowed to prove it. Whether or not there was any existing relation between Norwood and Mills was one of the questions for the jury to decide after hearing all of the circumstances surrounding the transaction. Norwood was admittedly a total stranger to plaintiff. He had already settled his claim against the company prior to his visit to plaintiff. Plaintiff's action was not one such as would excite the public interest. The parties thereto were the only ones concerned. Norwood was obviously not acting in behalf of plaintiff. The jury, then, had a right to know what his interest was, and the extent of it, and the reason for his asserted false statements to plaintiff, if he did in fact make any. Plaintiff should have been permitted to present all of these circumstances to the jury in order to prove, if she could, that the unusual activities of Norwood could be accounted for on no other hypothesis than that he was the agent of the defendant corporation. It would make little difference whether it was shown that he was an authorized or a self-constituted agent of the defendant corporation, because, in either event, if an impecunious settlement was brought about through his trickery and falsehood, the defendant corporation should not be allowed to take advantage of an unfair settlement thus made, accept the benefits thereof, and deprive plaintiff of a trial upon the real merits of the case. Wilder v. Beede, 119 Cal. 646, 51 Pac. 1083; Pope v. J. K. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 43 Pac. 589; Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362; Shoninger v. Peabody, 57 Conn. 42, 17 Atl. 278, 14 Am. St. Rep. 88.

[3] The courts have frequently held in no uncertain terms that, where a release is tainted with fraud, it should not be sustained, and that the question of whether or not such taint exists is one to be submitted to and decided by the jury. In Kansas City, M. & B. Ry. Co. v. Chiles, 86 Miss. 361, 38 South. 498, it was said:

"No release of this nature should be upheld if any element of fraud, deceit, oppression, or unconscionable advantage is connected with the transaction. And in passing on the validity of such release, when assailed, all surrounding conditions should be fully developed, and the relative attitudes of the contracting parties clearly shown. So that the jury, in the clear light of the whole truth, may rightly decide which story bears the impress of verity."

In Carr v. Sacramento C. P. Co., 35 Cal. App. 439, 170 Pac. 446, in dealing with the question of a release, the court said:

"It is true that the law does not discourage settlements of controversies by agreement, and is disposed as far as possible to uphold them, but it is equally ready to relieve parties from fraud and imposition through which they have been induced to barter away their rights. In cases like this especially, where the opportunity for over-reaching is so great, the law demands good faith on the part of the releasee and a full understanding on the part of the person injured as to his legal rights."

Additional cases to the same effect are Atchison, T. & S. F. Railway Co. v. Cunningham, 59 Kan. 722, 54 Pac. 1055; Smith v. Occidental, etc., Steamship Co., 99 Cal. 462, 34 Pac. 84; Kelley v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 138 Iowa, 273, 114 N. W. 536, 128 Am. St. Rep. 195; Mattson v. Eureka Cedar Lumber & Shingle Co., 79 Wash. 266, 140 Pac. 377.

[4] Plaintiff also claims and she offered to prove, that she was a profound neurasthenic at the time of the execution of said release. If that be true, said release should, under the law, be scrutinized with even more care than if she were in a normal condition. Edmunds v. Southern Pacific Co., 18 Cal. App. 532, 123 Pac. 811; 23 Rul. Case Law, 388 et seq.; Carr v. Sacramento C. P. Co., supra.

It is our opinion that the evidence offered by plaintiff was improperly excluded, and that the question of the asserted fraudulent release should have been submitted to the jury.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 351

SIMMONS et al. v. STEPHENS et al.

(Civ. 3296.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸706(5)—Finding of death of pedestrian from negligence of driver of auto authorized.

Evidence held to support finding that death of pedestrian on street from collision of automobile was caused by negligence of driver in excessive speed and operation.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Conclusion on conflicting evidence not reviewable.

Conclusions of the lower court on conflicting evidence as to the facts will not be disturbed.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸705(1)—Collision of auto with pedestrian held not unavoidable accident.

There having been a space of over 15 feet on either side of a pedestrian crossing a street, through which the automobile which struck him could have passed, and he being in view for a considerable distance down the street, it cannot be said the accident was unavoidable.

4. Appeal and error ⟸931(6)—Trial court cannot be presumed influenced by evidence admitted and then stricken.

The trial court cannot be presumed to have been influenced by evidence which after admitting it struck out on motion, especially where it expressed doubts as to admissibility thereof when offered.

5. Appeal and error ⟸1054(3)—Admission of evidence on trial without jury harmless, in view of other evidence and basis of decision.

Admission, in action for collision of automobile with pedestrian, of traffic ordinance of city, if error, was harmless, the machine's rate of speed being also in violation of state law, and the decision being based, not only on excessive speed, but on negligent operation, for which Civ. Code, § 1714, declared the owner of property liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by Hattie A. Simmons and others against Henry H. Stephens and another, partners as Southern California Stage Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. S. Laughlin and Muhleman & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment rendered against them in an action brought by the surviving widow and children of Frank Henry Simmons to recover damages on account of the death of the said Frank Henry Simmons, who was struck and instantly killed by an automobile driven by one of the employés of the defendants. The court, sitting without a jury, awarded plaintiffs a judgment in the sum of $3,000.

Appellants contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, and that the court erred in admitting certain evidence. There is no merit in any of appellants' points.

[1] The evidence in many respects is conflicting, but there is ample proof in the record to support the findings of the trial court that the deceased met his death through the negligence of the driver of the automobile. The accident occurred on January 4, 1918, at about the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening, at or near the intersection of Seventh and Ceres streets in the city of Los Angeles. The automobile at the time of the accident was being operated as a stage between San Diego and Los Angeles, and was on the in-bound trip going toward Los Angeles. Seventh street runs east and west, and on it there is constructed the double tracks of the street car company. Ceres street runs north and south and intersects Seventh street. There is a slight jog in Ceres street where it intersects Seventh street, the northerly intersection being a short distance to the east of the southerly intersection. The deceased, Simmons, a carpenter by occupation, lived near said intersection. During the evenings he was employed as doorkeeper at a moving picture theater located on Seventh street near the northwest corner of Seventh and Ceres streets. On the evening of the accident Simmons, who was 64 years of age and in full possession of all of his faculties, started straight across Seventh street, in a direction which, if he had succeeded in crossing the street, would have brought him immediately in front of the theater and only a few feet west of the most westerly line of Ceres street. According to the testimony of disinterested eyewitnesses, Simmons, before starting across the street, stood near the curb, and looked to his left for approaching vehicles which might be traveling down the right side of Seventh street. The street was clear and he started to cross, and when he reached a point between the north-bound and south-bound street car tracks he stopped and looked to the left and then to the right, and, observing the approach of the automobile stage from his right, remained stationary to allow the stage to pass in front of him. The stage at the time was traveling westwardly on the north side of Seventh street, with the left wheels running on or a little to the north of the farthest northerly rail of the street car track. When the stage reached a point about 40 or 50 feet from where Simmons had stopped the driver of the stage changed his course slightly to the left, which brought Simmons directly in front of the rapidly moving stage, and before Simmons could get out of the way he was struck by the stage and killed. The stage proceeded some 40 feet before it was stopped. The headlights of the stage were lighted at the time, and several witnesses estimated the speed of the machine immediately prior to the impact to be upwards of 25 miles an hour. It was fully shown that, had the stage continued in the straight direction in which it was traveling before the driver deviated its course it would entirely have cleared Simmons. Some of the witnesses testified that the horn was not sounded, and others that it was.

[2] The driver of the stage claims, and it is the theory of appellants on this appeal, that Simmons was proceeding across the street with his head down and his hat drawn down over his eyes, looking neither to the right nor to the left, and that as the driver of the stage endeavored to pass Simmons to the left and behind him, Simmons stepped back in front of the machine, and the impact was inevitable.

At best, this testimony raised a mere conflict, and in that state of the record the well-established rule is that the conclusions of the lower court will not be disturbed. Holroyd v. Gray Taxi Co., 179 Pac. 709; Covel v. Price, 179 Pac. 540.

[3] The court found and the evidence shows, that there was a space of over 15 feet of open clear roadway on either side of Simmons, through which the stage could have passed without colliding with him, and Simmons could be seen for a considerable distance down Seventh street. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the accident was unavoidable. Irwin v. Golden State Auto Touring Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 171 Pac. 1059. The trial court was fully warranted in finding upon the facts presented that the proximate cause of Simmons' death was the excessive speed of the stage and the negligent operation of it by the driver.

[4, 5] The court did not err in admitting certain evidence, as complained of by appellants. The declarations of the stage driver made subsequent to the accident were stricken out by the court on motion of appellants, and it can hardly be presumed, as appellants contend, that the court allowed itself to be influenced by such evidence, particularly in view of the fact that doubts were expressed by the court as to the admissibility of the proof when it was offered. If it was error at all to admit in evidence the traffic ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, it was harmless, for the reason that the rate of speed at which the stage was traveling at the time of the accident was also in violation of the state law, and the decision of the trial court was not based alone upon the evidence of excessive speed, but was also founded upon the negligent operation of the stage by the driver, which was in violation of the law of negligence as declared in the Civil Code. Section 1714.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the trial court is correct and, finding no error in the record, the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 245

PEOPLE v. MOORE. (Cr. 500.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District. California. June 18, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. False pretenses ⊜35—Information for misrepresentations that defendant was agent of another held sufficient.

An information alleging that defendant fraudulently misrepresented that he was the agent of others authorized to buy cattle for them, and that, relying on those representations, the prosecuting witness delivered cattle to defendant, and was thereby defrauded of them, sufficiently alleges that the cattle were delivered to defendant as the agent of the others to sustain a conviction.

2. False pretenses ⊜43(2)—Evidence that misrepresentations influenced delivery of property is admissible.

In a prosecution for obtaining cattle by false representations, it was not error to overrule defendant's objection to question whether defendant's statement influenced prosecuting witness in making the trade.

3. Criminal law ⊜419, 420(12)—Public weighmaster's certificate of weight of cattle is hearsay.

In a prosecution for obtaining cattle by false pretenses, the defendant's offer in evidence of the public weighmaster's certificate of the weight of the cattle was properly rejected as hearsay.

4. False pretenses ⊜48—Subsequent efforts of defendant to pay for property fraudulently secured not admissible.

Since the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses is complete when the property is delivered, it was not error to exclude evidence of defendant's offers and attempts to pay for cattle which he had previously obtained by falsely representing himself as the purchasing agent of others.

5. Criminal law ⊜390—Error to exclude denial by defendant of intent to defraud.

In a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, it was error to exclude testimony by defendant that he had no intention to defraud the prosecuting witness when he obtained the property.

6. Criminal law ⊜1186(4)—Exclusion of denial of fraudulent intent held not substantial error warranting reversal.

Error in excluding defendant's denial of fraudulent intent in obtaining cattle from prosecuting witness does not require reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, forbidding reversal for improper rejection of evidence unless the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice, where defendant had denied making the alleged false representations, and his testimony, if believed, completely exonerated him from the charge of fraud.

7. Criminal law ⊜1159(3)—Evidence held not to warrant reversal, notwithstanding defendant's denials.

Where the evidence for the prosecution sufficiently showed that defendant obtained cattle from the prosecuting witness by false pretenses, as alleged in the information, the conviction cannot be set aside for insufficiency of the evidence, though defendant's testimony conflicted with that of the prosecution and established his innocence if the jury had believed it.

8. Criminal law ⊜720(7)—Evidence held to authorize argument of prosecuting attorney.

In a prosecution for obtaining cattle by false representations that defendant was the agent of others, where the prosecuting witness had testified without objection that he had not been paid anything for the cattle delivered to defendant, it was not improper for the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument to call the jury's attention to the fact that prosecuting witness had received nothing for his cattle.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

J. W. Moore was convicted of obtaining property by false pretenses, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Levey & Lipman, of San Francisco, and Mannon & Mannon, of Ukiah, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem. The defendant, J. W. Moore, was convicted in the superior court of Mendocino county of the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] 1. Appellant claims that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the information; the objections to the information being that it is not direct and certain as to the offense charged, and that it fails to disclose any natural or causal connection between the alleged false representations and the delivery of the property to the defendant. The charging part of the information is as follows:

"The said defendant, J. W. Moore, on the 30th day of June, A. D. nineteen hundred and nineteen, at the said Mendocino county, state of California, and before the filing of this information, did then and there devising and intending by unlawful ways and means and by false and fraudulent pretenses and representations to obtain and get into his custody and possession the goods and personal property of W. H. Edmands, with intent to cheat and defraud and thereby then and there willfully and unlawfully, knowingly and designedly, falsely and fraudulently pretend and represent to W. O. Edmands that he, the said J. W. Moore, was then and there buying cattle for Lewis and McDermott, and that he the said J. W. Moore was then and there authorized by the said Lewis and McDermott to negotiate for the purchase of, and to purchase, cattle for said Lewis and McDermott as their agent, whereas in truth and in fact the said J. W. Moore was not buying cattle for the said Lewis and McDermott, nor any one acting in their behalf, to negotiate for the purchase of, nor to purchase, cattle as their agent, or otherwise, as he the said J. W. Moore, then and there well knew. And the said W. O. Edmands, then and there believing the said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations so made, as aforesaid by the said J. W. Moore to be true, and being deceived thereby, was induced by reason of the said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid to deliver, and did then and there deliver to said J. W. Moore 50 head of beef cattle of the value of about $5,095 lawful money of the United States of America and of the personal property of said W. H. Edmands, and the said J. W. Moore then and there, and by means of the said false and fraudulent representations so made as aforesaid, did then and there willfully and unlawfully, knowingly, designedly, and fraudulently receive and obtain from said W. O. Edmands the said goods and personal property hereinbefore described and set forth, with the intent to cheat and defraud said W. H. Edmands of the same, and the said J. W. Moore did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently take and carry away the same. Whereas in truth and in fact the said pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid was and were then and there in all respects utterly false and untrue and fraudulent, and whereas in truth and in fact the said defendant, J. W. Moore, well knew the said pretenses and representations so made by himself as aforesaid to be utterly false and untrue and fraudulent at the time of making the same. And the said defendant, J. W. Moore, then and there in the manner and by the means aforesaid did then and there and thereby willfully and unlawfully, fraudulently, knowingly, and designedly cheat and defraud the said W. H. Edmands of the said goods and personal property hereinbefore described and set forth. All to the damage of said W. H. Edmands. * * *"

In our opinion the demurrer was properly overruled. It is clear from the allegations of the information that the defendant falsely represented that in all his negotiations concerning the cattle mentioned in the information he was acting as the agent of Lewis and McDermott, and the fact that it is alleged that the cattle were delivered to the defendant does not render the information void in any respect whatever; for, if it were true that the defendant in all his negotiations concerning the purchase of the cattle was the agent of Lewis and McDermott, then it was proper that he should receive the cattle.

In the case of People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 Pac. 521, the defendant was convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses under section 532 of the Penal Code, and it was claimed by the defendant that the information did not show the causal connection between the false pretenses and the parting with the property by the prosecuting witness. The court, in passing upon this objection, uses the following language:

"We are of the opinion that as against the defendant's general demurrer the information should be held sufficient on appeal. While there is no direct allegation that the money was paid to the defendant as a subscription or loan to the 'Fatherland Magazine,' a reader of the information could hardly draw from it any other inference than that the payment was made for such purpose. It may be conceded that a direct allegation to this effect would have been more in accord with technical requirements. But what was intended to be charged in this connection is perfectly plain from the language in fact used, and no person of common understanding could fail to understand that it was substantially charged, by necessary inference at least, that the money was paid because of the alleged false representations, and for the purpose suggested thereby. Section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution provides that 'no judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, * * * for any error as to any matter of pleading, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.' We are satisfied that to reverse the judgment on this ground would be to entirely ignore this provision of our Constitution."

Applying this language of the Supreme Court to the information in the case at bar it is equally clear that no person of common understanding could fail to understand from reading the information that the defendant, in negotiating for the purchase of the cattle, falsely represented and pretended to W. O. Edmands that everything he was doing he was doing as the agent of Lewis and McDermott, and that by these false and fraudulent representations and pretenses he obtained the cattle, and that the prosecuting witness was thereby defrauded out of his property.

In People v. Haas, 28 Cal. App. 182, 151 Pac. 672, the court, in passing upon the sufficiency of an information for obtaining money or property by false pretenses, said that—

"An indictment or information charging the crime of obtaining money or property by false representations and pretenses must show the facts as to what the pretenses were; that there was an intent to defraud, the name of the person defrauded, with a description of the property and a statement of its value, together with an allegation that the false and fraudulent pretenses charged were relied upon by the party who claims to have been defrauded, and that he was induced thereby to part with his property."

In the case at bar all these necessary averments are fully alleged, and the information in this case is as full and complete as the information that the court in People v. Haas held to be sufficient. See, also, People v. Hines, 5 Cal. App. 122, 89 Pac. 858; People v. Donaldson, 70 Cal. 116, 11 Pac. 681. Tested by the principles announced in the foregoing cases, the information before us in this case is ample and sufficient. "It contains every essential allegation necessary to charge the defendant with the commission of the offense, and is calculated to fully acquaint him with the nature of the charge." People v. Hines, supra.

[2] 2. Complaint is made that the court erred in overruling defendant's objection to the following question propounded by counsel for the people: "Did the statements he was representing Lewis and McDermott have any influence with you in bringing about this trade?" We see no error in the court's ruling. Rightly understood, the question had the effect of simply asking the witness if he relied upon the false representations that defendant was the agent of Lewis and McDermott in the purchase of the cattle.

[3] Defendant offered in evidence what is termed the "public weighmaster's certificate of weight and measure" for these cattle. The court sustained an objection to the same, and in this ruling we think the court was correct, as the certificate was clearly hearsay and inadmissible.

[4] Appellant also contends that the court erred in sustaining an objection to the following question: "Did you or not on or about the 2d day of July, 1919, send your wife, Rosa Moore, to the Bank of California in San Francisco to arrange for the payment of this note?" We do not consider that this alleged act of the defendant was relevant or material to the issue involved in the case. To have allowed this question to be answered would have been to allow evidence of the act of a third party performed after the crime had been fully completed and consummated. Furthermore, the matter sought to be elicited by this question would be self-serving in character and would be irrelevant to any issue in the case, and we also find no error in the refusal of the court to allow the witness Friedman to testify in regard to a letter claimed to have been written by him to the prosecuting witness after the crime had been fully completed, and which had reference to an offer by defendant to pay to the prosecuting witness a certain amount of money which was claimed to have been received as part of the proceeds of the cattle.

[5] An objection was sustained to the following question asked the defendant: "Did you intend, Mr. Moore, at the time when you got these cattle from Mr. Edmands to cheat or defraud Mr. W. O. Edmands or W. H. Edmands out of those cattle or any of them?" We think this question was proper, and that the defendant should have been allowed to answer it. "The general rule is well settled that, under our system, a witness may be examined as to the intent with which he did a certain act, where that intent is a material thing in the action." Fleet v. Tichenor, 156 Cal. 343, 104 Pac. 458, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323; Wohlford v. People, 148 Ill. 296, 36 N. E. 107; Cummings v. State, 50 Neb. 274, 69 N. W. 756; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221, 19 Am. Rep. 158; People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576; 1 Jones' Law of Evidence, §§ 170, 170a; 12 Cyc. 403.

[6] But, while we think the defendant had the right to state to the jury his intent at the time he procured the cattle, still we do not consider that the ruling of the court on this question resulted in any serious error to the defendant. We are satisfied from an examination of the record that this error was not prejudicial to the defendant's case. He testified very fully as to the transaction; denied repeatedly of ever having told Edmands that he was acting for Lewis and McDermott; said that he told him that he was in business for himself and buying for himself. His testimony was utterly irreconcilable with the theory of the presence of any intent to cheat or defraud Edmands out of his cattle. It is perfectly plain from a full examination of the evidence given by the defendant that a further statement by him to the effect that at the time he got the cattle from Mr. Edmands he did not intend to cheat or defraud him out of the cattle could not have changed the views of the jury or affected the result. Fleet v. Tichenor, 156 Cal. 343, 104 Pac. 458, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323. To reverse the judgment for this error would be to ignore section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, which provides that—

> "No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any criminal case, on the ground of * * * the improper admission or rejection of evidence, * * * unless, after an examination of the entire cause including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

The objections to the questions asked W. O. Edmands as to offers of payment made at the meetings with defendant after the transaction at the police station in Berkeley and before his arrest were properly sustained by the court. The crime was complete at the time the defendant perpetrated the fraud upon Edmands and thereby procured his cattle.

[7] 3. It is next claimed that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. The evidence sufficiently shows that the defendant falsely represented to Edmands that he was acting for Lewis and McDermott, and, after so deceiving him, the cattle were taken over by the defendant, or, as the information alleges, were "delivered" to him. It appears that Edmands relied upon these false representations, that he was the agent of Lewis and McDermott, and was thereby defrauded out of his property. The gist of the offense lies in the making of the false pretenses which were made by the defendant for the purpose of defrauding Edmands and upon which Edmands relied and was thereby deceived and defrauded out of his cattle. Defendant on the trial claimed that the cattle had been actually sold to him, and that he did not receive their "delivery" to himself by reason of any false representations that he was the agent of Lewis and McDermott.

This defense of the defendant was by the verdict of the jury rejected, and this verdict is final and conclusive.

"Undoubtedly the defendant's own story exculpates him, but it was for the jury to say whether or not that story should be believed. The evidence was therefore sufficient to justify the verdict." People v. Rongo, 169 Cal. 71, 145 Pac. 1017.

In People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 Pac. 1069, it is said:

"For, if the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself, and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law—of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive."

[8] 4. Finally the appellant contends that the assistant prosecuting attorney was guilty of misconduct in his closing argument to the jury. But there is no merit in this contention. There was a proper basis in the evidence in the case upon which the attorney had the right to call the jury's attention to the fact that Edmands had received nothing from the defendant for his cattle. The prosecuting witness, W. O. Edmands, answered without objection to questions propounded by counsel for defendant as follows:

"Q. You also testified that this amount set out in that paper $5,095 was not paid, did you not? A. No; nothing, none of it has been paid. * * *

"Q. Mr. Edmands, in that conversation that you had with Mr. Moore on the 14th day of July, 1919, at Berkeley, Cal., and on the 15th day of July, did or did not Mr. Moore offer to pay you in full? * * * A. No. * * *

"Q. I will ask you if at that time an offer was not made to you for payment in full of this note by Mr. Terrill representing Mr. Moore, the defendant in this case. A. No."

This evidence, as above stated, was received without objection, and it furnishes a proper basis for all the argument of the assistant prosecuting attorney which was objected to by the defendant.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

48 Cal. App. 228

COOPER et al. v. SELIG et al. (Civ. 2113.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 18, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. Deeds ⟸155 — Granting clause considered in determining whether habendum creates condition subsequent.

Where deed to a city of a strip of land contained an unconditional grant of the strip "and the reversion," followed by a habendum clause, stating the grant was "for the purposes of a public road of said city," the inclusion of the reversion in the granting clause was important in determining whether a condition subsequent was created.

2. Deeds ⟸145—In view of granting clause, matter in habendum held to create a covenant and not condition.

Where a deed to a city granted the reversion, the habendum clause provision, "for the purposes of a public road of said city," has no greater force than if the grantee, in consideration of the conveyance, had promised to use the land for a highway, and must be construed as a covenant and not a condition, and the fee would not thereby be affected in the absence of a stipulation for forfeiture and re-entry, and upon abandonment of the road the property would not revert to grantor or his assigns.

3. Easements ⟸1—Granting clause not cut down by habendum clause of doubtful import.

If grantor intended to convey to city only an easement for a roadway, he could easily have expressed that purpose; and his failure to do so, together with the application of the principle that where the asserted modifying or limiting clause, in this case a habendum clause stating "for purposes of a public road of said city," is of doubtful import, the fee contemplated by the granting clause, in this case containing a reversion, will not be cut down, show he did not convey a mere easement.

4. Deeds ⟸90—Construed in favor of grantee.

A grant in a deed is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee under Civ. Code, § 1069.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Mary Cooper and another against William N. Selig and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, Howard F. Shepherd, and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Loewenthal, Loeb & Walker, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action is in ejectment to recover possession, together with the damages for use of a strip of land which was formerly a part of a public street in the city of Los Angeles. The evidence fails to show any interest in the property on the part of

T. A. Davis, and we shall, therefore, in the opinion refer to Mary Cooper as the only plaintiff and appellant. According to the statement of her counsel she claims relief "under the principle of law that the adjoining owner of realty owns the fee to the center of a street, subject only to the easement for street purposes, and upon the abandonment or vacation of the street, takes the fee freed of the easement." On March 11, 1882, John S. Griffin conveyed to the city of Los Angeles, by a grant, bargain, and sale deed in the usual form, but providing, however in the habendum clause that it was "for the purposes of a public road of said city" a strip of land sixty feet in width, being thirty feet on each side of a line which was described in the deed. At the date of this deed, the grantor was the owner of the land on the westerly and also on the easterly side of this 60-foot strip. This public road was called "Mission Road," and ran in a general north and south direction, and it will be referred to hereafter as "Old Mission Road."

In September, 1883, John S. Griffin conveyed to Louisa H. Griffin, his wife, certain land which lay on the westerly side of Old Mission Road and adjoined it along the portion of the former street here in controversy. Louisa H. Griffin recorded a plat of the property conveyed to her, calling it the "Park Tract," and showed her tract as adjoining Old Mission Road on the west. The lot which adjoined said road along the land here involved was designated on her plat as lot 17, block C. Thereafter, the title of Louisa H. Griffin in the Park tract (including said lot 17, block C) was, by decree of distribution made upon the settlement of the estate distributed to John S. Griffin; and this lot, by conveyance from said John S. Griffin, became the property of plaintiff Mary Cooper prior to the commencement of this action.

Shortly prior to the year 1915, the city of Los Angeles widened Old Mission Road to 100 feet, and moved it at the point here involved some 40 feet westerly from its former course. This wider street, referred to to herein as New Mission Road, being situated some 40 feet westerly and toward lot 17, block C, left a portion of the westerly half of Old Mission Road lying easterly from New Mission Road, which portion prior to the street being moved adjoined the said lot 17, block C. This abandoned portion of Old Mission Road was vacated by the city of Los Angeles under an ordinance, which was duly passed.

The defendant owned the land on the easterly side of the old road and bordering thereon, and after the new road was laid out he moved his fence up to the easterly line of said new road. It is conceded by appellant that respondent had a right to take possession of the portion of the old road which lay to the east of the center line thereof. The controversy, however, is over the strip which was bounded on the east by the center line of the old road and on the west by the new road, which strip is a part of the westerly half of the old road which formerly adjoined said lot 17, block C, of the Park tract.

Respondent characterizes the action of appellants as an attempt "to jump across the full breadth of New Mission Road, alight on the easterly line thereof, and interpose themselves between respondent and the present highway, depriving him of access to the road throughout the length of the strip of land described in his pleadings."

However, regardless of either party's animus or convenience, the question here is simply one as to the proper interpretation of certain instruments, and particularly of said deed from Griffin to the city of Los Angeles. For, if that deed conveyed to said city the entire estate in said strip of land, then it is conceded that the judgment of the lower court must be upheld. But, if thereby an easement only was granted, then it would be necessary to inquire whether any merit exists in the contention of respondent that appellant has not succeeded to the fee in said strip.

At the outset it may be stated that there is really no dispute that if the fee was conveyed to the city, no change in the title was effected by the abandonment of the street, but if the fee to said strip was in the owner of the abutting property, then upon said abandonment, the complete title became vested in said owner. San Francisco v. Center, 133 Cal. 673, 66 Pac. 83; Elliott, Roads and Streets, §§ 1190, 1191.

Various circumstances are suggested by both parties as lending support to their respective interpretations of said deed, but they seem to furnish little, if any, aid to the proper solution of the question. To ascertain the intention of the parties, we must rely upon the language which they used in the instrument, viewing it in the light of the recognized rules of interpretation for such cases.

[1] The granting part of said deed is as follows:

"The said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of five hundred dollars * * * does by these presents, grant, bargain and sell and convey and confirm unto the said party of the second part forever, all that certain tract and parcel of land situated in the city and county of Los Angeles, state of California, bounded and described as follows [describing it]. Together with all and singular, the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof."

Then follows the habendum clause:

"To have and to hold all and singular, the said premises, for the purposes of a public road of said city, unto the said party of the second part forever."

It is properly stated by respondent that except for the expression, "for the purposes of a public road of said city" in the habendum clause, there is not a word to indicate any intention than that the grant was of an unconditional fee. The question is whether this expression operates to limit the grant to that of an easement.

In urging their respective claims, both parties attach much importance to certain cases as precedents, which it may be well to notice briefly.

One view suggested by respondent is that any possible effect of said expression to limit the conveyance to an easement is obviated by the grant of the reversion, and it is said:

"The grant of the reversion is on its face a complete contradiction of the claim that it was intended by the parties that the reversion should not be granted."

In support of this particular contention is cited Vaughn v. Stuzaker, 16 Ind. 338, wherein one Bassenger had conveyed to Jenks certain property for the purpose of a street, together with the reversion and reversions. The court held that the effect of the reversionary clause was to vest in Jenks "the reversionary right, if any, that might have arisen out of the failure to apply the property to the purpose for which it was conveyed." Appellant claims that in holding that a reversion was created by the use of the words, "to have and to hold for the purposes of a public road," said decision is contrary to all other cases cited by respondent. Attention is also called to the fact that it is somewhat ancient, having been rendered in 1861. However, no doubt many important legal principles were promulgated by the courts long prior to that date. As to a reversion there is this to be said: If the deed herein conveyed an unlimited fee, or simply an easement for highway purposes, no estate would be created by operation of law, but if thereby was granted a fee upon condition subsequent, then, manifestly, upon the failure of said condition a reversionary interest would be involved. We may add that it is quite possible to construe said deed so as to fall within any of these designations. In other words, it would not be altogether unreasonable to say that it conveyed an unconditional fee, or simply an easement, or the fee upon condition subsequent. If we have the last of these, then, of course the grant of the reversion would be quite important. At any rate, the use of said expression seems to be some evidence of the intention of the grantor to convey to the grantee the entire estate in the property.

[2] In Greene v. O'Connor, 18 R. I. 56, 25 Atl. 692, 19 L. R. A. 262, the Supreme Court of Rhode Island held that the words, "this conveyance is made upon the condition that the said strip of land shall be forever kept open and used as a public highway, and for no other purpose," inserted between the description of the property and the habendum clause, did not create a condition subsequent, that it was merely a declaration of the purpose for which the land conveyed was to be used and improved, and that "such a declaration does not create an estate on condition, but merely imposes a confidence or trust in the land, or raises an implied agreement on the part of the grantee to use the land for the purpose specified."

In Kilpatrick v. Mayor of Baltimore, 81 Md. 179, 31 Atl. 805, 27 L. R. A. 643, 48 Am. St. Rep. 509, it was said that conditions subsequent are not favored in law, that they will not be raised by implication, and that a deed of land to a municipality which in the habendum clause adds the words, "as and for a street to be kept as a public highway," does not create a condition subsequent, and "the property does not revert to the grantor because of the failure to use it as a street."

In Rawson v. School District, 7 Allen (Mass.) 125, 83 Am. Dec. 670, the grant was to the public for a burying place, and the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that the deed was not to be construed as a grant on condition subsequent, solely for the reason that it contained a clause declaring the purpose for which the premises were to be used, particularly since such purpose did not inure specially to the benefit of the grantor and his assigns, but was in its nature general and public, and there were no words indicating an intent that the grant was to be void if the declared purpose was not fulfilled. The court said:

"Language so equivocal cannot be construed as a condition subsequent without disregarding that cardinal principle of real property already referred to, that conditions subsequent which defeat an estate are not to be favored or raised by inference or implication."

A similar view is expressed in Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) §§ 838b, 970.

In Eldridge v. See Yup Co., 17 Cal. 49, a lot had been conveyed to Athaie by deed of bargain and sale in usual form, except that in the habendum clause these words appeared:

"For the use of a Chinese Church, or place of religious worship or moral instruction, under his direction and in conformity to the rules of the See Yup Company."

The Supreme Court cited with approval cases holding that, after the words of grant in the usual form, any restriction upon the use of the land by the grantee is void, and "where the habendum clause is irreconcilable with the premises, the premises must prevail," and concluded that the mere direction in the deed as to how the property was to be used did not qualify the title nor raise a use or trust.

In Taylor v. Danbury Public Hall Co., 35 Conn. 430, the deed conveyed to the town a piece of land "for the sole use and purpose of a public highway." The court said:

"This deed conveys something more than an easement. Whatever effect ought to be given to the limitation under other circumstances, so long as the premises continue to be used for a highway the town has a complete title, in the enjoyment of which it cannot be disturbed, not only to a right of way, but to the fee of the land."

It was further declared that the grantors parted with their title to the original highway, and they had nothing left to convey.

There are other cases to the same effect, holding that such expressions as "for the purposes of a public road" are directory only, that they do not qualify or limit a grant which is in absolute form, or operate to reduce the conveyance to that of an easement only. Appellant attempts to distinguish those cases from this by urging the view that therein no contention was made that only an easement was conveyed, but that the controversy was whether an unconditional or a defeasible fee was granted. But the character of the estate was certainly involved, and the courts held that the fee was not qualified by the expression of the purpose to which the property was to be devoted.

Appellant has not cited any case to the contrary directly in point, but she claims that by somewhat analogous decisions her theory is supported.

Among these is Montgomery v. Sturdivant, 41 Cal. 290. Therein, though, the habendum clause plainly provided that the grantees were to hold the property for life and the court properly held that this was to be considered in determining the intention of the grantor. The Supreme Court said that without the habendum clause the deed would have conveyed an estate in fee simple, but that said clause could not be disregarded without ignoring the clear intention of the parties. The case was substantially the same as though the deed had provided that the party of the first part grants to the party of the second part certain real estate to have and to hold for the natural life of the grantee.

In Anderson v. Yoakum, 94 Cal. 227, 29 Pac. 500, 28 Am. St. Rep. 121, the controlling question was as to the effect of a quitclaim deed upon an after-acquired title, although the court said that an habendum clause may limit and qualify the interest conveyed. The case has no bearing upon the interpretation of the deed before us.

A case more nearly in point is Pellissier v. Corker, 103 Cal. 516, 37 Pac. 465. The deed therein provided:

"I, David Winbigler, for value received, do hereby grant to W. V. Rhinehart, his heirs and assigns, for the sole purpose of an alleyway, to be used in common with the owners of other property adjoining said alleyway, all that tract of land," etc.

The Supreme Court said:

"We think this deed is an express grant of an easement—a right to the use and nothing more."

It is to be observed, though, that the qualifying words are in the granting part of the deed and so clearly connected with the word "grant" as naturally to suggest that what was intended was simply to convey the right to the use of the property for an alley.

Moreover, said statement was entirely unnecessary to the decision, since there was, as the Supreme Court held, a dedication of the strip of land "for use as an alleyway by the owners of the adjacent lots," and as the use had not been abandoned such owners were entitled to continue it without interference, regardless of the question whether the fee or only an easement was conveyed by the deed to Rhinehart. The case did not involve, as does this, an action by one asserting title after the use has been discontinued, but it was brought by one of the owners of adjoining property for whose benefit the conveyance had been made for an injunction to restrain interference with the use of the property for an alleyway. Applying the principle to the case herein, it would, of course, not be contended that, if Dr. Griffin had conveyed said strip to a third party while the city was actually using it, the municipality could thereby be precluded from the further use of the land as a street regardless of the question whether the city owned the fee or simply an easement. It is to be further observed that in the Pellissier Case the court finally reached the conclusion that the legal title was held by Rhinehart, his heirs and assigns, in trust for the benefit of the other property owners and subject to an easement created by the dedication of the land as an alleyway. Probably there is not much difference in the legal effect of the two statements. At least, as far as the merits of that action were concerned, it was unimportant whether the deed to Rhinehart conveyed merely an easement or the fee in trust subject to the easement. But herein, if the deed to the city of Los Angeles conveyed the legal title in trust for the purpose of a highway, then significance should be attached to the grant of the reversion.

In Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049, the habendum clause clearly limited the interest conveyed to a life estate. It is true that the court said:

"The intention of the parties to the grant is to be gathered from the instrument itself and determined by a proper construction of the language used therein, but for the purpose of ascertaining this intention the entire instrument, the habendum as well as the premises, are to be considered, and, if it appear from such consideration that the grantor intended by the habendum clause to restrict or limit or enlarge the estate named in the granting clause the habendum will prevail over the granting clause."

In Burnett v. Piercy, 149 Cal. 178, 86 Pac. 603, it appeared from an examination of the deed and a contemporaneous instrument constituting a part of the same transaction that it was clearly the intention of the parties to convey a life estate, and the Supreme Court very properly said:

"When, upon a fair consideration of all the parts of a deed, and of the contemporaneous instruments constituting parts of the same transaction, it appears that it was the intention, by other expressions in the deed, to limit and qualify the effect and meaning of the granting clause, so that it should not operate to transfer the entire estate, but only a limited estate, the rule that repugnant conditions restraining alienation are void does not apply, unless the conditions refer to the limited estate actually granted. In such cases the other provisions in the deed operate on and affect its true meaning, the granting clause is to be taken in the limited sense which the entire instrument shows it was intended to have, and the limitations and conditions relating to the fee are not to be considered as repugnant to the grant, but as descriptive of the estate conveyed, and in harmony with the grant when truly interpreted."

The decision follows well-established principles, but it is controlling here only upon the assumption that the habendum clause shows an intention to limit the estate to an easement.

The principal question in Gordon v. Cadwalader, 164 Cal. 509, 130 Pac. 18, was as to the meaning of the term "heirs" used in the deed in controversy. From a consideration of the whole instrument it was held that the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and that the word "heirs" was not used in the technical sense. The situation there was so different from this that the decision cannot afford us much assistance.

Some cases from other jurisdictions are cited by appellant, but further than stating general principles that apply to the interpretation of deeds they are not in point.

While the case is not free from difficulty, yet, we think, the recital of the purpose for which the land was to be used should have no greater force than if the grantee in consideration of the conveyance had promised to use the land for the purposes of a highway. If such had been the case, it would not be disputed, in view of the decisions, that the promise to so use the land would be construed as a covenant and not a condition, and the fee would not thereby be affected, in the absence of a stipulation for forfeiture and re-entry.

[3, 4] In construing this instrument, it is difficult to overlook the fact that if Dr. Griffin really intended to convey only an easement, he could easily have so expressed his purpose. His failure to do so, together with the application of the principle that where the asserted modifying or limiting clause is of doubtful import the fee contemplated by the granting clause of the deed will not be cut down, and the rule that a grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee (section 1069, Civ. Code), in connection with the other considerations to which we have directed attention, lead us to the conclusion that the trial court should be upheld.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

48 Cal. App. 57

BUTTERS et al. v. BRAWLEY STAR et al.

(Civ. 2484.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 3, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜193(3)—Misjoinder of causes of action not considered for first time on appeal.

Under Kerr's Cyc. Code Civ. Proc. § 434, objection that plaintiff stated two causes of action in one statement cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

2. Witnesses ⊜275(7)—Cross-examination of defendant held proper in view of direct examination.

In an action against newspaper publishers for subscription contest prize, where one of the publishers had been examined on direct examination as to the rules of the contest, it was proper for plaintiff on cross-examination to produce copies of the newspaper containing the rules and question the witness in regard thereto.

3. Principal and agent ⊜177(3) — Principal chargeable with knowledge of agent.

Newspaper publishers were chargeable with knowledge of their agent that contestant for subscription contest prize had sold her votes to such agent and withdrawn from the contest, though she remained listed as an active contestant and received the votes secured by the agent.

4. Contracts ⊜189—Contestant for newspaper prize held not a legal contestant.

Where rules of newspaper subscription contest prohibited newspaper employés or members of their families from participating in the contest, a contestant, who sold her votes to an employé, but remained listed as an active contestant, receiving credit for votes procured by such employé, was not legally a contestant, and though she received the largest number of votes, the contestant receiving the next highest number was entitled to the prize, though the publishers had paid the employé a cash sum in lieu of prize, according to the rules of the contest.

5. Contracts ⟨=189—Consideration for assignment of right in prize contest held immaterial in action against offerer of prize.

Where contestant who received highest number of votes in subscription contest was not legally a contestant, having withdrawn from the contest and having sold her votes to an employé of newspaper, who thereafter secured votes in her name in violation of the rules of the contest, and where such contestant, after being declared winner, assigned her right to the prize to contestant who received the next highest number of votes, the latter contestant was entitled to the prize, in action therefor against publisher, regardless of the question whether there was a consideration for such assignment, since the assignor, not having been legally a contestant, had nothing to assign, and since no one except the assignor could raise the question of form or want of consideration.

6. Trial ⟨=419—Denial of nonsuit cured where defendant introduces evidence supplying defect.

Action of court in overruling motion for nonsuit because of insufficiency of evidence was cured, where defendant himself introduced evidence supplying the defect.

7. Estoppel ⟨=72—He who trusted most must suffer as between two innocent persons.

Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraudulent act of a third, it must be he who trusted most, or he whose misplaced confidence enabled the wrong to be committed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Anna D. Butters and husband against the Brawley Star, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Galen Nichols, of El Centro, for appellants.

Frank Birkhauser, of El Centro, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. By this action plaintiff seeks specific performance of an agreement to deliver a certain Overland automobile, or the payment of the sum of $795, the value thereof, if delivery cannot be made, and general relief.

From the record we gather that defendants were the publishers of a newspaper called the Brawley Star, at Brawley, Imperial county; that during a certain period—from May 13, 1916, to June 24, 1916, both dates inclusive—they conducted what is commonly known as a newspaper subscription contest, for the purpose of securing paid subscriptions for said newspaper; that as an inducement for candidates to obtain such subscriptions they offered as "first prize" a certain Overland automobile, the value of which, it is alleged, was $795, and for which plaintiff Anna D. Butters was one of the contestants; that for each paid subscription secured by any of the candidates a certain number of votes was credited to the contestant securing the same, or to whose credit a subscriber making a voluntary subscription might direct; and that at the end of such contest one Frances Blake, also a contestant, was declared to have received the largest number of votes, and was therefore claimed to be entitled to said automobile. It appears that thereafter said Frances Blake informed plaintiff that she—Miss Blake—was not entitled to the automobile in question, for the reason that she had not received 2,700,020 votes, as credited but, on the contrary, that her total vote was not in excess of 150,000; while the plaintiff, in the same count, had received 1,497,000 votes. According to Miss Blake, one Keane, the manager of said contest and an employé of said defendants, had used her name, as hereinafter set forth, and that by right the auto should have been awarded to plaintiff. Miss Blake thereupon made, executed, and delivered to said plaintiff Anna D. Butters a "writing," which, in words and figures, is as follows:

"Mr. De Rackin and Mr. Kintz: Please give the Overland automobile which I won through your contest to Mrs. Ralph Butters, as she is the one who is entitled to it. Frances Blake." (Mrs. Ralph Butters and Anna D. Butters, one of the plaintiffs, appear to have been understood to be one and the same person.)

In the complaint this instrument is referred to as an "assignment," and it is alleged that by it Frances Blake "assigned and transferred all her right, title, claim, and interest and any and all right she might or could have in and to said automobile to said plaintiff Anna D. Butters, for a valuable consideration." On the trial, however, the evidence shows that no consideration was given therefor. Thereafter plaintiff made demand on defendants for the delivery of the automobile, both by reason of the fact that she had actually received the highest number of votes in the contest and by virtue of the said "assignment," as the successor in interest of the rights, etc., of the aforesaid Frances Blake, which demand was not complied with by defendants, or any of them.

A general demurrer to the complaint was interposed. This was overruled by the trial court, which ruling is assigned as error.

Defendants answered, denying, except for certain formal portions of the complaint, all the material allegations thereof, and set up certain affirmatives defenses, which, however, in view of the record, it is unnecessary here to set forth. After trial the court found for the plaintiff, and in due time judgment was entered accordingly, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

[1] It is urged by appellants that the complaint does not state a cause of action. In this connection appellants say:

"* * * It is apparent that plaintiff intends to state two causes of action therein, which are commingled in one statement. One of these is (a) that plaintiff received the highest number of legal votes cast in the contest, and therefore won the first prize; and the other is: (b) that plaintiff purchased, by assignment from Frances Blake, the latter's interest in the first prize."

Although the complaint is far from what might be termed a model in pleading, we think it invulnerable to the general demurrer. Conceding specifications (a) and (b) of the argument above referred to to be well taken, and that if pressed in the trial court that the court would not have hesitated in sustaining them, still it is beyond the power of this court to act thereon, under the condition of the record before us. Section 434, Kerr's Cyc. Code of Civ. Proc. and cases cited thereunder.

The seventh finding of fact, as shown by the record, is as follows:

"That Frances Blake quit and withdrew from said contest on about June 10, 1916, at a time when she had not to exceed 100,000 votes, and was out of the said contest from that time on. That the person or persons in the employ of said defendants, to wit: E. A. Keane and Paul Du Pron, who took up the list of said Frances Blake and concluded it of their own accord did not do so according to the rules of said contest, and their taking up the same was not according to the said rules of said contest; that by reason of the fact that the highest number of subscriptions credited to the contestant who was regularly in the contest according to the rules thereof, is to the plaintiff herein, Anna D. Butters, and she therefore had the highest number of votes to her account."

From this it appears that whatever was done by Keane and Du Pron in connection with the contest was in violation of the rules thereof. The evidence upon which that finding is based was elicited on cross-examination of the defendant De Rackin, after plaintiff's case in chief had been closed, and while the defendants were putting on their case, and was received over the objection of defendants' counsel. The witness was asked if he had the newspaper's issues between the dates of May 13, 1916, and June 24, 1916, and as to whether they contained the rules under which the contest was to be conducted. Upon his giving an affirmative answer to these questions, the witness was asked to produce them. This was objected to by defendant "on the ground that it is improper cross-examination, and if they were competent at all it is part of plaintiffs' case in chief; they are incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." This objection was by the court overruled. Counsel for defendants then made the following objection:

"I want to object before you begin to read relative to the introduction of the papers; it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not proper cross-examination, and if competent at all should have been introduced in the plaintiffs' case in chief."

This objection was also overruled by the court.

[2] We have read the entire record. No doubt rests in our minds that the rulings made were correct. During the examination in chief of the defendant De Rackin, he was asked the following questions relative to the rules of the contest, and gave the following answers thereto:

"Q. Now, in regard to the rules of the contest; I will ask you whether or not a contestant could get credit for a slip mailed in with a subscription? A. Sure. Q. To be more definite, if I wanted to vote for Miss Blake, or one of those other ladies, I could have mailed to this office a check or money order, or anything else of that character that covered a certain amount of money, and then I would receive the paper, and the votes would be put in the ballot box? A. Yes, sir. Q. And would they or would they not go through the hands of the contestant in that case? A. Not necessarily."

This was on direct examination of the defendants' said witness, in reference to a part of the rules of the contest, and opened the door for the cross-examination permitted by the court. We think, therefore, that the ruling on the objection was proper. By this line of examination defendants supplied evidence without which plaintiff might have failed.

It is next urged that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, for the reasons: (a) That the so-called assignment executed by Frances Blake as aforesaid "is not an assignment at all, but a mere expression of opinion"; (b) that said assignment was given without consideration; and (c) was so executed and delivered "long after the said Frances Blake had sold whatever interest she had in the votes in said contest mentioned in said complaint, or the prizes to be won thereby, to another person." From the evidence it appears that plaintiff paid nothing for said "assignment." It also affirmatively appears that Frances Blake had, "about two weeks" before the contest closed, sold her votes to one Keane for $25, and thereafter took no further part in the contest, although her name continued to be carried in the Brawley Star as a contestant. The $25, however, were never paid to Frances Blake. It is further shown that one Du Pron, an employé of defendants, carried on the contest on behalf of said Frances Blake from the time of such sale and actual withdrawal by her from the contest to the close thereof, and solicited and secured subscriptions on his own behalf and that of one E. A. Keane, a coemployé of defendants, but in the name of said Frances Blake, and without her knowledge or consent. Because of this fact, we entertain serious doubt, even although we were to hold said "assignment" good, as to whether Frances Blake had any interest that she could assign or transfer. But with the record before us we think this point immaterial.

The rules of the contest provided, among other things, as follows:

"No employé or members of an employé's family will be allowed to enter the contest."

[3] Keane was the agent of the defendants Kintz and De Rackin. Keane employed one Du Pron and others to represent Frances Blake, but without her knowledge, in gathering subscriptions to said paper, and ostensibly on account of the contest in question. At the close of the contest, as shown by the record, the standing of the contestants was as follows: Miss Frances Blake, 2,700,020; Mrs. Ralph Butters, 1,497,940; Mrs. J. E. Ramsdell, 577,740; Miss Naomi Campbell, 415,515; Mrs. Earl McReynolds, 322,555; Mrs. Joe Winters, 149,590. According to the testimony of Frances Blake, she had not to exceed 100,000 votes to her credit at the time of her transaction with Keane as aforesaid. There is no contradiction of this testimony, except the showing made by the defendants themselves, as above set forth, as to the standing and showing of the respective contestants. From the date of the transaction last referred to Miss Blake was in fact out of the contest. The activities of Keane and those working under him were in fraud of both the newspaper proprietors, whose agents they were, the other contestants, and those who subscribed under the false impression that they were doing so to help Miss Blake, because of a violation of the "rules of the contest" which we have already pointed out. We find no evidence that either Mr. Kintz or Mr. De Rackin, the proprietors of the Brawley Star, had any personal knowledge of this violation of the rules mentioned. The evidence is conclusive that the name of Miss Blake was actually carried out as an active contestant to the end of the contest. This advertised fact, as we have already seen, was false. This was known to Keane, who was the agent of the defendants Kintz and De Rackin, and as such his knowledge, as a matter of law, was theirs.

[4] Under these conditions Miss Blake was not legally a contestant, and hence it naturally would follow that plaintiff, being the contestant, legally in the contest, receiving the highest number of votes cast, was entitled to the highest award offered. If this conclusion be correct, then the point which we are now discussing must be decided in favor of the plaintiffs. This is the point which has given us much trouble. In its consideration many questions have come up. Is the person, under conditions such as here exist, receiving the second highest number of votes so cast, but actually the highest number of votes cast for a legal contestant, entitled to the highest award? If so, is the principle involved in such a case as this different from that which prevails in an ordinary election contest? If a different principle prevails, what is the difference? Is it not possible that had Keane withdrawn Miss Blake's name from the contest and from the paper that the result might have been otherwise? These and many other questions have occurred to us.

[5] In the case of Bush v. Head, 154 Cal. 277, 97 Pac. 512, the Supreme Court held that—

"An unworthy motive could not convert the exercise of this right [the right to vote] into an illegal vote, within the meaning of the Code provisions under discussion."

In this case a candidate for judgeship had made promises that if elected he would not qualify for the office, but, after election, failed and refused to carry out the promises so made. From this appellants argue that—

"The party getting the second highest number of votes, even though the motive of the one receiving the highest number is bad, does not obtain the office, the votes being legal, even though the motive is bad."

In the case of Henry v. Jordan, 179 Cal. 24, 175 Pac. 402, the Supreme Court held that "a candidate who received next to the highest vote, the highest vote being obtained by the candidate for the nomination of another political party, which he did not receive, cannot be held to be the party candidate." The principle underlying the foregoing decisions does not, we think, maintain in the case at bar. In the foregoing cases there were the question of construction of both our Constitution and statutes, and there was also one of public policy. There was no question of fraud, either actual or constructive, involved. In the case at bar, the decision hangs almost, if not quite entirely, on the fraud practiced by the agents of defendants—the arrangement by them with one of the contestants legally in the contest by which the latter was to and actually did withdraw from the contest in favor of said Keane, which fact was kept from the public and the other contestants, as well as from the defendants Kintz and De Rackin. The name of the withdrawing contestant, Frances Blake, was carried in the paper as an actual contestant. By this arrangement it was made possible for Keane and his subordinates to ascertain from time to time the relative standing of the various contestants in the contest, and what it would be necessary for them to do, or the number of subscriptions which it would be necessary for them to procure in order to lead in the contest. This arrangement, too, was an absolute violation of the "rules of contest," as we have already seen. Under these conditions we do not think the cases just referred to apply. We hold, therefore, that the point which we are now considering must be decided against appellants, for the reason: (1) That we think that no one, save Frances Blake, can raise any question as to the validity of the "assignment" involved, either as to its form or want of consideration—and, so far as she is concerned, according to her own testimony it was given as an assignment of whatever right she may have had to the plaintiff herein—and (2) because it is immaterial, for the reason that at the time Frances Blake executed such purported assignment to plaintiff she had nothing to assign.

[6] At the close of plaintiffs' case defendants moved for nonsuit. The grounds of the motion for nonsuit did not include the fact that there was no evidence to show what the position of the plaintiff was in the contest. The only evidence of the number of votes polled for any one was that of the testimony of Miss Blake, which was that she had "not to exceed 100,000 votes." These, as we have seen, she had sold. The motion for nonsuit was denied. We think properly so. Christenson Lbr. Co. v. Buckley, 17 Cal. App. 37, 118 Pac. 466; De Leonis v. Hammel, 1 Cal. App. 390, 82 Pac. 349. Especially is this true when, even although granting that such ruling in certain cases were error, that error is cured where the defendant, as in this case, supplies the defect by evidence which he himself introduces. Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 46 Pac. 458; Higgins v. Ragsdale, 83 Cal. 219, 23 Pac. 316; Abbey, etc., Ass'n v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614; Winans v. Hardenbergh, 8 Cal. 291; Smith v. Compton, 6 Cal. 24. If there was any uncertainty as to the number of votes polled for plaintiff, irrespective of any rights which the said Frances Blake may have assigned to plaintiff, that was cleared away absolutely by a showing as to the number of votes polled for each purported contestant, and this included plaintiff. We think the evidence supports the judgment.

The next point urged is that "such decision and judgment is against law." We do not think it would serve any good purpose to quote the specifications urged in support of this contention. Suffice it to say that all have been considered, and we do not think the point well taken.

It is quite obvious now, we think, that the defendants Kintz and De Rackin, the owners, etc., of the Brawley Star, are free from actual fraud. The fact is, too, that they have paid the sum of $700, which was made possible by the "rules of the contest" to be accepted in lieu of the automobile, to said Keane. But Keane, being, by the rules of the contest, ineligible as a contestant for the reasons already stated, was not entitled to the same. His fraud was, as a matter of law, chargeable to the defendants Kintz and De Rackin. The plaintiff is also entirely free from any taint of such fraud, practiced as stated by said persons.

[7] We hold, therefore, that the plaintiff was the contestant legally in the contest receiving the highest number of votes so polled, and was entitled to the highest award. The rule applies that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fraudulent act of a third, it must be he who trusted most, or he whose misplaced confidence enabled the wrong to be committed. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, 60 Am. Dec. 618; Poorman v. Mills & Co., 39 Cal. 345, 2 Am. Rep. 451; Bedell v. Herring, 77 Cal. 572, 20 Pac. 129, 11 Am. St. Rep. 307; Tafft v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 84 Cal. 131, 24 Pac. 436, 11 L. R. A. 125, 18 Am. St. Rep. 166; Blaisdell v. Leach, 101 Cal. 405, 35 Pac. 1019, 40 Am. St. Rep. 65.

No other point urged needs consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WELLER, J.

48 Cal. App. 314

MOHN v. SUMNER. (Civ. 3128.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. June 26, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 23, 1920.)

1. Trespass ⊂=46(1)—Evidence held not to sustain finding for defendant.

Where the uncontradicted testimony showed that defendant, acting as attorney for plaintiff's wife, procured the dray and was present when all of plaintiff's personal property in the house was removed therefrom to another house selected by the wife during plaintiff's absence, a finding that defendant did not remove plaintiff's property from the house is not sustained by the evidence.

2. Evidence ⊂=317(2)—Declarations of plaintiff's wife to her attorney concerning difficulties with husband held hearsay.

In an action for damages caused by the removal of plaintiff's goods from his house during his absence, where defendant claimed to have been acting as the attorney of the wife, declarations by the wife to defendant concerning her difficulties with her husband, made out of the presence of plaintiff, are hearsay and incompetent.

3. Husband and wife ⟸22—Wife had no authority to remove or authorize removal of husband's property.

Under Civ. Code, § 103, authorizing the husband to choose any reasonable place or mode of living, and section 104, making it desertion by the husband to choose an unreasonable place or mode of living, in the absence of competent evidence that the residence and mode of living established by the husband were unreasonable, a wife had no authority as agent for her husband which justified the removal by the wife's attorney of the husband's property during the husband's absence from his residence.

4. Trespass ⟸30—Wife's attorney liable for removal of property from husband's home.

An attorney for a wife who has had disagreement with her husband cannot justify the removal of the husband's property from the home selected by him during the husband's absence on the ground of instructions by the wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. A. Luce, Judge.

Action by George F. Mohn against Charles E. Sumner for damages for trespass. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. R. Andrews, of San Diego, and Iverson L. Harris, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for a trespass alleged to have been committed by the defendant by wrongfully taking and removing from plaintiff's house the furniture of the plaintiff and all of his personal property therein. From the judgment entered in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The court found that it was not true that the defendant wrongfully or at all removed from the plaintiff's house and domicile plaintiff's goods and chattels contained therein. It is shown by undisputed evidence that on the 4th day of February, 1918, and for several years prior thereto, the plaintiff had resided with his wife in a house rented by him and known as "North House" on the "Point Loma Homestead Grounds," in the city of San Diego; that in the latter part of the year 1917, and thereafter, there were domestic difficulties between the plaintiff and Mrs. Mohn, and that the defendant as an attorney at law was from time to time consulted by Mrs. Mohn concerning her troubles with her husband; that on the 4th day of February, 1918, the plaintiff on going away from home, told his wife that he would be absent four or five days; that within the following week she received from him a letter mailed from Ash Fork, Ariz., through which place he was passing, in which plaintiff stated that he would return and be at home about the 1st of April, and gave her no address at which she might communicate with him; that Mrs. Mohn consulted further with the defendant, Sumner, and in conformity with advice given by him, she determined to remove from North House to a house which she rented on Front street in San Diego, and took with her out of North House all the personal property of the plaintiff therein, as well as her own personal belongings; that the defendant not only gave this advice as Mrs. Mohn's attorney at law, but rendered her some personal assistance in executing her plans; that the defendant employed drays for the purpose, and accompanied them to North House, where he remained throughout the day while the packing and moving was being completed. Without more ample statement of the testimony, we may say that we are satisfied that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the finding that the defendant did not at all remove any of the plaintiff's goods and chattels from North House. He was a participant in that removal, and may be held responsible therefor if the act was wrongful.

We are further of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the court's finding that the defendant "did not wrongfully and by force" remove said property. The plaintiff having proved that the property was his separate personal property left by him at his place of residence, and that during his absence it was taken away without his consent or knowledge, defendant having actively participated in the act of removal of the goods as above stated, plaintiff was entitled to recover the damages resulting therefrom, unless by other evidence the defendant was able to prove that his acts in the premises were not wrongful.

[2] Notwithstanding objections by the plaintiff, the court permitted the defendant and another witness in their testimony to repeat numerous statements made by Mrs. Mohn to the defendant concerning her difficulties with the plaintiff and the circumstances of his absence from home, upon which statements of fact the defendant based his advice to Mrs. Mohn. This testimony should have been excluded. The defendant was not charged with having committed any wrong as an attorney at law in giving advice to his client upon any statement of facts which she had made to him. Defendant's liability, if any, to plaintiff in this action arises from defendant's acts wherein he took part in the removal of the property, and not from anything done by him as a counselor or attorney at law. His acts in connection with the taking away of plaintiff's property might be justified by establishing the right of Mrs. Mohn to remove the property, and that he was merely an agent acting for her and at her request; but the facts offered to establish her right should not have been permitted to be proved by the repetition of statements made by her without the presence or knowledge of the plaintiff. If we leave out of consideration the evidence thus erroneously admitted, there remains very little in the case except the undisputed facts first above stated. On these facts it must be determined whether or not Mrs. Mohn, in the exercise of her right to separate herself from the family domicile, was further entitled to remove therefrom the personal property of her husband which he had placed there for the purpose of establishing a home in that place.

[3] "The husband may choose any reasonable place or mode of living, and if the wife does not conform thereto, it is desertion." Civ. Code, § 103. "If the place or mode of living selected by the husband is unreasonable and grossly unfit, and the wife does not conform thereto, it is desertion on the part of the husband from the time her reasonable objections are made known to him." Civ. Code, § 104. Since in this case there is no competent evidence that the place and mode of living established by the plaintiff at North House were either unreasonable or grossly unfit, we must, for the purposes of the present action, assume that Mrs. Mohn was under obligation to remain in the home so established, or to leave her husband's property there if she chose to go away. Circumstance no doubt might have existed which would have justified her in vacating the house and taking away all its contents, and which would have raised the presumption of agency on her part to act for him and would have further raised the presumption of his consent thereto. But under the only admissible evidence produced at the trial the plaintiff's property was taken away, and his residence placed in an uninhabitable condition upon the mere willful desire of his wife; and the defendant, with complete knowledge of the circumstances, aided her in carrying out that design. The precise question of liability here presented seems to be without precedent in this state, and very few similar cases have been found elsewhere. In Schindel v. Schindel, 12 Md. 108, the plaintiff and defendant were brothers who had married sisters. A separation having occurred between the plaintiff and his wife, the husband went to his father's house and the wife went to her mother's house. A few days later the defendant entered the plaintiff's house and took away certain furniture, claiming that he did so by the direction and in the presence of the plaintiff's wife. The court based its decision upon the fact that the husband and wife were living separate from each other, and held that under those circumstances the wife was not her husband's agent. "The acts, therefore, of the defendant cannot derive a justification from any license or authority conferred by the wife of the plaintiff, while she was living apart from him." In Heyert v. Reubman (Sup.) 86 N. Y. Supp. 797, the defendant was the father of the plaintiff's wife, and the action was for conversion of a quantity of household furniture belonging to the plaintiff. During the plaintiff's absence from home the defendant took away all of plaintiff's furniture therein, and sought to justify upon the ground that plaintiff's wife had come to his house and said that she had trouble with her husband, and asked that the defendant take the furniture. The court, in affirming judgment in favor of the plaintiff, said:

"We may infer that plaintiff and his wife had trouble. The plaintiff's ownership of the property, however, and the defendant's exercise of dominion and control over it, is undisputed, as is its value. Clearly, the wife had no authority, express or implied, to authorize the defendant to enter plaintiff's home and take possession of the property and remove it. * * *"

[4] The provisions of the Civil Code, to which we have referred, would have very little force or effect, and the right of a man (even though married) to retain possession of his personal property, placed by him in his own house, would be a right of no substance or value, if it were held that the wife, whenever a shadow of discord falls upon them, may, without just cause, change the domicile and remove her husband's property to some distant place without his consent. Since she has not that right, any person who, at her mere request, and with knowledge of the circumstances as they were known to this defendant, takes part in the seizure and removal of the husband's goods, should be held liable for the resulting damage if he is unable to prove facts establishing her special authority and justifying his conduct under the circumstances.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

48 Cal. App. 257

PEOPLE v. BAY SIDE LAND CO. et al.

(Civ. 3088.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 21, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 21, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1920.)

1. Nuisance ⟸84—Complaint under Redlight Abatement Act held sufficient.

A complaint for the abatement of a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act, which alleged that the building was used for purposes of lewdness, prostitution, and assignation, and that certain named lewd persons occupied the premises and then and there solicited sexual intercourse, is sufficient, though it does not allege that sexual intercourse was committed on the premises.

2. Nuisance ⟸84—Testimony of detective held proper.

In an action to abate a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act, a judgment of abatement will not be reversed because of the evidence given by stool pigeons employed by the district attorney, where those witnesses had not solicited any of the acts testified to, but merely related to acts they observed by others.

3. Nuisance ⟸65—Place used for "lewdness" may be abated, though no prostitution is there committed.

A place used for acts of lewdness may be abated as a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act, though no prostitution committed therein; "lewdness" including prostitution and assignation and other immoral or degenerate conduct or conversation between persons of opposite sexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Lewdness.]

4. Nuisance ⟸65—Ignorance of owner no defense to abatement of disorderly house.

Premises may be ordered closed under the Redlight Abatement Act, though the owner had no knowledge of the improper use thereof, since the object of the act is not to punish, but to reform the property.

5. Nuisance ⟸65—Knowledge by employés of café of immoral acts imputable to proprietor.

The knowledge or gross negligence of the employés of a café where immoral acts were openly committed is imputed to the proprietor, so that his ignorance thereof is no defense to abatement of the café as a nuisance.

6. Appeal and error ⟸1050(1)—Admission of evidence held not prejudicial in view of other evidence.

In an action to abate a disorderly house, the admission in evidence of acts committed at another place by parties who had met at the place in question and there agreed to go to the other place for the purpose of committing those acts does not require reversal, where there was other competent testimony as to immoral acts in the place in question sufficient to sustain a judgment of abatement.

7. Nuisance ⟸84—Evidence of reputation of disorderly resort held competent.

In an action under the Redlight Abatement Act, the admission of evidence of the reputation of the place in surrounding localities, all situated within 20 miles of the place in question, and from which the visitors frequently went to the place where defendant's premises were located, is competent.

8. Nuisance ⟸84—Evidence held to show that disorderly house had not been abated.

Where there was evidence that defendant's premises had been conducted as a disorderly house, and there was no evidence of any change in its conduct, but the proprietor himself testified that it was managed at the time of the trial as it always had been, there was sufficient evidence to justify a finding that the nuisance was not abated on a stated date before the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against the Bay Side Land Company and others to abate a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bordwell & Mathews, of Los Angeles, for appellant Bayside Land Co.

G. M. Spicer, of Long Beach, for appellant White.

L. A. West, Dist. Atty., and W. F. Menton, both of Santa Ana, and Alex P. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WELLER, J. Action to abate a nuisance under the provisions of the Redlight Abatement Act (St. 1913, p. 20). The court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, ordered the building closed for the period of one year, and directed the personal property located therein to be sold and applied as provided in the act.

Separate appeals were taken by Louie White, the proprietor of the place and owner of the furniture, and by Bayside Land Company, the owner of the real property and building. For convenience, these appeals will be considered together.

The complaint alleges that defendants "have used said premises, said building, the furniture, fixtures, and musical instruments in their possession, for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, * * * and during all of said times said premises and said café in said building has borne the reputation in the community in which it is situated as a house of lewdness, assignation, and ill fame, and a place where lewdness, prostitution, and assignation are encouraged and allowed; that on the 30th day of November, 1918, said building and premises were occupied by Beatrice Swanner, Viola Johnson, and Irene Fucha as lewd and dissolute persons, and then and there solicited acts of sexual intercourse."

[1] It is claimed that there is "an utter absence of any allegation that any acts of lewdness, prostitution, and assignation occurred on the premises." It was held in People v. Arcega, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 1188,[1] that the allegation that the building was used for the purpose of prostitution was sufficient. Here we have an additional averment that certain named lewd and dissolute persons occupied the premises and then and there solicited acts of sexual intercourse. We think these allegations sufficiently clear and explicit to inform the defendants of the character of the charge against the property, and to tender an issue.

[2] Counsel indulge in considerable vituperative criticism of the action of the district attorney in employing "stool pigeons" to obtain evidence in regard to the conduct of the café, and cite cases in which the use of such methods has been condemned by the courts. Suffice it to say that in no instance was any of the "soiled doves" decoyed by the "stool pigeons" into committing any of the many acts of lewdness testified to by the latter on the witness stand. The investigators related what they saw with reference to the actions of other guests, and only once did any of them participate in the dissolute practices which were indulged in by the guests of the place, and then only by acquiescence in the proposal of one of the alleged occupants of the building.

[3] The principal contention of appellants appears to be that the decision is not justified by the evidence for the reason that no acts of prostitution or assignation were actually committed on the premises. The finding on this issue is as follows:

"That at all times mentioned in the plaintiff's complaint the defendant Louis White, whose true name is Louie White, has used the premises and the building thereon located, commonly known as the Tower Café, and the furniture, fixtures, and musical instruments therein and in his possession and under his control, for the purpose of lewdness, and in conducting a place where lewdness, assignation, and prostitution were and are encouraged; that the evidence shows, and the court finds, that no acts of prostitution or assignation were actually committed on said premises; that the building located on the premises hereinbefore described, commonly known as the Tower Café, and said premises occupied by him as aforesaid, and the said furniture, fixtures, musical instruments therein were, and now are, by reason of such use, a public nuisance under the statutes of the state of California known as the Redlight Abatement Act."

While the court finds that no acts of prostitution or assignation were actually committed on the premises, it does find that the premises were used for the purpose of lewdness, which was permitted and encouraged thereon.

This finding is challenged as being inconsistent and unjustified. It is insisted that the words "lewdness," "assignation," and "prostitution" are synonymous. With this we cannot agree. "Lewdness" is of much broader significance than the other two words, and includes their meaning as well as all other immoral or degenerate conduct or conversation between persons of opposite sexes, such as were practiced by the frequenters of the café, as related by the witnesses. The lewdness and licentiousness disclosed by the record here as having occurred on the premises is not only disgusting and revolting in itself, but leads inevitably to illicit intercourse, and, undoubtedly, was in the contemplation of the Legislature when it adopted the statute, and was intended to be included within the terms of the act.

[4, 5] Counsel for both the owner of the premises and the proprietor of the business complain that knowledge of the vicious propensities of the guests was not brought home to either of them, and that therefore neither should be made to suffer because of some unknown and unauthorized acts of others. It is unfortunate that such drastic punishment must be inflicted on the innocent to prevent similar occurrences; but the evil sought to be remedied demands harsh treatment, and the owner whose premises are used for immoral purposes must suffer the consequences. As was said in People v. Casa Co., 35 Cal. App. 194, 169 Pac. 454, the object of the act is not to punish; its purpose is to effect a reformation in the property itself. Much of the lewd conduct of visitors was committed openly and brazenly, without any attempt at concealment; and it is inconceivable that it should have escaped the eyes of some of the employés of the management. It is in evidence that one of the waiters, when asked if it was permissible to accost an unattended girl, informed his interrogator that he "might go as far as he liked, so he didn't tip the tables over." The knowledge or gross negligence of his employés must be imputed to the proprietor.

[6] The action of the court in admitting testimony of acts of prostitution at a neighboring hotel is assigned as error. It appears from the record that a party of some nine persons, among whom were the investigators from the office of the district attorney, were at the Tower Café (the premises involved in this suit), and while there made an assignation to repair to the other place where rooms might be obtained, and where, as stated by one of the women, "they could have a real party." Pursuant to the assignation made on the premises, they did go to the Seal Inn, and there rented rooms, and some of them indulged in lewd acts. Probably the court admitted this testimony for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the purpose of the assignation so made was consummated. It was error to receive testimony of conduct elsewhere, but, as there was ample evidence aside from that erroneously admitted to sustain the findings, we do not consider that the ruling prejudicially affected the defense.

[1] Rehearing granted.

[7] The act provides that "evidence of the general reputation of the place shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the existence of said nuisance." One witness testified on cross-examination to conversations regarding the reputation of the Tower Café had with persons residing in Santa Ana, Anaheim, Long Beach, and in the southwest part of Orange county. These places are all within a radius of 20 miles from Seal Beach, and consequently may be said to be in the vicinity of the premises in question. Many of the visitors to this resort came from the places mentioned and would be in a position, from their experiences, to form an opinion as to its character, and from their statements, based on observation, would result the foundation for the reputation of the premises. There were other witnesses who testified to the bad reputation of the place in the city of Seal Beach, where the café is situated, which would justify the court in finding that its general reputation was unsavory. As above mentioned, the statements regarding conversations with persons in the other cities mentioned were elicited on cross-examination, and at most would go only to the weight of the testimony of the witness, and not to its admissibility.

[8] Appellants attack the finding that the nuisance was not abated on the 1st of December, 1918, as not justified by the evidence. There is nothing in the record to show that it was managed in any different manner after that date, and the proprietor testified that at the time of the trial it was still being conducted in the same way as before. This was ample justification for the finding.

We have considered all the points urged by appellants, and find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; THOMAS, J.

48 Cal. App. 253

PEOPLE v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3089.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 21, 1920. Rehearing Denied July 21, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹1011(1)—Court's finding on conflicting evidence cannot be reviewed.

On appeal from a judgment abating a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act, where there was sufficient evidence by the plaintiff to sustain the findings by the trial court, though there was a sharp conflict between that evidence and that of defendant, the appellate court cannot pass on the credibility of the witnesses.

2. Nuisance ⟹84—Evidence held to show a nuisance within Redlight Abatement Act.

In an action to abate a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act, evidence of conduct by eight persons assigned to two rooms therein held sufficient to sustain the finding that the house was a nuisance, notwithstanding the proprietor's claim that he believed them all to be married.

3. Nuisance ⟹85 — Entire building may be closed under Redlight Abatement Act.

Where building was operated as a café and hotel under one management, the whole building may be closed under the Redlight Abatement Act, though certain parts of it, such as the kitchen and restaurant, were not shown to have been used for immoral purposes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against Doc Smith and others to abate a nuisance under the Redlight Abatement Act. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. M. Spicer, of Long Beach, for appellants Smith and Blankenship.

Bordwell & Mathews, of Los Angeles, for appellant Stanton.

L. A. West, Dist. Atty., and W. F. Menton, both of Santa Ana, and Alex P. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WELLER J. This action was commenced under the Redlight Abatement Act (St. 1913, p. 20) against the owners and proprietors of a place in Seal Beach known as the Seal Café and Seal Inn.

The complaint alleges, and the court finds, that the premises were used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Much of the argument advanced by appellants is disposed of in the opinion this day filed in the case of People v. Bay Side Land Co. et al., 191 Pac. 994, and need not receive further notice here.

The main point urged by appellants as ground for reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings regarding the use of the property. The building in question was a two-story structure, the lower floor of which was used as a café where meals and drinks were served, and music furnished that the patrons might dance. In a separate portion of the lower floor was a grillroom, from which a stairway led to the floor above. The second story was divided into sixteen bedrooms, for the accommodation of guests. At the times to which the testimony refers several of the rooms were occupied by permanent roomers and a few were reserved for transients.

Witnesses for the prosecution related that nine persons, four of them employed by the district attorney, met at the Tower Café, a short distance from the premises in controversy. At the suggestion of one of the women they agreed to visit the Seal Inn for the purpose of obtaining rooms, and, as she put it, "have a real party." Agreeably to this appointment, they repaired to the Seal Café and there partook of liquid refreshments, and some of them danced together. Arrangements were made by this woman for two rooms for the party, and, on ascending the stairs, they were met by defendant Smith, one of the proprietors who asked them to register. One of the men inquired how that was to be done, and another replied: "Oh, just pair off any old way; it doesn't make any difference; we will sign up." This was done, each man registering a woman and himself as man and wife, under assumed names. Eight persons were assigned to the two rooms, but shortly afterward Smith notified them that he had procured another room, which was accepted. Two of the couples then paired off, one pair going to each of two rooms, where they divested themselves of their clothing and went to bed together. The four others, three of whom were the investigators, remained in the third room. Thereupon the woman who had suggested the "party" proposed that she would undress for $2, and, apparently without waiting for an acceptance of her proposal, did so, with the exception of her undergarments. In this condition she proceeded to indulge in what may be termed her idea of a "real party," and raised such a commotion that the housemaid came into the room and told her she should be more quiet. This was the conditions of affairs when the district attorney arrived on the scene and arrested the participants in the revelry.

The maid testified that frequently the rooms were occupied by more than one couple during the night, usually Saturday and Sunday, and that she was sometimes called on to make up rooms which had been used, not infrequently as late as 1 o'clock in the morning, and that they were thereafter occupied by others. Several witnesses stated that the reputation of the place was bad in the immediate vicinity of its location and over a considerable area in addition.

The defendant Smith said that when the nine persons presented themselves for assignment to rooms he inquired if they were all married, and was informed that they were, and upon such assurance he assigned them to the rooms. The defense introduced testimony to the good reputation of the place and the orderly conduct of its patrons.

[1] This sharp conflict of the evidence was resolved in favor of the plaintiff by the trial court. There was sufficient testimony, if believed by it, to justify the conclusion, and we cannot pass upon the credibility of witnesses.

[2] It is asserted by appellants that one act of assignation or prostitution does not constitute a nuisance under the provisions of the act. Conceding this to be the law, nevertheless the deductions to be drawn from a single act, when considered in connection with all the attendant circumstances, may properly form the basis for finding that the practice is habitual. We must assume, in support of the judgment, that the court below believed the statements of the witnesses that it made no difference how they were registered, and that the defendant acquiesced in that assertion. Moreover, he admits that he put eight people in two rooms; and, even though they were all married, it is considered somewhat unconventional, at least, for two married couples to occupy the same bed at the same time. The fact that these people showed a willingness to share the privacy of their sleeping quarters should have aroused his suspicion as to the purity of their intentions. Such laxness of management and disregard of the moral code instanced on one occasion might reasonably lead to the inference that such occurrences were common.

[3] Objection is made to the inclusion in the decree of the Seal Café, or the lower portion of the building, as no acts of lewdness are shown to have taken place there. Entrance to the upper floor was gained through the grill, which was separated from the main dining room by the kitchen, and was accessible to the street through an outside entrance. As we understand the situation, the dining room and grill and the inn above were covered by one roof, under one management and conducted as one business, and we do not believe that the court is required to designate or segregate with particularity the portions of an entire establishment which constitute the nuisance. The kitchen might be innocuous in itself, but is a part of the premises, and accessory to them, and may properly be included in the decree.

After carefully reviewing the record, we are of the opinion that no error was committed by the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; THOMAS, J.

48 Cal. App. 405

KING v. HARFORD. (Civ. 3223.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 1, 1920.)

1. Railroads ⟸152—Bonds secured by mortgage not "negotiable instrument" before amendment of Code.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3088 and 3093, defining negotiability as they existed prior to the amendments in 1915 and 1917 (St. 1915, p. 99; St. 1917, p. 1535), a railroad bond payable to bearer and reciting that it was secured by mortgage to trustees was not negotiable.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Negotiable Instrument.]

2. Principal and agent ⟸160½ — Purchaser from agent selling property as his own cannot rely on power of sale.

Where an attorney for administratrix and sole legatee sold as his own a bond delivered to him to be listed as property of the estate, a remote buyer of the bond cannot rely on a general power given the attorney to sell property as a defense to recovery of the bond by the legatee.

3. Executors and administrators ⟸158—Sole legatee administering estate cannot sell personalty without order.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1517, before its amendment in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 1178), making invalid sale of any property of a decedent unless under order of the superior court, an administratrix who was sole legatee could not sell without a court order a bond belonging to the estate, and therefore a buyer of such bond from the attorney of the estate could not rely on the legatee's power of sale to the attorney.

4. Principal and agent ⟸183(1) — Owner of bond sold by agent held not guilty of laches.

Where an attorney, who sold as his own a bond delivered to him by the administratrix and sole legatee of an estate, paid the interest on the bond to the legatee, who did not discover the sale until 4 months before her death, an action by the executor of the legatee begun within 3½ months after her death was not barred by laches.

5. Estoppel ⟸54—Reliance by buyer on settlement with agent wrongfully selling bond necessary to estop owner.

The remote buyer of a bond wrongfully sold by an attorney cannot defeat recovery of the bond by the former owner on the ground of estoppel based on transactions between the owner and the attorney of which the buyer had no knowledge, and on which, therefore, she did not rely.

6. Mortgages ⟸38(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that deed was taken as security, not as settlement.

In an action to recover a corporate bond wrongfully sold by the attorney for the owner, evidence that deeds given by the attorney to the owner contained a clause that they were executed as security is sufficient to sustain a finding that the owner accepted the deeds as security, and not as settlement of her claim to the bonds.

7. Principal and agent ⟸183(1)—Restriction of remedies to foreclosure not applicable in suits against strangers.

Code Civ. Proc. § 726, making action for foreclosure the only remedy to enforce an obligation secured by mortgage, is not available as a defense to an action to recover a bond wrongfully sold by an agent who had given a mortgage to secure the owner, where the action was against a buyer of the bond not a party to the mortgage, and especially where it appeared that all value of the equity conveyed by the mortgage had been lost through no fault of the owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by George L. King, as executor of the last will and testament of Elizabeth Maguire, deceased, against Mary I. Harford. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan Moran, of San Francisco (Chas. S. Wheeler, John F. Bowie, and A. A. Heer, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Frank D. Stringham and Beverly L. Hodghead, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an action based upon a bond and interest coupons of the Southern Pacific Railway Company. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the return of the bond and coupons, or their value in case delivery thereof could not be had. Defendant appeals from the judgment under the alternative method.

[1] The bond in suit is one issued by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, having semiannual coupons attached, known as a first refunding mortgage gold $1,000 bond. It is made payable to bearer and secured by a mortgage on certain real and personal property of the Southern Pacific Company, as set forth upon the face of the bonds. As the transactions involved herein occurred in 1914, prior to the amendments in 1915 and 1917 (St. 1915, p. 99, St. 1917, p. 1535) of sections 3088 and 3093, Civil Code, the bond was nonnegotiable. Kohn v. Sacramento Elec. Gas & Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 1, 141 Pac. 626; Crocker Natl. Bank v. Byrne & McDonnell, 178 Cal. 329, 173 Pac. 752. Defendant thus took the bond subject to all legal or equitable defenses.

The bond came into the possession of defendant in the following manner: It was part of the assets of the estate of Patrick Maguire, of which estate Elizabeth Maguire, plaintiff's testatrix, was the administratrix with the will annexed. She was the widow of Patrick Maguire and the sole legatee under his will. She delivered the bond in suit (together with other bonds of like character) to one Shay, her attorney in the administration of the estate, as the court found, for safe-keeping and convenience in preparing the inventory and appraisement. He also collected the amount due on the coupons. Shay included this bond in the inventory which he filed in the estate. But before distribution was had, and on June 29, 1914, without any order or authority of court therefor, and without the knowledge of Elizabeth Maguire, he delivered possession of the bond to stockbrokers, who sold the same, under his instructions, for his account and as his personal property, he retaining the proceeds thereof, amounting to $941. After several successive transfers, and on July 30, 1914, defendant purchased this bond in the open market without knowledge of any equities or claims of the Patrick Maguire estate, or any one else, in respect thereto. She paid $890 therefor, the full market price at that time. Thereafter, and on October 5, 1914, all the estate of Patrick Maguire, including the bond in controversy, was distributed to Elizabeth Maguire in her individual capacity. Elizabeth Maguire first became aware that Shay had parted with possession of the bond about January, 1916, more than a year after distribution of the estate. At that time Shay offered by way of adjustment to have conveyed to Mrs. Maguire, subject to incumbrances thereon, three pieces of property located in Alameda and Santa Cruz counties. In March, 1916, Shay and his wife, in accordance with this offer, executed two deeds covering that property. These deeds were recorded May 20, 1916. Shay and his wife thereafter signed a statement also dated May 20, 1916, reciting that the deeds "were executed for and intended as security for an obligation, and not otherwise." Elizabeth Maguire died testate in the city and county of San Francisco on the 24th day of May, 1916; and plaintiff brought this action as executor of her will on September 11, 1916.

Appellant relies upon four defenses on appeal:

(1) That there was no conversion. The answer sets up the defense, among others, that at the time of the sale of the bond Shay was attorney in fact for Elizabeth Maguire individually, as well as attorney for her as administratrix of the Patrick Maguire estate, and that she had given him, as such attorney in fact, full power to sell or dispose of the bond. Appellant contends that there was no conversion because Shay sold under this power of attorney. With respect to this matter Shay testified that Elizabeth Maguire gave him a general power of attorney to act for her individually shortly after she was appointed administratrix of the Patrick Maguire estate; that it had never been revoked; that it was not recorded, and he could not locate it to produce upon the trial. Appellant thereupon attempted to prove by oral evidence Shay's authority from Elizabeth Maguire under the power of attorney to sell personal property. The court sustained respondent's objection on the ground that evidence of the contents of the instrument was inadmissible because a power of attorney from Elizabeth Maguire to sell property of the estate would be void. Appellant urges, however, that respondent bases his right to maintain this action upon the ownership of the bond by Elizabeth Maguire as a legatee under the will of Patrick Maguire, and not upon her right as administratrix to possession of the bond during the period of administration of the estate of Patrick Maguire; that Elizabeth Maguire, as sole legatee under the will of Patrick Maguire, was the owner and could convey title subject to administration; that, if Elizabeth Maguire, as such legatee, did in fact authorize the sale of this bond by the power of attorney given to Shay, her after-acquired right to possession inured to the benefit of appellant, and there was no conversion; that evidence to show such authorization was competent, and its exclusion constituted prejudicial error.

[2, 3] The difficulty with appellant's argument is that Shay did not sell under any power of attorney. Neither did he attempt to sell Elizabeth Maguire's interest as a legatee in the undistributed estate. He sold the bond as his own property and delivered possession to the purchaser. Moreover, Elizabeth Maguire herself had no authority, either as legatee under the will or administratrix of the estate, to sell its assets (Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 412, 38 Pac. 89, 43 Am. St. Rep. 118; Bovard v. Dickenson, 131 Cal. 162, 164, 63 Pac. 162), and therefore could not delegate such authority to another. Her right to convey her share of the estate did not include the right to deliver possession of the property prior to decree of the court. Section 1517, Code of Civil Procedure before its amendment in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 1178), provided that "no sale of any property of an estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the superior court, except as otherwise provided in this chapter"; the property herein involved not being one of the exceptions. A valid sale of the bond in suit could have been made only in accordance with the provisions of this section. It is apparent that the alleged power of attorney was not pertinent to the issues herein involved, and that evidence as to its contents was properly excluded.

[4, 5] (2) That respondent is estopped by the conduct of Elizabeth Maguire from asserting title to the bond as against appellant. The estoppel relied upon by appellant is based upon the alleged laches of respondent and his testatrix, during which time appellant contends a cause of action existing in her favor against her immediate vendors upon their warranty of title implied in their sale of the bond to her was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court found that "neither said Elizabeth Maguire nor the plaintiff herein was guilty of laches in failing to inquire into or investigate as to the whereabouts or possession of said bond." About two years elapsed between the purchase of the bond by appellant and the institution of this action. But respondent's testatrix did not discover the loss of the bond until about eight months prior to commencing suit, and nothing occurred before that time, so far as the record shows, to put her upon inquiry. Shay testified that possibly he continued paying the interest on the bond to Mrs. Maguire for some time after distribution of the Patrick Maguire estate. About four months after discovery of the loss of the bond Mrs. Maguire died, a month later respondent herein was appointed executor of her will, and two and a half months thereafter he commenced this action. It does not appear that either respondent or his testatrix knew who had possession of the bond until the action was commenced; it having been transferred on various occasions before it was purchased by appellant. Under the circumstances respondent was not guilty of laches barring the action. There is nothing in the record to show that appellant's conduct was in any wise affected by the deed transaction, or that, in reliance upon that transaction she permitted any cause of action in her favor to become barred, or that she acted upon such knowledge in any manner. On the contrary she alleged that she had no knowledge of the claims of any person in respect to the bond other than the person making the sale prior to the commencement of this action. The acceptance of the deeds by Mrs. Maguire was not alone sufficient to amount to an estoppel. The court found that the deeds were not in fact taken from Shay in settlement for the bond; and appellant was neither led to believe that they were taken in settlement nor to act upon such belief.

[6] (3) That, if there was a conversion, the settlement with Shay ratified and confirmed his sale. With respect to this defense the court found:

"That on or about the 5th day of March, 1916, Frank Shay executed a conveyance of his interest in certain real property to said Elizabeth Maguire, which consisted of equities in various parcels of land, each of which was subject to prior obligations, but there was no accord or satisfaction executed between said Elizabeth Maguire and said Frank Shay with respect to said controversy arising over the sale and disposition of said bond; and said conveyance was not accepted by said Elizabeth Maguire in satisfaction or settlement of any claim of said Elizabeth Maguire against said Frank Shay arising out of his sale and disposition of said bond, but said conveyance was made by said Frank Shay to said Elizabeth Maguire as security for the redelivery of said bond to said Elizabeth Maguire."

Shay's offer was made by letter to Mrs. Maguire's attorney and contained the following statement:

"All of the properties above referred to belong to Mrs. Shay, her separate property, and she is willing to convey them to Mrs. Maguire in settlement of the lost securities. This might be considered as a final settlement or it might be agreed that upon the delivery to her of the securities within a reasonable time, she will reconvey."

And the statement which he and his wife thereafter signed as above set forth, specifically recited that the deeds "were executed for and intended as security for an obligation, and not otherwise." Shay testified the obligation referred to was "whatever might be due to Mrs. Maguire growing out of this bond transaction." This was sufficient evidence upon which to base the above finding. For this reason it is unnecessary to discuss further contentions of appellant based upon the assumption that the deeds were given in full settlement.

[7] (4) That if the deeds were not taken as settlement they were taken as mortgages to secure the return of the bond, and the action is barred by the provisions of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that but one action can be maintained for the enforcement of an obligation secured by mortgage—that is, an action to foreclose the mortgage. This action is not one coming within the provisions of that section; the defendant herein not being a party to the mortgage. Moreover, the court found that the equities of Elizabeth Maguire in the properties involved in the deeds "were and are of no value and have been lost to said estate of Elizabeth Maguire," and that they were not lost by reason of any negligence of Elizabeth Maguire or plaintiff herein. This finding was based upon admissions of counsel for appellant on the trial of the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRITTAIN, J.

48 Cal. App. 140

HELMER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2201.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 10, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 9, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸592(1) — Ordinances of chartered cities regulating municipal affairs prevail over state laws.

The Constitution has granted to chartered cities the power to enact ordinances relating to municipal affairs, which ordinances prevail over legislative acts inconsistent therewith.

2. Municipal corporations ⟸592(1)—Regulation of motor vehicle traffic is no longer "municipal affair."

The regulation of motor vehicle traffic has become a matter of state-wide importance in which uniformity is essential, and is no longer a municipal affair, even as to traffic within the streets, so that a chartered city cannot, under Const. art. 11, § 6, pass an ordinance regulating such traffic inconsistent with motor vehicle act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Municipal Affairs.]

3. Municipal corporations ⟸592(2) — State prohibition against driving motor vehicle while intoxicated applies in cities.

Motor Vehicle Act of 1915, § 17, as amended by St. 1919, p. 214, § 11, making it a felony to drive a motor vehicle when intoxicated, is an act for the protection of the lives and property of citizens, not a mere regulation of motor traffic, so that a prosecution for violation thereof may be based on the state law, though the offense occurred in a chartered city having an ordinance making the same act misdemeanor, even if the regulation of motor vehicle traffic is a municipal affair within the jurisdiction of chartered cities.

Application for writ of prohibition by O. H. Helmer against the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento and Hon. Malcolm C. Glenn, as Judge thereof. Petition dismissed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Hugh B. Bradford, Dist. Atty., and J. R. Hughes, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondents.

PREWETT, Presiding Judge pro tem. The petitioner is charged in said superior court with the crime of driving a motor vehicle upon a public highway within the city of Sacramento while under the influence of intoxicating liquors. Said offense is made a felony, or, in the discretion of the court, a high grade misdemeanor, by section 17 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 406, as amended by St. 1919, p. 214, § 11). Section 20 of Ordinance No. 282 of said city prohibits the same act, but makes of it only a misdemeanor. Said city is governed by a charter adopted in the year 1911. Petitioner insists that the provisions of said ordinance prevail over the Motor Vehicle Act, and that, if he is prosecuted at all, it should be under the provisions of the ordinance. Said respondents have overruled his several objections to the proceedings in said superior court, and propose and intend, unless restrained by this court, to proceed with the trial of the charge against him.

This constitutes the only question to be determined in the case.

[1] 1. The respondent concedes that the Constitution has granted to chartered cities the power to enact ordinances relating to "municipal affairs," which ordinances prevail over acts of the Legislature inconsistent therewith. There are many authorities so holding. City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 323, 159 Pac. 1169, and Loop v. Van Loben Sels, 173 Cal. 228, 159 Pac. 600.

[2] 2. The Motor Vehicle Act, so far as it applies to this case, is inconsistent with the ordinance of the city of Sacramento above referred to, since the former makes of the offense a potential felony, while the latter makes of it only a misdemeanor. If the offense in question is a "municipal affair," as that term is used in section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, it must be conceded at once that the city ordinance is paramount. The regulation of street traffic has usually in the near past been treated as a municipal matter. Until the advent of the automobile, interurban traffic was so small as to be negligible, and, as a result, traffic regulations were a matter of concern only to the inhabitants of the city. But when autos and motor-trucks invaded our highways and streets in tens and hundreds of thousands, a matter that yesterday was local has become of state- and nation-wide importance today. An amendment to the Constitution has in a measure recognized this growth and has authorized the state to establish a system of state highways (section 36, art. 4) to meet its demand.

The term "municipal affairs" is not a fixed quantity, but fluctuates with every change in the conditions upon which it is to operate. Interurban traffic has grown in the past ten years into enormous proportions. It is said that during the past year tens of thousands of autos entered this state from other states. Tabulations made since this case was submitted justify the conclusion that 10,000 or 12,000 motor vehicles enter the city of Sacramento every ordinary business day. It is common knowledge that the number of auto passengers entering some of our cities on special occasions exceeds, in a single day, the entire population of the city. The great number of autos, their high speed, their use of a nonintelligent motive power, the want of adequate room on roads and streets not laid out for such a congested traffic, and the overwhelming necessity for uniformity in handling the traffic, all have forced the conviction that the proper and orderly handling of this stupendous traffic has become a matter of the gravest concern to the people of the entire state. If the ordinance in question were the paramount law, then the city of Sacramento could provide that the signal for, say, a left-hand turn, should be an uplifted arm. It is needless to say that such a regulation would be a great danger to thousands of residents and nonresidents every day in the year. In short almost every citizen of the state has as great an interest in the traffic regulations of neighboring cities as he has in his rural highways about him, and vastly more concern as to what they are and how they are to be observed. It may be doubted whether any other police problem requires such unfailing uniformity, one city or locality with another, as that of handling the endless procession of motor vehicles on our highways. That the Legislature intended the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act to be supreme is beyond question. St. 1915, p. 409, § 22, as amended by Stats. 1919, p. 220, § 13.

The earlier cases holding that cities may pass local and police regulations governing motor traffic are of little value in this connection, since it is clear that, in the absence of a motor vehicle act, a city has such power under the provisions of the Constitution.

Since the advent of motor vehicles in such vast numbers and the passage of the Motor Vehicle Act, a number of cases have been decided by our state courts involving traffic regulations of the state and of chartered cities, and it is a persuasive fact that in no case has it been held that the city ordinance is supreme. The contrary assumption appears to have been universal. It is insisted that Ex parte Snowden, 12 Cal. App. 521, 107 Pac. 724, holds that the city ordinance is paramount; but an examination of the case discloses that the court arrived at the conclusion that no conflict existed, hence any observations as to the effect of a conflict were unnecessary to a disposition of the case and are not authoritative. Moreover, the infractions considered in that case took place under the Motor Vehicle Act of 1907 and at a date when autos had not become a matter of such universal interest, and, in addition, the act itself permits municipalities to establish speed limits.

Petitioner cites City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., supra, as sustaining his position. But that case involved neither speed limits nor intoxication and concerned only the opening of a street. The question as to the paramount effect of the Motor Vehicle Act was in no way involved. The case is not authority in this connection. Petitioner relies mainly, however, upon the more recent case of Muther v. Capps, 38 Cal. App. 721, 177 Pac. 882, and he cites this case as showing that a speed ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, if in conflict with the Motor Vehicle Act, is paramount thereto. But the case does not justify this position. A number of different questions were involved in that case. It was insisted by the appellant that a conflict existed between the ordinance and the state law; but the court expressly held that no ordinance was before it, and it does not decide, and does not purport to decide, the question of supremacy.

The Motor Vehicle Act was devised to meet a new and extraordinary condition, and it demands such a construction in view of the facts which brought it into existence as will maintain its symmetry and integrity unimpaired, if this can be done under established canons of adjudication.

There are, it happens, two California cases, so recent that they have not yet reached the official reports, which, by the strongest implication, if not in direct terms, uphold the position of respondents. The first of these is Mann v. Scott, 182 Pac. 281, decided June 13, 1919. In this case the court says:

"Upon a careful reconsideration of the appellants' contention that the State Motor Vehicle Act of 1913 is the controlling law upon the subject, and that it was error to give an instruction embodying the regulatory provisions of the city ordinance, we are constrained to confirm the opinion of the District Court of Appeal that the municipal ordinance in the respect noted is not inconsistent with the state law, but was valid and operative in the city of Los Angeles at the time of the plaintiff's injury. And this, we think, is so regardless of the question of whether or not the regulation of traffic upon the streets of a city is a 'municipal affair.' Conceding that, if there were in fact a conflict between the ordinance and the State Motor Vehicle Act, the state law would prevail, still we find no conflict or inconsistency between the two enactments."

And the following language, quoted from the same case, is particularly in point and may be cited as a distinct recognition by the court of the turning point in conditions which have made the regulation of auto traffic a matter of state and general concern:

"Upon a careful analysis of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1913 and of its purpose viewed in the light of the traffic conditions upon which it was intended to operate, we are of the opinion that the reasoning of the court in the case last quoted is decisive of the question now presented. In other words, we believe that by extending the operation of the act in terms to the traffic upon city streets the Legislature did no more than to prescribe obviously necessary safeguards for travel upon such streets viewed as part of the public highways of the state in which all the people of the state are * * * interested, and that it did not thereby intend to prohibit the enactment of such new and additional police regulations in furtherance of the purpose of the act as might appear reasonable and proper in a given locality. It is true that the Motor Vehicle Act of 1915 expressly limited the scope of such police regulations. Stats. 1915, c. 188, § 22d. It may perhaps be open to question whether the ordinance here in controversy falls within the prohibition of that act, but it is sufficient for the purpose of this case to say that the Motor Vehicle Act as in force at the time of the plaintiff's injury did not contain a clause prescribing limitations upon the local regulation of traffic."

In view of this language, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the court would have sustained the supremacy of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1915 as against a repugnant city ordinance.

The second case above referred to is that of Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 189 Pac. 462, decided February 14, 1920. The following quotation therefrom will show its assumption of the paramount force of the Motor Vehicle Act:

"Indeed, it seems now to be accepted law that local regulations may be adopted controlling street and highway traffic which are not in conflict with the State Motor Vehicle Act, and that such regulations are not in conflict which merely place additional and more stringent limitations upon the operation of motor vehicles than those prescribed by the state law."

[3] 3. But, viewed from another angle, the supremacy of the provision making the act a felony must be sustained.

Section 17, so far as pertinent, reads as follows:

"17. No person who is under the influence of intoxicating liquor and no person who is an habitual user of narcotic drugs shall operate or drive a motor or other vehicle on any public highway within this state."

It is true that the ordinances of a city are supreme in "municipal affairs." But the act charged against petitioner is not a "municipal affair." This is so even if the claim is sound that ordinances designed to control the use of streets prevail over general laws. The act of driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquors is of no immediate or special concern to the city as such. It is of general concern to the inhabitants of a city in common with all other residents of the state. There exists a doubtful or twilight zone separating those matters that are clearly of municipal concern from those that are not. This doubtful zone is of greater or less width, according to the viewpoint of the observer, but there seems to be no satisfactory reason for assigning the act in question to this doubtful zone. It is not a "municipal affair." Section 17, although it forms a part of the Motor Vehicle Act, is not a traffic ordinance. It makes no provision of any kind whatsoever as to the method of driving, the rate of speed, the side of the road to be traversed, the giving of proper signals, nor, in fact, any sort of provision or condition having reference to the use of the roadway in any given manner. It relates wholly to the person himself and his then present condition, and without reference to the effect of his acts upon the roadway itself or of other persons making use thereof.

The interdicted act relates to traffic no further than that a person in the prescribed condition may not avail himself of the use of the streets whereon traffic exists. A person discharging firearms or spreading poison gases while driving an auto on the highway would be a menace, much as the drunken driver is, but in no sense would his act be a matter of municipal concern as distinguished from the general concern of the people of the state. Regulations as to speed have reference to both time and place. That which would be a reckless rate of speed in a crowded city during busy hours would entail little or no danger on a remote roadway or during slack hours. The act charged against petitioner has no reference either to time or place.

While it is more dangerous in a crowded street, it is so only because there are more persons to be injured, but as to each person it is but slightly more dangerous than to one of the smaller number in a less crowded locality. Speeding is dangerous because of the locality. The drunken driver is a danger in any locality, if there are persons present to be injured.

The fact that he is a menace to life and to private property justifies the state in prescribing penalties for the act, just as it may do for violations of general sanitary, health and comfort laws. A manslaughter committed by an intoxicated driver in driving his vehicle over a victim is as much punishable by the state when committed on the streets of a city as if committed elsewhere. A vast number of acts are made punishable by the Penal Code because their commission involves a general menace to the public, even though in their commission no person is injured. It is a felony for an intoxicated trainman to run a railroad train. A druggist must take certain precautions in selling poisonous drugs. It is a misdemeanor to carry concealed weapons or to leave a campfire burning and unattended. These cases and dozens of others that could be enumerated demonstrate that the state, in the exercise of its sovereign power and for the protection of its people, has authority to interdict on the public highways in every part of the state the driving of a motor or other vehicle by an intoxicated person. It is a fundamental rule that the state may by appropriate penalties protect life, liberty, property, and the public peace in every part of its territory; and, except as to matters of purely municipal concern, it may extend this protection to the denizens of crowded cities the same as to those in rural districts.

Our conclusion is that the act charged against the petitioner is punishable under section 17 of the Motor Vehicle Act.

The petition is dismissed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

48 Cal. App. 72

PEOPLE v. KINGS COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CO. (Civ. 2142.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 5, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 2, 1920.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸57—Statute providing for dismissal for want of service mandatory.

Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, providing for dismissal of action unless summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after commencement of action, is mandatory; the right to dismissal becoming absolute when summons has not been served and returned within the required time.

2. Prohibition ⟸5(2)—Will lie to prevent prosecution of action after failure to serve summons.

Where summons has not been served and return thereon made within three years from the commencement of action, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, prohibition will lie to prevent the trial court from adopting any other course than to dismiss the action, and from issuing an alias summons.

3. Limitation of actions ⟸11(1)—State not affected by limitations.

A state is not bound by statutes of limitation unless by express words or by necessary implication on such statutes make it subject to their provisions or restrictions.

4. Limitation of actions ⟸1—"Statutes of limitation" are statutes of repose.

Statutes of limitation, in a strict or legal sense, are statutes of repose, and are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims or within which certain rights may be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Limitation of Actions.]

5. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸60(1)—Unreasonable delay in prosecution ground for dismissal.

Courts, in the exercise of a power inhering in courts of justice, may dismiss an action for unreasonable delay in its prosecution, even independently of any express statutory warrant therefor.

6. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸60(1)—Statute requiring dismissal for delay in prosecution held applicable to action by state.

Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, requiring dismissal of action on failure to serve summons and make return thereon within three years after commencement of action, held applicable to a suit by the state to annul patent to state lands in view of sections 315 and 345; the former statute not being a statute of limitations in the strict legal sense, but one main object of which is to require all litigants commencing actions to press actions to issue and trial with reasonable diligence.

7. Statutes ⟸225, 239—All laws on subject to be read together in construing statute in derogation of common law.

Where the Legislature has established a particular policy with respect to a particular subject of legislative cognizance which policy is in derogation of that of the common law, all the law or sections of the Code bearing upon or pertaining to that particular subject should be read and considered together, or as a whole, or by the light of each other, if the language of any one section or part of the law is so dubious or uncertain as to render its meaning or the legislative intent at the bottom of it lacking in clearness or certainty.

8. States ⟸190—Bound by rules of procedure applicable to other litigants in its action.

The state, when it voluntarily becomes a suitor in its courts and brings an action for relief of any character, is subject to or bound by the same rules of procedure or practice as to the prosecution of such action as govern and apply to litigants suing in their individual capacities.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against the Kings County Development Company. From order granting motion to dismiss action, plaintiff apeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John T. Jones and C. F. Culver, both of Los Angeles, R. Justin Miller, of Hanford, and Wheaton A. Gray, of Los Angeles, for the People.

T. T. C. Gregory and D. Hadsell, both of San Francisco, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a suit in equity and was commenced by the state of California, through its Attorney General, by the filing of a complaint on the 21st day of November, 1914, for the purpose of obtaining a decree annulling a patent to certain state lands; the defendant having acquired title to said patent through certain mesne conveyances coming down from the original patentee. The patent in question was issued on November 23, 1904. Summons in the action was issued June 14, 1915, and was served on September 10, 1918. A notice of motion to dismiss the action was served on the Attorney General on the 25th day of September, 1918. The ground of the motion was:

"That the summons and the complaint in said action were not served upon the defendant until more than three years after the commencement of said action, and that also on account thereof the above-entitled court no longer has jurisdiction over said action."

The court below granted the motion, and from the order granting said motion the people prosecute this appeal.

The order dismissing the action was based upon section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The particular provisions of said section which are material to the inquiry presented by this appeal read as follows:

"No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced must be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced, on its own motion, or on motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, unless summons shall have issued within one year, and all such actions must be in like manner dismissed, unless the summons shall be served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of said action. But all such actions may be prosecuted, if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants, within said three years in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served."

[1, 2] The provisions of said section are mandatory, and, if the section applies to the state, then the trial court lost jurisdiction of the action and could proceed no further therein, except to dismiss the action. In fact, the right to a dismissal becomes absolute where the summons has not been served and returned within the time prescribed by the said section (Sharpstein v. Eells, 132 Cal. 507, 64 Pac. 1080), and prohibition will lie to prevent the trial court from adopting any other course than to dismiss the action (Modoc Land, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. 255, 60 Pac. 848), and such writ will lie to prohibit the issuance of an alias summons after the lapse of three years after the commencement of the action (White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 245, 58 Pac. 450).

The contention of counsel for the appellant is, however, that section 581a "is nothing more nor less than a statute of limitations, and does not bind the state, and that it was not the purpose or intention of the Legislature in adopting it that it should bind the state."

[3] The section, it will be observed, contains no express provision that the state shall be bound thereby. It is well settled and well understood that a state is not bound by statutes of limitation, unless by express words or by necessary implication such statutes make the state subject to their provisions or restrictions.

[4] Statutes of limitations are, in a strict or legal sense, statutes of repose, and "are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims, or within which certain rights may be enforced." Wood on Limitations (3d Ed.) § 1. The same author further observes:

"Those statutes which merely restrict a statutory or other right do not come under this head (i. e., under the head of "statutes of limitations"), but rather are in the nature of conditions put by the law upon the right given. Thus a statute that prescribes the term of court at which an indorsee of a note is required to sue the maker in order to hold the indorser liable (McDaniel v. Dougherty, 42 Ala. 506; Davidson v. Peticolas, 34 Tex. 27), or the time within which writs of error shall be brought (Pace v. Hollaman, 31 Tex. 158; Trim v. McPherson [Tenn.] 7 Coldw. 15), or a statute which fixes the time within which lands sold at execution may be redeemed (Reynolds v. Baker [Tenn.] 6 Cold. 221), or within which a judgment or other lien shall be enforced (Battle v. Shivers, 39 Ga. 405), or which merely postpones a claim unless enforced within a certain time (Chandler v. Westfall, 30 Tex. 475), or which provides that a certain class of evidence shall be admissible if action is brought within a certain time, are not statutes of limitation within the legal sense of the term. But statutes which provide that no action shall be brought, or right enforced, unless brought or enforced within a certain time, are such statutes of limitation, even when they do not extinguish the claim."

The general legislative policy of California is that the state shall be bound by its statute of limitations with respect to the bringing of actions for the enforcement of any and all such rights as may accrue to the state. Code Civ. Proc. § 345, and sections immediately preceding in the same chapter; also Id. § 315. The last-named section fixes the period of limitation within which the state may bring an action for or in respect to real property, or the issues or profits thereof, by reason of the right or title of the people to the same, at ten years; and, in passing, we may observe, although the observation is not germane to the discussion called for herein, that it has been held that said section applies to an action by the state where, as here, the purpose of the action is to procure a cancellation of a patent issued by the state for a parcel of its land, such action being "in respect to real property." People v. Kings County Development Co., 177 Cal. 529, 534, 171 Pac. 102.

[5] The object intended to be attained by section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure is, obviously, to compel reasonable diligence in the prosecution of an action after it has been commenced, and thus afford the party or parties against whom it is brought an opportunity to present such evidential support to any defense he or they may have thereto as may be available at the time the action is instituted, but which may be lost or destroyed through the death of witnesses or otherwise before the action is brought to issue by reason of an unreasonably long delay in serving the defendant or defendants with appropriate legal process notifying him or them of the pendency of the action. It is settled in this state that, even independently of any express statutory warrant therefor, the courts may, in the exercise of a power inhering in courts of justice, dismiss an action for unreasonable delay in its prosecution.

In the early case Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 238, the proposition that the courts were possessed with the inherent power of dismissing actions because their prosecutions by the plaintiff had been inexcusably delayed after their commencement was laid down, and the court there said:

"We see no good reason why the court after the commencement of a suit may not dispose of it by striking the complaint from its files when the plaintiff has failed for many years to take any effective measure to procure a service, and give the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. Certainly it was never contemplated that a party may file a complaint and issue a summons, and then wait an indefinite period of time till the witnesses of the other party are dead, or his evidence destroyed, before he takes any effectual steps to procure a service of process. We do not think such a case is provided for in sections 148 and 149 of the Practice Act; but the court, having got possession of the case by the commencement of a suit, must have some power to dispose of it, when the plaintiff declines or neglects to proceed."

See, also, People v. Jefferds, 126 Cal. 296, 58 Pac. 704; Bernard v. Parmelee, 6 Cal. App. 537, 92 Pac. 658.

It was obviously upon precisely the same theory or for the identical reason which it is declared in the above excerpt supports the inherent power of the court to dismiss actions because of inexcusable delay in their prosecution that section 581a was founded, thus expressly vesting in the courts the right to exercise a power which was theretofore, and indeed still is, an inherent attribute of their constitution as judicial tribunals and specifically fixing the period of time which shall be deemed to constitute an inexcusable delay; and, as above indicated, the question here to be determined is whether said section is, in the true legal sense, a statute of limitations by the terms of which the state is not bound, since the section contains no express provision that it shall apply to the state.

[6] We have not been able to persuade ourselves that any other but a negative reply to that question may reasonably be returned. We are of the opinion rather that the section involves only a condition to which all litigants, including the state itself, must conform to entitle them, after they have commenced an action, to proceed further with the prosecution thereof. The provisions of the section, in other words, involve merely a matter of procedure—that is the regulation of the conduct of the parties plaintiff with respect to actions after the commencement thereof for the same reason or purpose which is at the bottom of many other provisions of the code as to procedure, to wit, to facilitate or bring about a final or as speedy a disposition of the litigation as possible or as is deemed by the Legislature to be consistent with the rights, not alone of the plaintiff, but also of the adversary party or parties, and also to clear court calendars of cases as expeditiously as possible, thus and thereby preventing an accumulation upon such calendars of actions in which, by reason of long delays in their prosecution, it may become difficult, if not in some instances impossible, to adjudicate the issues according to the real merits or justice of such causes. Indeed, the terms of the section are, in their nature and purpose, analogous to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which prescribe a time limit within which a bill of exceptions, or a notice of appeal, or a notice of intention to move for a new trial, or petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court after a cause has been heard and decided by a District Court of Appeal, must be filed. It surely will not be contended by counsel for the state that these last-mentioned provisions are not alike applicable to the state, as a litigant, as to private individuals likewise invoking the power or aid of the courts or who are compelled to appear therein to contest rights asserted against them.

The above view or construction of section 581a is sound in principle and in harmony with reason, in confirmation of which proposition we need go no further for an example than the case now before us, involving, as it does, an action which impeaches the title of the respondent to the lands in question. The effect of an action brought in the courts to determine the ownership of or title to real property is in a measure to put a cloud upon the title to such property, which will exist during the pendency of the action or until the latter is entirely disposed of. It thus can readily be perceived that if the state, in such a case, may postpone, in infinitum, the issuance or the service and return of summons, the defendant, who may have a meritorious defense to the action—who indeed, may be able to show an impregnable title to the land in dispute—would not be able to alienate or transfer the property during the pendency of the action, for no one would purchase property the title to which thus stands challenged. The defendant would not, under such a condition as to the title to his property, enjoy that unrestricted dominion over the property which would enable him to do with it as he pleased. Indeed, the effect of the pendency of such an action, in almost all instances, would probably be to prevent the permanent improvement of the property and the full use of it for the purposes to which it may be peculiarly adapted, and the policy of the state is, of course, that its public lands shall be disposed of to private individuals so that they may be utilized to the highest advantage to which they can be put, and thereby enhance the general welfare of the citizens and consequently the general prosperity of the state.

We do not believe that the Legislature intended that any such situation should arise with respect to litigation inaugurated by the state for the purpose of determining whether title to its lands has been legally acquired by those who have at least a color of title to such lands or a paper title upon its face perfectly valid. In this immediate connection we may appropriately consider for a moment the asseveration of the Attorney General that "it was not the purpose or intention of the Legislature, in adopting it [section 581a], that it should bind the state."

[7] It will be observed that the section is in such sweeping language as to admit of no other construction than that the Legislature intended not to except from its operation any litigant or any action by whomsoever commenced. It reads: "No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted," etc. This means, of course, that all actions, regardless of who the party plaintiff may be, shall not be further prosecuted, etc. If the question as to the legislative intent were important in the solution of the problem herein submitted, we are prepared to say that our construction of the section for the purpose of ascertaining that intent would lead us to the reverse position of the Attorney General upon that proposition. The state has, through its Legislature, bound itself in express language to the terms of many of the provisions of our statute of limitations, and it is proper and indeed a cardinal rule of statutory construction that a particular provision of a statute which may be in ambiguous phraseology should, to get at its purpose and intent, be read and considered in the light, not only of other provisions of legislative enactments upon the same subject, but in view of the legislative policy affecting the subject as established by the statutory law generally. Thus viewing the section, the conclusion would seem to be reasonable, if not irresistible, that had the Legislature intended that the state should be exempt from the operation of its terms, there would have been incorporated into the section express language or words to that effect. To be more explicit, we thus formulate the proposition now in our minds: That, where the Legislature has established a particular policy with respect to a particular subject of legislative cognizance, which policy is in derogation of that of the rule of the common law, all the law or sections of the Code bearing upon or pertaining to that particular subject should be read and considered together, or as a whole, or by the light of each other, if the language of any one section or part of the law is so dubious or uncertain as to render its meaning or the legislative intent at the bottom of it lacking in clearness and certainty. Of course, the proposition here suggested merely goes to the question of the intention of the Legislature, and would be wholly without force or merit if the state were not in any case made by express legislative mandate subject to or bound by the statute of limitations. But, in considering the nature or purpose of a statute such as the one with which we are here dealing, the question of the intention of the Legislature in enacting it is not controlling, or, indeed, of very great importance. The legal nature of the condition or restriction prescribed by the statute as affecting the primary right or the remedy to enforce such right is the all-controlling factor in determining the legal nature of the disabilities which the statute imposes upon litigants. We therefore fall back and wholly rely upon the proposition first above declared that the section merely involves a matter of procedure as to the conduct of an action after it has been commenced.

[8] That the state, when it voluntarily becomes a suitor in its courts and so brings an action for relief of any character, is subject to or bound by the same rules of procedure or practice as to the prosecution of such actions as govern and apply to litigants suing in their individual capacities, is well settled.

In Commonwealth, etc., v. Helm, 163 Ky. 69, 75, 173 S. W. 389, 392, it is said:

"It may be also confidently affirmed that, when the commonwealth comes into court to prosecute a suit, it occupies, in the absence of some controlling statute on the subject, the attitude of any other litigant, and is subject to the same rules of practice and procedure."

See, also, Moore v. Tate, 87 Tenn. 725, 11 S. W. 935, 10 Am. St. Rep. 712, 715; State v. Holgate, 107 Minn. 71, 119 N. W. 792, 793; Port Royal, etc., Co. v. South Carolina (C. C.) 60 Fed. 552, 553; State v. Zanco's Heirs, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 127, 44 S. W. 527, 529; State v. Pinckney, 22 S. C. 484, 488; State v. Pac. Guano Co., 22 S. C. 50, 74.

In State v. Board of Commissioners, 101 Ind. 69, 74, it is said:

"Not having taken an appeal from either of the former adjudications of its claim within the time limited by law, the state of Indiana, like any other claimant, must be held, we think, to be concluded and bound by such former judgments. When the state becomes a suitor in any of the courts it is as much bound by the laws of the land, by the rules of pleading and practice, and by the decisions and judgments of the courts, inferior or superior, as any other suitor."

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 728, 2 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 448, stated the principle as follows:

"When a state submits itself, without reservation, to the jurisdiction of a court in a particular case, that jurisdiction may be used to give full effect to what the state has by its act of submission allowed to be done."

While expressing no definite opinion on the question, the appellate court of the First district, in Anderson v. Nawa, 25 Cal. App. 151, 157, 143 Pac. 555, 558, seemed to be in very much doubt as to the soundness of the contention in that case that the section in question does not apply as well to the state as to other suitors. Note the language of the opinion therein:

"It is insisted that the action was instituted by the plaintiff upon behalf of the state in its sovereign capacity, and that, inasmuch as laches as a matter of law cannot ordinarily be imputed to the state, the motion to dismiss should have been denied for that reason alone. We are not prepared to say that the general rule in this behalf would operate to excuse an unreasonable delay in the service of summons, in an action instituted by the state in its sovereign capacity, for the purpose of asserting a public right or protecting a public interest; but we are satisfied that the present action does not involve in the slightest degree any such capacity, right, or interest."

The Supreme Court denied a hearing in that case without comment.

In his reply brief the Attorney General declares:

"The question in this case is not, as announced by respondent, whether the state may proclaim that rules of procedure do not apply to it, but rather the question before this court is: Can the state be held liable for the negligence of its agents, because those agents failed to comply with rules of procedure relating to the time within which acts must be done?"

But as has already been indicated herein, the real question here is not whether the state may be bound by the negligence of its agents, but whether the state, having commenced an action to enforce a claimed right against a citizen, may unreasonably postpone bringing it to issue and a final disposition according to the procedure prescribed by the law. Of course, every litigant who has committed his case to the care of a lawyer must suffer from the negligence or default of his attorney in complying with procedural rules required to be observed to preserve the rights of parties in actions pending before the courts, but the negligence of an attorney in the management of a case in court whereby his client suffers some loss or injury is imputable to the client himself, since the legal relation existing between client and attorney is that of a principal and agent. No less is true of the legal relationship existing between the state and its attorney, and, while it may be that there is negligence involved in the omission of the state's attorney to proceed with the prosecution of this case according to the diligence or requirements pointed out by the statute in question, we can see no less reason for holding that such ngligence or default is not to be imputed to the state itself than that similar negligence or default by an attorney representing a private suitor in a pending action should not be imputed to the latter. But, be that as it may, the simple question here is, as stated, whether the state is or is not bound by a matter of procedure or practice in the conduct of litigation instituted by it after it has commenced an action in court to enforce some right, and, as above indicated, our conclusion is that it is.

The Attorney General, in support of his position on this appeal, cites a large number of cases, of which we need name the following only: Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 303, 306, 45 Pac. 470; White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 245, 58 Pac. 450; Russ & Sons v. Crichton, 117 Cal. 695, 49 Pac. 1043; People v. Melone, 73 Cal. 574, 15 Pac. 294; Whittaker v. Tuolumne Co., 96 Cal. 100, 30 Pac. 1016; Skelly v. School Dist., 103 Cal. 652, 37 Pac. 643.

We have found nothing in those cases which has led us from the conclusion above indicated. None of the cases named is directly in point here nor is any such claim made by the Attorney General. Most of them merely declare the following rules: That there is no presumption that the state is barred, and therefore that the statute of limitations must be construed, if possible, so as not to apply to the state; that the state is not bound by a statute of limitations unless there are words in the statute or some other statute clearly making the state subject to the limitations prescribed by the statute; that the state is not bound by general words of a statute which would operate to establish a right of action against it; that "the state is not bound by general words in the Political Code upon the subject of taxation, which would operate to trench upon its sovereign rights, injuriously affect its capacity to perform its functions, or establish a right of action against it." Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. County of Sacramento, 134 Cal. 477, 66 Pac. 668. The principles thus stated are well established and have never been gainsaid; but they have no application to the present case, either directly or by analogy. As we have above tried to show, we are here dealing, not with a statute of limitations in the strict legal sense in which such a statute is juridically understood, but with a statute whose main or central object is to require all litigants, after commencing actions against others to establish judicially some right to which they claim to be entitled as against those they have proceeded against, to press the actions to issue and trial with reasonable and proper diligence, and this because it is in the interest of justice to do so.

We conclude that the order appealed from should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge, pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

48 Cal. App. 795

PEOPLE v. KINGS COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CO. (Civ. 2144.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 5, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 2, 1920.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against the Kings County Development Company. From order dismissing action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John T. Jones, and C. F. Culver, both of Los Angeles, R. Justin Miller, of Hanford, and Wheaton A. Gray, of Los Angeles, for the People.

T. T. C. Gregory and D. Hadsell, both of San Francisco, and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a companion case to civil No. 2142, 191 Pac. 1004, between the same parties, this day decided. The patents herein were issued on December 22 and December 30, 1904, the action was begun December 17, 1914, summons was issued June 14, 1915, and was served September 10, 1918.

For the reasons stated in our opinion in Civil No. 2142 the order appealed from is affirmed.

48 Cal. App. 221

EATON v. YOUNT. (Civ. 3202.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 18, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 16, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⟸43(1)—Broker's agreement for sale of real estate must be in writing.

A broker employed by a stockholder of a corporation to sell corporate property is not entitled to recover on an oral contract of employment in view of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, providing such agreements or a memorandum thereof must be in writing.

2. Brokers ⟸43(1)—A person acting only in one transaction held to be a broker within statute requiring written contracts.

A person whose business is to bring buyer and seller together, though he act as such in but a single transaction, is a "broker" within Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, requiring broker's contracts to sell real estate or some memorandum thereof to be in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Broker.]

3. Brokers ⟸43(1)—Broker's contract with officer and stockholder of corporate owner must be in writing.

Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, requiring broker's agreement for sale of real property to be in writing, is applicable whether made with the owner or with an officer and stockholder of a corporation owner.

4. Brokers ⟸43(1)—Stockholder held not liable for commission on parol agreement for sale of corporation's land on theory of advantage to him.

A stockholder owning a large part of a corporation's stock is not liable for broker's commission on his agreement for sale of the corporation's land, which was invalid because resting in parol, in contravention of Civ. Code, § 1624, on the theory that it was an agreement between him and the broker to share an advantage where there was no evidence that the land was not worth the selling price, though the purchaser's first payment was forfeited to the stockholder's advantage, since plaintiff's rights were based on facts existing when making the broker's agreement or at least not later than purchaser's first payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Annette Eaton against Samuel E. Yount. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. R. McNamee and Leo A. McNamee, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lewis Cruickshank and Vincent B. Vaughan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover upon an oral contract for services in the sale of real estate—certain mining properties owned by the Boss Gold Mining Company, a corporation. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $5,000, and defendant appeals.

Defendant, who was president of the Boss Gold Mining Company, the owner of the property, held and owned a little less than three-eighths of all the stock issued by that corporation. According to the findings of the trial court, defendant entered into an agreement with plaintiff whereby it was agreed that, if plaintiff would procure a person or persons to enter into a contract with the Boss Gold Mining Company to purchase its real property for the sum of $150,000, and such person or persons would make a first payment of $50,000 on account of the purchase price, defendant would pay plaintiff, in consideration of her services, 10 per cent. of such purchase price, her services to be paid for as and when payments should be made by such person or persons. The lower court further found that, under and pursuant to the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, the former did procure a person or persons who entered into a contract with the Boss Gold Mining Company for the purchase of its real property at the price and on the terms aforementioned; that said person or persons paid the Boss Gold Mining Company the sum of $50,000 as first payment on account of the agreed purchase price; and that thereupon, and under and by virtue of the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, there became due plaintiff from defendant a sum equal to 10 per cent. of such first payment, namely, $5,000.

Defendant, in his answer, denied that he ever made any contract with plaintiff to procure a purchaser for the property of his corporation. The only contract with defendant that plaintiff sought to prove at the trial was an oral contract of employment. Defendant objected to the evidence on the ground that the sixth subdivision of section 1624 of the Civil Code requires such contract, or some note or memorandum thereof, to be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. The court, subject to defendant's objection, received evidence of the oral contract, and gave judgment for plaintiff, as already stated.

[1-3] It is clear to our minds that respondent was not entitled to recover on the oral contract of employment. Section 1624 of the Civil Code provides in express terms that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is "invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent." The oral agreement testified to by plaintiff and her witnesses was clearly within the terms of this Code section. The agreement, if its terms were as testified to by plaintiff and her witnesses, was "an agreement * * * employing" plaintiff "as agent or broker to * * * sell real estate for compensation or a commission." Within the meaning of this Code provision, a person whose business it is to bring buyer and seller together is a "broker," though he act as such in but the single transaction. Stout v. Humphrey, 69 N. J. Law, 436.[1] "The duty assumed by a broker is to bring the minds of the buyer and seller to an agreement for a sale, and the price and terms on which it is to be made." Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 29, 34 Pac. 637. And that is precisely what plaintiff was employed to do, and precisely what she asserted she did do. Under the terms of the agreement, as testified to by plaintiff and her witnesses, "the party to be charged" was the defendant here, a stockholder in and president of the corporation that was selling the property. Defendant had no authority from the owner, written or oral, to sell the property.

The theory advanced by respondent to sustain her asserted right to a recovery on defendant's oral agreement employing her to sell real estate owned by the Boss Gold Mining Company is that section 1624 is designed for the protection of "owners" only, and that, moreover, because defendant owned stock in the corporation he necessarily benefited by the sale and by plaintiff's services, and therefore plaintiff is entitled to recover under the rule enunciated in a line of cases wherein it is held, in substance, that an oral agreement by one person to share with another his advantage on a sale of real estate is a valid agreement. We can find no merit whatever in this argument.

To support her claim that she can recover for her services under the oral agreement because the property was owned, not by appellant, but by the Boss Gold Mining Company, respondent seizes upon that portion of the opinion in Gorham v. Heiman, 90 Cal. 358, 27 Pac. 289, where it is said that subdivision 6 of section 1624 was "designed to protect owners of real estate against unfounded claims of brokers." This language of the opinion in the Gorham Case, wrenched from its context to support respondent's theory, was never intended to put without the pale of the statute of frauds one who, though the "party to be charged," does not happen to be the owner. The language of the Code is that the agreement is invalid unless it, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, "and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent." As said in Aldis v. Schleicher, 9 Cal. App. 373, 99 Pac. 526, the section is "equally applicable to any contract whereby one, whether owner or not, employs another to effect a sale of real estate and agrees unconditionally to pay a stipulated sum for the performance of such services." This emphatic and terse statement of the law has never been questioned in any of the many later decisions dealing with this Code provision, and to it we give our unqualified approval.

[4] Equally without merit is the contention that, because appellant owns almost three-eighths of all the stock issued by the Boss Gold Mining Company, he necessarily was benefited by the sale, and therefore respondent is entitled to her judgment for $5,000. In the brief filed in her behalf, respondent says that the instruction given in Jenkins v. Locke-Paddon Co., 30 Cal. App. 56, 157 Pac. 538, "clearly enunciates plaintiff's theory." The instruction given in that case, and to which respondent refers when she says it clearly enunciates her theory, was as follows:

"You are further instructed that, while a parol agreement by the owner of real property to pay an agent a commission for the sale of real property is not valid because it rests in parol, nevertheless an agreement by one person to share his advantage on a sale of real estate with another person, though not in writing, is valid; and if you find that some advantage was to be derived to this defendant from the exchange, and that the defendant was to share its advantage with plaintiff, and that plaintiff consummated the exchange, and that defendant actually received some advantage from the exchange, the verdict should be for the plaintiff." (The italics are ours.)

[1] 55 Atl. 281.

There are at least two reasons why the doctrine enunciated in this instruction does not aid respondent here:

(1) There is no evidence that a consummation of the sale of the property of the Boss Gold Mining Company, as contemplated by the agreement between it and the persons whom respondent produced as purchasers, would have benefited appellant in any wise or to any extent, even though he did own a large block of the stock of that corporation. Respondent assumes that because $50,000 was paid to the corporation on the sale of its property, appellant, merely because he was a stockholder, necessarily was enriched by the payment in an amount equal to $17,000. It is true that the purchasers, after making the first payment, refused to go on with the sale, and that, under the terms of their contract with the mining company, they forfeited all of this first payment of $50,000. But respondent's rights are to be determined from the facts existing at the time when the oral agreement of employment was made, or at any rate from the facts existing at a time not later than the payment of the $50,000, at which time, if ever, she became entitled to the commission of $5,000. Her claim here is that there was an executed contract of sale for $150,000, binding upon both vendor and vendees. Had the contract of sale been fully performed, as contemplated when it was executed, the purchasers would have received the mining properties and the corporation the $150,000. But there is no evidence that the properties that the mining company contracted to sell were not worth all of the selling price—$150,000. Had the properties been worth that sum or more, as is quite possible, and had the sale gone through, appellant would not have been enriched merely because the corporation in which he happened to hold stock had $150,000 in its treasury in lieu of valuable mining properties the title to which it had conveyed.

(2) In the second place, and this is a decisive answer to respondent's contention, the contract of employment, as testified to by respondent and her witnesses, was an agreement to pay, as compensation or commission, a definite sum of money, namely, $15,000, or ten per cent. of the selling price. It was not an agreement to share any advantage that, as a result of an advantageous sale, might indirectly accrue to appellant as a stockholder in the vendor corporation.

In Sellers v. Solway Land Co., 31 Cal. App. 259, 160 Pac. 175, the court enumerates three classes of contracts wherein one who employs or receives the co-operation of another to sell real estate is liable though the contract be oral. The first class comprises cases where the agreement is purely and simply one of partnership; the second comprises cases where the agreement is to divide between the parties thereto, either equally or in a stated proportion, the commission or compensation to be received by one of them from the owner of the land to be sold; and the third class consists of cases in which one of the parties to the oral agreement, having a valid contract with the owner to sell the property, has agreed with the other party to pay him for his services either in procuring a buyer or in assisting toward that end. The instant case does not fall within any of these three classes. There was no partnership between plaintiff and defendant; there was no agreement between them to divide any commission or compensation to be received by defendant from the owner, or to divide or share any advantage of any kind that might accrue to defendant as a result of the sale; and defendant had no valid and enforceable contract with the owner.

Our conclusion is that respondent's oral agreement to find a purchaser is not within any of the recognized exceptions to the rule that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is "invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent."

Judgment reversed.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

47 Cal. App. 730

PEOPLE ex rel. BRADFORD, Dist. Atty., v. GODDARD. (Civ. 2136, Sac. 2810.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 25, 1920. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing, July 26, 1920.)

1. Evidence ⟸87—Presumption of continuation of condition may be overcome by other evidence.

The presumption that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32) is a mere rule of evidence, and will stand as evidence, where applicable, only where it is not overcome by other evidence.

2. Evidence ⟸89—Presumption that immoral acts continued held overcome.

In an action under the Red Light Abatement Act, the presumption, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32, that immoral acts testified to were continued until the time of the commencement of the action held overcome by evidence that the persons having committed such immoral acts were evicted prior to the commencement of the action, especially in view of subdivision 33 of such section, and the fact that the nuisance constituted a crime under Pen. Code, § 372.

3. Nuisance ⟸65—Disorderly house held not nuisance.

A disorderly house did not continue to be a nuisance under the Red Light Abatement Act, after the eviction of the immoral tenants, merely because the furniture used by such tenants was not removed.

4. Trial ⟸404(2)—Finding that building was nuisance a mere conclusion of law.

A finding, in an action under the Red Light Abatement Act, that the building "now is a nuisance" was a mere conclusion of law, and not a finding of fact.

5. Nuisance ⟸84—Conclusion that building was nuisance not supported by finding.

A conclusion of law, in an action under the Red Light Abatement Act, that the building "now is a nuisance," was not supported by a finding that the building was on and prior to a certain day used for purpose of lewdness, etc.

6. Trial ⟸398—Cannot be based on inconsistent finding.

Where there are inconsistent findings on a particular ultimate fact, a judgment or decree predicated upon such fact cannot be upheld.

7. Nuisance ⟸84—Want of good faith held not established.

In an action under the Red Light Abatement Act to abate a nuisance, a finding that the owner did not act in good faith in causing the place to be vacated and closed to the immoral purpose for which it had been previously used prior to the action held not sustained by the evidence.

8. Nuisance ⟸84—Degree of proof stated.

In an action under the Red Light Abatement Act to abate a nuisance, a finding of want of good faith in vacation of premises prior to the commencement of the action should be supported by evidence, clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

9. Nuisance ⟸84—Abatement by parties bars action.

Where a nuisance, to abate which an action under the Red Light Abatement Act has been commenced has been abated or suppressed by the parties charged with maintaining the nuisance, or otherwise, prior to the commencement of the action, and the abatement is not a mere sham, the action should be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Hugh B. Bradford, District Attorney of Sacramento County, State of California, under the Red Light Abatement Act, to abate a nuisance, alleged to be maintained on premises owned by Fannie H. Goddard. From a judgment of conviction, the defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. Platnauer, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Hugh B. Bradford, Dist. Atty., of Sacramento, in pro. per.

HART, J. The action was brought under the Red Light Abatement Act (St. 1913, p. 20) to abate a nuisance alleged to have been maintained in premises in the city of Sacramento owned by the defendant. It was decreed that defendant be perpetually enjoined from conducting said premises "for the purpose of acts of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution" and the premises were ordered closed for the period of one year. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

The contention of appellant that the judgment is not sustained by the findings, and that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings, may be considered together.

The court found (finding 3):

"That on, and for a long time prior to, the 13th day of September, 1917, said real property herein described, together with the upper story of the building situate and erected thereon, was, during all of said time, used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, and the said upper story of said building was and now is a nuisance under the laws of the state of California. * * *

"(3) That on or about the 17th day of September, 1917, said respondent was informed, through a newspaper, said premises were being used for immoral purposes, and she caused the persons so occupying the same to remove therefrom on September 25, 1917, but that the furniture in said premises still remained therein, and had been in said premises for a period of nearly two years prior to the commencement of this action. That said complaint in this action was filed on the 28th day of September, 1917. At the time of filing said complaint there was no tenant or other person whatsoever occupying said premises.

"(6) That the removal of the tenant from said premises was not made in good faith by said respondent for the purpose of permanently abating said nuisance."

The evidence may be briefly summarized as follows: Edwin E. Grant, executive officer of the State Law Enforcement and Protective League, an organization formed for the purpose of aiding officers in the enforcement of the law, particularly the laws against commercialized vice, and S. C. Barker, an employé of said league, testified that on the evening of September 13, 1917, they visited the premises in question; that they saw three girls there who were dressed in loose-fitting house dresses, and there were three or four drunken men lolling around; that beer was being served, and witnesses bought some; that they asked two or three different girls "what their price was, and in each case the girl answered $1.50 a trick"; that Barker said, "We are interested in staying all night; what is your price for all night?" to which one of the girls answered, "Ten dollars," and further said, "Don't come back before 1 o'clock, as we are busy right up until then." Witness Barker said that the word "trick" was "a polite term for sexual intercourse." Two police officers testified that the general reputation of the premises was that it was used as a house of prostitution.

A. E. Goddard, a son of the defendant, testified that he acted for his mother in connection with her property; that he read an article in the Sacramento Union of September 17, 1917, regarding an affidavit made by Grant to the effect that the property in question was used as a house of prostitution; that he immediately notified Mr. George Locke, the tenant of the property, to have the people vacate if it was used for purposes of that kind, and that he visited the district attorney and told him that their instructions to their agent had been under no circumstances to rent the premises as a house of prostitution; that the people occupying the premises immediately moved out; that he visited the premises that evening, and found only a Chinese caretaker there; that he saw Mr. Locke several times after that, and that Mr. Locke assured him the place was closed. George Locke testified that immediately after Mr. Goddard called upon him he told the tenants to vacate, and that they did vacate the premises before September 25, 1917. The witness owned the personal property on the premises, and testified that, on the date of the trial, November 15, 1917, it was still there. A witness who had charge of the renting of the premises testified that they were occupied from September 7th until September 25th, and that they became vacant on the latter date.

[1, 2] The people presented no testimony showing or tending to show, other than the inference which might be drawn from the testimony that acts of prostitution and lewdness were carried on in the building in question on and prior to the 13th day of September, 1917, that subsequent to the date just mentioned acts prohibited by the abatement act were committed in said building, or that the building was used subsequent to said date for purposes of assignation or prostitution, or that acts of lewdness were practiced therein. But it is the position of the people that, inasmuch as it would be practically impossible in most of such cases as the one here to show that acts of prostitution or of assignation or of lewdness were practiced in a building at the very instant that the complaint is filed, the presumption "that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature (subdivision 32, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.) applies, and that it was therefore not necessary to make affirmative or direct proof, or for the court to find that at the time of the commencement of the action the immoral acts mentioned were carried on in the building. See People v. Macy, 184 Pac. 1008. The presumption referred to is a mere rule of evidence, and will stand as evidence, where applicable, only where it is not overcome by other evidence, and, conceding that it applies in such a case as this, or does not run counter to the presumption declared in subdivision 33 of section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, to wit, "That the law has been obeyed," the answer to the contention is that there was introduced by the appellant testimony which appears to have been, in the judgment of the court, of sufficient probative power to overcome the force or effect of the presumption relied upon by the people. The uncontradicted testimony of the agent and the original lessee of the building is that they, having read on September 17, 1917, in the Sacramento Union, a morning newspaper, of an affidavit filed with the district attorney of Sacramento county by the executive officer of the State Law Enforcement and Protective League, charging that the premises in question were being used for the immoral purposes prohibited by the Abatement Act, immediately proceeded to take steps looking to the closing of the place, and that, on the 25th day of September, 1917, they succeeded in causing, and did cause, the inmates of the building to be evicted and closed the place, and that from and after that date down to the date of the trial of this action, which was commenced on the 15th day of November, 1917, the building or the upper portion thereof complained of by the said executive officer had not been occupied or used for any purpose, except for the storing of the furniture used by the parties charged with conducting the premises in contravention of the mandates of the statute. The trial court evidently believed the testimony of the witnesses, Goddard and Locke, the agent of the owner and the original lessee, respectively, of the building, for it found that the owner of the building, having been informed on the 17th day of September, 1917, that the upper story was being used for immoral purposes, caused the persons so occupying the same to remove therefrom on September 25, 1917, three days before the complaint invoking the injunctive power of the court against the building as a nuisance was filed, and that "at the time of the filing of said complaint there was no tenant or other person whatever occupying said premises." And it is upon this finding that we base the above declaration that the presumption "that a thing once found to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature," if it applies at all to the fact that a nuisance such as the one complained of here, which is itself a crime (Pen. Code, § 372), has been proved to have existed or to have been maintained at some time in the past, was dispelled or overcome by "other evidence." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

Of course, we are not to be understood as holding that in all cases brought under the Abatement Act it is necessary, to sustain the complaint, that immoral acts which constitute the nuisance under said statute must be directly or affirmatively shown to have been committed in the place down to the very time of the filing of the complaint. We simply hold here that there is a positive finding that, before the filing of the complaint, the place had been closed to immoral practices.

[3] We are now brought to the consideration of the question whether the findings support the decree. As we have seen, the action was commenced by the filing of a complaint on the 28th day of September, 1917, and finding No. 3 is the only finding which contains anything respecting the commission of acts of lewdness, etc., in and upon the premises. Said finding is:

"That on, and for a long time prior, to the 13th day of September, 1917, said real property herein described, together with the upper story of the building situate and erected thereon, was, during all of said time, used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation and prostitution, and the said upper story of said building was and now is a nuisance under the laws of the state of California."

On the other hand, as has been shown, the court found, in finding No. 5, that having been informed on the 17th day of September, 1917, that said premises were being used for immoral purposes, the owner caused the persons so occupying and using the same to remove therefrom on September 25, 1917, etc. It is very clear that the finding that "the said upper story of said building was and now is a nuisance under the laws of the state of California," taken alone or by itself, is a conclusion of law, and does not involve a finding of fact; but, if it were deemed necessary to concede that, in the connection in which it is employed, it might justly be held to constitute a finding of an ultimate fact, it is nevertheless plainly manifest that it is wholly inconsistent with finding No. 5. It is obvious that if, as the court found, the owner of the building, on receiving information that the upper story thereof was being used for immoral purposes, caused the persons so using it to be removed therefrom before the filing of the complaint herein, the nuisance complained of was abated by the act of the owner herself before legal proceedings against her and the building under the Abatement Act were instituted. This is at least necessarily, and, indeed, the only rational inference following from said finding. That portion of said finding that the furniture in said building at and during the time the nuisance was being maintained therein was not removed from said premises at the time those using them for immoral purposes were compelled by the owner to vacate the building possesses no significance. Neither the furniture nor the building itself constituted the nuisance complained of. It was the manner in which and the purpose for which both were used that constituted the nuisance, and if those using the furniture and the building for immoral purposes were evicted therefrom, and the upper story, where the nuisance was being maintained, was closed to those persons and all other persons desiring or intending to use them for the same purposes, how could the nuisance be further maintained? The answer to this question is too obvious to require further consideration of the proposition.

[4, 5] But we are still of the opinion that the alleged finding that the building "now is a nuisance" is a conclusion of law, notwithstanding the connection in which it is used. In the initial portion of the finding (and, as stated, said finding is the only one of the several findings which finds that acts of lewdness, etc., had been practiced on and in the premises), it is found that the upper story of the building was not down to the filing of the complaint, but "on, and for a long time prior to, the 13th day of September, 1917, used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution," etc. This finding does not support the conclusion or the finding, if such it might properly be called, that the place "now is a nuisance under the laws of the state of California."

[6] It follows that, in any view of the findings, the decree cannot stand. Where there are inconsistent findings upon a particular ultimate fact—that is, where the findings are irreconcilably inconsistent, as would be true here as between finding No. 5 and that portion of finding No. 3 to the effect that the building is now a nuisance, assuming that the latter is a finding of fact and not a conclusion of law—a judgment or decree, so predicated, cannot be upheld.

It cannot in such case be determined upon which of the findings it was intended that the judgment should rest. The judgment may safely rest on one or the other, taken alone, if it be consistent with the finding, but it is very clear that it cannot rest on two findings in irreconcilable opposition to each other as to the same fact. And with the conclusion, stated as a finding, that the building "now is a nuisance," eliminated as a finding of fact, there is left no finding upon which the decree can rest.

It is contended, however, that the finding that the act of the owner of the building in evicting therefrom the parties who were using it for immoral purposes was not done "in good faith for the purpose of permanently abating said nuisance" destroyed whatever force there may be in the finding, which we hold establishes or finds the fact that the nuisance had been abated by the owner prior to the filing of the complaint, that the females who were conducting the premises for immoral purposes were evicted therefrom as indicated in said finding. This contention would no doubt possess much force if there was any evidence to support the finding of want of good faith on the part of the owner in causing the female inmates of the building to vacate it. As seen, the only testimony presented by the people is to the effect that the building, or the upper story thereof, was used for immoral purposes on and prior to the 13th day of September, 1917. The testimony introduced by the defense (and it is not contradicted, so far as the face of the record discloses) is that the son and agent of the owner, upon learning of the complaint made against the building, immediately went to the office of the district attorney, and stated to that officer that, "Our instructions to our agent had been under no circumstances to rent it for a house of that kind; that I told him the people moved out immediately—we had ordered to have it vacated;" that he went to the premises after the order to vacate was made, and that the women had all left the house and that there was no one remaining in the upper story but a caretaker in the person of a male Chinese. He further testified that he met a police officer, whose "beat" embraced the district in which the building is situated, and said to the officer "that if there is anything like that going on, we had given instructions that the house be cleaned out, be closed, just as soon as they could get their things out of there. As I understand, Mr. Locke said it had been closed, because I went to see Mr. Locke several times after that, and he assured me the place was closed." The witness, Locke, for the defense, corroborated Goddard as to the instructions given to him by the latter that the building should not be used for immoral purposes and as to the eviction of the female inmates and the closing of the place as above indicated.

[7] It would thus seem very clear that the owner and her agent acted in perfect good faith in causing the place to be vacated and closed to the immoral purposes for which it had previously been used. This proposition becomes the more clearly apparent from the fact that the people introduced no testimony tending to show that the closing up of the place by the owner was not done in good faith—that is, that there were any act or acts on the part of the owner or the agent or lessee of the building to permit it to be reopened for use for immoral purposes. The case of State v. Jerome, 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 753, cited by the district attorney on the question of good faith, is not in point here. In that case the female who had conducted a house of prostitution on the premises there in question and another female prostitute were still occupying the premises, not owned, but under lease, by one of them, when the action to suppress the nuisance was commenced, although there was no proof of actual acts of prostitution having been practiced in the house from the 29th day of June, 1913, when both women were arrested for practicing acts of prostitution, and the 30th day of June, 1913, when the complaint that the house was being maintained as a nuisance by the women was filed. Quite clearly, the fact that the women themselves remained in the house after it was claimed that they had ceased carrying on the business of prostitution therein constituted a circumstance from which the court could well draw the inference that immoral acts were still being committed in the place subsequent to the time that it was claimed that the nuisance was abated by the female inmates themselves. And the court, in that case, with apparent justness, held that, although some of the furniture had been removed from the building and the conditions therein generally changed to some extent, it was for the trial court to determine upon the whole evidence whether the house in good faith had been closed as one of prostitution, and refused to disturb the decree authorizing the sale of the furniture and enjoining the further use of the premises for any purpose for the period of six months. It is hardly necessary to repeat that in this case the women were all driven out of the place by the owner of the building through her agents before the complaint was filed, although, as seen, the furniture, which was not the property of the owner of the building, but belonged to Locke, the original lessee, had not then been removed therefrom.

[8] The decree herein enjoins the use of the building for any purpose for the period of one year, and it seems to us that in a case of this character, where, as here, the question whether so severe and drastic a penalty should be visited upon the owner of real property turns upon the proposition of good faith—that is, whether the owner himself has in good faith abated the nuisance, with the intention that it shall remain abated for all time, before a complaint looking to the suppression of the nuisance theretofore maintained in and on the premises has been filed—a finding of want of good faith in such case should be supported by evidence clear, satisfactory, and convincing. The testimony presented by the people does not, in our opinion, make out such a case, while that of the defendant, as we have before said, appears to disclose perfect good faith in closing the place as it had been immorally maintained and an intention of permanently closing it as a house of assignation and prostitution or in which lewd conduct is practiced. The uncontradicted testimony of the owner's son, who was acting as the agent of the building, that he told a police patrolman of the particular district in the city in which the house is located that he desired that a stop should be put to any attempt to use the premises for immoral purposes is very strong evidence of the good faith of the owner in causing the building to be vacated by the women who had previously used it for purposes of prostitution and assignation, etc.

[9] It is, of course, well settled—indeed, it is but the statement of a rule necessarily following from the very logic of such a situation—that, where a nuisance to abate which an action has been commenced has been abated or suppressed by the parties themselves charged with maintaining the nuisance or otherwise prior to the commencement of the action the further prosecution of the action cannot be maintained, and the action should be dismissed, for the very obvious reason that there is then nothing existing against or upon which the injunctive process of the court can or will operate. Joyce on Nuisances, § 486, p. 704; 2 Wood on Nuisances (3d Ed.) § 864; McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge Mill Co., 144 Cal. 542, 547, 78 Pac. 7; Gilbert v. Peck, 162 Cal. 54, 55, 121 Pac. 315, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1349. And this rule, of course, applies as well to cases arising under the "Red Light Abatement" Act as in other cases of nuisances. See People v. Dillman, 37 Cal. App. 415, 174 Pac. 951; People v. Burch, 189 Pac. 716; State v. Jerome, 80 Wash. 261, 141 Pac. 753.

We conclude that the judgment should be reversed, but do not feel justified in ordering, as the counsel for the appellant requests us to do, the court below to enter judgment in favor of the appellant upon the findings as they appear in this record. Another trial might bring forth other and additional proof upon the question whether the nuisance was in good faith abated by the owner of the building, which would support a finding of want of good faith.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. A majority of the Justices not having assented to the granting of a hearing of the above-entitled cause in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, it is deemed proper to say that the view of those opposed to the granting of such petition is that the District Court of Appeal opinion recognizes that a mere sham abatement of the nuisance prior to action would not be a defense, and that in so far as this feature of the case is concerned, the reversal was for want of evidence to sustain the finding of lack of good faith, and that upon the face of the opinion no error appears in this regard.

The application for a hearing stands denied.

LAWLOR, J., and OLNEY, J., voted for rehearing.

48 Cal. App. 289

ANDERSON v. WILLSON. (Civ. 2683.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 22, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 19, 1920.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇐231(1)—Record is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers.

Every conveyance of real property, acknowledged or approved, and certified and recorded as provided by law, is constructive notice of the contents thereof to the subsequent purchasers (Civ. Code, § 1213), and such presumption of notice is conclusive and incontrovertible.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇐231(1) — Registration act protects owner of legal title.

The primary purpose of registration acts is to protect the true owner of the legal title to land, who may not be in possession against subsequent purchasers, by conclusively imputing to the latter notice of all previously recorded conveyances, so that one subsequently purchasing from vendor is not an innocent purchaser.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇐144(1)—Vendor need not be owner of all the property at making of agreement.

Where defendant vendor had sold parts of lots to a canal company by a conveyance duly recorded, he could contract to sell all of such lots to the plaintiff, since it was not necessary that vendor should be the absolute owner of the property when agreeing to sell it.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⊜144(1)—Vendor need have no inchoate or other title when contracting to sell land.

A vendor need not have even an inchoate title, but may sell land to which he has no title, and the agreement will be valid and enforceable if when the time for performance arrives he is able to furnish the title he contracted to convey, and the contract will not be held fraudulent or void because vendor did not have the title when agreeing to pass it.

5. Specific performance ⊜10(1)—May be enforced in part, or purchaser may waive right to rescind for fraud.

Where vendor fraudulently represents himself as owner of more land than he has title to, his purchaser may waive the fraud and his right to rescind and sue for specific performance; and, if the court finds itself unable to enforce conveyance of all the agreed land, it will compel vendor to convey such title as he has, on being paid therefor at the rate agreed.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⊜68—Meaning of words "right of way for a canal" depends upon intent and circumstances.

Whether the words "right of way for a canal" used in contract mean a mere easement in the land for canal use, or the strip of land over which the canal runs, is purely a question of intention, and the sense in which the words are employed in the instrument by the contracting parties will depend upon the contract language, aided by reference to the attendant circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Right of Way.]

7. Vendor and purchaser ⊜176—Where represented easement was in fact lack of title, purchaser was entitled to rebate "on and over."

The representation in a contract of sale of land that the lots were subject to a right of way of a canal company "on and over" a strip of land four rods wide was equivalent to a representation that the lots were subject to an easement only in such strip; and, where plaintiff purchaser believed and relied upon such representation, neither the vendor who made such representation nor his grantee can be heard to say that plaintiff's understanding of the words "rights of way" was not that intended by both parties, so that, where the canal company in fact owned the fee of, and not merely an easement in, the four-rod strip, plaintiff was entitled to have deducted from the purchase price he was to pay an amount equal to the value of the part of the land to which defendant could not give title.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action for specific performance by John P. Clark against A. D. Willson, trustee, in which plaintiff died while appeal was pending, and Arthur Anderson was substituted as his administrator. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, for appellant.

D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, and Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, on the judgment roll alone, appeals from an adverse judgment. While this appeal was pending, the original plaintiff and respondent, John P. Clark, died, and the administrator of his estate, Arthur Anderson, was substituted in the suit. Notwithstanding this substitution, we shall, for convenience, refer to the original plaintiff, Clark, as the plaintiff in the action and the respondent on this appeal.

From the findings it appears that on March 5, 1908, the plaintiff, John P. Clark, and Thomas H. Thompson, defendant's grantor, entered into a written contract whereby Thompson, as vendor, agreed to sell and convey, and plaintiff, as vendee, agreed to purchase, for $4,800, payable in installments, four lots in Tulare county. The property that Thompson thus agreed to convey to plaintiff is described in their contract as follows:

"Lots one, three, six and seven of Riverside Colony, as shown and delineated on the map of said colony on file in the office of the county recorder for the said county of Tulare, save and except some rights of way granted to the Consolidated Canal Company."

Prior to this contract, namely, on October 28, 1905, the California Savings & Loan Society, the then owner of the lots, had deeded to the Consolidated Canal Company a strip of land, four rods wide, on and along the north and east sides of lot 3, on and along the east side of lot 6, and on and along the south side of lot 7. So that, when plaintiff entered into his written agreement with Thompson to purchase the lots, the latter did not own the title, in fee, to every part of each of the four lots, free of all incumbrances, save a mere right of way or easement in favor of the Consolidated Canal Company for a canal, but the canal company owned the fee to all of a strip of land, four rods wide, along the north and east sides of lot 3, along the east side of lot 6, and along the south side of lot 7. The deed to the canal company was duly recorded on November 6, 1905, in the office of the county recorder.

At the time when plaintiff and Thompson entered into their written agreement, the latter represented to plaintiff that he then owned all of the four lots, and that he held the fee-simple title to the whole thereof, "free and clear of all incumbrances, save and except a right of way for a canal theretofore granted to the Consolidated Canal Company, a corporation, to wit, a right of way on and over a strip of land four rods wide on and along the north and east sides of lot 3, on and along the east side of lot 6, and on and along the south side of lot 7." Plaintiff believed this representation, and relied upon it in making the contract to purchase the lots, and had no actual notice that there had been conveyed to the canal company the fee to a strip of land, four rods wide, on and along the sides of the lots.

Under the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and Thompson, the last installment of the purchase price was payable March 5, 1911, when, if all payments were made as they fell due, plaintiff, under the terms of his contract, would be entitled to a deed to the land for which he had bargained. Plaintiff, prior to March 5, 1911, promptly paid the several installments that had previously accrued, and, on March 5, 1911, offered to make payment of the final installment if Thompson, his vendor, would convey to him title to the lots, incumbered only with a right of way or easement for a canal or canals. This Thompson was unable to do, for the canal company owned the fee to a part of the lots, namely, the fee to a strip four rods wide on and along the sides of the lots, instead of a mere easement or right of way on and over the lots, as represented to plaintiff when he bargained for the property. Though unable to comply with plaintiff's offer, Thompson, nevertheless, demanded that plaintiff pay him the full amount of the balance of the purchase price as a condition precedent to a conveyance of the lots with the strip four rods wide excepted therefrom. This plaintiff declined to do; instead, he offered to pay Thompson the balance of the purchase price, less a certain amount found by the court to be the value of the title that Thompson was unable to convey by reason of the previous conveyance of the four-rod strip to the Consolidated Canal Company. Thompson thereafter conveyed the property to defendant, who took with knowledge of the contract previously made by his grantor with plaintiff.

Plaintiff brought this action to compel specific performance of Thompson's contract to convey to him the four lots, subject only to a right of way for a canal, on payment of the balance of the purchase price, or, in the event that defendant could not give all the title which plaintiff claimed he had bargained for in his contract with defendant's grantor, that defendant be ordered to convey to plaintiff title to such portion of the land as he owned, and that there be deducted from the purchase price an amount equal to the value of the part of the land to which defendant could not give title. The court found that defendant could not give title to the strip four rods wide, and that, at the rate agreed upon by plaintiff and Thompson in their contract, the amount already paid by plaintiff on the purchase price exceeded the value of the land to which defendant could give title. The decree adjudges that, without any further payment by plaintiff, defendant forthwith convey to the former title to the land, excepting that portion, four rods wide, running on and along the sides of the lots, previously conveyed to the Consolidated Canal Company. From this judgment defendant has appealed, contending that the constructive notice of the deed to the canal company, afforded by its registration in the county recorder's office, raises a conclusive presumption that, at the time when he contracted with Thompson for the purchase of the lots, plaintiff had notice of the prior deed to the canal company, that therefore plaintiff is bound thereby, and that consequently payment of the full amount of the agreed purchase price is a condition precedent to any right to a conveyance.

[1] Every conveyance of real property, acknowledged or approved and certified and recorded as provided by law, is "constructive notice of the contents thereof to subsequent purchasers." Civ. Code, § 1213. Without doubt, the presumption of notice thus raised by this Code provision is conclusive and incontrovertible. 39 Cyc. 1719, 1720. Says the court in Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 488:

> "A recorded deed is an instance of constructive notice, and upon proof being made that it has been duly recorded, the presumption of notice to the subsequent purchaser arises, and the presumption is a conclusive presumption of law, and no opposing evidence is admissible."

Plaintiff, therefore, could not have taken a conveyance of the lots from Thompson, or from defendant as Thompson's successor in interest, and have claimed that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice, and that, therefore, he, and not the canal company, owned the strip four rods wide on and along the sides of the lots.

[2] The primary purpose of registration acts is to protect the true owner of the legal title, who may not be in possession, against the claims of subsequent purchasers, by conclusively imputing to the latter notice of all previously recorded conveyances. And, of course, the recording of the deed to the canal company would secure its title from defeat by any subsequent sale of the land to plaintiff as an alleged innocent purchaser.

[3] But, though plaintiff could not defeat the title of the canal company under any claim that he was an innocent purchaser without notice of the prior deed to that company, he, nevertheless, could contract with Thompson for title to all the land contained within the boundaries of the four lots, and the latter could contract to give title thereto. It is not necessary that a vendor should be the absolute owner of the property at the time he enters into the agreement of sale. One in good faith may sell land which he does not own, and yet, when the time for performance arrives, be able to furnish a good title.

[4, 5] It is the settled rule in this state that the vendor need not have even an inchoate title at the time of the contract; that he may sell land to which he has no title, and the contract will be valid and enforceable if, when the time for performance arrives, he is able to furnish the title he contracted to convey. His contract will not be held fraudulent or void by virtue of the mere fact that, when he made it, he did not have the title that he agreed to pass to his vendee. Hanson v. Fox, 155 Cal. 106, 99 Pac. 489, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 132 Am. St. Rep. 72; Backman v. Park, 157 Cal. 607, 108 Pac. 686, 137 Am. St. Rep. 153; Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 522, 530, 140 Pac. 30. And even where the vendor fraudulently represents himself to be the owner of more land than he has title to, his vendee, nevertheless, may waive the fraud and his right to rescind the contract, and may sue to enforce specific performance; and, if in enforcing the contract the court finds itself unable to enforce conveyance of all the land the vendor agreed to convey, it will compel compliance with the agreement, so far as possible, by compelling the vendor to convey such title as he has on being paid therefor at the rate agreed upon between the contracting parties; the compensation allowed for the deficiency in quantity being at the rate of the average price agreed to be paid for the entire tract. Quarg v. Scher, 136 Cal. 411, 69 Pac. 96; Butte Creek, etc., Co. v. Olney, 173 Cal. 697, 707, 161 Pac. 260. This is precisely what was done by the trial court here.

[6] As we view the case, the real question here is one respecting the intention of the contracting parties, Thompson and Clark. What did these two intend when, in their written agreement, they excepted from the conveyance to be made by Thompson "some rights of way granted to the Consolidated Canal Company"? What did they mean by these words, "some rights of way"? Technically, a right of way is an easement; and a right of way for a canal is, properly speaking, nothing more than a mere easement in the land of another. Civ. Code, § 801, subd. 4; Blake v. Boye, 38 Colo. 55, 88 Pac. 470, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418, 422; 34 Cyc. 1767. As generally used, however, the term "right of way," when applied to railroads, canals, and similar instrumentalities, has no exact, well-defined meaning, but often is susceptible of a twofold signification. It is used indiscriminately to describe, not only the easement, or special and limited right to use another person's land, but as well the strip of land itself that is occupied for such use. This, at any rate, is the case when the term is used with respect to railroads. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Littler, 70 Kan. 556, 79 Pac. 114; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., Ry. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 555. And we see no reason why it should not be equally true when the words are used with respect to a canal. So that, whether, in any particular case, the words "right of way for a canal" mean a mere easement in the land of another for the use of a canal or the strip of land over which the canal runs, is purely a question of intention; and the sense in which the words are employed by the contracting parties in any given case will depend upon their intention as disclosed by the language of their contract, aided, when proper, by reference to the attendant circumstances.

The question, therefore, that confronted the court below was this: In what sense did plaintiff and his vendor, Thompson, use the words "save and except some rights of way granted to the Consolidated Canal Company"? Did they intend thereby to except from the grant to be made by the vendor a mere easement for the use of the canals of the Consolidated Canal Company? Or, did they intend to except a strip of land, occupied, or to be occupied by the canals of that company? It is no answer to this question to say that plaintiff was conclusively charged with constructive notice of the prior recorded deed to the canal company. Intention is a state or condition of the mind. And while a concept, or state of mind, may depend upon or be influenced by facts of which the person has actual knowledge—facts of which he actually is or has been conscious—it cannot be engendered or in any wise conditioned or influenced by facts of which he always has been ignorant, even though they be facts notice of which the law imputes to him constructively for the purpose of protecting the title of the real owner against the claims of subsequent purchasers. In arriving at the intention of the contracting parties, we can derive no aid from the fact that section 1213 of the Civil Code raises a conclusive presumption of constructive notice. Unless the parties to a contract have actual notice of a fact, knowledge of which may be useful in arriving at a conclusion respecting their intention or how they understood the language of their contract, no amount of merely constructive notice will aid in solving the question as to their intention or their understanding of their agreement. The sense in which the parties to this contract used the words "some rights of way" is to be determined, therefore, from what they actually knew, not from what the law says they must be deemed to have known, in order that the title of a former grantee, the Consolidated Canal Company, may be secured against defeat by the subsequent sale to the plaintiff here. As against the canal company, plaintiff cannot successfully claim that he is a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice. But there is nothing in the registry provisions of the Civil Code that prevents him from saying how he understood the words "some rights of way" were employed in his contract, or that prevents him from claiming that they were used to describe mere easements, or rights of way in the true and technical sense of the term.

[7] There is no finding that plaintiff actually knew that the "rights of way" of the canal company consisted of a four-rod strip of land that had been conveyed to it in fee in 1905 by a duly recorded deed. On the contrary, the court found that, at the time when plaintiff entered into his contract with Thompson to purchase the lots, his vendor represented to him that he owned the whole of each lot, and "that he held the fee-simple title thereto, free and clear of all incumbrances, save and except a right of way for a canal theretofore granted to the Consolidated Canal Company, a corporation, to wit, a right of way on and over a strip of land four rods wide on and along" the sides of the lots. The representation that the lots were subject to a right of way "on and over" a strip of land four rods wide was equivalent to a representation that the lots were subject to an easement only—an easement in the strip of land four rods wide along the sides of the lots. The court found that plaintiff believed and relied upon this representation. It is clear, therefore, that the parties to the contract, or, at any rate, one of them, the plaintiff here, understood the words of the contract to mean that there was excepted from the property to be sold an easement only, to wit, a certain right of way "on and over" a strip of land four rods wide. Neither the vendor, whose representations induced plaintiff's understanding of the contract, nor his grantee, the defendant here, can now be heard to say that plaintiff's understanding of the words "rights of way" was not the meaning intended by both parties to the agreement.

It is of no consequence that defendant finds himself unable to give all the title that plaintiff understood he had bargained for and purchased. As already shown, a person who has agreed to convey more title than he has, or can acquire, may be compelled to convey to his vendee such title as he possesses, upon being paid therefor at the rate agreed to be paid for all the property bargained for by the vendee. That is precisely what this judgment does, and it is, we think, supported by the facts found by the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

48 Cal. App. 336

FREDERICK et al. v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TERMINAL RYS. et al.

(Civ. 3315.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 28, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 26, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)—Findings supported by substantial proof conclusive.

If there is any substantial proof in the record to support the findings and decision of the lower court, the Court of Appeals is bound by such findings, and the judgment will not be disturbed.

2. Carriers ⇐318(4)—In action for injuries from overturning car evidence held to show no negligence.

In a passenger's action for injuries sustained from the overturning of street car in taking a curve after the air brakes were injured in collision with an automobile, evidence held to justify findings that there was no negligence in the operation of the car, as charged in the complaint.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1) — Motorman's negligence in emergency held for trial court sitting without a jury.

In a passenger's personal injury action, the question whether or not defendant street railway's motorman was negligent in attempting one of several courses open to him in an emergency is a question for the trial court, when sitting without a jury.

4. Carriers ⇐322 — Findings as to freedom from negligence held sufficient.

In a passenger's personal injury action against a street railway company, where the court sitting without a jury found that defendant was free from all the acts of negligence charged against it in the complaint, outside agencies contributing to the cause of accident were immaterial and need not be found, where the findings made adequately cover the issues pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by Tillie Frederick and husband against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways and others, which abated as to the defendant motorman, A. Stewart, on account of his death. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland, for appellants.

W. H. Smith, of Oakland, and A. L. Whittle, of San Francisco (Chapman & Trefethen, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondents.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, a corporation, in an action brought by plaintiff Tillie Frederick and her husband, Frank Frederick, to recover damages for personal injuries claimed to have been sustained by Mrs. Frederick through the negligence of the defendants while she was riding as a passenger on the street car of said defendant corporation in the city of Oakland. The action was tried by the court sitting without a jury. The street car on which Mrs. Frederick was injured was at the time in charge of the defendant A. H. Stewart, as motorman, and of William J. Morehead, as conductor. The action abated as to the defendant Stewart on account of his death, which occurred prior to trial.

The accident occurred on the evening of October 22, 1916, at about the hour of 9:40. The street car at the time was traveling eastwardly along East Sixteenth street and had just crossed the intersection of Twelfth avenue, which runs at right angles with East Sixteenth street, when it was struck by an automobile which had approached at a rapid rate of speed up Twelfth avenue, and, being unable to make the crossing at East Sixteenth street without colliding with the street car, had cut across the corner and attempted to make the turn around and down East Sixteenth street and run parallel with the car, but was unable to do so, and crashed into the side of the street car, breaking the air pipe line controlling the air brakes. There is a descent in the grade on East Sixteenth street eastwardly from Twelfth avenue, and, finding that the air brakes were out of commission, the motorman and conductor applied the hand brakes; but the speed of the car was not sufficiently checked to prevent it from overturning when it reached a sharp curve at the corner of East Sixteenth street and Fourteenth avenue. The plaintiff Tillie Frederick was injured when the car overturned.

Many witnesses were sworn on behalf of appellants, but all of them except one gave evidence concerning the character and extent of the personal injuries sustained by Mrs. Frederick. In view of the fact that the lower court held the respondent free from all negligence, those injuries, however serious, become unimportant on this appeal. The only witness for appellants whose testimony related to the cause of the accident was Mrs. Frederick herself.

In presenting their case to the lower court appellants relied upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and the presumption of negligence carried with it. Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 93 Pac. 106, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68; Sellars v. Southern Pacific Co., 33 Cal. App. 701, 166 Pac. 599; Patterson v. San Francisco & San Mateo Railroad Co., 147 Cal. 178, 81 Pac. 531. And it is contended by appellants on this appeal that the evidence offered by respondent was not only insufficient to rebut the presumption of negligence but, on the contrary, showed that respondent was negligent in the following particulars: That the motorman failed to slacken the speed of the car when he saw the approach of the automobile up Twelfth avenue; that he failed to apply the hand brakes immediately upon learning that the air brakes were rendered useless; and that he failed to reverse the motor in order to check the speed of the car.

[1] There are no questions of law presented so far as the evidence or its admissibility is concerned. The appeal in the main merely presents the question of the sufficiency of the evidence. According to the well-settled rule, if there is any substantial proof in the record to support the findings and decision of the lower court, we are bound by such findings, and its judgment will not be disturbed. Smith v. Gaylord, 179 Cal. 106, 175 Pac. 449; Newman v. City of Alhambra, 179 Cal. 42, 175 Pac. 414; Lutz v. Merchants' National Bank, 179 Cal. 401, 177 Pac. 158; Union Colonization Co. v. Madera Canal & Irr. Co., 179 Cal. 774, 178 Pac. 957; Holroyd v. Gray Taxi Co., 179 Pac. 709; Covel v. Price, 179 Pac. 540; Badger v. San Francisco, 182 Pac. 978.

[2] After a careful examination of the record before us, we are of the opinion that ample proof exists to support the decision of the lower court. All of the testimony offered by respondent to rebut the presumption of negligence is in substantial accord, and we find nothing in it or in the entire record, which indicates that the conclusions reached by the lower court were not justified by the evidence. The street car was in charge of an experienced crew, who were thoroughly familiar with this particular run. The intersection of Twelfth avenue with East Sixteenth street marks the top of a grade on East Sixteenth street, after passing which there is a descent until Fourteenth avenue is reached. The car tracks there take a sharp curve into Fourteenth avenue. As the car crossed Twelfth avenue it was traveling at the rate of speed of from 17 to 19 miles an hour. Stewart the motorman, testified in his deposition that as he crossed Twelfth avenue he threw off the electric current and applied the air brakes in the ordinary and customary manner, preparatory to making a stop at Thirteenth avenue. He saw the approaching automobile as he passed Twelfth avenue, but, believing that it would clear the rear end of his car made no special effort to stop more than he had already done. The application of the air brakes reduced the speed of the car to about 15 miles an hour. As he crossed the east property line of Twelfth avenue he noticed the automobile cutting across the curb and making the turn to go down East Sixteenth street, parallel with the street car. The front end of the street car had proceeded no farther than about 27 feet east of the east property line of Twelfth avenue when the automobile struck the side of the car. He immediately applied a greater force of air to the brakes and continued to manipulate the air brake controller in an effort to stop the car, until he reached the intersection of Thirteenth avenue, when he realized that the air brakes were of no avail. The speed of the car had increased in the meantime to about 24 or 25 miles an hour. Just as he crossed Thirteenth avenue he applied the hand brakes and, with the assistance of a passenger named Robbins, who had been standing near him, the hand brakes were applied to the limit. The conductor also applied the hand brakes from the rear platform, and the speed of the car was slackened to about 22 miles an hour, but not enough to prevent it from turning over on its side when it took the curve at Fourteenth avenue. The testimony of the motorman was fully corroborated by the witness C. E. Robbins, a passenger, who as above stated, had been standing close to the motorman and who assisted in applying the hand brakes. The conductor, Morehead, testified that he saw the rapid approach of the automobile as it came up Twelfth avenue, and that as it turned to go down East Sixteenth street he realized that a collision was inevitable and that he "gave three bells to the motorman, which is the emergency stop"; that the automobile struck the car and he waited for a return signal from the motorman, but, receiving none, he immediately jumped to apply the hand brakes; that as he was pulling the lever of the hand brakes he observed a woman passenger starting to jump off the platform, and he left the brakes temporarily to restrain the woman from jumping; that he then again applied the hand brakes with as much force as he could; and that he was thus applying the hand brakes when the car overturned.

W. P. Jackson, the master mechanic of the respondent company, was also a witness. He testified that on the night of the accident, after it had occurred, he examined the hand brakes and found nothing wrong with them, and on the next morning examined the air brake system and found that it was in perfect order, except that the "nipple in the main reservoir line" was cracked in two places which he explained was not an old break, and that it was also dented on the bottom side. He also explained that enough air would have been left in the air brake cylinder and air pipe line after the automobile ran into the car to give some indication of air brake control, and that the motorman would not realize at once that the air pipe line was broken, because his air brake equipment would for a few seconds function in part. He further testified that in putting on the air brakes the brake shoes will lock and the car slide, and that the practice to test this is to release and reset the brake shoes until a reduction in speed indicates that the brake shoes are taking hold properly; that the release is always accompanied by a hissing of escaping air; and that there was enough air left in the air pipe line and cylinder to give the motorman the impression that the air brake would take hold properly and stop the car.

On the point that the motorman should have reversed the motor appellants rely upon the printed rules of the company, wherein it is stated that under certain emergency conditions the motor should be reversed; but those printed rules also state that reversing a moving car is a very serious strain on the mechanism, especially if running at a high rate of speed, and must never be resorted to except to avoid accident, and that in every case where a car or train is reversed a prompt report should be made to the station foreman, so that examination can be made of the controllers and motor and the motorman explained in his deposition that under the conditions present that night it would have been dangerous to reverse the motor, because, he stated, "It would have blown my overhead (fuse) and it would have had no effect."

[3] The evidence narrated shows sufficient justification for the findings of the lower court that respondent was not negligent in the operation of the car in the manner charged in the complaint, which brings the case within the rule that the conclusions of the lower court cannot be disturbed. Whether or not a motorman is negligent in adopting one of several courses open to him in an emergency is a question for the trial court. Thomson v. Pac. El. Co., 177 Cal. 728, 171 Pac. 956.

[4] Appellants' final point is that the findings do not cover the material issues, the two principal objections urged being that, while the court negatives the specific acts of negligence charged in the complaint, it fails to find the facts which would explain the real cause of the overturning of the car, and that the court fails to affirmatively find that respondent at the time of the accident was exercising the highest degree of care in the operation of the car. There is no merit in these objections. The court did find that respondent was free from all of the acts of negligence charged against it in the complaint. The negligence pleaded in the complaint was the ultimate fact, and, having negatived the acts of negligence pleaded, the court was compelled to go no further. Todd v. Orcutt, 183 Pac. 963. Whatever outside agencies may have contributed to the cause of accident was immaterial, so far as the findings are concerned. Neither was there any prejudice to appellants because the court did not find on those facts about which there was not dispute, such as the fact that the car actually overturned, particularly in view of respondent's failure to deny that said car did overturn. Tolbard v. Cline (Sup.) 180 Pac. 610. Nor is there anything objectionable in the court's findings as to the injuries of Mrs. Frederick. The court merely found to the effect that such injuries were not caused by the negligence of respondent. There was no attempt to find that she had not been injured at all as a result of the accident, and we do not so construe the findings. Taken in their entirety the findings adequately cover all of the issues raised by the pleadings, and are sufficient in form and in substance. In Cooley v. Brunswig Drug Co., 30 Cal. App. 58, 157 Pac. 13, it is said:

"It is an established rule of law that the findings of the trial court are to receive such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat its judgment thereon; and whenever from the facts found other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court. Warren v. Hopkins, 110 Cal. 506, 512, 42 Pac. 986; Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639, 645, 52 Am. St. Rep. 201, 44 Pac. 319; Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 22 L. R. A. 256, 31 Pac. 742."

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 162

POTTER v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3323.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. June 12, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 9, 1920.)

1. Husband and wife ⊜258—Improvements made with community funds belong to spouse owning land.

Where a house was improved with community funds, the improvements belong to the spouse owning the land.

2. Husband and wife ⊜262(1)—No presumption that gift is community property.

While, prior to the amendment of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328) to Civ. Code, § 164, property conveyed to either husband or wife after marriage was presumed community property, such presumption does not arise in case of the conveyance by one spouse to the other, and where a husband conveys real or personal property to his wife, whether it be his separate or the community property, there is a presumption that it becomes her separate property.

3. Husband and wife ⊜248—Whether property is community to be determined by mode of acquisition.

Whether property is community or separate is to be determined by proof showing the mode of acquisition, rather than by declarations of one of the parties that the property was or was not community.

4. Husband and wife ⊜262(1)—Court bound by presumption as to status of property only when there is no other evidence.

The presumption that property conveyed by a husband to his wife is her separate property is binding in a controversy between the husband and the wife's legal representatives only when there is no evidence, direct or indirect, controverting it.

5. Appeal and error ⊜1010(1)—Findings of trial court, supported by evidence, conclusive.

The fact findings of the trial court are conclusive on the appellate court, unless they are manifestly without sufficient support in evidence.

6. Husband and wife ⊜262(1)—Presumption that property conveyed to wife became her separate estate disputable.

The presumption that property, whether real or personal, conveyed to a wife became her separate property, is disputable.

7. Husband and wife ⊜262(2)—Burden on husband to establish that property in wife's name was community.

Where, after the death of a wife, the husband asserted that property standing in her name was community property, and it appeared that it was purchased with funds delivered by the husband to the wife, the husband has the burden of rebutting the presumption that such funds became the wife's separate property, and to sustain the presumption that the property was community property, which arose by reason of its conveyance being before the amendment of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328) to Civ. Code, § 164.

8. Husband and wife ⊜264—Evidence held to warrant finding that property was wife's separate estate.

In an action by the husband to quiet title to property standing in the wife's name, evidence held to warrant finding that the property, which was acquired with moneys delivered by the husband to his wife, was her separate property, on the theory that the delivery of the money was a gift.

9. Evidence ⊜273(3)—Declaration in wife's will that property was separate property inadmissible.

Declaration in the will of a wife that property, the title to which was in her name, was separate property, is inadmissible in an action by the husband against the devisees to quiet title.

10. Appeal and error ⊜926(4)—Presumption that trial court struck out improper evidence.

Where the trial court reserved the right to strike out evidence, concerning the admissibility of which it was doubtful, it will be presumed on appeal, the action having been tried without a jury, that the improper evidence was stricken.

11. Appeal and error ⊜1031(3)—No presumption of prejudice.

Prejudicial error is not presumed, and it cannot be assumed that the improper admission of evidence was prejudicial, where it did not add anything to the weight of the other facts on which the court decided.

12. Evidence ⊂=123(2)—Letters showing relations between spouses many years after conveyance inadmissible as res gestæ.

Letters passing between spouses many years after the husband delivered moneys to his wife, with which she purchased property, are not admissible in an action by the husband against the wife's legal representative, etc., to quiet title, on the theory that the property was community, for they in no way related to the transaction and formed no part of the res gestæ.

13. New trial ⊂=108(2)—Newly discovered evidence, having little weight, no ground for new trial.

Where judgment was rendered against a husband, who sought to quiet title to property purchased by the wife with moneys which he delivered her, newly discovered evidence that the wife referred to the property as the marital home, and stated that the husband's earnings paid for it, was no ground for new trial.

14. Appeal and error ⊂=977(1)—Grant of new trial rests in discretion of lower court.

The granting or refusing of new trial rests so largely in the discretion of the lower court that its action will not be disturbed, except in case of a manifest abuse.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Geo. D. Murray, Judge.

Action by Henry Potter against Charles Henry Smith, Emma Gertrude Smith, and Charles Henry Smith, as executor of the last will and testament of Martha R. Potter, deceased. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pierce H. Ryan, of Eureka, for appellant.

Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for respondent Emma G. Smith.

W. F. Clyborne and J. H. G. Weaver, both of Eureka, for other respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff contends that the land, consisting of two lots with a dwelling house thereon, situated in the city of Eureka, the title to which stood of record in the name of his deceased wife, Martha R. Potter, was community property, and upon her death vested absolutely in him. The defendants claim under the will of the deceased wife. Judgment was entered for the defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals.

Prior to the acquisition of the lots in question, the plaintiff had intrusted the accumulation of his earnings to his wife, and had assigned, indorsed, and delivered to her two notes, representing other portions of his earnings and his wife's savings. The lot was paid for out of this fund. The lower court found that the consideration paid for the land was the separate property of the wife, and that from the date of the conveyance in 1885 the land was her separate property. The sufficiency of these findings presents the serious question on this appeal. A solution of the controversy depends largely upon the nature of the transaction between the plaintiff and his wife, by which, so the respondents contend, all the prior earnings of the plaintiff, including two promissory notes, became the separate property of the wife.

Plaintiff and his wife were married in Michigan in 1872. Neither of them at that time had any property. They came to Humboldt county to reside five years later. They had then accumulated some $400 or $500 and owned a house in Michigan. The plaintiff opened a merchant tailoring establishment in Eureka, and, having no bad or expensive habits, was soon in possession of a lucrative business. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, he gave his wife all his earnings from the time they were married. They occasionally loaned money on notes in the name of plaintiff, but the wife kept the notes in her possession. Plaintiff later began drinking and gambling. What then occurred is best told in his own words:

"When I was about 40 years old I acquired the habit of gambling to some extent; that was about 1885 or 1886, along there, I should judge; it was before the property was bought from Pratt. The deed is dated in 1885, and my wife and I picked out the lot. At one time I had some money loaned out on notes; I couldn't say the exact amount, but to my best knowledge it amounted to something as near as I can remember between $1,500 and $1,600, approximately. I do not remember whose notes they were; one was Dunlap, who had a ranch on Eel River Island. I gave those notes—I assigned them over, or had them assigned over—to my wife because she requested me to do so. She said one morning to me; I had been upon a spree, and she said, 'Henry, better put what you have in my name, as I save it for you;' and I hesitated a few moments, and I said, 'I will let you know at noon.' She said, 'No, don't wait till noon; do it right now;' and I said, 'All right.' She also had a paper, and put here how much I had. I don't know what I had. I said, 'Go to Ernest Sevier (he did my little work) and have them assigned over to you;' and I guess she did. I never asked her whether she had done it, or whether she had not. I never asked her, but I gave her this with that understanding, to save it for us for our old days, so that, if anything happened, there would be something left."

[1] Some time after the transfer of the property by plaintiff to his wife was effected, the lots in question were purchased, that "they might have a home and avoid paying rent." The plaintiff seems to have had but little to do with the transaction, his wife attending to the details. The purchase price of $600 was paid out of the money in the wife's possession. Some time later the plaintiff and his wife purchased a block of land, paying $1,550 for it, out of the same fund. This land was sold a few months later for $3,300, and the money was used in the erection of a house, costing that sum, on the lots which had been purchased for the home. It thus appears without contradiction that the premises, which are the basis of this action, were purchased and improved with funds turned over by the plaintiff to his wife, in the manner indicated, and the accumulation thereof. It was furnished in the same manner. The plaintiff testified that he spent some $480 in the doing of some additional work on the place, which "did not pass through his wife's hands." Assuming that this last amount was community property, the owner of the lots was the owner of the house, and the improvements made with that money belonged to the spouse owning the property. Shaw v. Bernal, 163 Cal. 262, 267, 124 Pac. 1012. The plaintiff's expenditure of that sum of money does not enter into the consideration of the case.

According to the plaintiff, there was never any friction between his wife and him; she exercising "a great deal of patience" with him during his lapses from the straight and narrow path of sobriety. They lived together on the premises in question for nearly 20 years, during the latter 10 years of which period plaintiff's business "ran down pretty bad." During the entire period all his earnings, other than what he spent in his business or for himself, he gave to his wife. In 1903, in order to get away from the old influences, which lured him into evil ways and spendthrift habits, plaintiff left Eureka and went to the state of Idaho, where he established a business and acquired a home. When he went away, he took $2,500, which, he testified, he realized from the sale of a timber claim. He does not appear to have ever solicited his wife to join him there, for she told him she preferred to remain in California. He visited her but once during the 15 years, remaining for about 2 weeks. He never sent her any money during that time, and appears to have once written to her for financial assistance.

For the purpose of tending to offset plaintiff's contentions in this action, it was shown by various witnesses that subsequent to the death of the wife, and after plaintiff's return to California, he made declarations and admissions, the effect of which, respondents claim, was to destroy his present claim. When he was informed by the witness Rotermund that his wife had willed the property to the defendants, he remarked:

"That he was sorry that he gave the property to her, that it was his hard-earned money that bought it; that if Mrs. Potter had left him part of it he would have been satisfied."

The same witness testified that during the trial the plaintiff had stated to him:

"I have given this to Mrs. Potter, and it was my hard-earned money."

In two conversations with the defendants, plaintiff said:

"The property belonged to Mrs. Potter [his wife]. * * * It is my own hard earnings that bought this property. I gave it to her, but it is mine now."

On these facts the respondents defend the conclusions and judgment of the lower court upon the theory, as stated by them:

"That when the plaintiff delivered the money and notes to the wife, and gave the possession of them to her, and in addition transferred and conveyed the same from his name to hers, the presumption immediately arose that said money and notes thereupon became and were thereafter to be treated as her separate property. This is the presumption," they contend, "that applied to the consideration for the lots. Unless the presumption was overcome, the court was justified in finding that the consideration paid for the property was the separate property of the wife, and that the lots were her separate property. The controversy on this phase of the case then resolves itself," they say, "into a question of what the intention of the plaintiff was when he transferred the money and notes from himself to his wife."

[2] Prior to the adoption of the amendment of 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 328) to section 164 of the Civil Code, the prima facie presumption was that property conveyed to either husband or wife, after their marriage, was community property. Nilson v. Sarment, 153 Cal. 524, 527, 96 Pac. 315, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91, and cases cited. But it has never been held that such a presumption arises in case of a conveyance by one of the spouses to the other. Estate of Klumpke, 167 Cal. 415, 423, 139 Pac. 1062. A husband may convey real or personal property to his wife, and whether the property conveyed be his separate or the community property, the presumption is that it thereby becomes, and is thereafter treated as, her separate property. Carter v. McQuaide, 83 Cal. 274, 278, 23 Pac. 348. The presumption of community property cannot apply, where the transaction was in effect a gift from the husband to the wife. In the absence of evidence of a contrary intent, the transfer will vest the property in the wife as her separate property and estate. Hamilton v. Hubbard, 134 Cal. 603, 606, 65 Pac. 321, 66 Pac. 860.

[3-6] The Supreme Court has on several occasions expressed the view that the character of the ownership of property, whether separate or community, is to be determined by the proof showing the mode of acquisition, rather than by any declarations of one of the parties that the property was or was not community property. Bias v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 42, 145 Pac. 516; Hammond v. Mc-

Collough, 159 Cal. 639, 649, 115 Pac. 216; Estate of Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 4, 75 Pac. 324. The court will decide the question of the alleged donor's intention from his acts, declarations, and conduct at the time of the transaction. Killian v. Killian, 10 Cal. App. 312, 319, 101 Pac. 806; Woods v. Whitney, 42 Cal. 358. When the controversy, under such circumstances, is between the husband and the legal representative of the wife, the presumption may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect, and it is only where it is not so controverted that the court is bound to find in accordance with the presumption. Whether or not it is so controverted, or is sustained, is a question of fact, for the trial court, and the conclusions of that tribunal are conclusive upon an appellate court, unless it be manifestly without sufficient support in the evidence. Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 282, 104 Pac. 308. The presumption, one way or the other, although disputable, is itself evidence, and it is for the trial court to say whether the evidence offered to support or overthrow the presumption has sufficient weight to effect that purpose. Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 Pac. 1066; Pabst v. Shearer, 172 Cal. 239, 242, 156 Pac. 466.

[7, 8] The burden was on the plaintiff to rebut the presumption, on the one hand, that he did not intend to make a gift to his wife of the money and notes transferred to her and from which the home was purchased and furnished, and to sustain, on the other hand, the presumption arising from the acquisition of the real property before the amendment to the Code section, that it was community property. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 648, 77 Pac. 657. From all the circumstances, the trial court may well have concluded, as it did, that the transfer of the money and notes in the first instance was a gift from the plaintiff to his wife, and that the subsequent purchase of the lots from that fund was a further consummation of a like intent. It requires no unreasonable or strained interpretation of the evidence to so hold. Auener v. Suiter, 189 Pac. 120. While the plaintiff testified that there was no intent or purpose on his part to give any of the money or any of the notes to his wife, to be hers absolutely, his evidence, competent and admissible as bearing upon the intent of the plaintiff in the transaction, was not conclusive. Gilmour v. North Pasadena Land, etc., Co., supra. The court was not bound to believe the plaintiff when he testified he did not have such intent. Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 285, 104 Pac. 308.

[9-11] Defendants offered the will of Mrs. Potter, devising the property in question to defendants Smith. Plaintiff objected generally to its introduction, and particularly to a portion of the will which stated:

"I hereby declare that all the property, both real and personal, of which I may die, constituted my sole and separate estate."

The objection was overruled pro forma, and the will admitted. When the evidence was all in, plaintiff moved to strike out the portion of the will to which he had objected. The motion was submitted, but was never ruled upon, and the objectionable matter remains in the record. The declaration of the deceased wife in the will was not competent proof that the property in question was her separate property, and should not have been admitted. Rowe v. Hibernia S. & L. Socy., 134 Cal. 403, 407, 66 Pac. 569; Estate of Granniss, supra; Estate of Learned, 156 Cal. 309, 311, 104 Pac. 315; Crowley v. Savings Union Bank & Trust Co., 30 Cal. App. 144, 151, 155, 157 Pac. 516. The lower court seemed to be in doubt upon the matter and expressed the opinion that the declaration in the will was not competent to prove ownership or a separate interest in the property in Mrs. Potter, and, in admitting the document, reserved to itself the right to strike it out, without motion, if it saw fit. In this condition of the record we may assume that it did so, and that the declaration was disregarded. Furthermore, prejudicial error will not be assumed. Estate of Angle, 148 Cal. 102, 107, 82 Pac. 668. We are unable to see that any prejudicial result followed the court's error. The declaration did not add anything to the weight of the other facts upon which the court has decided against the plaintiff. With or without its consideration we feel the result must have been the same.

[12] The plaintiff offered in evidence two letters—one written by himself and received by his wife during her lifetime; the other written and mailed some time after her death—as tending to show a friendly relation between himself and his wife. They were properly excluded. They formed no part of the res gestæ, and were in no way connected with the circumstances surrounding the transactions involved in the action.

[13, 14] The plaintiff moved for a new trial below, basing his motion upon alleged newly discovered evidence, the purport of which was that the witnesses would testify that Mrs. Potter in her lifetime frequently referred to the property as "our home; Henry's [plaintiff's] earnings paid for it, and it is in my name for us both." As we have already pointed out, such declarations, if made, would have little weight, in the face of the controlling circumstances under which the property was acquired. The granting or refusing of a new trial rests so largely in the discretion of the court that its action in that regard will not be disturbed, except upon the disclosure of a manifest and unmistakable abuse. Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116

Cal. 156, 161, 47 Pac. 1019. No abuse of that discretion appears in the instant case.

The consideration for the purchase and improvement of the lots in question having been paid by the wife of the plaintiff from her separate funds, it follows that the lots themselves did not become a part of the community property of the spouses. No error appearing in the record requires a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.; RICHARDS, J.

48 Cal. App. 185

W. P. FULLER & CO. et al. v. McCLURE. (Civ. 3190.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 15, 1920, as Modified by Order, July 16, 1920, Denying Rehearing.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=694(1)—Particulars of insufficiency of evidence must be specified in bill of exceptions.

The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered on appeal, based on bill of exceptions, where the bill contains no specification of the particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 648.

2. Mortgages ⊂=151(3)—Priorities as to mechanics' liens, stated.

A mortgage given to secure future advances has priority over mechanics' liens subsequently arising to the extent of the full amount advanced, including what is advanced after, as well as before, the accrual of mechanics' liens, where the making of such advances was obligatory upon the mortgagee under the terms of his contract with the mortgagor, but as to mere voluntary advances, made after the mechanics' liens accrued, and with notice thereof, the mortgage is postponed.

3. Bills and notes ⊂=167 — Note secured by mortgage on land not negotiable in law if purchaser has notice.

If a note is secured by a mortgage on land, and both are executed at the same time, or as parts of one transaction, the note, though negotiable in form, is not negotiable in law, if the purchaser takes it with knowledge of the existence of the mortgage.

4. Mortgages ⊂=151(3) — Priorities between mechanics' liens and mortgage under which optional advancements are made, stated.

Where advances under a mortgage are optional after the payment of a certain fixed amount, and material is being furnished to the mortgagor by which mechanics' liens may attach, the mortgagee having notice thereof as to each advancement made under the mortgage, the mortgage is to be regarded as a fresh mortgage, subject to the liens of such of the materialmen as had commenced furnishing material prior to the time when the advancement was made, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1186.

5. Evidence ⊂=441(5) — Parol evidence that advances under mortgage were optional held admissible.

In a suit to foreclose mechanics' liens, where the question of the priority of the mortgage under which the advancements had been made was raised, parol evidence held admissible to show that, though the note and mortgage were made for a definite sum, they were executed as part of an oral agreement that the mortgagee should be obligated to advance a lesser sum merely, and that any additional payments should be optional and not obligatory.

6. Evidence ⊂=419(1)—Recitals of written instrument as to consideration not conclusive.

The recitals of a written instrument as to the consideration are not conclusive, and it is competent to inquire into the consideration, and show by parol what the real consideration was, provided the legal effect or operation of the instrument is not thereby altered or defeated.

7. Mortgages ⊂=50—Nature of debt intended to be secured need not be truly set forth.

It is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage that it should truly set forth the nature and character of the debt that it is intended to secure.

8. Evidence ⊂=419(10) — True consideration for mortgage admissible in suit to foreclose mechanic's lien.

In a suit to foreclose mechanics' liens, where the question of the priority of a mortgage under which optional payments had been made was raised, parol evidence as to the true character of the consideration for the mortgage held admissible, not to defeat the mortgage, as such, but to show when the mortgage lien attached.

9. New trial ⊂=153—Affidavits, not filed within 30 days after notice of intention, too late.

On motion for new trial, where notice of intention was served July 6, 1917, and the affidavits upon which movant relied were not served until August 7, 1917, nor filed until August 8th, the motion must be denied, since the affidavits were not filed within 30 days after notice of intention, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 659.

10. New trial ⊂=153—Failure to file affidavits held not cured by notice of intention to party not interested.

Where in a suit to foreclose mechanics' liens, decree adjudged that a trust deed was prior to a mortgage held by an assignee, and the assignee moved for new trial on ground of want of consideration given for trust deed, but failed to file affidavits within 30 days after notice of intention of motion, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 659, the failure was not cured by service of notice of intention on a mechanic lien claimant, not interested in priority issue, at a later date, which would make affidavits in time.

11. Mortgages ⊂=25(2)—Agreement whereby purchaser of mortgage was authorized to foreclose at profit held sufficient consideration.

Where a mortgagor found a purchaser of the note and mortgage under an agreement with the mortgagee whereby the purchaser was to be entitled to foreclose the mortgage in an amount greater than the amount actually advanced, thereby allowing the purchaser a profit, such agreement constituted sufficient consideration as between the mortgagor and the purchaser.

12. Mortgages ⟸159—Mortgage held prior to trust deed for fixed amount, although less than such amount had been actually advanced.

Where a trust deed was expressly made subject to a mortgage for a stated amount, but under which a lesser sum only had been advanced, the holder of the trust deed took the instrument subject to the right of the holder of the mortgage to enforce it to the extent that it was enforceable against the mortgagor.

13. Mortgages ⟸159—Trust deed subject to mortgage held not subject to mechanics' liens to which mortgage was subject.

Where a trust deed, reciting that it was subsequent to a previously recorded mortgage, was recorded before any work had been done or materials furnished, forming the basis for a mechanic's lien, and the mortgage authorized the mortgagee to pay all liens or incumbrances that were prior to the mortgage, and alleged that it was given to secure all sums that might be paid by the mortgagee to satisfy prior liens, such recitals held not to make the trust deed subject to the mechanic's lien to which the mortgage was subject, where the mortgage on its face did not indicate that the payment of the whole mortgage indebtedness was not obligatory upon the mortgagee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Consolidated actions by W. P. Fuller & Co. and others against John Q. McClure, with cross-complaint by defendant. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Charles Robert McCarty, of Los Angeles, Frank C. Sherrer, for appellant.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent W. P. Fuller & Co.

Sheldon Borden and Richard J. O. Culver, both of Los Angeles, for respondents Simons Brick Co., Frank Wilson Young, and Title Guarantee & Trust Co.

E. S. Williams, of Los Angeles, for respondent L. W. Blinn Lumber Co.

William Hazlett and Glenn M. Ely, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Lawyer and others.

Kenton A. Miller, of Los Angeles, for respondent Simons Brick Co.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for respondent Hammond Lumber Co.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent Weaver.

Robert W. McDonald and Edward R. Milliken, both of Pasadena, for respondents Hart and Graver.

FINLAYSON, P. J. The defendant and cross-complainant, John Q. McClure, the holder of a mortgage, appeals from a decree of foreclosure given in several actions for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens. The actions were consolidated and tried as one action. The sole question is one of priority as between appellant, the holder of the mortgage, the defendant Young, who is the beneficiary under a trust deed, and the mechanics' lien claimants.

[1] The case comes to us on a bill of exceptions. The bill contains no specification of the "particulars" wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient. By a long line of decisions it is settled that the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered on an appeal based upon a bill of exceptions, where, as here, the bill contains no specification of "particulars," as required by section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 797, 167 Pac. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184; Regoli v. Stevenson, 179 Cal. 257, 176 Pac. 158. We shall therefore accept as true the facts as found by the trial court.

The case, as shown by the findings, is substantially as follows: The lot cumbered by the liens originally was owned by Lillian Young, who, on April 27, 1916, conveyed it to A. T. Storch. On May 9, 1916, Storch executed to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, as trustee, for the benefit of Lillian Young, the beneficiary of the trust, a trust deed securing the payment of a promissory note for $2,500, payable two years after date, and executed by Storch to Lillian Young as payee. The trust deed contains a recital to the effect that it is given as a part of the purchase price due to Lillian Young on her conveyance of the premises to Storch. Meanwhile, namely, on April 27, 1916, Storch had executed a promissory note, for the principal sum of $6,500, to one Fred H. Richman, as the payee, payable three years after date, and had secured its payment by a mortgage of even date, duly recorded May 9, 1916. The trust deed, recorded May 10, 1916, referring to the mortgage to Richman, contains this recital:

"This trust deed is subject to a first mortgage of $6,500, at eight per cent. for three years, in favor of Fred H. Richman. This trust deed is second and is given as part of the purchase price of the above-described premises."

The trust deed is now held by the defendant and respondent Frank Wilson Young. By assignment of the mortgage, appellant, McClure, has become the owner of the mortgage and of the note for $6,500 secured thereby. No mechanic's lien claimants commenced to perform labor or furnish materials before May 11, 1916, on which day two of them commenced furnishing materials. The mechanic's lien claimant last to commence furnishing materials did so on June 5, 1916.

When Storch purchased the lot from Lillian Young it was unincumbered. At the time when Storch executed the note to Richman for $6,500, and gave the latter the mortgage to secure its payment, the mortgagee paid Storch the sum of $1,600. That payment was made, and the note and mortgage executed, pursuant to an oral agreement between Storch and Richman that the latter would advance and loan the former $1,600. At the same time Storch told Richman that he intended to erect buildings upon the lot, and that, in order to get money to carry on the building, he would endeavor to find some one who would purchase the note and mortgage and pay therefor such an amount as might be agreed upon by himself and such purchaser of the mortgage; and the $1,600 was paid by Richman, and the note and mortgage executed, pursuant to an oral agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee whereby the latter agreed that if the former found a purchaser for the note and mortgage, he, the mortgagee, would transfer the note and mortgage to such purchaser upon the repayment to him of the total amount that he might actually have advanced to Storch in the meantime. At the same time the mortgagee told the mortgagor that if, in his opinion, there should be sufficient security afforded by the mortgage after the building was in progress, he, the mortgagee, would advance, from time to time, further sums until the mortgagor should succeed in selling the note and mortgage, but that all loans or advances that he might make, over and above the first payment of $1,600, should be entirely optional on his part, and that the only amount that he should be obligated to loan or advance, on account of the note or mortgage or otherwise, was to be said sum, $1,600, and no more. Richman had actual knowledge of the construction work from the time of its commencement, and personally inspected the work every time he made an advancement. About June 20, 1916, Storch found a purchaser for the note and mortgage in the person of McClure, the appellant here. On that date the note and mortgage were assigned to McClure. Up to that time, Richman, in addition to the $1,600 paid by him at the date of the execution of the note and mortgage, had made four payments to the mortgagor, aggregating $1,300, making, with the original payment of $1,600 a total of $2,900 paid or advanced by Richman to Storch before the assignment of the note and mortgage to McClure. The respective mechanic's lien claimants commenced furnishing material on dates intermediate the time when Richman made the initial payment of $1,600 to his mortgagor and the time when he made the last advancement on the mortgage loan. When the note and mortgage were assigned to McClure, the latter paid $5,000, a part of which was used in repaying to Richman the $2,900 that he had theretofore paid to the mortgagor. The balance was received and kept by Storch. It was agreed by Storch and McClure that, though the latter should pay not more than $5,000, the note and mortgage should stand as an obligation on Storch's part for $6,000, with interest thereon. This was done in order that McClure might thus make a profit of $1,000. McClure took the note and mortgage and paid his money with notice of the agreement that Storch and Richman had made, and of the optional nature of all the payments that had been made by Richman after the payment of the first sum of $1,600, and also with notice of the amounts of these several optional payments. When he bought the note and mortgage, McClure had actual notice that the construction work was going on. No part of the $5,000 has been repaid.

As already stated, the several mechanics' liens accrued, respectively, on dates intermediate the first payment of $1,600 by the mortgagor and the date when he made his last advancement on the mortgage loan. And in fixing the order of priority of the several liens, the foreclosure decree adjudges, in substance and effect, that the liens attach to the property in the following order: (1) That the holder of the mortgage, appellant, has a first lien to secure the original payment of $1,600; (2) that the liens of the mechanics' lien claimants and the lien of the mortgage to secure the optional payments that were made thereunder after the initial payment of $1,600, attached, respectively, as of the time when the several mechanics' lien claimants commenced to furnish materials and when the several optional payments were made under the mortgage—the lien of each optional advancement made by the mortgagee being deferred to the liens of such of the mechanics' lien claimants as had theretofore commenced furnishing materials for use in the building; and (3) that the lien of the mortgage, to the extent of the amount actually paid thereunder, namely, $5,000, is prior to the lien of the trust deed.

Because the mortgage was recorded before the building was commenced or materials were commenced to be furnished, appellant contends that he has a lien on the premises prior to all the other liens to secure the payment of the full amount of the principal and interest of the note that the mortgage secured, $6,500, citing in support of this contention, among other cases, Valley Lumber Co. v. Wright, 2 Cal. App. 293, 84 Pac. 58. In that case it was held that where the owner of a building executes a promissory note for a definite amount, in consideration of the loan of all of that amount by the payee, the amount so loaned to be used in the construction of the building, a deed of trust, given to secure the payment of the note and recorded before the building is commenced or materials are commenced to be furnished, will take precedence over the mechanics' liens, though no part of the agreed loan be paid until after the commencement of the work. In that case the payee was under an enforceable obligation to furnish a sum equal to the principal of the note. The execution of the note and trust deed was therefore a sufficient consideration for the payee's binding obligation to advance the full amount. In the instant case the mortgagee was under no obligation to pay anything beyond the initial payment of $1,600. All payments over and above the first payment were optional with the mortgagee. This distinction is vital, and is recognized in the Wright Case, where the court said:

"There is a marked distinction recognized by the cases between advances which are optional with the mortgagee and advances which are agreed to be made, i. e., obligatory, and the amounts definitely fixed. This distinction is stated in Savings, etc., Socy. v. Barrett, 106 Cal. 514, 532, 533, 39 Pac. 922, where the court seems to regard Tapia v. Demartini, 77 Cal. 383, 11 Am. St. Rep. 288, 19 Pac. 641, as stating the rule as to optional advances, as also does Hall v. Glass, 123 Cal. 500, 11 Am. St. Rep. 288, 56 Pac. 336." 2 Cal. App. 291, 84 Pac. 59.

[2] Where a mortgagee has obligated himself to make advances, such advances tack, and the mortgage, when recorded, is a valid lien for all the advances actually made, although they may have been made after notice of a subsequent mortgage or incumbrance of the property. Where, however, the mortgagee is not obligated to pay the full amount of the sum named or to make all the advances mentioned in the mortgage, but it is optional with him to do so or not, and he makes advances or payments after having notice that a lien has attached in favor of a third party, his lien for payments or advances made after such notice will be postponed to that of the junior incumbrance, and each of such advances will be deemed the equivalent of a new mortgage. In such cases the mortgage lien attaches as and when the optional advancements are made. The rule is stated in Cyc. as follows:

"A mortgage given to secure future advances has priority over mechanics' liens subsequently arising to the extent of the full amount advanced, including what is advanced after, as well as before, the accrual of the mechanics' liens, where the making of such advances was obligatory upon the mortgagee under the terms of his contract with the mortgagor; but as to mere voluntary advances made after the mechanics' liens accrued, and with notice thereof, the mortgage is postponed." 27 Cyc. 239, 240.

This statement of the rule is, we think, substantially correct, and is either sustained or recognized by the following authorities: Finlayson v. Crooks, 47 Minn. 74, 49 N. W. 398, 645; Gray v. McClellan, 214 Mass. 92, 100 N. E. 1093; Davis v. Carlisle, 142 Fed. 106, 73 C. C. A. 330; Ladue v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759; Boswell v. Goodwin, 31 Conn. 74, 81 Am. Dec. 169; Brinkmeyer v. Browneller, 55 Ind. 488; Blackmar v. Sharp, 23 R. I. 412, 50 Atl. 852; Erickson v. Ireland, 134 Minn. 156, 158 N. W. 918; Savings & L. Socy. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 532, 533, 39 Pac. 922; Hall v. Glass, 123 Cal. 504, 56 Pac. 336, 69 Am. St. Rep. 77; Valley L. Co. v. Wright, supra; 1 Jones on Mortgages, § 369.

[3] The note, of which appellant, who was conversant with all the facts, became the owner by assignment, is not negotiable in the hands of appellant. He has none of the rights peculiar to the ownership of negotiable paper. He stands in the shoes of Richman, the original mortgagee. This is so because the rule in this state is that if the note is secured by a mortgage on land, and both are executed at the same time or as parts of one transaction, the note, although negotiable in form, is not negotiable in law, if the purchaser takes it with knowledge of the existence of the mortgage. National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881.

[4] According to the findings of the trial court, all advancements made on the mortgage after the original payment of $1,600 were optional with the mortgagee and his assignee, this appellant. Neither was obligated to make any further payment. Prior to making any of the optional payments, the mortgagee and his assignee, appellant, had actual notice that material had been furnished by some of the mechanics' lien claimants. Each, therefore, being charged with knowledge of the law, had actual notice that the liens of the mechanic's lien claimants had attached. Finlayson v. Crooks, supra; Allen Co. v. Emerton, 108 Me. 221, 79 Atl. 905. As to each advancement so made, therefore, the mortgage is to be regarded as a fresh mortgage, subject to the liens of such of the materialmen as had commenced furnishing material prior to the time when the advancement was made. The liens provided for in the chapter on mechanics' liens "are preferred to any lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance which may have attached subsequent to the time when the building, improvement or structure was commenced * * * or materials were commenced to be furnished." Code Civ. Proc. § 1186.

The foreclosure decree accords with the principles thus far announced, and we find no error in the decree in so far as it gives to the mechanics' liens priority over the mortgage.

[5-8] Parol evidence was admissible to show that, though the note and mortgage were made for a definite sum, $6,500, they were executed as part of an oral agreement that the mortgagee should be obligated to advance but $1,600, and that any additional payments should be optional and not obligatory. The note and mortgage were by their terms the unilateral obligations of the mortgagor, executed by him to the mortgagee for a consideration. The consideration for the note and mortgage is that which the mortgagee did or agreed to do. As a general rule, the recitals of a written instrument as to the consideration are not conclusive, and it is competent to inquire into the consideration and show by parol what the real consideration was, provided the legal effect or operation of the instrument is not thereby altered or defeated. It is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage that it should truly set forth the nature and character of the debt that it is intended to secure. Shirras v. Caig, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 34, 3 L. Ed. 260. The evidence was not introduced to defeat or alter the legal effect and operation of the mortgage, but to show the times at which the mortgage lien attached. Therefore, on the issue of priority as between the holder of the mortgage and the mechanic's lien claimants, parol evidence as to the true character of the consideration for the mortgage was admissible, not to defeat the mortgage as a mortgage, but to show when the mortgage lien attached. For this purpose, it is permissible to show by parol that a mortgage, which upon its face appears to be for the payment of a specified sum of money, was in fact given as security for future optional advances. Moreover, the note and mortgage being in the usual form and containing no indication of the purpose for which they were given, the parol evidence does not tend to vary their terms, but to show the whole agreement in which they originated and of which they constitute but a part. McKinster v. Babcock, 26 N. Y. 381; Shirras v. Caig, supra; Kaphan v. Ryan, 16 S. C. 352; McAteer v. McAteer, 31 S. C. 313, 9 S. E. 966; Louisville Banking Co. v. Leonard, 90 Ky. 106, 13 S. W. 521; Hall v. Tay, 131 Mass. 192; Wilkerson v. Tillman, 66 Ala. 532; 1 Jones, Mtgs. § 384. See, also, Vogan v. Caminetti, 65 Cal. 438, 4 Pac. 435.

[9] Appellant moved for a new trial in the court below. His motion was denied. In support of his motion he filed affidavits intended to show that there was no consideration for the trust deed that had been executed for the benefit of Lillian Young, and now held by the respondent Frank Wilson Young. The sole purpose of the affidavits was to show that the trust deed should not be given priority over appellant's mortgage. The bill of exceptions shows that on July 6, 1917, the attorneys for all the respondents acknowledged, in writing, service upon them of appellant's notice of intention to move for a new trial. The affidavits upon which appellant relied for a new trial were not served until August 7, 1917, nor filed until August 8, 1917, which, if the notice of intention was served on July 6, 1917, was too late. Where a motion for a new trial is to be made upon affidavits, the moving party must serve and file his affidavits not later than 30 days after serving his notice of intention. Code Civ. Proc. § 659.

[10] There would, therefore, be no question as to the failure of appellant to serve his affidavits within the time provided by the Code, were it not that the bill of exceptions also states that, as shown by a certain affidavit of service, the notice of intention was served on the attorneys for one of the mechanic's lien claimants on July 9, 1917. But the mechanics' lien claimants are not interested in any issue of priority as between the mortgage and the trust deed. The affidavits upon which appellant relied pertained to an issue in which none of the respondents is interested, except Young, the holder of the trust deed. The record shows without doubt that the notice of intention was served on the attorneys for Young, the holder of the trust deed, on July 6, 1917. The affidavits, therefore, were not served in time to entitle appellant to a new trial of any issue affecting the rights of Young as the holder of the trust deed. For this reason the motion for a new trial was properly denied.

Though the foreclosure decree conforms with the views we have thus far expressed, we think that in the particular about to be noticed it is not justified by the findings, and that it should be modified to accord with what is said infra.

[11] The facts disclosed by the findings show that the mortgage was entitled to priority over the trust deed to the extent of $6,000—not merely $5,000, as adjudged by the trial court. The trust deed, it will be remembered, expressly recites that it is subject to the mortgage of Richman for $6,500. The trial court gave effect to this declaration of the trust deed by allowing to the mortgage priority over the trust deed to the amount actually advanced or loaned under the mortgage, namely, $5,000, but held that the mortgage was subordinate to the trust deed as to so much of the mortgage as was not advanced, $1,500. Of this sum of $1,500, $500 was voluntarily deducted by appellant from the face of the mortgage when he bought it, and the balance, $1,000, represents the amount that Storch agreed should be allowed appellant as a profit or discount. That is, when Storch sold the mortgage to McClure, pursuant to the agreement that Storch theretofore had made with the mortgagee, Richman, it was agreed between Storch and McClure that if the latter would credit $500 on the mortgage, thus reducing it to $6,000, Storch would sell it to him for

$5,000, thus allowing McClure a profit or discount of $1,000. Therefore, when Storch, the mortgagor, sold the note and mortgage to McClure, he, in effect, agreed that, though the latter was to pay but $5,000, nevertheless he should be entitled to foreclose the mortgage to the extent of $6,000; in other words, that the mortgage should be a lien on the land to the extent of $6,000. It is probable that it was only by allowing McClure this profit of $1,000 that Storch was able to secure the $5,000. There was therefore ample consideration, as between Storch and McClure, to support a lien to secure the full amount agreed upon, $6,000. When the beneficiary under the trust deed declared therein that that instrument should be subject to the mortgage, she declared, in effect, that it should be subject to what, apparently, was the amount secured thereby, $6,500. If the trust deed had been recorded before the mortgage, and if the court had found that the beneficiary in the trust deed had agreed that that instrument should be subject to the mortgage if all the moneys to be advanced under the mortgage were used in the construction of the building, it would have been proper to adjudge that the mortgage was entitled to priority to the extent, and only to the extent, that the moneys furnished by the holder of the mortgage were used in the construction of the building, which could not exceed the $5,000 actually paid. Joralmon v. McPhee, 31 Colo. 26, 71 Pac. 419. But there was no such understanding. By accepting the trust deed with the clause that it is subject to the mortgage, the beneficiary under the trust deed agreed that it should be subject to the mortgage to the extent of any indebtedness that might be owing by the mortgagor on the note and mortgage, not exceeding the face of the note, which indebtedness was, as we have seen, the amount agreed upon by the mortgagor and McClure when the latter bought the mortgage, namely, $6,000.

[12] Under the circumstances of this case we think that the holder of the trust deed took that instrument subject to the right of the holder of the mortgage to enforce it to the extent that it is enforceable against the mortgagor. Without doubt, a junior incumbrancer may always allege and show that the claim of a prior mortgagee is exaggerated. But here the claim of the holder of the mortgage that $6,000 is the amount secured thereby is not exaggerated. That is the amount that the mortgagor, for a valuable consideration, agreed should be paid to the purchaser of the note and mortgage if he should purchase and pay $5,000 therefor. There are circumstances under which it is proper for the holder of a mortgage to enforce it to the full extent of the amount named therein, though but a part thereof has been paid. Freeman v. Auld, 44 N. Y. 50. See, also, Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 355. In Freeman v. Auld, supra, it was held that, as against the grantee of a lot who purchased subject to a prior mortgage, an assignee of the mortgage can enforce the mortgage to the full extent expressed therein, although he purchased the mortgage with knowledge that but one-half of that sum had actually been loaned thereon, and he himself had paid the mortgagee only that amount as consideration for the assignment. It is possible that there are material points of dissimilarity between that case and this. We only cite it to show that there are cases where it is proper to give priority to a mortgage for the full amount named therein, though less than that amount has actually been loaned by the mortgagee or his assignee. And we think that this is just such a case, except that here the assignee of the mortgagee is entitled to priority over the trust deed only to the extent that he agreed to take the mortgage as security, namely, $6,000.

[13] Though subject to the mortgage lien to the extent of $6,000, we do not think the trust deed is subject both to the mechanics' liens and the mortgage, thus making it subordinate to liens that, in the aggregate, exceed $6,000. Though recorded after the mortgage was recorded, and though it recites that it is subject to the mortgage, the trust deed was recorded before any work was done or materials were commenced to be furnished. In the ordinary course of things, therefore, the trust deed would be prior to any of the mechanics' liens. But the mortgage, which the trust deed says it is subject to, declares that the mortgagee may pay all liens or incumbrances that are prior to the mortgage, and that it is given to secure all sums that may be paid by the mortgagee to satisfy any prior liens. Because of these provisions in the mortgage it is suggested by the mechanic's lien claimants that the trust deed, which is declared to be subject to the mortgage, must also be subject to the mechanics' liens to which the mortgage is subject. We think, however, that this argument gives to the clause in the trust deed declaring that it is subject to the mortgage a meaning never intended by the trustee or by the beneficiary named in the trust deed. It may be conceded, for the purpose of this decision, that by reason of these provisions in the mortgage and the trust deed the latter is subordinate to all liens that are prior to the mortgage, and which were within the contemplation of the parties as possible prior liens when the trust deed was executed. But we do not think that the mechanics' liens are within that category. Neither the trustee nor the beneficiary under the trust deed could have anticipated, when it was agreed that the trust deed should be subject to the mortgage, that the latter would ever be subordinate to any mechanics' liens in any particular or to any extent whatever. The mortgage was recorded before any work was done or materials furnished, as was also the trust deed. The mortgage, upon its face, gives no inkling that the advancement of the whole mortgage indebtedness, $6,500, was not obligatory upon the mortgagee. Neither the trustee nor the beneficiary under the trust deed knew aught of the oral agreement between Storch and Richman, or between Storch and McClure. So far as the trustee and the beneficiary are concerned, the agreement that the trust deed should be subordinate to the mortgage was not made in contemplation of the mortgagor's oral agreement with his mortgagee that all advancements that the latter might make over and above the initial payment of $1,600 should be optional only. If that oral agreement had not been made, the mortgage never would have been subordinate to any of the mechanics' liens, and consequently the trust deed would not be subordinate to any of them either. Our conclusion is that the security afforded by the trust deed should in no wise and to no extent be impaired by reason of the secret oral agreement between Storch and his mortgagee, whereby there was created a situation not contemplated by the trustee or the beneficiary under the trust deed when the latter instrument was executed.

For the foregoing reasons we conclude that the foreclosure decree should provide that the trust deed is subordinate to an amount equal, in the aggregate, to said sum of $6,000, together with any unpaid and accrued interest on such sum of $6,000, at the rate provided for in the mortgage, and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the trial court and based upon said sum of $6,000 and said interest thereon.

There are no other assignments of error that merit discussion.

The result of our conclusions is that the judgment is correct, except in the particular above mentioned. The facts appear with sufficient certainty in the findings to authorize the entry of a judgment modified to accord with these conclusions. There is, therefore, no necessity for remanding the case for another trial. The proper result can be reached by directing a modification of the judgment. This will necessitate a recasting of the entire judgment—a task that should devolve upon the court below, where the trial judge, if he please, may avail himself of the assistance of counsel for the respective parties in drafting the modified judgment.

It is adjudged that the cause be, and it is, remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the judgment in the particular indicated, and to re-enter the judgment as thus modified. And as so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed. Appellant will recover his costs of appeal against the respondents Frank Wilson Young and Title Guarantee & Trust Company.

We concur: THOMAS, J.; WELLER, J.

183 Cal. 585

HARDIMAN et al. v. CHURCH, Judge.
(S. F. 9394.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1920.)

1. Wills ⟸225, 249—Objection to jurisdiction not ground for contest, but for opposition to probate.

Want of jurisdiction in the superior court because deceased was not a resident of the county is not a proper ground for contesting the will (Code Civ. Proc. § 1312), but contestants may object to the court's jurisdiction to entertain the application for probate on that ground.

2. Wills ⟸384—Review of conclusions on jurisdictional question of residence allowable.

On appeal from a judgment or order admitting a will to probate, contestants are entitled to have reviewed the conclusions of the court on the residence of deceased, which is essential to jurisdiction, and such rulings receiving or excluding evidence on that issue as may be complained of.

3. Exceptions, bill of ⟸36(3)—Wills ⟸364—Attempted appeal in will contest and service of bill of exceptions held made within time.

In a will contest neither the objection that the attempted appeal was not taken within the time allowed, or that the proposed bill was not served in time, was well grounded, where there was a proceeding on motion for new trial allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1714, and decision thereon and bill and appeal were served and taken, respectively, within proper time thereafter, under sections 630, 939, regardless of the merits of the motion.

4. Exceptions, bills of ⟸55(4)—Mandate to compel settlement not to be taken as intimating Supreme Court's view on merits.

A decision, granting a peremptory writ of mandate to compel settlement of bill of exceptions, is not to be taken as intimating any view as to the merits of the appeal in the light afforded by the proposed bill.

In Bank.

Application by Mary Hardiman and others for writ of mandate, directed to the Superior Court of Alameda County, and Hon. Lincoln S. Church, judge thereof, to compel a settlement of a bill of exceptions for appeal from a judgment admitting to probate the will of Jane O'Neil. Writ granted.

W. F. Stafford and Wm. M. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Dixon L. Phillips, of Oakland, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandate to compel the settlement of a bill of exceptions for use on an appeal from a judgment or order of the superior court of Alameda county, admitting to probate the will of one Jane O'Neil. The will was contested, petitioners here, who were heirs of deceased, being the contestants, the grounds of contest stated in the written opposition to probate filed being: First, want of jurisdiction of the superior court of Alameda county, for the reason that deceased was not a resident of that county at the time of her death; second, incompetency of deceased to make a will; third, want of proper execution, and, fourth, undue influence.

[1] The first ground stated was not a proper ground of contest of the will (section 1312, Code Civ. Proc.), but the contestants did have the right to object to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the application for probate on that ground, and the statement in the opposition to probate filed of the alleged facts in this regard constituted such an objection. Answer to the opposition was filed by the proponent of the will, and, a trial having been had, judgment was given, admitting the will to probate. Within the time prescribed by law therefor the contestants duly initiated a proceeding on motion for a new trial of the contest, the grounds therefor specified therein being limited, however, to the issue of the residence of the deceased at the time of her death, and the matter of the jurisdiction of the superior court of Alameda county, dependent on the residence of deceased in said county at such time, to admit said will to probate, or to hear said contest. The motion for a new trial was denied on November 15, 1919, the order of denial being entered that day, and the appeal of contestants from the judgment was taken within 30 days thereafter, viz. on November 24, 1919, but not within 60 days after the entry of the judgment or order admitting the will to probate. Within the time allowed by law, assuming the time commenced to run upon notice of the order denying a new trial, and the further time granted by the court, contestants served their proposed bill of exceptions, this proposed bill containing only matters relative to the residence of deceased at the time of her death, including the rulings of the trial court in regard to evidence offered on this question and its determination on the evidence that the deceased was a resident of Alameda county.

[2] It cannot be disputed that upon an appeal from the judgment or order admitting the will to probate the contestants are entitled to have reviewed the conclusion of the trial court on the question of the residence of the deceased, a matter essential to the jurisdiction of the court to try the contest, and such rulings in the matter of receiving or excluding evidence on that issue as may be complained of. See Estate of Latour, 140 Cal. 414, 425, 73 Pac. 1070, 74 Pac. 441.

[3] The learned judge of the trial court refused to settle the bill solely on the ground that the attempted appeal was not taken within the time allowed by law, and the further ground that the proposed bill was not served in time. Neither of these objections was well grounded if there was a proceeding on motion for a new trial, for the appeal, while taken more than 60 days after the entry of judgment, was taken within 30 days after the order denying a new trial was entered (section 939, Code Civ. Proc.), and the proposed bill of exceptions was served within the time allowed by law as extended by the court after the entry of such order. Section 650, Code Civ. Proc. We have seen that a proceeding for a new trial was duly instituted, and terminated by an order denying the motion. The law allows such a proceeding in the case of "contests of will." Section 1714, Code Civ. Proc.

The claim in this connection is, in the last analysis, that in view of the fact that no ground upon which a new trial of the contest could properly be granted was stated in the notice of intention to move for a new trial, there was in fact no proceeding on motion for a new trial within the meaning of our statutory provisions relative to the time of taking appeals, with the result that the appeal should have been taken within 60 days after the entry of the judgment or order. We are satisfied that it cannot fairly be so held. There was in fact a proceeding on motion for a new trial in a case where the statute expressly allows such a proceeding. The motion was more obviously devoid of merit perhaps than such motions usually are, but the objection was one going to the merits of the motion and not to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain it. See in this connection Estate of Nutt, 57 Cal. Dec. 512, and cases there cited. As a matter of right the petitioners were entitled to have the bill of exceptions settled for use on their appeal from the judgment or order.

[4] We see no ground upon which it may fairly be held that petitioners are not entitled to a writ of mandate as prayed. Of course, our decision is not to be taken as intimating any view as to the merits of the appeal in the light afforded by the proposed bill. So far as this application for mandate is concerned, that is a matter that may properly be decided only upon the hearing of the appeal, or upon a motion to affirm for obvious want of merit in the appeal.

Let a peremptory writ of mandamus issue in accord with the prayer of the petition.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; OLNEY, J.

183 Cal. 537

McNUTT v. HANNON. (L. A. 5337.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1920, as Modified by Order of Sept. 10, 1920, Denying Hearing.)

1. Partnership ⊂=258(8)—Evidence held to show that fees and services by a surviving law partner were firm assets.

In an action for an accounting against the surviving partner of a law firm, evidence held to sustain finding that the fees for which an accounting was asked for the foreclosure of mortgages due an estate for which the partners were attorneys and for final settlement of the estate, were firm assets, though the services were rendered by the surviving partner after the death of the other.

2. Partnership ⊂=255(4)—Final settlement is included in employment as attorneys for administrator.

An employment of a firm of lawyers for the administrator of an estate includes their employment to procure the final settlement of the estate, so that the fees for such settlement are firm assets, though one of the partners died before the services were rendered.

3. Partnership ⊂=255(4)—Surviving partner bound to apply part payment of fee to partnership claim.

Where a firm of lawyers was employed in a case at an agreed fee, and after death of a member the survivor prosecuted an appeal, and received less than the agreed fee for all services, he was bound to apply the entire amount received to the payment of the agreed fee due the partnership, though the appeal was not included in the employment of the firm, so that the fee therefor would not be firm assets.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Finlay A. McNutt, executor of the last will and testament of Cyrus F. McNutt, deceased, against Joseph E. Hannon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Vincent Hannon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for repondent.

WILBUR, J. Cyrus F. McNutt and J. E. Hannon, the defendant, were law partners from 1897 until the death of the former, May 31, 1912. The plaintiff, as executor of the will of the deceased partner, brought this action against the surviving partner for an accounting and recovered judgment for $9,292.70, being one-third of the fees that the trial court found resulted from the partnership. Defendant appeals from the judgment on a bill of exceptions, and the plaintiff, while claiming that there should have been an equal division of the $27,878.10 fees received by the surviving partner, does not appeal. The court found that the plaintiff is "equitably entitled to receive one-third" thereof.

[1] The defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that the partnership existed at the time of the death of plaintiff's testator and the finding that the fees defendant was required to account for were received for the partnership, and, even if they were for partnership business, that the decision of the trial court was inequitable, inasmuch as most of the work for which the fees were paid was done by defendant after the death of his partner. The first claim of the defendant is that the partnership was dissolved about 30 days before the death of McNutt. It is sufficient upon this point to say that the evidence abundantly supports the conclusion of the trial court that the partnership continued until his death. The partners continued to occupy the partnership office and transact partnership business until McNutt became too ill to continue in an important trial then in progress. The fees divided by the decree were largely for services rendered in the estate of Andrew Glassell, which had been in probate from 1901 until finally distributed after the death of plaintiff's testator. The estate was appraised at about $1,000,000. The fees were partly from mortgage foreclosures begun for the administration of said estate after the death of McNutt. One foreclosure proceeding, No. 94486, in the superior court, was begun September 18, 1912, and the attorney fee collected therein was $8,000. In another, No. 94487, begun the same day, the fee received was $4,833, and in action No. 97715, begun January 11, 1913, the fee was $4,000, and in action No. B6406, begun November, 1913, the fee allowed was $500. The defendant claims that each foreclosure resulted from a separate and distinct employment after the death of his partner.

We will only state the evidence that tends to support the findings. The partnership represented Hugh Glassell and Andrew Glassell, executors of the last will and testament of Andrew Glassell, deceased, from February 16, 1901, to January 10, 1912, when, upon their resignation, the Southern Trust Company was appointed as their successor at the instance of the partnership acting for the heirs, and thereafter the partnership continued to act for the successor in all matters pertaining to the estate, but without any express contract so to do. The foreclosure of the above-mentioned mortgages, as well as other work for which fees were claimed by the defendant, was an essential part of the work of preparing the estate of Andrew Glassell for distribution, and the fees therefor were properly allowable to the administrator in its account as such, and not otherwise. There is other evidence supporting the conclusion that the foreclosures were partnership business. On January 20, 1912, the defendant wrote to the newly appointed administrator as follows:

"Replying to yours of January 18, in re mortgages of Lawrence, Hamilton, Cary, Pixley, Rankin, and Brown. * * * We may also observe in this connection that, before the resignation of Hugh and Andrew Glassell as executors, the other heirs of the estate insisted most strenuously that the mortgages should be foreclosed for the failure of the mortgagees to make the payments as they became due. We have not been advised of any change of attitude of the heirs, and understand that they still insist on that course being pursued. Referring to your request for the address of the parties whose notes you hold, we have some of them and are endeavoring to obtain the others, and will send them as soon as possible."

On February 2, 1912, an order of the superior court was made on the application of the administrator, presented by the partnership, permitting the administrator to obtain a correct certificate from the Title Insurance & Trust Company showing a correct description of the real property belonging to the estate of decedent, with plats, etc. On February 5, 1912, the defendant, by written order, instructed the Title Insurance & Trust Company to make "foreclosure search for mortgages as below, in your usual form to property in Los Angeles county, Cal." Then follows book and page of records of 12 mortgages, including all those for which foreclosure fees are claimed by the plaintiff. The certificates of each mortgage search were separate, and shortly after each was delivered a foreclosure was begun to foreclose the mortgage covered by the certificate, and the cost of the certificate was claimed and recovered with interest in the foreclosure.

As the fees allowed in the foreclosure cases were found by the trial court to belong to the partnership, we may note at this point that defendant claims that the fees in three of these cases were made unusually large by stipulation to cover work done for the defendants therein, and for a corporation organized by the heirs to purchase the property at foreclosure sale and that the proportion thereof resulting from such other work does not belong to the partnership, even if the foreclosure fee was a partnership asset. It is sufficient in that regard to say that the fact that such fees were allowed to and paid by the administrator as a fee for such foreclosure is sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court, if it did not compel its conclusion. It will be necessary to more fully state the additional evidence concerning the foreclosure cases, as the facts vary somewhat in each case.

On May 28, 1912, the administrator mailed the defendant the notes and mortgage of D. W. Lawrence, with interest computed to May 28, 1912, amounting to $148,406.27, in accordance with its practice when foreclosures were contemplated. The search of the records was completed April 30, 1912, and the expense thereof was claimed and recovered in the foreclosure. The complaint was filed September 18, 1912, and numbered 94486. The fee allowed, $8,000. In case No. 94487, filed the same day, the mortgage of Lawrence was delivered to the defendant May 13, 1912. Interest was figured to that date. Total amount of principal and interest was $124,712.84. Certificate of search was completed April 25, 1912. Attorney fee recovered, $4,833. In the foreclosure against Carey the fee recovered was $500. Suit was filed November 16, 1913. The certificate of search for which the cost was recovered was one covered by the general order of February 5, 1912. In the suit against Rankin (foreclosure No. 97715) the complaint was filed January 11, 1913. The original order of search included this mortgage, but the certificate upon which the foreclosure was based was covered by a subsequent order.

While these complaints were all filed along after the death of McNutt, the relationship of the parties, the delivery of the mortgages, the computation of interest, and the order of a foreclosure search as early as February, 1912, all point to the conclusion adopted by the trial court and sufficiently sustain its finding that such business was partnership business, as was the three foreclosures begun before his death, all indicating the general plan of closing up the business of the estate by such foreclosures. There are other facts and circumstances which tend to support the conclusion of the trial court, but in view of our conclusion it is unnecessary to set them forth.

The appellant attacks a finding that a fee of $1,750, allowed in the settlement of the final account of the administrator for the settlement of the executors' final accounts, was a partnership asset. The statement of the defendant, on which the fees were paid, that this work "extended over practically the whole time, from the resignation of the former executors until the settlement of their accounts, and took most of my time," is alone sufficient to sustain the finding that it was partnership business.

[2] The partnership also acted as attorneys for the estate of Phillip Glassell, one of the heirs of Andrew Glassell. The defendant claims that there is no evidence of any employment to complete the administration, and therefore that the fee for such work does not belong to the partnership. This estate had been in probate from April 22, 1907. The partnership had acted as attorneys for the executors, and after the substitution of the Southern Trust Company in both estates acted for such administrator. After the death of McNutt a decree of partial distribution was procured, the final account was settled, and final distribution had. These proceedings were necessarily contemplated at the time of the employment of the partnership, and the relationship of the parties was such as to justify the conclusion of the trial court that this was partnership business. To uphold the contention of the defendant would be to override the almost universal custom relating to such employment, a custom by which probate courts have for years fixed the fees of the attorneys for executors, and which is now recognized by the statute, which fixes the attorney fees to be allowed to executors and administrators.

[3] The appellant claims that the finding in favor of the plaintiff that a $600 fee received in the case of Provident Gold Mining Co. v. Haines was partnership property is not supported by the evidence. The partnership was employed at an agreed fee of $1,000. Appellant conducted an appeal after the death of his partner, and, having collected $600, claims the right to apply $400 only to the partnership fee, and the balance to his service on appeal. Waiving the question as to whether such appeal was partnership business, the defendant was bound to apply the payment of $600, made without designation, to the partnership fee then due and owing. Appellant claims that the trial court made no finding with reference to a claim that the decedent had received medical services valued at $572 from a client, who owed the partnership a fee exceeding that amount, and had thus, in effect, collected that part of the fee. The client filed a claim against the estate of the decedent, which had not been disposed of. The client could not properly set off this individual debt against the partnership claim, and if there was any error it was in a failure in the accounting to dispose of the fee due the partnership, but this is not assigned by appellant as an error.

Appellant complains that the court only allowed him two-thirds of the fees earned by the partnership and by him in his capacity as surviving partner. Assuming, for the purposes of the decision, that he was entitled to more than one-half of such fees (see Little v. Caldwell, 101 Cal. 553, 36 Pac. 107, 40 Am. St. Rep. 89), we think the record is such that the conclusion of the trial court in the matter of apportionment of fees is sufficiently supported by evidence.

As to the points made concerning the admissibility of evidence, the foregoing sufficiently shows its pertinence.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.

183 Cal. 519

COHEN et al. v. CITY OF ALAMEDA et al.
(S. F. 8340.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1920, Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1920.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸453(2)—Appointing city officers to assess benefits for opening street held not to invalidate assessments.

The appointment of three city officers as commissioners to assess damages and benefits for a street opening, who were to be paid, under St. 1889, pp. 71, 72, §§ 6, 8, from the assessments levied by them, does not invalidate the assessments.

2. Municipal corporations ⟸474—Failure to assess lot within district does not make assessment void.

In the assessment of benefits and damages for the opening of a street, the mere failure to assess a lot of land within the assessment district does not make the assessment void; the remedy being by appeal to the city council, under St. 1889, p. 73, § 14.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸474—Exclusion from improvement district of public property does not invalidate assessment.

